International Copyrights.—The annual dinner of the Société des Gens de Lettres was held in Paris on the 19th inst., M. Paul Féval, President, in the chair. In proposing the health of the guest of the evening, Mr Blanchard Jerrold, representative of the English Association to Protect the Rights of Authors, the chairman said the Gens de Lettres received Mr Jerrold with open arms, and that he might rely on their cordial co-operation for the adjustment of international copyright laws as proposed by the Association. The Société des Gens de Lettres had formed a committee to examine the English propositions; and they had unanimously reported in their favour, and recommended the society to act unreservedly in concert with Mr Jerrold, as the delegate of the English authors. He hoped the time was not very distant when there would be close and complete brotherhood of literary men all over the world, in which each would jealously guard the rights of his neighbours. In conclusion, he begged to propose, with fraternal cordiality, the health of their guest, Mr Blanchard Jerrold. Mr Jerrold, who spoke in French, replied that he could hardly venture to return thanks in that brilliant language, the masters of which were around him. He begged, however, to thank them for the enthusiastic reception with which he had met in his representative character, as delegate of the Association to Protect the Rights of Authors. He hoped that the measure of justice, he might say of reparation, towards French men of letters, which the English Association had in hand, would promote an entente cordiale between the gens de lettres of the two countries (très bien, très bien)!—an entente that would, he believed, be more fruitful of good results, and more important to the prosperity of the two nations and to the interests of true civilization than any merely political entente. (Bravo!) Mr Thomas, ex-President of the society, agreed as to the high value of a close friendship between the literary men of France and England. A commission was now busy about a tunnel under the Channel; but he had a greater faith in the union between the two countries which their guest had suggested—a union, the messages of which would not be carried under the sea, or through a tunnel, but that would span the ocean like a rainbow, that would be a union of mind, a union of winged thoughts and sympathies. He concluded by proposing the health of M. Dentu, a man who was not only a publisher but a friend. Other toasts from MM. Chamfleury, Hector Malon, Adolphe Belon, &c., followed.

Rome.—Rossi's Contessa di Mons has been produced with success at the Teatro Apollo. The finale of the third act was encored. The principal character was sustained by Mdlle Pozzoni. At a recent sitting, the Municipal Council resolved to cut off the grant of 270,000 lire to the above theatre next season. In consequence of this both Mdlle Stolz and Signor Nicolini have signed engagements for St Petersburgh.

Advertisements.

THE VOICE & SINGING

BY

ADOLFO FERRARI.

THE FORMATION AND CULTIVATION OF THE VOICE FOR SINGING

Price 12s.

London: Duncan Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"The remarkable qualities of this book are the author's freedom from conventional trammels, the strong sense of his opinions, and the novelty yet evident soundness of his precepts; his work has consequently come into general use as a manual of vocal instruction."—Daily News.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE,

For invigorating and enriching the voice, and removing affections of the throat.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE is universally acknowledged to be the most valuable remedy for sore throat, hoarseness and relaxed throat. It should always be taken before singing or reciting, as it strengthens the vocal organs. It is most extensively prescribed by the faculty for the throat and voice. Dr Lewis of Basingstoke says he finds them most efficacious, and in Dr Copland's Dictionary of Practical Medicine (Longman & Co.), they are strongly recommended at pages 872 and 1492. They are used by all the greatest vocalists and orators in Europe, and have been established over a quarter of a century. Testimonials from Patti, Grisi, Lablache, Santley, &c. Sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d. by all Chemists throughout the United Kingdom and the Colonies.

Just Published.

GRAND MARCH (Bridal or Processional), for the Pianoforte or Organ. Composed by W. F. Taylor. Price 3s. London Duncan Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

THE LARK'S SONG. The Poetry by Frederick Enoch. The Music by Henry Smart. Price 3s. London: Duncan Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

O CARE TENEBRE. Duetto. Composed by J. P. Goldberg. Price 4s. London: Duncan Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

GUGLIELMO'S LAST BALLAD.

"WERT THOU WITH ME."

The Words by GEORGE LINLEY.

The Music by P. D. GUGLIELMO.

Price 4s.

London: Duncan Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

WILFORD MORGAN'S SONGS.

HER I LOVE .. .. 4s.

COULD I BUT CALL HER MINE.. .. .. 4s.

MY SWEETHEART WHEN A BOY .. .. 4s.

SWEET EVENING AIR .. .. 4s.

(N.B.—The above Songs have been sung with distinguished success by Mr Wilford Morgan.)

LITTLE BIRDIE, SING TO ME .. .. 4s.

(Sung by Miss Edith Wynne.)

ANTHEM.

IF THOU WILT FORGET ME (The 13th Psalm) .. .. .. 4s.

(For Tenor or Soprano Solo, with Chorus ad. lib., as sung at the Temple Church. Composed by Wilford Morgan.)

London: Duncan Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street.

"CUPID'S APPEAL,"

BALLAD,

And the Sequel,

"MARRIAGE BELLS,"

SONG.

Price 2s. each.

London: Duncan Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Digitized by Google

CHORAL WORKS
FOR TREBLE VOICES ONLY.

CANTATAS.

THE SEA-MAIDENS.
By J. L. ROECKEL.
Price 3s. Net.

SONGS IN A CORN-FIELD.
By G. A. MACFARREN.
Price 3s. Net.

THE KNIGHT OF PALESTINE.
By WEBER.
Price 3s. Net.

THE MOUNTAIN MAIDENS.
By F. ROMER.
Price 3s. Net.

THE ELFIN KNIGHT.
By IGNACE GIBSONE.
Price 3s. Net.

KING RENE'S DAUGHTERS.
By HENRY SMART.
Price 4s. Net. Paper Covers.
" 6s. " Cloth Boards.

THE PAGE.
By M. W. BALFE.
Price 3s. Net.

WESTWARD HO!
By J. L. ROECKEL.
Price 4s. Net.

TWO-PART EXERCISES.
For Vocal Classes, in Two Books, each 4s. | Class Copies, 8vo, in One Book, 1s. Net.

DUETS FOR TREBLE VOICES.
Each Book contains SIX DUETS BY POPULAR COMPOSERS (Class Copies).
Books 1 and 2 are Now Ready. Price 1s. each Book.

TRIOS FOR TREBLE VOICES.
Price 6d. each. (Each Number Half-price, 3d.) Or in Books, each 1s. Net.

BOOK I.
1. *Now the dance ..... Weber.
2. *Through the dim ..... Gounod.
3. *Triumph of Oberon..... Allen.
4. *On the sea ..... Gounod.
5. *The Bee ..... Barnett.
6. *Song of the Water ..... Smart.

BOOK II.
7. *Oh, boatman, row ..... Donizetti.
8. *Village bride ..... Costa.
9. *Pilgrim's evening..... Wagner.
10. *Music of the night ..... Halton.
11. *I love my love ..... Allen.
12. *Hark! o'er the ..... Wallace.

BOOK III.
13. *Now lightly we..... Balfe.
14. *Hark! o'er the ..... Balfe.
15. *A psalm of life ..... Pinsuti.
16. *Araby's daughter..... Oberthur.
17. *Come o'er the waters .... Bonoldi.
18. *Where the fairies ..... Balfe.

BOOK IV.
19. *The skylark ..... Gilbert.
20. *Hark! the Gondolier.... Riccardi.
21. *Too late ..... Barnett.
22. *When the moon is ..... Bishop.
23. *The sun has been..... Bishop.
24. Bridal Chorus ..... Barnett.

BOOK V.
25. *Merry minstrels are..... Wagner.
26. *Good morning ..... Lillo.
27. *Hark! the merry..... Flotow.
28. *With song of bird ..... Flotow.
29. *Happy as the day..... Wallace.
30. *The red cross banner .... Badia.

BOOK VI.
31. *The distant bell..... Badia.
32. *The sunset bell..... Pinsuti.
33. *Who'll follow..... Paggi.
34. *Sleep on ..... Balfe.
35. *O the summer night .... Prentice.
36. *O hear ye not..... Smart.

BOOK VII.
37. *Sea flowers..... Barnett.
38. *Forest home ..... Benedict.
39. *Warbler of the forest.... Benedict.
40. *Thoughts of home ..... Benedict.
41. *Welcome Spring ..... Philp.
42. *The noisy mill ..... Paggi.

BOOK VIII.
43. *Faith ..... Rossini.
44. *Hope ..... Rossini.
45. *Charity ..... Rossini.
46. *Fairy Isle ..... Campana.
47. *Autumn leaves ..... Balfe.
48. *Let us haste to the .... Bishop.

BOOK IX.
49. *The Village Church .... Becker.
50. *Come, sisters, come .... Gordigiani.
51. *The Zingari..... Balfe.
52. *Morning ..... T. Hendley
53. *Evening ..... T. Hendley
54. *Sleep, gentle lady ..... Bishop.

BOOK X.
55. *The Rhine Boat ..... Arditi.
56. *Angels that around .... Wallace.
57. *Happy Wanderer ..... Abt.
58. *Through the grassy .... Balfe.
59. *Our happy valley ..... Bordese.
60. *Blessed be the Home .. Benedict.

BOOK XI.
61. *Happy, smiling faces .. Gomes.
62. *Fairest flowers ..... Pinsuti.
63. *Goddess of the dawn .. Smart.
64. *At our spinning wheel .. Wagner.
65. *How can we sing ..... Verdi.
66. The standard waves .... Bishop.

BOOK XII.
67. *A spring sun peepeth out Richards.
68. *The storm..... Richards.
69. *Lightly, softly..... Flotow.
70. *Over woodland, over plain Pinsuti.
71. *Flow softly, flow ..... Costa.
72. *Rowing bravely ..... Campana.

BOOK XIII.
73. *Buzzing ..... Randegger
74. *Softly now ..... Duggan.
75. *The Sleigh Bells..... Anderton.
76. *Dancing Sunbeams .... Rossini.
77. *Fair and fertile valley.. Guglielmo.
78. *Friendship ..... Allen.

BOOK XIV.
79. *Our Vesper Hymn..... Ricci.
80. *Our last farewell ..... Oursehman.
81. *Flower Greeting ..... Oursehman.
82. *Hark the Pilot ..... Bishop.
83. *While the days are bright Bordese.
84. *Sweet Bird of Heaven.. Wallace.

* These can be had in folio size, with Accompaniment.

LONDON:
HUTCHINGS & ROMER,
9, Conduit Street, Regent Street, W.

ARTHUR SULLIVAN'S NEW SONG,
"THOU ART WEARY."
WORDS BY ADELAIDE PROCTOR.
MUSIC BY ARTHUR SULLIVAN.
SUNG BY
Miss ANTOINETTE STERLING
AT THE
MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

"The singer was Miss Antoinette Sterling, who, always heartily admired in those German ballads, for which she exhibits so marked a sympathy, introduced in a group four of Schumann's most graceful contributions to the Lieder repertory, and, later in the evening, a new song by Mr Arthur Sullivan, 'Thou art weary' (set to words by Adelaide Proctor)—one of the most charming recent emanations from the pen of our gifted compatriot."—The Times, Nov. 10.

"Miss Sterling was the vocalist, and sang, in addition to selections from Schumann, a new song by Arthur Sullivan, entitled, 'Thou art weary,' which is one of the most beautiful and thoughtful effusions of the composer's graceful music."—Daily Telegraph, Nov. 12.

"Miss Antoinette Sterling was the vocalist. In the second part she introduced a new song by Mr Sullivan, an admirable setting for a contralto voice of some very touching lines by the late Miss Adelaide Proctor, addressed by a poor mother to her starving child, the burden being—

'Sleep, my darling, thou art weary;
God is good, but life is dreary.'

The song exactly suited Miss Sterling's voice and style, and it will assuredly become as great a favourite as 'Will he come,' to which it is a worthy pendant, and the words of which are also by Miss Proctor."—Standard, Nov. 12.

"Miss Antoinette Sterling repeated Mr Sullivan's new song, 'Thou art weary,' a second hearing of which has confirmed our good opinion of it."—Standard, Nov. 16.

"At the concert on Monday, Miss Sterling had introduced a series of charming Lieder by Schumann, and a new song by Mr Arthur Sullivan, 'Sleep, my darling, thou art weary,' an admirable setting of Miss Proctor's poem, 'Hush, I cannot bear to see thee,' which, like everything Miss Proctor wrote, was well adapted for, and, in fact, seemed to invite musical treatment. Her verses have inspired Mr Sullivan with a genuine melody, of which the refrain is particularly remarkable; and the song, both at Monday's and Saturday's concert, pleased so much that Miss Sterling was called upon to repeat it."—Pall Mall Gazette, Nov. 17.

"Miss Sterling sang discreetly and sympathetically four of Schumann's 'Dichterliebe' (Nos. 1, 2, 7, and 8); but came off still better in a new song by Mr A. Sullivan, who has set words by Adelaide Proctor, 'Thou art weary,' the dying consolation of a starved mother to her child, the refrain of which is—

'Sleep, my darling, thou art weary;
God is good, but life is dreary.'

It is a painful theme; but the composer has treated it with such pathos that the air tells powerfully."—Athenæum, Nov. 14.

"The vocalist was Miss Sterling, who sang four songs by Schumann (Nos. 1, 2, 7, and 8 of the 'Dichterliebe'), and a new song, entitled 'Thou art weary,' written by Miss Adelaide Proctor. The words are good, and have been fitted to charming and expressive music by Mr Arthur Sullivan, who has added a pianoforte accompaniment worthy his high reputation, and worth listening to for its own sake."—Observer, Nov. 15.

Published in the keys of D minor and F minor, Price 4s.

ARTHUR SULLIVAN'S NEW SONG,
"TENDER AND TRUE,"
SUNG BY
MISS EDITH WYNNE
AT THE
MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS, ST JAMES'S HALL.

"The vocalist was Miss Edith Wynne, who sang a new song, 'Tender and True,' by Arthur Sullivan, the beauty of which, aided by a most tasteful rendering, elicited an encore."—Daily Telegraph, January 13.

"Mr Sullivan's graceful song—a novelty—was rendered by Miss Edith Wynne with much refined expression; and the applause which followed necessitated its entire repetition."—Daily News, January 13.

"A very expressive new song, by Mr A. Sullivan, 'Tender and True,' was sung with such effect by Miss Edith Wynne that it had to be repeated."—Illustrated London News, January 16.

"Miss Edith Wynne, who gave, in her own genuine and expressive manner, a graceful new song, 'Tender and True,' by Mr Arthur Sullivan, which was encored and repeated."—Graphic, January 16.

Published in the keys of E flat and F, Price 4s.

CHAPPELL & CO., 50 NEW BOND ST.

Digitized by Google

BOOSEY & CO.'S
NEW PUBLICATIONS.

This Day, price 3s. 6d. paper, 5s. cloth, gilt edges.

THE ROYAL EDITION OF "L'ELISIR D'AMORE," with English and Italian words.

This Day, price 3s. 6d. paper, 5s. cloth, gilt edges.

THE ROYAL EDITION OF "LA FILLE DE MADAME ANGOT," with English and French words.

In One Vol., price 5s. cloth, or separately, 1s. each.

THE ROYAL EDITION OF BALLAD OPERAS, with Dialogue, Stage Directions, &c., complete:—

LOVE IN A VILLAGE. | THE BEGGAR'S OPERA.
ROSINA. | NO SONG, NO SUPPER.

Edited by JOHN OXENFORD and J. L. HATTON.

"Should be in the hands of the amateurs of the period seeking for a genuine air to sing."—Athenæum.

"Should find an honoured place in every library. It is a pleasure to meet the sterling old melodies, after the surfeit of thin, tuneless compositions, of which opera-bouffes are made up."—Graphic.

Just Published, price 7s. 6d.

NEW ORGAN TUTOR.—DR SPARK'S HANDY-BOOK FOR THE ORGAN, containing complete Instructions for the Use of the Manuals and Pedals, with 150 various examples, by the best Composers, for the Organ.

"Dr Spark has supplied a real want. He has compiled an excellent Manual of Instruction for the Organ, by the use of which many of the faults of other bad systems may be avoided. Young organists can have no better tutor than Dr Spark."—Nottingham Guardian.

"A more thorough and complete Organ Tutor than this we have never seen. Every point of difficulty in the study of the instrument is fully elucidated, and the treatment of all parts and peculiarities is exhaustively dealt with. Let every one who would learn to play the organ well, obtain and study Dr Spark's Handy-book."—Edinburgh Daily Review.

NEW HALF-CROWN MUSIC BOOKS.—

ROBERT SCHUMANN'S 86 SHORT PIECES	2s. 6d.
MENDELSSOHN'S 36 SONGS WITHOUT WORDS	2s. 6d.
STRAUSS' 18 SETS OF NEW WALTZES... ...	2s. 6d.
TWENTY-EIGHT PIECES FOR THE DRAWING-ROOM...	2s. 6d.
THIRTY-SIX BALLADS, by ARTHUR SULLIVAN, MOLLOY, GATTY, and CLARIBEL	2s. 6d.

This Day, price 1s. each.

NEW ILLUSTRATED SERIES OF DANCE BOOKS.—BOOSEY & Co. beg to announce that the success of their late Christmas Annual has induced them to bring out the following Dance Numbers of the Musical Cabinet, illustrated in colours by Leighton Brothers. Each number contains Six Complete Sets of Waltzes, price 1s.; post-free, 1s. 2d.

167. STRAUSS' "WEINER BLUT," "DOCTRINEN," "Wein, Weib, und Gesang," "Ball Promessen," Lilien Kranze," and "Fesche Geister" Waltzes.

157. STRAUSS' "THOUSAND AND ONE NIGHTS," "Telegramme," and four other Waltzes.

101. STRAUSS' "BEAUTIFUL DANUBE," "Good Old Times," "Wiener Kinder," and three other Waltzes.

155. GUNGL'S "DREAM OF THE OCEAN," "Peterhoff," and four other Waltzes.

ALSO,

164. CHRISTMAS NUMBER, containing the "Madame Angot" dance music.

This Day, price 1s.

TEN POPULAR PIECES FOR THE PIANOFORTE (Boosey's Musical Cabinet, No. 166), including the "Golden Waves," Ghys' "Air of Louis XIII.," "Voix du Ciel," "Le Zephyr," and Wollenhaupt's "Styrienne," "Caprice Arien," "Gazelle," and "Scherzo Brillante," &c.

This Day, price 1s.

TEN CLASSICAL PIECES FOR THE PIANOFORTE (Boosey's Musical Cabinet, No. 165), including Hiller's "Guitarre," Henselt's "Berceuse" and "Love Song," Rubenstein's "Barcarolle," Von Bülow's "Carnival of Milan," "Les Deux Alouettes," Raff's "Abend," Gluck's "Gavotte," "The Harmonious Blacksmith," &c.

Published This Day, price 1s. 6d.

FIFTY FINGERED EXERCISES FOR THE VIOLIN, selected and Edited by HUBERT RIES. Dedicated to Herr Joachim, who thus writes of the work to the editor:—

"I was very happy to become acquainted with your 'Fingered Exercises, which, through your ingenious manner of distinguishing the fingers that are to be elevated, and held down, offer an essential help in imparting to scholars an easy position to the hand and an exact knowledge of fingering. I accept, therefore, the dedication of your work thankfully, and will gladly assist in disseminating it."

LONDON: BOOSEY & CO., 295, REGENT STREET, W.

Digitized by Google

Printed by HENDERSON, RAIT, AND FENTON, at No. 69, Marylebone Lane, Oxford Street, in the Parish of Marylebone, in the County of Middlesex.
Published by WILLIAM DUNCAN DAVISON, at the Office, 244, Regent Street, Saturday, April 24, 1875.

The Musical World.

(REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.)

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST, 20s. PER ANNUM,
Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to DUNCAN DAVISON & CO., 244, Regent Street, London, W.

VOL. 53—No. 18. SATURDAY, MAY 1, 1875. PRICE { 4d. Unstamped. 5d. Stamped.

HER MAJESTY'S OPERA, THEATRE ROYAL, DRURY LANE.

Fourth Appearance of Mdlle Elena Varesi.

THIS EVENING (SATURDAY), May 1st, will be performed DONIZETTI'S Opera, "LUCIA DI LAMMERMOOR," Edgardo, Signor Fancelli; Enrico Aston, Signor Galassi; Bidebent, Herr Behrens; Normanno, Signor Casaboni; Arturo, Signor Rinaldini; Alisa, Mdlle Bauermeister; and Lucia, Mdlle Elena Varesi (her second appearance in that character, and fourth appearance in this country.) Director of the Music and Conductor—Sir Michael Costa.

Extra Night.

Mdlle Tietjens—Mdme Trebelli-Bettini—Second Appearance of Mdlle Pernini.

MONDAY next, May 3, MOZART'S Opera, "LE NOZZE DI FIGARO." Il Conte Almaviva, Signor De Reschi; Figaro, Signor Galassi; Il Dottore Bartolo, Signor Costa; Basilio, Signor Rinaldini; Don Curzio, Signor Grazzi; Cherubino, Mdme Trebelli-Bettini; Susanna, Mdlle Pernini (her second appearance); Marcellina, Madame Demeric-Lablache; and La Contessa, Mdlle Tietjens.

First Appearance this Season of Mdme Christine Nilsson.

On TUESDAY next, May 4, will be performed (for the first time this season) "IL TALISMANO." Music by M. W. BALFE. Sir Kenneth, Signor Campanini; Richard Cœur de Lion, Signor Galassi; Nectabanus, Signor Catalani; Il Rè di Francia, Signor Costa; Il Duca d'Austria, Signor Casaboni; Il Barone de Vaux, Signor Rinaldini; L'Emiro, Signor Grazzi; Queen Berengaria, Mdlle Risarelli (her first appearance this season); and Edith Plantagenet, Madame Christine Nilsson (her first appearance this season). Nobles, Ladies of the Court, Soldiers, Archers, Pages, Saracens, &c.

Doors open at Eight o'clock. Commence at Half-past Eight. Amphitheatre stalls, 7s. and 5s.; amphitheatre, 2s. Box-office open daily from Ten till Five, under the direction of Mr Bailey.

THE ROYAL SOCIETY of MUSICIANS of GREAT BRITAIN—Instituted in 1738, Incorporated in 1789—for the Support of Aged and Indigent Musicians, their Widows and Orphans—12, Lisle Street, Leicester Square, W. Patroness—Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen. Patrons—His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, K.G.; His Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh, K.G.; His Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge, K.G. The ANNUAL PERFORMANCE of HANDEL'S Oratorio, "THE MESSIAH," on FRIDAY Evening, the 7th of May, at ST JAMES'S HALL, at Eight o'clock. Vocalists—Miss Edith Wynne, Mdme Blanche Cole, Mdme Osborne Williams, and Mdme Patey; Mr Jno. Williams, Mr W. H. Cummings, Mr Stanley Smith, and Mr Lewis Thomas. Principal Violin—Mr J. T. Willy. Trumpet—Mr T. Harper. Organist—Mr E. J. Hopkins. Full Orchestra and Chorus. Conductor—Mr W. G. CUSINS. The Area Stalls reserved for the Subscribers; balcony stalls, 10s. 6d.; unreserved balcony, 5s.; admission, 2s. 6d; of all the principal Musicsellers; and of Mr Austin, Ticket Office, St James's Hall.

GLASGOW. — SATURDAY EVENING CITY HALL CONCERTS. The Twenty-second Season commences next September, to make arrangements for which Mr AIRLIE, the Secretary, will be in London on 7th May for eight or ten days, and may be communicated with at Angus's Hotel, 23, New Bridge Street, Blackfriars.

GEMME D'ANTICHITA.

RACCOLTA DI PEZZI VOCALI.

COMPOSTI DAI PIU CELEBRI

MAESTRI ANTICHI.

This unique Work has been carefully revised, and is now re-issuing in 200 Numbers, selected from the most esteemed Works of Bach, Handel, Beethoven, Spohr, Stradella, Scarlatti, Mozart, Pergolesi, Paesiello, Carissimi, Cimarosa, &c., &c. Edited by Lady Thompson, Macfarren, Wilhelm Ganz, Adolphe Ganz, Callcott, Lucas, Molique, Perugini, &c. The whole carefully revised and edited by JOSIAH PITTMAN. Lists Gratis.

C. LONSDALE'S

Musical Circulating Library,

26, OLD BOND STREET, W.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA, COVENT GARDEN.

THIS EVENING (SATURDAY), May 1st, will be performed "RIGOLETTO." Mdlle Albani (her third appearance this season), Mdlle Scalchi; Signori Graziani, Tagliafico, and De Sanctis.

On MONDAY next, May 3, "LES HUGUENOTS." Mesdames Vilda, Marimon, Scalchi; Signori Capponi, Bagagiolo, Maurel, Sabater, and Nicolini (his first appearance this season). Conductor—Signor Vianesi.

On TUESDAY next, May 4, "DER FREISCHUTZ." Mdlle D'Angeri, Mdlle Smeroschi; Signori Bagagiolo, Tagliafico, Capponi, and Marini.

On THURSDAY next, May 6, "DON GIOVANNI." Mesdames Zaré Thalberg (her fifth appearance on any stage), Vilda, D'Angeri; Signori Marini, Ciampi, Tagliafico, Capponi, and M. Maurel.

On FRIDAY next, May 7 (first time these three years), DONIZETTI'S Opera "DON PASQUALE." Mdlle Marimon; Signori Cotogni (his first appearance this season), Ciampi, and Piazza.

On SATURDAY, May 8, will be produced WAGNER'S celebrated romantic Opera, entitled, "LOHENGRIN."

Floral Hall Concerts.

The SECOND FLORAL HALL CONCERT of the season will take place on SATURDAY, May 15.

The Opera commences at Half-past Eight.

The Box Office, under the portico of the Theatre, is open from Ten to Five. Pit tickets, 7s.; amphitheatre stalls, 10s. 6d. and 5s.; amphitheatre, 2s. 6d.

"GIROFLE-GIROFLA," THIS EVENING.

CRITERION THEATRE, Regent Circus. — Sole Proprietors and Responsible Managers, SPIERS & POND. — "GIROFLE-GIROFLA," new Comic Opera in English, by CHARLES LECOCQ. Adapted by CAMPBELL CLARKE, and produced under the direction of Mrs W. H. LISTON. Conductor—Mr F. STANISLAUS. The Opera commences at Eight, and is over by Eleven o'clock. Mesdames Pauline Rita, Emily Thorne, Rose Keene, and Alice Hamilton; Messrs A. Brennir, Perrini, Loredan. Private boxes from £1 1s. to £3 3s.; stalls, 7s. 6d.; dress circle, 5s.; boxes (bonnets allowed), 5s.; pit, 2s.; amphitheatre, 1s. To be obtained at the Box Office of the Criterion. Acting Manager—Mr EDWARD MURRAY.

MR RIDLEY PRENTICE has the honour to announce that his PIANOFORTE RECITAL will take place at ST GEORGE'S HALL, on WEDNESDAY Morning, May 5th, at Three o'clock. Vocalist—Miss Georgina Maudsley. Violin—Herr Straus. Stalls, 7s.; family ticket (to admit three), 15s.; area or balcony, 3s.; may be obtained at the Hall; or of Mr RIDLEY PRENTICE, 30A, Wimpole Street, W.

MISS FLORENCE MAY'S PIANOFORTE RECITAL, at WILLIS'S ROOMS, St James's, on SATURDAY Afternoon, May 8th, at Three o'clock (under the patronage of H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh). Pianoforte — Miss Florence May. Violin—Signor Papini. Vocalist — Mdlle Sophie Löwe. Accompanist — Mr Zerbini. Stalls (reserved), 5s.; unreserved, 3s.; may be obtained of Messrs Stanley Lucas, Weber & Co., 84, New Bond Street; and of Messrs Chappell, 50, New Bond Street.

NEW PHILHARMONIC CONCERTS, ST JAMES'S HALL. Programme of the SECOND CONCERT, SATURDAY Morning, May 8th, 1875: Overture, "Hebrides" (Mendelssohn); Concerto in C minor, for two pianofortes (Bach)—Mrs Beesley (her first appearance in London) and Dr Hans von Bülow; Aria, "Pur dicesti" (Lotti)—Mdlle Thekla Friedländer (from Leipzig—her first appearance in England); Symphony in C minor, No. 5 (Beethoven); Aria, "Io lo sento" (Flauto Magico) (Mozart)—Mdlle Thekla Friedländer; Concerto in E flat, for pianoforte (Liszt)—Mrs Beesley; Lieder, (a) "Warum willst Du andre fragen" (Schumann), (b) "Gretchen am Spinnrad" (Schubert)—Mdlle Thekla Friedländer; Andante, with variations, in B flat, Op. 46, for two pianofortes (Schumann)—Mrs Beesley and Dr Hans von Bülow; Overture, Le Domino Noir (Auber). Conductors—Dr WYLDE and Mr GANZ.

WANTED, an Immediate ENGAGEMENT, as MUSIC-SELLER'S ASSISTANT. Good Experience; Wholesale and Retail, and all the branches, Town or Country. Address, S. F. STEVENS, 41, Bermondsey Square, S.E., London.

A LADY, having quitted the Operatic Stage, will be happy to give Accompanying LESSONS to Artists. Apply, by letter, addressed "Accompanist," care of DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Digitized by Google

"I WOULD BE A BOY AGAIN."

MR WILFORD MORGAN will sing his new Ballad, "I WOULD BE A BOY AGAIN," and his new Song, "COULD I BUT CALL HER MINE," at the Vestry Hall, Chelsea, at Miss Lester's Concert, April 30th.

"MEDEA."

MISS JESSIE JONES (Student and Silver Medallist of the Royal Academy of Music) will sing RANDEGGER'S Grand Scena, "MEDEA," at the Concert of the British Orchestral Society, on Wednesday Evening, May 19.

F. B. JEWSON'S Two New Pianoforte Compositions, "DASHING SPRAY" and "THE MOUNTAIN STREAM," will be performed by his pupil, Miss ELLEN EDRIDGE, at Mr Walmsley Little's Concert, on Monday, the 3rd of May.—STANLEY LUCAS, WEBER & CO., 84, New Bond Street.

MISS FLORENCE SANDERS (Pupil of Mr W. H. Holmes) (Pianoforte) will play Sir STERNDALE BENNETT'S Sonata, "THE MAID OF ORLEANS," at her forthcoming Concert, at which she will be assisted by eminent Artists. Full particulars will be duly announced. Address, 197, Ladbroke Grove Road, Notting Hill.

THE GUITAR.—MDME SIDNEY PRATTEN, Teacher of this elegant Instrument, is in Town for the Season. For LESSONS and Private CONCERTS, address to her residence, 22A, Dorset Street, Portman Square, W.

MR RICCARDI (the new Bass), who made so successful a début at St James's Hall, March 12th, begs to announce his Return to London for the Season. All applications for ENGAGEMENTS to be addressed, Care of DUNCAN DAVISON & CO., 244, Regent Street, W.

MDME PATEY.—CHANGE OF ADDRESS.

MADAME PATEY requests that all letters may be addressed to her new residence—24, St Stephen's Square, Westbourne Park, W.

CONCERTS, PRIVATE THEATRICALS, and ENTERTAINMENTS.—To be LET, by the Night, Handsome SUITE of ROOMS, adjoining Hengler's Cirque, Argyll Street, Regent Street. The Large Hall (52 ft. by 35 ft., and 22 feet high) will seat about 300 people. Apply to HAIG & CO., 7, Argyll Street, W.

BOOK-KEEPER WANTED, for an Establishment in the North of England. Must have been accustomed to keep the Accounts of a Music Warehouse, where there is a large connection of single and yearly Tunings, Pianofortes on Hire, and on the Three Years' System of Hire. None need apply who are not well up in the work. Address, stating salary expected, with references, &c., to H. P., Office of the Musical World, 244, Regent Street, W.

DEAR ENGLAND. New Song. Written by Dr MACKAY. Composed by LOUIS DIEHL, and sung by Signor Foli with the most marked success at the Crystal Palace Saturday Concert, April 17, and at Manchester. The poem is a noble one, with sentiments coming home to us all; the music is pathetic and dignified, and the song suitable for all voices. Price 3s.; free by post 18 stamps.

THE NEW POLKA—"L'ONCLE SAM." For the Pianoforte. Composed by G. JERVIS RUBINI. Illustrated Title. 3s.; post free 18 stamps.

THE REVIVAL: A Reminiscence of the most Favourite Melodies sung by Mr Sankey. With Portraits of Messrs Sankey and Moody in colours. Arranged for the Piano by J. PRIDHAM. Price 4s.; post free for 24 stamps. London: ROBERT COCKS & CO., New Burlington Street; and of all Musicsellers.

VERDI'S REQUIEM.—RICORDI'S EDITIONS.—Complete Vocal Scores, with or without English Translation, net price, 6s.; bound in cloth, 8s. Pianoforte, in 4to, Solo, 6s.; Duet, 10s. Pianoforte, in 8vo, with Latin and English words, 3s.; bound in cloth, 5s.

Separate Vocal Pieces in the original form and key. The same arranged in an easy style, with English Translation.

Transcriptions, Arrangements, &c., for Pianoforte Solo and Duet; for Harp, Harmonium; for Violin, Violoncello, Flute, &c., with Pianoforte Accompaniment, by Leibach, Rummel, Lebeau, Cohen, Cramer, Godefroid, Radcliff, &c. List of arrangements, with portrait of Verdi, post free.

RICORDI'S Depôt, 23, Charles Street, Middlesex Hospital, W.; and all Musicsellers.

ON VIEW.

PORTRAIT OF THE LATE

SIR WILLIAM STERNDALE BENNETT.

Painted by JOHN EVERETT MILLAIS, R.A.

Engraving by T. OLDHAM BARLOW, A.R.A.

This Picture is NOW ON VIEW at the Publisher's.

EDWARD S. PALMER, 30, GOLDEN SQUARE, LONDON, W.

BRIGHTON CONCERT AGENTS,

PIANOFORTE AND MUSICSELLERS,

LYON & HALL,

WARWICK MANSION.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF VOICE.

(Reprinted from the "Medical Press and Circular.")

AND

THE BASIS OF MUSICAL EXPRESSION.

Second (Popular) Edition, much Enlarged.

By CHARLES LUNN.

One Shilling.

BAILLIERE, TINDALL & COX; and all Booksellers.

"Mr Lunn is one of the most earnest and conscientious thinkers of the day."—Musical Times.

"Birmingham may well be proud of such a citizen."—Orchestra.

"Mr Lunn is well known as an able writer on musical subjects."—The Rock.

"A method of reasoning at once lucid and forcible, and, for the greater part, unanswerable."—Catholic Times.

SCHOTT & CO.'S

NEW CATALOGUE OF

MUSIC FOR THE VIOLIN.

May be had, on application, post free.

LONDON: 159, REGENT STREET.

CHARLES SALAMAN'S NEW SONG.

HORACE'S ODE "TO CHLOE."

Sung, in Latin, with great success, by Mr BENTHAM, at the Saturday Popular Concerts.

LATIN TEXT, AND LORD LYTTON'S ENGLISH VERSION.

For Tenor and Baritone, in F and G.

2s. each, nett.

LAMBORN COCK & CO., New Bond Street.

"SHALL I WEAR A WHITE ROSE?"

BALLAD.

Words by H. SAVILLE CLARKE.

Music by EMILY BARDSLEY FARMER.

Nett, 2s.

JOSEPH WILLIAMS, Berners Street, and Cheapside, E.C.

REGINA CŒLI.

MOTETT FOR FOUR EQUAL VOICES.

With ORGAN Accompaniment (and HARP ad lib.).

Composed by WILHELM SCHULTHES.

Price 6s.

London: NOVELLO, EWER & CO., 1, Berners Street.

N.B.—A Vocal arrangement of the above is also published, for a choir of mixed voices. Price 2s.

Now Publishing,

ANDANTE and ALLEGRO CAPRICCIOSO,

For PIANO and ORCHESTRA, Op. 5.

By THOMAS WINGHAM.

Dedicated to Signor RANDEGGER.

SOLO, 7s. 6d.

Also, by the same Composer,

SYMPHONY, in B flat, No. 2, Op. 6.

Dedicated, by kind permission, to Sir W. STERNDALE BENNETT.

PERFORMED AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE CONCERTS.

DUET, 15s.

FESTAL OVERTURE, in C, Op. 8.

Composed in Commemoration of the Jubilee of the Royal Academy of Music.

Dedicated to JOHN HULLAH, Esq.

DUET, 7s. 6d.

To Subscribers, the above works will be issued at 12s. 6d. the Set. Names received by the Publishers—

LONDON: LAMBORN COCK & CO., 63, NEW BOND STREET.

In the Press,

"BY THE WILLOWS."

A WREATH OF SONGS, Op. 11.

Words (from the German) by L. N. PARKER.

MUSIC BY

THOMAS WINGHAM.

Dedicated to Dr FERDINAND HILLER.

Price 7s. 6d.

LONDON: BOOSEY & CO., 295, REGENT STREET.

Digitized by Google

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

The third performance of Don Giovanni on Monday night was another success for Mdlle Thalberg, whose next assumption is looked forward to with natural interest. Susanna, in Le Nozze di Figaro, is spoken of; and, should that be the choice, there will be no reason to complain. Nothing could be more advantageous to the youthful prima donna than a second proof of her ability to shine as one of the vocal heroines of Mozart. About the result there can, we think, be very little doubt.

Lucia di Lammermoor followed almost immediately upon the Sonnambula, with Mdlle Albani as Lucia, a character in which (1872) she at once obtained general acceptance, and which is in every way suited to her idiosyncracy. A fresh description of her performance, scene after scene, is not required. Each succeeding year, however, brings with it proofs of what study and perseverance can effect; and it is nothing beyond the truth to say that the Lucia of Mdlle Albani may now take high rank among the existing Lucias on the stage—which, when we remember that it is a character adopted by the very greatest artists, is saying no little. There are certain characteristics in the Lucia of Mdlle Albani convincingly proving that she has not only studied accepted models with advantage, but that she can also think for herself and proclaim her own individuality. There is a peculiar gentleness in her conception of the character that endows it with a charm apart; while she discards, wherever it may suit her, the generally stereotyped readings of certain among the most salient vocal points, interpreting them after a manner of her own imagining. This is especially to be remarked not only in the great scene of the Contract and the "Malediction," but in the preceding duet, where Enrico, through the instrumentality of the forged letter, convinces Lucia that her lover has proved false. In the scene of the madness, Mdlle Albani, now perfect mistress of her resources, gives fuller play to the emotions she wishes to portray than she ever did before; and the effect is all the greater. Her vocalization here was always distinguished, not merely by executive facility, but by varied and appropriate sentiment; and she now adds dramatic to vocal expression, the thrilling interest of the situation being thus proportionately enhanced. The assistance she receives here from the flute (Mr Radcliff) in the "cadenza a due," where the instrument follows the voice, phrase by phrase, cannot be over-estimated. The whole display, however, ending with the melodious peroration, "Spargi di qualche pianto," is admirable. The impression produced on the house was so vivid, that at the end the singer was honoured with a triple "recall," as unanimous as it had been well earned. Signor Pavani, though an accomplished artist, is hardly equal to the trying music of Edgardo. His best points were made in the concerted piece, "Chi mi frena in tal momento" (encored as usual), and in the "Maladetto," when Edgardo is made aware that Lucia has signed the fatal document that must disunite them for ever. Here he showed real feeling, and even power. That the part of Enrico could hardly, at the present time, meet with a more competent representative than Signor Graziani need scarcely be said. Signor Capponi was Raimondo, and Signor Sabater Arturo. On the whole, the performance of Donizetti's too familiar opera was highly efficient. Signor Vianesi was in the orchestra.

Fra Diavolo has been produced, with Mdlle Smeroschi as Zerlina, a part in all respects well suited to her; Signor Naudin as Fra Diavolo, Signor Ciampi as Lord Coburg, Mdlle Scalchi as Lady Coburg, and Signors Tagliafico and Capponi as Beppo and Giacomo—the two incomparable briganda. Auber's sparkling and characteristic music charms as much as ever, and, indeed, would seem to be as perennial as the immortal Barbiere itself. Signor Bevignani conducted. On Saturday La Figlia del Reggimento was repeated, with Mdlle Marimon as the Vivandière.

During the present week we have had repetitions of Guillaume Tell, Un Ballo in Maschera, and Don Giovanni. Il Flauto Magico was to be given last night, and Rigoletto, with Mdlle Albani as Gilda, is promised for this evening. Meanwhile, the arrival of Madame Adelina Patti and the production of Wagner's Lohengrin are close at hand. With these phenomena the opera will have attained its culminating point.

STUTTGART.—A "new and revised" edition of Abert's opera, Enzio von Hohenstaufen, has been produced with success.

HER MAJESTY'S OPERA.

The first performance of the Barbiere di Siviglia, on Saturday night, introduced to the English public a new Rosina in the person of Mdlle Anna de Belocca. This lady, a Russian by birth, has but recently appeared with great success at the Théâtre Ventadour in Paris, where, although so very young (in her 21st year), and though it was her first appearance on any stage, she surprised amateurs by her proficiency in the Italian operatic style, and her facile pronunciation of the Italian language. During the term of her engagement she sang in three operas—Il Barbiere, La Cenerentola, and Semiramide. In the last named work the part assigned to her was Arsace—from which it will naturally be assumed that her voice is a contralto. That it is a contralto in some respects is unquestionable; but, considered in all its bearings, it may more strictly be regarded as a mezzo-soprano. In either case, however, we have a voice full of charm, calculated to please all hearers. There is something fresh and original in its timbre, exceptional and peculiarly attractive. The comic masterpiece of Rossini was wisely chosen for the début of Mdlle Belocca, who possesses the requirements indispensable to an adequate portrayal of the piquant and lively heroine. To look the character, in its appropriate Spanish costume, more bewitchingly and to the life than does Mdlle Belocca would be scarcely possible; and her first appearance at the window of Dr Bartolo's house predisposed the entire audience in her favour. But she was evidently nervous in her response to the cadences of Almaviva's serenade; and also, later on, in the opening of the soliloquy, "Una voce poco fa." Nor had she entirely recovered self-possession until the cabaletta, "Io sono docile," was approaching its conclusion. Still Mdlle Belocca had done quite enough to persuade her hearers that no common artist was before them, and her few shortcomings were allowed to be atoned for by "extenuating circumstances." It is a fact often denied, but not the less admitted by foreign aspirants, that, with all the talk about the "baptism of Paris," the most trying ordeal to pass with success is a first essay before one of our London Italian Opera audiences. This was clearly felt by Mdlle de Belocca, and influenced her accordingly at the outset. Encouraged, nevertheless, by the unmistakably expressed sympathy of the house, the young Russian songstress soon won heart, and in the duet with Figaro, "Dunque io son," now fully mistress of herself, exhibited powers, both as singer and actress, which left the question of her ultimate success beyond the possibility of doubt. She was equally good in the following scene, where, while listening to the angry reproaches of Dr Bartolo, her byplay was excellent. In the great finale to the first act, moreover—the only parallel in comic opera to that of the first act, of Mozart's Figaro—she showed herself equally alive to the "business," both musical and dramatic. It was in the next act, however, that Mdlle Belocca set all fears at rest and completed her success. The "Lesson Scene" won the sympathies of the whole assembly of connoisseurs. The first song was a Russian melody ("Solovei"), by Alabieff (known in England as the "Nightingale"), of plaintive character, which must have somewhat astonished Dr Bartolo, being sung in Russian language; but it was tuneful and expressive enough to enlist general and hearty sympathy. What followed was the brindisi, "Il segreto per esser felice" (Lucrezia Borgia) which, rendered in a characteristic and emphatic way, roused general enthusiasm, and was loudly encored. By this time the general conviction was that a new "star" had appeared in the operatic horizon. Such gifts as Mdlle Belocca is endowed with, such rare personal attractions, and such evident aptitude for the profession of her choice, were well worth cultivating. The impression created on Saturday night will cause every amateur to watch with interest the future career of the interesting young Russian. In Signor Brignoli Mdlle Belocca was associated with an Almaviva of the genuine Italian type, thoroughly versed in the Rossinian style of music, managing his voice with so much skill and address as often to make us wish, and as often to believe, that it was twenty years younger. In the duet with Figaro (Signor Catalani), "All idea di quel metallo," which won a recall for both performers, this was especially remarkable. The parts of Dr Bartolo, Basilio, and Fiorello were carefully sustained by Signors Zoboli, Costa, and Rinaldini; while Berta, with her quaint soliloquy, "Il vecchietto cerca moglie," was admirably impersonated by Madame Demeric-Lablache. About the overture and orchestral accompaniments to Il Barbiere, with Sir Michael Costa in the orchestra, it is unnecessary to say a word.

Digitized by Google

During the week there were repetitions of Fidelio and Rigoletto. In the last of these Mdlle Varesi justified the good opinions elicited on the evening of her début. We have also had the Nozze di Figaro, with a new soprano, Mdlle Pernini, as Susanna, about whose qualifications we should like to have another opportunity of speaking. She is clearly an artist in the true sense of the word; and this was shown from the beginning to the end of her performance. The Countess was Mdlle Tietjens—a Countess not to be surpassed, whether in her delivery of the music or in her impersonation of the character. Madame Trebelli was the Cherubino—which, though the music was intended for a soprano, is equivalent to saying that here there was nothing to criticise. The parts of the Count and Figaro were allotted to Signors De Reschi and Galassi; that of Marcellina fell to Madame Demeric-Lablache; Signors Costa, Rinaldini, and Grazzi doing duty as Bartolo, Basilio, and Don Curzio; so that, without entering into particulars about a thing so well known, and often described, it may be readily believed that the performance was in almost every respect efficient. The orchestra, it need scarcely be added, was everything that could be wished, from the overture to the last finale. The imperishable music of Mozart was listened to with the accustomed satisfaction, and the encores stereotyped by tradition were in every instance observed. The frequent appearances, in recent years, of this masterpiece says no little for the improving taste of our operatic audiences.

Lucrezia Borgia was repeated on Monday. Lucia di Lammermoor, with Mdlle Varesi as the heroine, was given on Tuesday, and en attendant further particulars, we may say that a brilliant success was achieved by the new Italian prima donna. On Thursday Mdlle Belocca made her second appearance as Rosina in the Barbiere. To-night a second performance of the Lucia, with Mdlle Varesi, is promised. Mdme Nilsson is to make her first appearance on Tuesday, as Edith Plantagenet in Balfe's Talismano.

—o—

ENGLISH COMPOSER AND ENGLISH PERFORMER.

(From the "Sunday Times," April 11th.)

Mr Macfarren's new violin concerto is a work in every way calculated to maintain the fame of the popular composer of St John the Baptist, and to show his facility in instrumental composition. The present concerto (in G minor and major), is comparatively new, having been written during the early spring of 1873 for M. Straus, and played by that estimable performer at the Philharmonic Concert of the 12th May subsequent. The form of the work is according to recognized rule, and contains little or no material which seeks to bring about renovation in the accepted form of the concerto. When a musician of Mr Macfarren's age, knowledge, and experience, finds it safer to move in the groove of conventionality and follow on the track to success, rather than attempt a novel cut across country, he sets an example which our younger musicians will do well to follow. When it is proved that they have full command over all styles and forms of tonal expression, we shall be glad to perceive tokens of originality in treatment: but, until the old method of construction is mastered, reckless innovation is of about as much practical value to art as would be a statue hewn straight from the rough by a young sculptor ignorant of anatomy. But this, by the way. Mr Macfarren's violin concerto, then, is a model of form; and, that it should be in no wise incomplete, the author has supplied the long and elaborate cadenza, instead of leaving it to the whim or caprice of the performer. Originality, however, is not wanting, witness the very striking commencement by the solo violin, unaccompanied, with a quasi-recitative passage, and witness also the manner in which the three separate movements are connected. The instrumentation is exceedingly choice, and the harmonies are rich and colourable. The oft-abused trombones are this time conspicuous—by their absence. It is in the writing for the solo instrument, however, that Mr Macfarren displays his technical mastery to the full, the part abounding in brilliant passages, telling phrases, and striking contrasts. It is all very well to call a work such as this a "show piece," but in reality it is a composition as much entitled to be termed "classical," as anything that has been written in the last half century. The melody of the larghetto is a lovely song without words, a pure cantabile subject, which is sure to test the "singing" qualities of the soloist, and the final allegretto scherzando is a dashing spirited movement of great attraction and skilful development. Mr Carrodus was exactly the man to give a competent reading of the work—not so particularly because he is an Englishman, like the composer—but that his style is so peculiarly adapted to the idiosyncrasies of the composition. Mr Carrodus's bowing is splendid, his tone broad and full, and his intonation, even in the most intricate passages, certain to a degree. The long experience which Mr Carrodus has had as an orchestral leader inclines him less to the tempo rubato than most solo violinists, and gives him that rare power of playing with the orchestra, instead of against it, as many less practised artists are wont to do. The whole performance was more than creditable, it was absolutely fine, and Mr Carrodus received a hearty compliment from the audience, who insisted upon his returning to the platform. Verily it was an occasion for English musicians to feel proud—author and executant alike displaying such great ability. We should not quit the subject without alluding to the graceful manner in which "G.," in a note appended to an analysis of the concerto, alludes to the paramount claims of Mr Macfarren to the high honours to which he has lately been elected. "G." says nothing without saying it well; hence the programme books are always as edifying as they are attractive.

[The foregoing relates to one of the most interesting features of a recent Saturday concert, under the direction of Herr Manns, at the Crystal Palace.—Ed. M. W.]

—o—

BRITISH ORCHESTRAL SOCIETY.

At the fourth concert of this society the programme offered many points of interest, and the performance, as a whole, exhibited improvement. The symphony was the C minor of Beethoven, the orchestral prelude and "postlude," the Melusine of Mendelssohn, and the Deux Journées of Cherubini; all of unsurpassed excellence, yet differing in character as widely as works so admirable could do. The interest of the orchestral parts of the concert was not, however, exhausted in these works. Two others were heard—one certainly, the other probably—for the first time by the majority of the audience; the former an intermezzo and scherzo by Mr Henry Gadsby, the latter a concerto di bravura for violin, composed and played by Mr Henry Holmes. We have had occasion to report on the performance—especially at the Crystal Palace—of several compositions by Mr Gadsby, in terms of very high praise. They have one and all struck us as exhibiting science and taste, the results of good training and intelligent observation. This is much. But they exhibit more than this—originality and a power of inventing topics, which culture sometimes enables a musician to conceal the want of, but cannot give. Mr Gadsby's composition was quite up to the standard by which we have been accustomed, and shall continue, to measure his productions. It abounds with fresh and beautiful ideas—ideas, which, without jostling one another, treated as they are, keep the attention of the listener from beginning to end. Mr Gadsby's orchestration is hardly less striking than his music. Drawing always from his symphonists a pleasant timbre, he not unfrequently presents us with combinations as novel as they are beautiful. The intermezzo and scherzo are, or will become, it may be hoped, a portion of an entire symphony, to the completion of which we look forward with much interest. Mr Henry Holmes has been longer before the world, and seen a good deal more than Mr Gadsby. A citizen of the world, he has found and delighted audiences, both as composer and executant; and there are few living musicians to whom his countrymen can point, whether for merit or reputation, with such thorough satisfaction. The concertino of Mr Holmes was first played by the author at Prague, some eighteen years since, and shortly afterwards at Vienna, where its dedication was accepted by the eminent virtuoso, Joseph Mayseder. As a composition, it is at once varied and coherent; as a vehicle for the display of executive skill it is equally remarkable. The composer's consummate mastery over his instrument was hardly less clearly manifested in the invention of the difficult and effective passages with which the work abounds than in the ease and certainty with which he executed them. The singers were Miss Julia Elton and Mr Edward Lloyd. The former did more than justice to a song by Balfe; and the latter revived a charming song from Loder's Night Dancers, which we hope he will let us hear again. In the dearth of good duets for contralto and tenor—voices difficult to combine efficiently—Signor Randegger's "Mille Volte" proved an unexpected pleasure.

The orchestra of this society probably contains more good and fewer mediocre symphonists than any orchestra in the world. In intelligence, practical skill and knowledge of music, they are certainly, as a body, unsurpassed; in timbre they are probably unequalled. Some shortcomings in the matter of delicacy were noticable in Mr Holmes's concertino, and Mr Gadsby's intermezzo would have borne more rehearsal. But the performance of Cherubini's overture was admirable, and that of Beethoven's symphony at once one of the broadest and most refined we have heard.—Globe.

Digitized by Google

THE NEW PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

(From an Occasional Correspondent.)

This society, under the direction of Dr Wylde and Mr Wilhelm Ganz, gave the first of its present series of concerts on Saturday afternoon last. A very attractive programme was presented to its subscribers on the occasion. We propose to offer a few comments with respect to the chief instrumental pieces, and in the order in which these occurred in the programme. Sterndale Bennett's overture, The Wood Nymphs—a well-selected specimen of our lamented countryman—commenced the concert. Fortunately, but little need in this case be written, the majority of the listeners present being more or less familiar with it from beginning to end. One of the best of our author's orchestral productions, it expresses in vivid pictures all the emotions which his imagination, so fertile in its pastoral suggestions, had aroused in his breast. It was played with an evident appreciation of its manifold beauties. All the points had been mastered by Mr Ganz, who conducted its performance, and he had the happy facility of being able to communicate what his mind had fully realised to all the gentlemen under his sway—an excellent band. In these days of "Programme Music," it may not be inappropriate to insist that if this overture has not a basis of sentiment, where are we to look for the expression of emotion by means of the language of music, whose ultimate perfection, it is asserted by some persons, will not be reached until it can speak clearly with no further aid than is required by a fine painting?

The next piece was the Lenore symphony. The name of Joachim Raff is in Germany a great power. Master of every style and variety of musical work, Raff did not begin music very early in life. Nor was he without a certain amount of family opposition in its pursuit. Mendelssohn's ready appreciation of some of his earliest efforts was the first genuine encouragement he had received external to himself, and with what earnestness and indefatigable labour he has persevered, may be inferred from the number and the extent of his compositions. He has a legitimate claim to speak out and to be heard. The Old Philharmonic Society did an act of justice to musical art in performing one of his symphonies (Im Walde) at its concert on the 12th inst. Raff's name carrying with it, as we have said, so much weight in Germany, where Beethoven, Mendelssohn, and our own Sterndale Bennett found their readiest appreciators, should have its raison d'être presented to Englishmen, that they might have an opportunity of judging how far the greatness of the name is really due to its possessor. From a first hearing of Im Walde, the third of Raff's symphonies, it must have been apparent to all present, that art, through Raff, has made great strides from the position it occupied at the time of Beethoven's decease. But whether every step forward is a real gain, is, in the opinion of some persons, open to question. Unusual combinations of sounds, progressions, abrupt changes of key, and a disregard of the customary manner in which the selection of keys is made, are among some of the novelties in the writings of Raff. But even these must not be lightly considered. Nor should judgment, with respect to them, be pronounced hastily. The author's meaning should be first ascertained. This seems to be especially requisite in such a work as "Im Walde" or "Lenore," which is the expression of varied emotions to which the author is solicitous to give utterance in the best of all languages, but which, alas, is so little understood. The explanation of his meaning Raff gives us in his programme. Next, it is necessary to satisfy ourselves whether the rules of "form" which have been laid down for ordinary students are perfect, and must never be departed from—whether "finality" is to be written with respect to them. Art existed prior to rules, even as language preceded grammar and rhetoric. As language progressed rules were framed, and, in course of time, these rules had to be modified and added to; and, as great authorities arise, further deviations from previous rules become requisite. So it is with music. As the art advances, rules need modification. In like manner the rules, with regard to poetry and dramatic writing, which had been accepted before Shakspere's time, had to be revised when the light of that stupendous genius had diffused itself. "Symphonies" are constructed upon rules of art, and not according to laws of Nature, which are unalterable; else they would be scientific in place of artistic. And if Raff produces great musical effects by not following the student's track, who is to say that the rules of music now obtaining, like the laws of the Medes and Persians, must on no account and never be altered? Most of the symphonies of Raff are the carrying out of a programme. How far all great symphonies are in reality the same depends, it may naturally be thought, upon what their authors have to say. And has any very great work of the kind been written whose composer has not had something he wished to unburthen himself of—some feelings to communicate, apart from the ideas of mere sound? Music, as we have hinted, is a language in which composers seek to express their inward emotions. These feelings or sentiments are the basis of a symphony, whether the author furnish a programme or not. The greatest symphonies, it is here suggested, represent emotions resulting from some state of circumstances, and not the circumstances themselves. Thus, all such works intended to convey any meaning, must be musical representations of moral ideas, as distinguished from mere physical imitations, though the difficulty of pourtraying the effect of a cause without representing the cause itself is admitted. Speaking of the two symphonies of Raff in the abstract (Im Walde and Lenore), it cannot be denied that there is much grandeur, if not always sublimity, and that there is splendour of orchestration, and no lack of the nobility of musical sentiment. The ideas are prolific, if not always great, and they admit of and receive free development. The Lenore, at the concert we are speaking of, was received with great favour, the third movement, the march, being encored and repeated. Dr Wylde conducted the symphony, and that he had made himself thoroughly familiar with the intricacies of the score was manifest by the result, an admirable performance of the entire work.

Mdlle Marie Krebs, the pianist at this concert, is emphatically a classical performer. Her very appearance almost argues (so great is the power of imagination) the sort of presentation that may be expected. She invariably conceives rightly the author she is about to interpret. With purity of expression, chasteness, delicacy, force where requisite, she presents to her audience the work she undertakes to explain. Her object is not the exhibition of her own extensive memory or perfect manipulation; it is to give as clear an exhibition as possible of a series of musical pictures in which she takes delight. Her performance of Beethoven's Concerto in G major, as well as of the ornate cadenzas she introduced, and subsequently of Chopin's Scherzo in B flat minor evinced all this. In the absence of Madame Arabella Goddard, no better representative of the embodiment of all the essentials for classical pianoforte playing could be desired. Mdlle Krebs was received with every cordial demonstration of approbation.

Mdlle Johanna Levier was the vocalist, and it can hardly be disputed that she is more happy in the Lieder of Schubert and Brahms than in the dramatic songs of Mozart. A spirited performance of Rossini's ever fresh overture, La Gazza Ladra, conducted by Mr Ganz, brought this interesting concert to a close.

FREDERIC PENNA.

[It is with pleasure that we find space in our columns for the foregoing, which is from the pen of an old and valued contributor. At the same time, we are unable to endorse certain of his opinions.—ED. M. W.]

Singers, Beware.

A musical society at Leeds engaged Mdme Corani, Miss Sinclair, Mr Vernon Rigby, and Signor Foli to sing in that town very recently. When the artists had fulfilled their engagement, they retired to the Queen's Hotel, expecting the secretary or treasurer of the society "to call and settle;" but no official appeared; and, after fruitless enquiries, the singers departed for London, minus their honorarium. Several applications to the conductor and secretary brought an intimation that the society could not pay the full amount agreed upon, but only a fraction thereof. Let this be a caution to artists when they go to Yorkshire. Leeds is a wealthy and important town, and far too proud to tolerate repudiation within its circuit.

Digitized by Google

TIMES GONE BYE.*

The recent performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony brought back vividly to my mind his Missa Solemnis, the most difficult work, perhaps, in the whole range of church-music. Portions of this gigantic Opus were performed in Vienna in 1824, three years before the composer's death. Three numbers were selected for his benefit-concert, and, among the notabilities whose services were secured for the occasion, was the celebrated Ungher-Sabatier, to whom was confided the soprano solos. But, despite this brilliant beginning, it was not till the 27th May, 1844, on the second day of the 26th Musical Festival of the Lower Rhine, that, after remaining almost totally neglected for twenty years, the work was performed for the first time in its entirety. The artists who took part in it under my direction were four solo-singers (Herr and Mad. Diez, from Munich, Mdlle Sophie Schloss, of Cologne, and Herr Böttcher, "Royal Singer," from Berlin), 417 chorus-singers (113 sopranos, 89 contraltos, 96 tenors, and 119 basses), and 167 instrumental performers (1 organ, 65 violins, 18 double-basses, etc.), making a total of 590 persons. There had been no lack of due preparation; no lack of ability in the artists, and, certainly, no lack of zeal on the part of the conductor. At length the day of the general rehearsal arrived. Opposite the orchestra I had had a half-length portrait, life-size, of Beethoven, hung up on the middle pillar of the Gürzenich hall. After I had animated my army by a few words referring to this portrait, the mighty waves of tone rolled forth almost uninterruptedly, and—as I thought—in the most effective manner. "But with the powers of Fate," etc. The "Benedictus" had just been concluded, and, after the violin-solo, in G major, 12-8, I paused a short time to rest. Suddenly, a gaunt, dark man, with a broad white neck-tie, came rushing over the benches from the back, and posted himself, out of breath, against the orchestra railing and opposite to me. It was Anton Schindler, from Aix-la-Chapelle. We had never been introduced to each other, but I recognized him from the descriptions I had heard of him. He had for years been travelling in the Rhine Provinces, attending all concerts of any importance. On these he used to write notices, which were mostly very unfavourable. As we know, he had for years been Beethoven's amanuensis, and thought that his services in that capacity—services, by the way, of an entirely subordinate character—entitled him to claim an exclusive comprehension of the master. His vanity went so far that he introduced himself on his cards, in Paris, as: "Antoine Schindler, ami de Beethoven," though we in Germany had long been aware in what a contemptuous tone the master had repeatedly expressed himself, both in writing and by word of mouth, concerning his servant. The difference between the high opinion which Schindler entertained of himself, and the small modicum of respect paid him by the musical public, had rendered him so cantankerous that he condemned every performance which did not agree entirely with his views, and as he considered that, especially in puncto Beethoven, he was infallible, all the conductors of the Rhenish Winter and Whitsuntide Concerts, who dared not omit the hero's works from their programme, were constantly opposed to this critic's attacks. Ries and Mendelssohn had sometimes found favour in his eyes, but Spohr, Reissiger, and Kreutzer, to say nothing of the minorum gentium Dii, were regularly treated to the most pitiable censure. Suddenly, he stood before me, and addressed me as follows: "Dorn! the entire tempo is a mistake—it is a great deal too slow—this is what it ought to be" (he here beat time in crotchets with his hand). "I am Schindler—go over the number again—we owe Beethoven thus much, at any rate." I was so incensed at such an act of effrontery on the part of one of the audience at a general rehearsal (and I should have been so even with a man of far greater importance), in presuming to teach the conductor before all the executants, that, not to prolong the scene, I took no notice of him, but, with apparent composure, turned over the leaves of the score. Rendered bolder by my silence, Schindler leaned over the platform, and called out to the leader: "Hartmann, tell the orchestra—." Here, however, I interrupted him, and, striking the desk with my conducting-stick, replied, in a firm voice: "Sir, no one has anything to say in this place except myself." Hereupon Schindler resumed his place very hastily among the audience, but was immediately afterwards, by order of a member of the Committee, turned out of the hall for unbecoming behaviour. It seemed self-evident what sort of a criticism he would write on the entire Festival—for the first day of which Handel's Joshua was selected. Our expectations were realized in the 5th and the 6th Part of Hermann Herschbach's Musical Repertory, Leipsic, for 1844. The principal accusation was—because, through the fault of the publishers, the new time was not marked over the G major, 12-8 tempo—that I had taken as my standard the "Sostenuto" of the prelude. This, he said, did not suit the joyous childlike piety of the number, and he knew for a certainty that Beethoven had required an Andante con Moto. The researches at Schott's, in Mayence, with regard to this point, had, he added, unfortunately, led to no result.—Here, as far as I was concerned, the matter ended, for any posthumous dispute about a wrong tempo must necessarily be useless. During my stay in Cologne, however, I conducted the "Benedictus" at two concerts, when I believe I retained the same time as on the first occasion.

Up to this point the whole affair—though, perhaps, interesting—possesses no kind of artistic importance, for different opinions will exist as to the proper tempo as long as music is played; the phlegmatic man counts by a different beat of the pulse to that followed by a man of sanguine temperament. When, therefore, an Allegro is not manifestly distorted into an Adagio, or an Adagio into an Allegro, let every one do battle for his own views, and seek to convince his opponents; it is only the fact of its taking place in such a manner during the Festival itself that raises the above incident out of the usual category. But now comes an appendix possessing a real musical value, namely:—nine years later, in October, 1853, the Niederrheinische Musikzeitung (edited by the late Professor Bischoff) published a shriek of triumph from Schindler, who wrote to say that the zealous researches of Professor Otto Jahn had succeeded in discovering a letter (of the 26th January, 1825) from Beethoven to his publisher, Schott, of Mayence, wherein were contained the words: "The tempo of the 'Benedictus,' also—Andante molto cantabile, e non troppo mosso—is, perhaps, not marked." And with this direction of the careful composer, intent upon guarding by molto cantabile the staid pace of an Andante from aught like haste, and who, still not satisfied, adds e non troppo mosso, by no means too quick—with this direction does Schindler come forward, after the lapse of nine years, producing it as evidence that he was quite right when he asserted in Cologne that the tempo of the "Benedictus" must be—Andante con moto!—the exact contrary of Beethoven's Andante molto cantabile, e non troppo mosso! This was in times gone bye; now-a-days such things are impossible.

HEINRICH DORN.

* From the Neue Berliner Musikzeitung.

A Lament.

Oh, I feel that I'm a poet, but I want the world to know it,
For I lack the reputation which should be my talent's due
I've the feeling which enhances all the poet's airy fancies,
But I haven't got the power of conveying them to you.

In my visions Castles Spanish raise their cloud-capped heights and vanish,
Creatures fair in form and feature float about my heated brain:
Gallant thoughts, from regions golden, tell me legends grim and olden,
But I lack the words that properly those legends would explain.

Oft I think a touching story, that would crown my name with glory,
And be read by eager thousands where the English tongue is known;
But when down I sit to write it, long I suck my pen and bite it,
And I very soon discover that my touching story's flown.

Dramas, poems, and romances, visit me in noonday trances,
Till my mind with glowing pictures I should like to sketch at sight:
But, alas! though I'm a poet, ne'er my fellow-men can know it,
For a cruel fate denies me the ability to write.—Punch.

BERGAMO.—Dr Michelangelo Galli, who has long devoted himself to collecting documents and other objects connected with the life and death of Gaetano Donizetti, lately received from Constantinople two coloured photographic portraits, one of the composer and one of his wife. They were presented to the Corporation of this city, in view of the festival shortly to be celebrated in the master's honour, the donor being Sig. Salvatori, who married the widow of Andrea Donizetti.

Digitized by Google

ROYAL ALBERT HALL.

One of the rules of the Amateur Orchestral Society is that the proceeds of its public concerts shall be applied to objects of charity. The three concerts which have taken place this season have thus been of pecuniary service to certain benevolent institutions; and, upon the occasion of the fourth, on Saturday evening last, the attendance being, as hitherto, large and fashionable, it may be presumed that the Royal Albert Orphan Asylum, the chosen recipient of what might accrue, will be as fortunate as the others. Much of the prestige of these concerts is due to the active interest the Duke of Edinburgh takes in their maintenance and welfare; and as he is not only one of the managers, but also one of the players, and in both capacities sedulously attentive to his duties, his example has borne good fruit, and the amateur body prospers accordingly. Of this there was pleasant proof at the recent meeting. The instrumental pieces—namely, Weber's overture, The Ruler of the Spirits, the second movement from Schubert's 'unfinished symphony in B minor, Suppé's overture, Poet and Peasant, Rossini's overture to Semiramide, and Meyerbeer's Coronation March — were, in most instances, rendered with a highly commendable precision; while there was an equally creditable obedience to the indications of the conductor, Mr George Mount, in the observance of the points of contrast and expression. The orchestral playing of the Society is, in short, much above the average work of such associations, and is honestly entitled to praise. Miss Robertson, who sang at one of the former concerts, it will be remembered, with marked success, was present at this, and in Benedict's song, "The bird that came in spring," and Tito Mattei's waltz, "Che gioja," again revealed that surprising altitude of voice, and dexterous facility in using it, which so easily accounts for the celebrity she has attained in amateur circles. Her bright and sparkling singing in the songs mentioned pleased the audience thoroughly, and in each case she was encored by general consent. It may be observed that Sir Julius Benedict acted as accompanist in the first song, and Mr Randegger—whose pupil Miss Robertson is said to be—in the second. Mr C. E. M'Cheane is another amateur who has made a name at these meetings; and his contributions on Saturday night consisted of Arthur Sullivan's song, "The sailor's grave," in which he was accompanied by the composer, and Beethoven's "Adelaida"—the pianoforte part of which was charmingly played by Mr Randegger—besides joining Miss Robertson in Pinsuti's duet, "Souvenir." In addition to the above, a violoncello solo was performed with unexpected skill by Mr Foster Cooke, and, between the parts, a pair of organ pieces by Mr W. S. Bambridge.

D. H. H.

MUSIC AT BERLIN.

(From our Correspondent.)

The event so long anxiously expected, namely the first production of M. Anton Rubinstein's new opera, Die Maccabäer, has come off at the Royal Operahouse with great success. The libretto, founded upon a well-known drama, by Herr Ludwig, is from the pen of Dr Mosenthal. It is ably written, dramatic, and well adapted for music. The name of one of the principal characters is Leah, the name of the piece—also by Dr Mosenthal—which Miss Bateman's acting rendered famous through the length and breadth of England and of the United States. The cast is as follows: Noemi, Mdlle Lehmann; Leah, Mdlle Brandt; Cleopatra, Mdlle Grossi; Judah, Herr Betz; Eleazar, Herr Ernst; Antiochus, Herr Salomon; Gorgies, Herr Schmidt; Jojakim, Herr Fricke; Amri, Herr Schleich; Simei, Herr Oberhauser; Boas, Herr Barth; Joarim and Benjamin, Mdlles Lammert and Horina. The house, which was densely crowded, lavished applause with a liberal hand. The composer, who conducted his own work, was called on several times after each act, besides having repeatedly to turn and bow from his seat in the orchestra during the performance. The next day, the Emperor conferred on him the Order of the Crown, Third Class.

To celebrate the 25th anniversary of the Friedrichsgymnasium, founded in 1850, the more advanced students lately gave a performance, in the original Greek, of Sophocles' Œdipus Tyrannus, with the choruses set to music by Herr H. Bellermann. Among the well-known professors and scholars present was Dr Falk, Minister of State. The fair sex was numerously represented, a German translation of the piece having been printed for their behoof.

The title of Musik-Director has been conferred upon Herr von Brenner, conductor of the Berlin Sinfonie-Capelle.

Faust in Vienna.

(From a long-red-bearded correspondent.)

In order to appreciate the charm exercised at the Komische Oper by Gounod's Margarethe in her Italian dress of yesterday, we must first snap all the threads, even to the very last one, by which we feel ourselves bound to Goethe's poem. The Germans are far too conscientious. They would fain spare their great poet, and this they cannot do without damaging the French composer. One of the two, Goethe or Gounod, must be sacrificed, and an Italian singer does not hesitate long which it shall be. No reverential scruple fetters his unsuspecting mind, and he presents us with something in which the names of Faust and Margarethe fall on our ears like the echoes of some forgotten story of our youth. Such was the case yesterday at the Komische Oper. A material, sensual feeling pervaded the entire performance. The opera appeared under a new light, less noble, but truer, than our German mode of looking at it. For this we have especially to thank M. Capoul, who steeps Faust in the most glowing passion. That rare exotic, the Garden Scene, had, in our opinion, justice done it for the first time. The stage was filled with a sultry air in which one could scarcely breathe, and the spectator absolutely inhaled the perfume of jasmine from out the music. Yet, if we except a few trifling details, Capoul could not be accused of exaggeration. He sang admirably, showing more strength and greater lasting power than we had been led to expect from his previous efforts. In the Garden Scene Mad. Patti did not come up to his fiery intensity. She was here neither the German Gretchen nor the French Marguérite. She was deficient in that sentiment of longing which constitutes the ignoble soul of this music. Something like suppressed virtuosity had a rather disturbing effect, and the Waltz suggested a Dinorah restored to reason. Before the "Mater dolorosa," and in the prison, Mad. Patti acted appropriately and movingly, while, musically speaking, she was the best of all the Marguérites we ever heard. Sig. Rota decked his Mephisto out in a superabundance of coarse details. He was a devil as ill-behaved as dull; to cite a saying of Voltaire's, he was half tiger, half ape. Clothed from the crown of his head to the tip of his toes in the colour of the regions below, he sinned so far against good taste, moreover, as, in the Cathedral scene, to envelope himself in a red cloak. While he might previously have been mistaken for a stick of sealing wax, he then looked like a man actually transformed to scarlet. Signora Bernardi, as Siebel, sang much of her music very happily. The rest of the performers, especially Herr Berger as Valentine, were satisfactory. But the hero of the evening was really Arditi. He has worked wonders with chorus and orchestra. The Italian version of the opera was in some places lengthened, and in others curtailed, in comparison with the version usually adopted here. We warn everyone against the prolongations; the cuts we recommend to the management of the Imperial Operahouse.

Ole Strangersheet.

Vienna, April 21.

MUSIC AT VIENNA.

(From a Correspondent.)

The Emperor of Austria has appointed Herr Jauner manager of the Imperial Opera for ten years, with a salary of 12,000 florins, and retiring pension. He also allows him to retain the management of the Carltheater. Jauner has taken Herr Knaak as partner in the management of the Carltheater, and will signalize his entry by giving, at the most, five performances a week, and by reducing the ballet. He has already despatched Herr Gustav Lewy, theatrical agent, to Paris, Brussels, and London, in search of novelties. Mad. Pauline Lucca is, it is said, engaged for the autumn, and negotiations are pending with Sig. Merelli for a short Italian season in the spring. Goldmark's Königin von Saba is to be revived, with Mdlle Lieder as Sulamith.

Otto Dessoff took leave of the Imperial Opera by conducting the Mignon of Ambroise Thomas, and also of the Society of the Friends of Music. After the concert the representatives of the two institutions presented him with addresses, albums, and a purse of 10,000 florins. Speeches were made by Herren Herbeck and Beck. On leaving Vienna for Karlsruhe, Dessoff was escorted to the railway station by the artists of the Opera. Hans Richter, of Pesth, the Wagnerite, is to succeed him.

Johannes Brahms has ceased to be director of the Society of the Friends of Music. His place will be filled by Herbeck.

Digitized by Google

ST JAMES'S HALL,

REGENT STREET AND PICCAILLY.

MR CHARLES HALLÉ'S

Pianoforte Recitals.

MR CHARLES HALLÉ has the honour to announce that his Fifteenth Series of PIANOFORTE RECITALS will take place on the the following afternoons:—

FRIDAY, May 7, 1875.	FRIDAY, June 4, 1875.
FRIDAY, May 14, 1875.	FRIDAY, June 11, 1875.
FRIDAY, May 21, 1875.	FRIDAY, June 18, 1875.
FRIDAY, May 28, 1875.	FRIDAY, June 25, 1875.

FIRST RECITAL,

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, MAY 7, 1875.

To Commence at Three o'clock precisely.

Programme.

QUINTET in F minor, Op. 34, for pianoforte, two violins, viola, and violoncello—Mr CHARLES HALLE, Madame NORMAN-NERUDA, Herr L. RIES, Herr STRAUS, and Herr FRANZ NERUDA .. .. .. Brahms.

SONATA in E flat, Op. 27, No. 1, for pianoforte alone—Mr CHARLES HALLE .. .. Beethoven.

SONATA in A major (No. 17 of Hallé's edition), for pianoforte and violin—Mr CHARLES HALLE and Madame NORMAN-NERUDA .. Mozart.

QUARTET in B minor, Op. 3, No. 3, for pianoforte, violin, viola, and violoncello—Mr CHARLES HALLE, Madame NORMAN-NERUDA, Herr STRAUS and Herr FRANZ NERUDA .. .. Mendelssohn.

PRICES OF ADMISSION.

	For the Series.	Single Tickets.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
Sofa Stalls (numbered and reserved)	2 2 0	0 7 0
Balcony	1 1 0	0 3 0
Area		0 1 0

Subscriptions received at Chappell & Co.'s, 50, New Bond Street; Mitchell's, 33, Old Bond Street; Ollivier's, 38, Old Bond Street; Keith, Prowse & Co.'s, 48, Cheapside; Hays's, 4, Royal Exchange Buildings; Austin's Ticket Office, 28, Piccadilly; and by Mr CHARLES HALLE, 11, Mansfield Street, Cavendish Square.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

CORRADINO.—Mdlle Varesi is the Persiani of the period—only she always sings in tune. She would be also the Bosio of the period, had she but the voice. In any case she is an artist hors ligne.

A SPOILED OPERA-GOER.—Go to Her Majesty's Opera, and hear Mdlle Varesi execute chromatic scales, ascending and descending; and then you will know what chromatic scale-singing means. Mdlle Varesi has been educated in the very highest school of legitimate Italian art. This, in Rigoletto, was not at once convincingly made apparent; but Lucia di Lammermoor placed the matter beyond a doubt. A more consummate mistress of the genuine art of vocalization than Mdlle Varesi it would be difficult, at the present time, to name.

NOTICE.

To ADVERTISERS.—The Office of the MUSICAL WORLD is at Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & CO.'S, 244, Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street (First Floor). It is requested that Advertisements may be sent not later than Thursday. Payment on delivery.

The Musical World,

LONDON, SATURDAY, MAY 1, 1875.

RAFF'S "LENORE."

THE following interesting remarks apropos of the first performance of this singular composition in London, at the New Philharmonic Concert of Saturday afternoon, under the direction of Dr Wylde, appeared in Monday's issue of The Daily Telegraph:—

"When this remarkable work was produced at Sydenham a little while ago, we expressed opinions about it which a second hearing has greatly strengthened. In the first three movements there is, beyond question, much of a high order; the andante and march especially being distinguished by not a few elements of greatness. If called upon to place these movements in order of merit, we should prefer the andante without hesitation, moved to do so by its melodic grace, tender expression, and rich colouring. No doubt the march is better adapted for popularity—it was encored on Saturday—but, however bright and stirring, the themes have not much nobility of character. Respecting the first allegro, with its peculiar form and daring harmonies, we only desire now to protest against hasty condemnation simply because of that form and those harmonies. It may be—we will not dispute the matter—that certain processes of composition are truer to nature, that is to say more agreeable to our innate feeling of propriety, than others, but the test this fact supplies is too indefinite to be relied upon; and after all, just as language existed before grammar, music existed before rules. No composer should be debarred, even by the accumulated wisdom of the generations preceding him, from dealing at pleasure with those materials of his art which have come to him, not as a trust handed down by them, but as a free gift from heaven. He is at liberty to do as he pleases, and, of course must take the consequences—whether opprobrium for blundering folly or praise for inventive genius. Let no amateur, therefore, be affected in his judgment by any outcry respecting broken rules. Every man who has advanced the art has been a sinner in this respect, and, though it is true that many have sinned and wrought mischief, music knows how to take care of itself while punishing them. We cannot in any way champion the final movement of Raff's symphony, which depicts the horrible death-ride of Lenore and her spectral lover. Here, judging by results, the composer goes out of the proper domain of music, taking with him the machinery of his art, but not its spirit, which refuses to follow. Music, as such, will have nothing to do with Bürger's monstrous imaginings, because it is powerless to give them expression—however well it might help their effect, if, as in Der Freischütz, they were represented to the eye. Hence the movement in question becomes mere noise of a very unpleasant sort, to the production of which from orchestral instruments Raff need not have confined himself. In view of the object sought, he might have used fire-irons, marrow-bones and cleavers, or any other noise-making machines not recognised by composers of music. Here is the lesson of the symphony—the sublime and the ridiculous are not far apart. Beethoven is sublime in the storm of the Pastoral; but when Lenore's horse goes thundering past gibbets from which the skeletons descend to rattle along in pursuit, Raff is ridiculous."

Thus should questions of the sort invariably be discussed. Language existed before grammar, it is true; but the primitive utterances of a child can no more be regarded as art-work than the incoherent gibberish of a talking parrot. Art and nature are by no means one and the same. By the way, has our contemporary ever heard the Lenore of Professor G. A. Macfarren? That also includes a spectral night-ride.

O. B.

FRIEDERICH WIECK.

FRIEDERICH WIECK, father of the renowned Mdme Clara Schumann-Wieck, and one of the earliest artistic advisers of Robert Schumann himself, must be naturally an object of interest, if only on that account, alike to musicians and amateurs. An article which has recently appeared from the pen of Herr Dorn, many years joint-conductor with the well-known composer, Herr Taubert, at the Royal Opera House, Berlin, has recently appeared in the pages of the Neue Berliner Musikzeitung, which is so full of interesting details that we venture to submit to the attention of our readers a translation in extenso:—

Almost simultaneously with the second edition, identical with the first, of that much read book, already translated into English: Clavier und Gesang, Didaktisches und Polemisches, Leipsic, Leuckart, there were published by Matthes, Leipsic, under the title: "Ein Familiendenkmal von A. v. Meichsner" ("A Family Monument, by A. von Meichsner,") some biographical notices of its much esteemed author, and his two daughters, Clara (now Mad. Schumann) and Marie. Twenty years have elapsed since Fr. Wieck gave the first mentioned work to the world, and a notice carping at and criticizing everything in it would be rather late now, when he has gone to his rest. Besides this, the work is one of those which by their originality do not allow of our making extracts, if we would not misunderstand the books themselves. May, therefore, the still attractive collection including the annexed 19 chapters, find numerous and attentive readers: On Elementary Instruction in Pianoforte Playing; An Evening's Entertainment and Supper at Herr Zach's; A Visit to Mad. N.'s; Secrets; Operatic Goings-On; On the Pedal; The Feeling of Procrastination; Many Learners of the Pianoforte and no Players; Something rhapsodical about Singing; Hans Eilig; Aphorisms on Pianoforte-Playing; the Wunderdoctor; Mad. Grund and four Lessons; Vocal and Pianoforte Abuses; Art has always fallen only through Artists; Miscellaneous; On the Pianoforte; Conclusion. That Fr. Wieck did not hesitate to call a spade a spade, he proved in these 133 pages as well as elsewhere. They have vividly recalled to my mind the picture of this original individual, of this physically feeble old man, who, however, in his 88th year, was intellectually unaltered, the same as he was when I first knew him, hale, hearty, and some forty years of age, at Leipsic in 1829. The so-called Familiendenkmal does not contain much towards enabling us to understand so exceptional a disposition,† for we find in it absolutely nothing new about old "Papa." On the other hand, it is interesting on account of the minute details it supplies concerning the artistic doings of his two talented daughters, Clara and Marie, as well as on account of a welcome addition in the shape of sundry hitherto unpublished letters from H. von Bülow, C. Czerny, R. Schumann, and C. M. von Weber. Of course, with only such limited materials, augmented by notices out of old papers and ephemeral publications, mostly from unknown pens, no one could produce a regular biography, or an accurate character-sketch of the Deceased. Any one, however, not looking for these, will certainly be quite satisfied with the unpretending collection of miscellaneous facts concerning the three persons whose portraits, happily hit-off, are added to the title-page. That a man so extraordinary in many respects should as yet have met with no biographer, is a circumstance for which we must seek an explanation in the modesty of the members of his family, who have never thought of availing themselves of the best sources for a memoir which should treat the Deceased psychologically as well as otherwise. I refer to his letters, and, moreover, not those which he received, but those which he himself wrote. What manner of correspondent Friedrich Wieck was, let the subjoined specimen testify. That the reader may the better understand it, I may observe that it was addressed to myself from Dresden, on the 5th January, 1869, that is, four days after my article entitled "Abwehr" had appeared in the Vossische Zeitung—an article in which I had endeavoured to enlighten the Berlin public concerning the sudden removal of two Royal Capellmeister. Wieck's letter runs thus:—

Digitized by Google

"Highly esteemed Capellmeister, well-tried Vocal Colleague, after a Capellmeister with a moral conscience has been exerting himself for years in the training of voices, he cannot well avoid arriving at the painful conviction that singers, male and female, are still human beings never able to melt themselves down into Wagnerian cyclopses, and sing for life and death—I might say—do battle in the operas of Tristan the Meistersinger, the Nibelungen, and, partly, Lohengrin. People were beginning, at least in Berlin and Dresden, again to employ the human voice in a manner conformable to nature, when there was a Wagnerian outburst to lay a good solid foundation for singing again run wild, since, instead of a tube that can be repaired for a few thalers, Wagner continues to employ the human voice in fancy creations, which, from a vocal point of view—I leave anything like musical considerations out of the question—must lead to the most revolting excesses, and which cause so many foolish and giddy young persons of talent to sacrifice their voices and health to unedifying efforts. Could not you have let something of the kind appear in your 'Abwehr?' I read it plainly between the lines; but only few persons, Intendants never, and even musicians seldom, can read, vocally speaking, as I can. Well, it cannot have been practicable, at least, not in this instance; you know that better than anyone else. We shall see, however, what will be the result of fostering Wagner worship in Berlin, Dresden, Munich, etc. How will Mozart's operas, how will Norma, La Sonnambula, Il Barbiere, sound afterwards? With voices squandered in riotous declamation! With hoarse, sung-out throats! With companies utterly exhausted by continuous rehearsals! True that, for our orchestras, in which manual dexterity has made such tremendous progress, it is more entertaining to execute Wagnerian music than to accompany Norma; but it is a pity that the poor lung-labouring wind-instrumentalists do not receive additional pay, so that in the summer they might go to Nice, and recruit themselves by smoking a cigar on the sea beach! In my essay "On the utter Decadence of Vocal Art in Europe" (sixth volume of Lobe's Fly-leaves for Music), I gave the Intendants, several years ago, the answer befitting such vocal doings, and my only hope is that more artists of talent, taught by bitter experience, will refrain from sacrificing their life, like Schnorr von Carolsfeld, and that thus an end may be put to this increased worship of extravagant declamation. Then you—like Taubert—will have received satisfaction for more noble principles of humanity. My preface to the second Etude meets with much appreciation, both privately and publicly. It is announced in Leipsic as 'the Voice in the Desert,' and homage is paid to this humble individual. My pupil, Marie Chmelik, meets with extraordinary success among the public, even though she may not be able to overcome and sing Proch's Grand Variations. Do not judge from what is said by certain critics, who always slash about them and find fault whenever any one of unusual talent appears, and who require a lion's voice in addition to a good school. 'All in which we have hitherto been deficient are the Meyerberian Frédéric's d'or à la Jenny Lind,' who dared not come out at the Dresden Opera for want of voice. That is what the delicate ear of the Intendant rightly detected. Yet she appeared under Meyerbeer in the far larger Theater an der Wien fifteen times successively in the Sonnambula, and 20 times as Vielka; hundreds had to be turned back every evening from the pay-place.—Here there are already nearly every day orchestral rehearsals of the Meistersinger. Mitterwurzer must fall a sacrifice, and what the Peasant says in my Tagebuch eines alten Musikmachers will shortly be exemplified in Dresden: 'Sing, scream, roar, crackle, That's the real Wagner rattle!'—You ought now to found a Conservatory for Singing, for there is no longer one in Germany. The attempts in ours are not worth much, though a few pupils of talent pull themselves together, find out the right path by themselves, and then go on a short time as half naturalists.—If God shall graciously permit me to live and work so long, I trust we shall see each other again at Loschwitz. Overwhelmed as I am with work, which now is so trying to me in winter, I have written very hurriedly; but Chap.-Mstr. D. always takes the will for the deed, and so I greet you and your family with all my heart. Yours, Fr. Wieck."

I do not suppose the above letter from this original man requires a commentary, though I may, perhaps, add that I agree with all the views contained in it. H. DORN.

Friederich Wieck, who died as lately as the 6th October, two years since, was born on the 18th August, 1785. His influence on art, though more or less indirect, and made felt through channels other than his own, was for a long period very considerable; and this was unanimously and heartily recognized when the veteran master, at the ripe age of 88, quitted the sphere of his earthly labours. His gifted daughter, and his still more gifted son-in-law, have done more than enough to perpetuate his name. O. B.

A TELEGRAM came here from Paris yesterday, informing us that four more performances of Verdi's Requiem are to be given, and that the renowned maestro has been made a Commander of the Legion of Honour.

ST PETERSBURGH.—M. De Gedeonow has been relieved by the Emperor—in what appears a rather summary fashion—of his duties as Chief Intendant of the Imperial Theatres of St Petersburgh and Moscow, an office which had been in the De Gedeonow family for three generations. The cause of his dismissal is the deficit, constantly increasing, of late years. M. De Gedeonow's dismissal does not excite much sympathy in the artistic world.

BRUSSELS.—Mad. Christine Nilsson concluded her engagement at the Théâtre Royal de la Monnaie by a mixed entertainment, comprising the last act of Mignon, the fourth act of Hamlet, and the great duet from Les Huguenots. The audience were in raptures. The Guide Musical observes:—

"Mdlle Nilsson ought to be pleased with the manner in which the Brussels public, generally so cold and reserved, took leave of her. A shower of flowers, amid enthusiastic applause and recalls, greeted her departure, and must have demonstrated how welcome had been her presence in our capital."

Le Nozze di Figaro has been given, with Meedles Hamakers, Priols, Reiner; MM. Petit and Dauphin.

† Old Rhinelanders would be reminded by Wieck of the late Herr Anschütz, Chief-Procurator at Coblentz, and a man of thoroughly musical tastes.

Digitized by Google

CONCERTS VARIOUS.

At Mr Aguilar's performance of pianoforte music, on Monday last, the following pieces were given:—Sonata in A minor—Aguilar; Nocturne in F sharp—Aguilar; Prelude and Fugue in C sharp—J. S. Bach; Grande Polonaise brillante, Op. 22 (Miss Ellen Harston, pupil of Mr Aguilar)—Chopin; (a) Lurline—Seeling; (b) Waves (Caprice Etude)—Aguilar; Sonata, The Maid of Orleans—Bennett; Lieder ohne Wörte (Miss Ellen Hartson)—Mendelssohn; Weber's Last Waltz (Transcription)—Aguilar; (a) Romance, Op. 28, No. 2 (b) Traumeswirren—Schumann; (a) Last look (Romance) (b) Couleur de Rose (Galop brillant)—Aguilar.

The Lothbury Choral Society gave, under the direction of Mr Josiah Clippendale, a concert, on Tuesday evening in the Town Hall, Poplar, for the benefit of a church fund, which brought together a numerous assemblage. Part songs by Fesca, H. Leslie, F. Cowen, W. Macfarren, J. G. Callcott, Mendelssohn, &c., were effectively sung, and several had to be repeated. Henry Smart's canon, for six ladies' voices, was given to perfection, and was much applauded. Miss Henman and Mrs Baynes gave Mendelssohn's two part song, "I would that my love," and Mrs Hamilton Mackenzie, "Home, Sweet Home," extremely well. Mr Frank Peach was "recalled" after "My Sweetheart when a boy." Mrs Josiah Clippendale, in Sir Julius Benedict's brilliant fantasia on the airs in Der Freischütz, proved herself an able executant, and pleased every one by the neatness of her execution. She also played W. Macfarren's Tarantella with equal effect. The concert was a success, and the directors deserve every credit for their exertions.

Mr John C. Ward and Mr J. G. Callcott, two artists long and favourably known in connection with Mr Henry Leslie's choir, gave an evening concert, under distinguished patronage, at St James's Hall, on Friday the 22nd of April, when the hall was filled by their friends and supporters. The concert-givers were "assisted" by the following vocalists: the Misses Eva Leslie and Bolingbroke, Mr G. Cosby, Mr Edward Lloyd, Mr Santley, and the members of Mr Leslie's choir. The latter sang madrigals and part songs by Morley, Weekes, Ward, Leslie, Stevens, and Callcott. The two part songs, "Love wakes and weeps," and "Returning Spring," by Mr Callcott, were loudly encored. They were sung in perfect style by the choir. Miss Eva Leslie gave "Robert toi que j'aime," and an Irish melody, both of which were much applauded; Miss Bolingbroke, Randegger's "Cradle Song," accompanied by the composer; and Mr Edward Lloyd, Schubert's "Regret," which was encored. Mr Santley, in Schumann's "Thy lovely face," and "Thou art my love," had the same compliment paid him. He also sang "The Vicar of Bray," to the delight of all present, and in conjunction with Miss Leslie and Mr Lloyd, John Barnett's trio, "This magic wove Scarf," which we have seldom heard given with more effect. Mr George Cosby, one of the choir, came out as soloist, with a new song by Mr Roeckel. Mr John C. Ward appeared in various capacities, viz., as a singer, composer, concertina player, and conductor, in all of which he acquitted himself well. His performances of Regondi's Serenade for concertina alone, and, with Mr Callcott, of Blagrove's and Sidney Smith's Duo Concertante, for concertina and piano, on Airs from Zampa, were greatly admired. Mr Ward's vocal efforts were shown to advantage in a song by Mr Plumpton, and in Mr Leslie's trio, "O Memory," with Misses Leslie and Bolingbroke. The concert was altogether successful.

PROVINCIAL.

Norwich.—We learn from a local journal, that the second concert, given by the Norwich Musical Union, took place on Wednesday evening, April 21st in St Andrew's Hall, under the distinguished patronage of H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught, who honoured the performance with his presence. The first part of the concert was devoted to Mr Cowen's cantata, The Rose Maiden. The second part was miscellaneous. Miss Bessie Hill, Miss Case (a pupil of Dr Bunnett's), and Messrs Minns and Smith, undertook the solos. This was the first time the Rose Maiden has been performed in Norwich with a band accompaniment. Among the best numbers, we may mention the duet for soprano and tenor, "I knew a rose-bud shining," well sung by Mr Minns and Miss Hill, and the chorus, "O earth-born sorrow." The second part opened with a very good performance of Mendelssohn's overture to Son and Stranger. This charming work was very well played by the band under Dr Bunnett's guidance. Mr A. Bunnett played "La Marche d'Alexandre," by Moscheles, with orchestra, in very good style—by no means an easy feat. We must not bring our notice to an end without referring to the two numbers from Dr Bunnett's unpublished cantata, Lora, performed for the first time. If these are to be taken as specimens of the work, we can safely predict that it will be a great success, and hope that it will not be long before we have an opportunity of hearing the whole. Could not the Committee, or whoever decides such questions for that august body, be induced to select parts of this work for performance at one of the evening concerts at the next Festival? It would be adding an object of interest, and paying a compliment fully deserved to the ability of Dr Bunnett. At the end of the concert the Duke of Connaught signified to Dr Bunnett his satisfaction, especially commending Mr A. Bunnett's piano solo.

Brighton.—A second series of "opera recitals" began at the Aquarium on Saturday. Faust and Il Trovatore were selected. Mdme Isidore de Solla, Miss Helen Standish, Messrs Perren and Fox were the "interpreters." Mdme Sterling is to be the vocalist to-day. The Two Orphans has been so successful at the theatre that Mr Nye Chart continues the performance another week.

Huddersfield.—The Choral Society of this town gave their last concert on April the 16th, when St Paul was the oratorio. The vocalists were Mrs Hodgson, of London, Miss Crossland, of Huddersfield, Mr Edward Lloyd, and Mr H. Rickard, member of the Schubert Society in London, and pupil of Mr W. R. Eckersley, of Halifax, about whose singing the Huddersfield Chronicle says:—"Of Mr Rickard too much cannot be said; he is a talented and fully-accomplished bass singer, and, we believe, under favourable circumstances, destined to the foremost rank among performers of oratorio music. Every additional appearance gains him new friends, and makes him a greater favourite."

Leicester.—The indefatigable lessee and manager of the Theatre Royal has commenced a short opera season, with Mr Charles Durand's company. The operas selected are those likely to attract the public. Mr Galer deserves every encouragement. Leicester is a large and wealthy town, with an increasing population, and it is to the interest of well-to-do employers that some healthy recreation should be provided for the working classes. It makes them better workmen and better citizens. With such excellent entertainments as Mr Galer gives, Leicester is likely to become one of our leading theatrical towns. Mr Elliot Galer and his wife (Miss Fanny Reeves) worked very hard some seasons ago to raise the performances at the Royalty to the high state of perfection they attained. Unfortunately the theatre was obliged to be closed for want of adequate support. Up to the present time the people of Leicester thoroughly appreciate the efforts of the manager, judging by the patronage they bestow on the theatre.—R. C.

Reading.—We read in the Reading Observer, of April 17, that—The first concert of the revived Choral Society was held at the Town Hall on Wednesday evening, the 7th instant, under the leadership of Mr John Old. In establishing the new Choral Society, Mr Old, it appears, has had considerable difficulties to contend against, but, assisted by an energetic committee, he has succeeded in showing that his performing members are fully up to the mark, and deserving of support and encouragement, fresh promises of which have been given since the concert. Mr Old was applauded on making his appearance, and the band at once gave the overture to Fra Diavolo, at the conclusion of which there was hearty applause. The conductor throughout faced the audience after the style of the old Italian musicians, and on this occasion the position was unattended with any drawbacks. Several madrigals, glees, &c., were given by the members of the society and Madame Goodbrand. Mr Thomas Hunt, of the Chapel Royal, sang various attractive pieces, to the evident pleasure of the audience. A dramatic chorus, entitled "The Battle," composed by Mr Old, was well executed, both by vocalists and orchestra, and was obliged to be repeated. It is a very effective piece, and does credit to the imagination and the musical ability of Mr Old. The National Anthem concluded this very interesting concert.

FRENCH PLAYS AT THE OPÉRA COMIQUE.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

Dear Mr Editor,—The comedy of Mdlle Dupare has been withdrawn, and has been replaced by La Comtesse de Sommerive, by M. Barrière and Madame Prebois, the part of Alix personated by Mdlle Gerard, that of the Comtesse by Madame Baittig. The former is an actress of talent and impulse, occasionally a little too much of the latter, and, on the whole, her impersonation of the unhappy daughter of the Counters was a fine one. What can be said of the Countess herself?—Nothing but the able acting of Madame Baittig saves the character from becoming contemptible. A woman who has left her husband; has born an illegitimate child; is brought face to face with her legitimate daughter; is condemned to see them both in love with the same man, and to meet the reproaches of her outraged husband, can receive but little sympathy; and the applause of the audience is due more to the excellent acting of Madame Baittig than to sympathy with the woes of the Countess. The acting of Madame Wilhem, as the sympathetic Marquise, was particularly good; and Monti, as the eccentric Duke, was simply perfect. The house was crowded, and there were numerous recalls.—

April 23, 1875. Ignace Gregoir.

Digitized by Google

"LE NOZZE" AT HER MAJESTY'S OPERA.

(From the "Daily Telegraph.")

The performance of Le Nozze di Figaro was one of the best that has been given for years past. There is no occasion to tell anybody who knows Mozart's beautiful opera how much it exacts. Le Nozze is not one of those works which permit a single character to obscure, or even outshine all the rest. The ensemble must be good for even a tolerable representation, and we repeat that it is long since the conditions of success were more fully met than at Drury Lane. True, the performance came short of perfection. There were times when the principals were a little at fault, and when the singing of the chorus was not quite as true as it might have been. But these shortcomings were no more than spots on the sun in view of a general efficiency nothing short of remarkable. We shall hardly be taken to task by amateurs for choosing to praise the orchestra first of all. The accompaniments to Le Nozze are a marvel of beauty and skill—so much a marvel that one might confine attention wholly to them and spend an evening of rare enjoyment. But they want a great deal of playing. There must be no lack of precision, of careful balance of expression, or of delicacy. To speak truth, every man engaged upon them needs the skill and feeling of an artist. The condition was met last Thursday, and a delightful stream of orchestration flowed on from beginning to end of the opera, perfect in all essentials, a rare example of what can be done when zeal and capacity work with fitting means. We sometimes hear about the excellence of foreign bands; but if there exist anywhere in the world a body of instrumentalists able to play Mozart better than the Drury Lane orchestra, we——but why waste space upon such an obvious improbability? Some of the characters were sustained in a familiar manner, and need only be mentioned to secure appreciation. Mdlle Tietjens once more represented the Countess, embodying that lady's gentle melancholy to the life, and singing "Dove sono," as well as her share of the important duets with Almaviva and Susanna, in her customary pure and thoroughly Mozartian style. The great artist might have accepted an encore for the air, but was content with agreeing to repeat "Sull' aria" in response to an imperative demand. Madame Trebelli's "Cherubino," like the Countess of her long tried associate, presented excellences which are too well-known for description. The vivacity with which she endowed the Page's character could no more be questioned than the beauty and finish of her singing could be exceeded. "Voi che sapete" was encored as a matter of course, and, indeed, might have been heard over and over again without weariness. The Don Basilio of Signor Rinaldini and the Antonio of Signor Casaboni were other familiar features of the performance; but the special interest of the occasion arose rather from what was new than what was old. Madame Lablache was a new Marcellina, and invested the character with much more dramatic importance than is common to it, as well as generally illustrating the fact that small parts filled by experienced artists are small no longer. Signor Costa was a new and passably good Dr Bartolo, Signor Galassi an excellent Figaro, singing the music well and embodying the character with a rare combination of vivacity and good taste; while in Signor de Reschi the Count had a representative able to do justice to all the music of the part. As a vocalist Signor de Reschi must take a more than respectable rank, and he is still young enough to acquire the confidence and tact necessary to make him a fair actor. The part of Susanna introduced to the English stage a young lady, Mdlle Pernini, whom, if first experience may be trusted, we shall not willingly lose. No curiosity was excited with respect to this débutante, nor was her reception better than conventional, but she had not sung many bars before the least discerning among the audience felt that here was an artist worthy of the name. Mdlle Pernini has a pure soprano voice, somewhat weak in its lower register, but agreeable throughout, and of sympathetic quality. She sings, moreover, like a mistress of the art. Her method is excellent, her phrasing is never at fault, and she is almost wholly free from any desire to achieve tours de force at the expense of the composer. The delicacy and grace of her singing were really remarkable at all times, but particularly in "Crudel perchè" (encored), "Sull' aria" (encored), and "Deh vieni," which the new soprano declined to repeat. Further, Mdlle Pernini is an actress—true to nature—in small things as well as great; and those who watched her narrowly observed many an evidence of the thorough intelligence with which her work was done. We look upon this lady as a valuable acquisition to the Drury Lane company, and await her re-appearance with more than common interest. The performance of Le Nozze was conducted by Sir Michael Costa, who had every reason to be proud of it.

—o—

BAYREUTH.*

(Continued from page 268.)

When, speaking of Siegfried's Tod, that of the three Fragments which, "scored with consummate art," produced the deepest, and, indeed, the most important impression on him, the critic says that he knows nothing of the kind more solemn in the whole range of dramatic music, he quietly utters, of a truth, a grave assertion, but at the same time exposes himself to the suspicion of knowing exceedingly little of the said whole range of dramatic music, on which account a kindly feeling prompts us to advise him to atone as soon as possible for lost time, and make himself acquainted with the first class composers of Germany, Italy, and France. The statement that, "When Siegfried has closed his eyes, the orchestra intones a highly remarkable funereal chorus," is certainly calculated somewhat to astonish many other persons besides myself; for, up to the present time, people were under the impression that choruses, whether of rejoicing or of grief were sung. In this funereal chorus which is, therefore, not sung, but played, and which (according to the stage explanation added by Wagner to the text), "at one and the same time, celebrates and bewails the origin and magnificence, as well as the fate of the hero who was looked on as divine, the tone-poet causes all the motives in the Trilogy referring to him to pass, as a grandly imagined retrospective glance, like vapoury pictures before the mental eye of the auditor (the mental eye of the auditor has to see the various motives which have been addressed to his ear). "Even the partially Initiated cannot fail to perceive that he has here Programme Music of the purest water, and he will only be further confirmed in this view on subsequently finding that, between the various tone pictures, as they crop up one after the other, the rhythms drag themselves painfully along, and that the wind-instruments fiercely accentuate the weak part of the bar, while the weird-like wind and lightnings reign among the violins." Further on we read:—"In this funereal movement, the new tubas altered by Wagner, take a powerful part, and thus is brought to utterance a feeling as though we were on the eve of a small destruction of the world." Who would not wish a closer acquaintance with this Marcia funebre rather than expose himself to such an experience!

The fact that the lovers of the old kind of melody will perhaps (as the critic promises) be better pleased with the other two Fragments, almost hints at some retracing of his steps on Wagner's part—at the conversion of a musical Saul, pursuing melody with fire and sword, into a Paul, tenderly loving and cherishing it. The said lovers of the old kind of melody, who are, at the same time, lovers of the old, approved operatic forms, will, probably, be less edified by the duet contained in the first Fragment, in which duet (after the Wagnerian fashion) the personages sing alternately, and not together, and where, as usual, the melodic centre of gravity again lies in the orchestra, to which the vocal portion is subordinated. In fact, the piece is, properly speaking, rather a duet for the orchestra, with vocal accompaniment. In this Fragment, which is headed, "Grand scenic Prelude," the orchestra illustrates—as the critic informs us—a night-scene upon a rocky height. The three Nornen (that is to say: the three old Germanic Fates), are spinning and weaving the rope of fate. "It snaps. The Norns wind the ends of it round their bodies and sink through the earth. Morning-grey. Dawn. To all this Wagner has composed highly characteristic, and gloomily brooding music. The snapping of the rope is expressed in an especially astonishing manner."†

CARL KOSSMALY.

(To be continued.)

* From the Neue Berliner Musikzeitung.

† Without wishing for a single moment to doubt this, we think the safer course would, perhaps, be to mention in the verbal explanation that the music expresses the snapping of the rope; for, though it is true, music expresses the same thing to every body, one person, as we know, gathers from, or hears in, it, one thing, and another another, we might easily fancy that something else to be described by the music in question.

Digitized by Google

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Last week we were fortunate enough to hear Mr Sims Reeves, who sang at two concerts in the Free Trade Hall, given by Mr Pyatt. When I say that Mr Reeves had entirely recovered from his recent indisposition, and that he was in splendid voice, you will scarcely require to be told that we were favoured by hearing such singing as is seldom heard now-a-days. I have often heard him sing "Deeper and deeper still," and the air "Waft her, angels," but I believe he never delivered them with greater refinement and more eloquent pathos than last Thursday. How the popular tenor gave "Tom Bowling," "Come into the garden, Maud," "Then you'll remember me," and "My pretty Jane," may perhaps be imagined by those who have heard him—and I certainly would not attempt to convey an idea of the charm of Mr Reeves' singing to those unfamiliar with it.

Signor Foli, who has always been a great favourite here, was also exceedingly well received; he was never in finer voice, and if it were good English to say he was "immensely successful with his audience," I would adopt the phrase.

Miss Bertha Brousil greatly delighted the audience by her violin solos; and Miss D'Alton and Mdme Thaddeus Wells contributed pleasant variety to the concert. Mr Nicholson gave several flute solos, and Mr Sydney Naylor was, in every respect, a competent and admirable conductor.

Mr Alfred Cellier's pretty opera The Sultan of Mocha has again been revived at the Prince's Theatre, and will have reached its fiftieth night on Saturday. There must be something sterling in a work that proves so attractive, especially as its popularity is not due to any report of its success elsewhere. The opera has not indeed been given anywhere else, but arrangements have been made for its production in London and in Vienna.

April 28th, 1875.

WAIFS.

Mdme Christine Nilsson arrived in London on Monday.

Rubinstein is in Paris, superintending the production of his oratorio, La Tour de Babel.

M. and Mdme Jaël have given their annual concert in Erard's Rooms, at Paris, with their accustomed success.

We believe it is settled that Mdlle Zaré Thalberg's second character will be Susanna, in the Nozze di Figaro.

The arrival of M. Faure, to fulfil his engagement with Mr Gye at the Royal Italian Opera, is shortly expected.

Verdi is expected in England early in May, to superintend the production of the Requiem at the Royal Albert Hall.

The celebrated organ builder, M. Cavaillé-Coll, has just finished a large concert organ for the Palace of Industry at Amsterdam.

Miss Alice Sydney Burvett, a young pianist from Australia, in high favour with the Parisians during the past season, has arrived here.

Lohengrin will speedily be put into rehearsal at Her Majesty's Opera. It is said that Wagner has left to the discretion of Sir Michael Costa the necessary curtailments to be made in his great opera.

At the Berlin Imperial Opera, the success of Rubinstein's Maccabées is confirmed by all the German papers. The Académie des Beaux-Arts of France has made Rubinstein an honorary member.

Mr Ridley Prentice announces his Pianoforte Recital, to take place at St George's Hall, on Wednesday morning next, at Three o'clock, when he will be assisted by Herr Straus and Miss Georgina Maudsley.

The preparations for the celebration, at Rouen, of the centenary of the famous composer, Boieldieu, are assuming large proportions, and the festival promises to be one of the most generally interesting ever held in a French cathedral town.

English Opera—or rather, opera in English—is to be shortly resumed at the Crystal Palace, with Herr Manns as conductor. Among the most welcome engagements is that of our accomplished and popular young soprano, Miss Rose Hersée.

PROPOSED TESTIMONIAL TO SEÑOR MANUEL GARCIA.—A committee, comprising, among others, the following gentlemen, has been formed with a view of presenting a testimonial to Señor Manuel Garcia, the inventor of the Laryngoscope: Lord Coleridge, chairman; Mr George Critchett, 21, Harley Street, treasurer; Sir Julius Benedict, Mr W. Bowman, F.R.S., the Earl of Dunmore, the Marquis of Ely, the Bishop of Exeter, the Rev. Dr Farrar, F.R.S., Sir William Fergusson, Bart., F.R.S., Monsieur Charles Gounod, Rev. H. R. Haweis, Mr Henry Irving, Mr Rudolf Lehmann, Professor Owen, F.R.S., Mr Arthur Sullivan, Mons. Ambroise Thomas, Professor Tyndall, LL.D., F.R.S., and Dr Morell Mackenzie, 13, Weymouth Street, Portland Place, hon. secretary. Subscriptions will be received by the treasurer or hon. secretary.

Messrs Maurice and Max Strakosch, the "enterprising impresarios," both of the old world and the new, have been in London during the last week or ten days.

Mrs Beesley, whose fame as a pianist has travelled from Liverpool to London, is to play, at the next New Philharmonic Concert, Liszt's Concerto in E flat, and two duets with her master, Dr Hans von Bülow.

M. Couderc, the well-known French tenor of the Opéra Comique, whose death was announced last week, was buried in the Cemetery of Père la Chaise, almost at the same time that the obsequies of Caroline Duprez were being solemnized at Pau.

Miss Emma Abbott, a young American soprano, has been engaged by Mr Mapleson, and will make her first appearance (on any stage, I believe) at Her Majesty's Opera in June. Miss Abbott's history is very similar to that of Madame Christine Nilsson. She was born in Chicago in 1850, and, like the Swedish lady whose talents have raised her to her present high position, she a few years ago used, shoeless and stockingless, to sing about the streets (of Milwaukee) for the coppers which were tossed to her by the passers-by. Mr Emil Haas, the well-known merchant of New York, however, proved Miss Abbott's "Tornerhjelm." He brought her to New York, where she was heard by Miss Kellogg, and the two got up a subscription to send her to Europe. There she was introduced to the Baroness de Rothschild, a lady who understands the meaning of the word "charity" in its truest and broadest sense, and who has been her warmest friend ever since. Miss Emma Abbott came to Mr Mapleson backed by the powerful recommendation of the Baroness de Rothschild, Madame Jenny Lind, Madame Adelina Patti, and Mr Washburne. She was immediately engaged, and, as I have said, will be submitted to the judgment of the public early in June next. Miss Abbott is not the only artist who has been materially assisted by the Baroness Lionel de Rothschild. Endowed on her marriage with an enormous fortune (I believe a million sterling), the Baroness resolved to spend nearly the whole of it in charity. There are, I need hardly say, two sorts of charity. There is the charity which gives a shilling to a street beggar, which is, perhaps, hardly charity at all. The other sort of charity is that which takes young men or young women whose humble circumstances do not permit the development of their talents, which educates them and fits them for the business of life and for gaining their bread in a manner useful to themselves and to the community. It is not for me to lift the veil which conceals the secrets of private life, nor does the truly noble lady care to publish her charity to the world. But I happen to know of more than one case in which young artists are, at the present moment, studying their profession at the sole expense of the Baroness de Rothschild, who thus performs in secret an act of which she will most certainly reap the richest reward.—Figaro.

The inventors of new styles and instruments of music are ever hailed with delight by a certain class of theatrical managers in Paris, and the ingenuity of the human brain has already been taxed beyond all reasonable limits to supply the caprice of these patrons. At one time carillons were the rage; thin glasses filled with all sorts of liquids and liqueurs were pressed into the service. Another novelty was the instrument made entirely of little slips of wood (Xylophone) upon which a boy performed years ago in London at certain promenade concerts. Even fire was taught to play its part by means of the "pyro-melodic" apparatus. For a time these wonders were discarded at Paris for a new fashion. The inventive genius not having sufficed for the production of new instruments, enterprising musicians resorted to new agencies for playing on the old ones, and the most successful attempt in this direction seems to have been that of a learned Spaniard, who persuaded a tame fox to dress up in suitable costume and execute airs on the pianoforte. This gentleman may now consider himself outdone. The last inventor is a Pole, whose scheme is at once more original and more sensational. It includes an entirely new and semi-animate instrument—a box something like a piano in shape, filled inside with separate compartments like the stalls in a cow-shed, only on a very small scale. In each compartment is located a cat, the tail of which protrudes from an aperture facing the pianist. To each tail is attached a cord communicating with the keys on the key-board. Each note struck by the executant elicits a short note of protest from the animal affected; and it is asserted by the inventor that the tone of the cry elicited from each several cat is invariably the same. Of course the position of the cats is arranged in accordance with the tone of voice natural to each, and thus a piece of music is produced, not very melodious perhaps, but perfectly correct in tune. The tone of voice is ascertained, by preliminary experiments, as also the amount of violence required in each case to provoke a suitable response. If the pull were too mild no sound would be returned, whereas if so strong as to cause anything more than a temporary feeling of annoyance, the protesting note would degenerate into a howl or caterwaul. The "melomaniac cats," if they actually appear with their master at the Folies Bergères, ought to astonish the nerves even of people so blasés with novelties as the frequenters of that temple of absurdity.

Digitized by Google

The troupe of Her Majesty's Opera comprises five natives of Germany, four of France, one of Russia, one of Spain, one of Poland, fifteen of Italy and none of England. The troupe of the Royal Italian Opera consists of eight natives of Germany, four of France, two of Spain, one of Canada, one of Poland, sixteen of Italy, and none of England.—CHERUBINO.

The Grand Organ, consisting of four manuals and seventy-five registers, built by Messrs Gray and Davison for the Yorkshire Exhibition, held at Leeds, will be inaugurated with two special performances by Dr Spark, on Friday, May 14th, on which occasion several novelties will be given, including a Triumphal March by Dr Spark.

ADDRESS TO MISS ALICE MAY,

On the occasion of her Benefit at Dunedin (New Zealand).

In every nation, and 'mongst every race,
That in the van of progress claims a place,
The lyric Muse, with magic power intense,
Exerts a soft, refining influence.
For music is the mainspring of the heart,
Which regulates our nature's better part—
The source from whence the soul has power to rise
Above the earth, unto its mother skies.
Therefore, my friends, 'tis meet that we should show
Our homage to the power which sets aglow
Our finer feelings with celestial fire;
And thus we've met to deck the British lyre
With wreaths of smiles! The queen, who wakes its strings,
Draws inspiration from the lyric kings—
Ethereal minstrel-spirits, who rejoice
In each rich echo of her mellow voice.
Fair Maritana, kneeling at the shrine,
Uplifts our souls with melody divine.
The charming Duchess claims us as her own;
We offer our allegiance to her throne;
And when her willing subjects we become,
We envy Fritz and pity poor old Boom.
With faithful Leonora we are sad;
With Martha—merry Martha—we are glad.
The choristers of Paradise are mute
When Satanella's voice, like fairy lute,
In tender cadence floats to Heaven above,
O'er vanquished demons, with the "Power of Love."
Elvira weaves a soft, bewitching spell
Around our senses from her "Convent Cell."
And when she triumphs o'er the traitor's spleen,
We lose the actress, and behold the Queen.
Concealing Art in Nature's form at will
Is the perfection of artistic skill;
In this, the lady whom we honour here,
Unrivalled stands alone, without a peer.
Your plaudits are the dues her talents claim,
As, marching upward on the road to fame,
She halts to charm us, ere she speeds along
To win fresh laurels at the Shrine of Song,
Where she, High Priestess, shall hold sovereign sway,
Till even Britain boasts of ALICE MAY.

THOMAS BRACKEN.

MAYENCE.—Herr Theodore Wachtel has been playing here in Le Postillon de Longjumeau and Les Huguenots.—Sig. Verdi's Aïda continues to draw good houses.

LEIPSIC.—Robert Schumann's monument was unveiled on the 8th April. It is erected in the public gardens, close to the Burgher School, and consists of an obelisk of polished grey syenite, in which is inserted a bronze medallion portrait of the composer, with the simple inscription—R. Schumann.

WEIMAR.—Grötz's new opera, Der Widerspenstigen Zähmung (The Taming of the Shrew), produced originally in Vienna, was brought out here on the birthday of the Grand-Duchess. The next novelty will be Golo, by Scholz; to be followed by Wagner's Tristan und Isolde, in which Herr and Mad. Vogel, from Munich, sustain the principal parts. Liszt has been making a short stay in this small capital.

MUNICH.—Large audiences have been attracted lately to the Theatre Royal by Mad. Pauline Lucca. Her first part was that of Gretchen, in Gounod's Faust. Mad. Malinger is shortly expected here. Liszt is also coming, to superintend the production of his oratorio, Christus.—At the fourth Subscription Concert of the Musical Academy, Herr Rheinberger's new Symphony, written for the Società Orchestrale of Florence, was performed, under the direction of the composer. Another work by the same composer—Ritter Toggenburg, a "cycle of romances," for soloists and chorus—has been performed by the Oratorio Association.

THE VOICE & SINGING

BY

ADOLFO FERRARI.

THE FORMATION AND CULTIVATION OF THE VOICE FOR SINGING.

Price 12s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, REGENT STREET, W.

"The remarkable qualities of this book are the author's freedom from conventional trammels, the strong sense of his opinions, and the novelty yet evident soundness of his precepts; his work has consequently come into general use as a manual of vocal instruction."—Daily News.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE,

For invigorating and enriching the voice, and removing affections of the throat.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE is universally acknowledged to be the most valuable remedy for sore throat, hoarseness and relaxed throat. It should always be taken before singing or reciting, as it strengthens the vocal organs. It is most extensively prescribed by the faculty for the throat and voice. Dr Lewis of Basingstoke says he finds them most efficacious, and in Dr Copland's Dictionary of Practical Medicine (Longman & Co.), they are strongly recommended at pages 872 and 1492. They are used by all the greatest vocalists and orators in Europe, and have been established over a quarter of a century. Testimonials from Patti, Grisi, Lablache, Santley, &c. Sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d. by all Chemists throughout the United Kingdom and the Colonies.

VOCAL EXERCISES.

Composed by FRANK MORI.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

N.B.—These Vocal Exercises, as taught by FRANK MORI, are invaluable both to Students and Professors.

Published This Day.

"THE FAIREST FLOWER WILL PERISH."

SONG.

The Words by Mrs HYPPOLITE VAN LANDEGHEM.

The Music by HYPPOLITE VAN LANDEGHEM.

Price 3s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"DREAM ON,"

SONG,

Words and Music by ERNEST HOUGHTON.

Price 3s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

GUGLIELMO'S LAST BALLAD.

"WERT THOU WITH ME."

The Words by GEORGE LINLEY.

The Music by P. D. GUGLIELMO.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"CUPID'S APPEAL,"

BALLAD,

And the Sequel,

"MARRIAGE BELLS,"

SONG.

Price 3s. each.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

WILFORD MORGAN'S SONGS.

HER I LOVE .. .. 4s.
COULD I BUT CALL HER MINE.. .. .. 4s.
MY SWEETHEART WHEN A BOY .. .. 4s.
SWEET EVENING AIR .. .. 4s.
(N.B.—The above Songs have been sung with distinguished success by Mr WILFORD MORGAN.)
LITTLE BIRDIE, SING TO ME .. .. 4s.
(Sung by Miss EDITH WYNNE.)

ANTHEM.

IF THOU WILT FORGET ME (THE 13TH PSALM) .. .. .. 4s.
(For Tenor or Soprano Solo, with Chorus ad. lib., as sung at the Temple Church. Composed by WILFORD MORGAN.)

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street.

Digitized by Google

ARTHUR SULLIVAN'S CELEBRATED SONGS.

"LITTLE MAID OF ARCADEE."
Price FOUR SHILLINGS.

"GUINEVERE."
Price FOUR SHILLINGS.

"THE SAILOR'S GRAVE."
Price FOUR SHILLINGS.

"O FAIR DOVE, O FOND DOVE."
Price FOUR SHILLINGS.

"WHAT DOES LITTLE BIRDIE SAY?"
Price FOUR SHILLINGS.

"AH! COUNTY GUY."
Price FOUR SHILLINGS.

LONDON:
ASHDOWN & PARRY,
HANOVER SQUARE.

Digitized by Google

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

PRODUCTION OF WAGNER'S 'LOHENGRIN.'

The Books of Airs (in Two Books), arranged for Pianoforte, with ad. lib. accompaniments for Flute, Violin, and Violoncello, by

W. HUTCHINS CALLCOTT

PRICE.

Solos	...	...	5*s. each.*
Duets	...	...	6*s.* ,,
Accompaniments	...	...	1*s.* ,,

LONDON:

HUTCHINGS & ROMER,

9, Conduit Street, Regent Street, W.

ARTHUR SULLIVAN'S NEW SONG,

"THOU ART WEARY."

WORDS BY ADELAIDE PROCTOR.

MUSIC BY ARTHUR SULLIVAN.

SUNG BY

MISS ANTOINETTE STERLING

AT THE

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

"The singer was Miss Antoinette Sterling, who, always heartily admired in those German ballads, for which she exhibits so marked a sympathy, introduced in a group four of Schumann's most graceful contributions to the Lieder repertory, and, later in the evening, a new song by Mr Arthur Sullivan, 'Thou art weary' (set to words by Adelaide Proctor)—one of the most charming recent emanations from the pen of our gifted compatriot."—The Times, Nov. 10.

"Miss Sterling was the vocalist, and sang, in addition to selections from Schumann, a new song by Arthur Sullivan, entitled, 'Thou art weary,' which is one of the most beautiful and thoughtful effusions of the composer's graceful music."—Daily Telegraph, Nov. 12.

"Miss Antoinette Sterling was the vocalist. In the second part she introduced a new song by Mr Sullivan, an admirable setting for a contralto voice of some very touching lines by the late Miss Adelaide Proctor, addressed by a poor mother to her starving child, the burden being—

'Sleep, my darling, thou art weary;
God is good, but life is dreary.'

The song exactly suited Miss Sterling's voice and style, and it will assuredly become as great a favourite as 'Will he come,' to which it is a worthy pendant, and the words of which are also by Miss Proctor."—Standard, Nov. 12.

"Miss Antoinette Sterling repeated Mr Sullivan's new song, 'Thou art weary,' a second hearing of which has confirmed our good opinion of it."—Standard, Nov. 16.

"At the concert on Monday, Miss Sterling had introduced a series of charming Lieder by Schumann, and a new song by Mr Arthur Sullivan, 'Sleep, my darling, thou art weary,' an admirable setting of Miss Proctor's poem, 'Hush, I cannot bear to see thee,' which, like everything Miss Proctor wrote, was well adapted for, and, in fact, seemed to invite musical treatment. Her verses have inspired Mr Sullivan with a genuine melody, of which the refrain is particularly remarkable; and the song, both at Monday's and Saturday's concert, pleased so much that Miss Sterling was called upon to repeat it."—Pall Mall Gazette, Nov. 17.

"Miss Sterling sang discreetly and sympathetically four of Schumann's 'Dichterliebe' (Nos. 1, 2, 7, and 8); but came off still better in a new song by Mr A. Sullivan, who has set words by Adelaide Proctor, 'Thou art weary,' the dying consolation of a starved mother to her child, the refrain of which is—

'Sleep, my darling, thou art weary;
God is good, but life is dreary.'

It is a painful theme; but the composer has treated it with such pathos that the air tells powerfully."—Athenæum, Nov. 14.

"The vocalist was Miss Sterling, who sang four songs by Schumann (Nos. 1, 2, 7, and 8 of the 'Dichterliebe'), and a new song, entitled 'Thou art weary,' written by Miss Adelaide Proctor. The words are good, and have been fitted to charming and expressive music by Mr Arthur Sullivan, who has added a pianoforte accompaniment worthy his high reputation, and worth listening to for its own sake."—Observer, Nov. 15.

Published in the keys of D minor and F minor, Price 4s.

ARTHUR SULLIVAN'S NEW SONG,

"TENDER AND TRUE,"

SUNG BY

MISS EDITH WYNNE

AT THE

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS, ST JAMES'S HALL.

"The vocalist was Miss Edith Wynne, who sang a new song, 'Tender and True,' by Arthur Sullivan, the beauty of which, aided by a most tasteful rendering, elicited an encore."—Daily Telegraph, January 13.

"Mr Sullivan's graceful song—a novelty—was rendered by Miss Edith Wynne with much refined expression; and the applause which followed necessitated its entire repetition."—Daily News, January 13.

"A very expressive new song, by Mr A. Sullivan, 'Tender and True,' was sung with such effect by Miss Edith Wynne that it had to be repeated."—Illustrated London News, January 16.

"Miss Edith Wynne, who gave, in her own genuine and expressive manner, a graceful new song, 'Tender and True,' by Mr Arthur Sullivan, which was encored and repeated."—Graphic, January 16.

Published in the keys of E flat and F, Price 4s.

CHAPPELL & CO., 50 NEW BOND ST.

Digitized by Google

CONCORDIA:

A Journal of Music and the Sister Arts.

TO BE PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY, PRICE 4D.

On May 1st (To-day) will be issued the first number of Concordia, a Journal chiefly devoted to the interests of Music.

While holding definite opinions, Concordia will strive to make itself the organ of an enlightened eclecticism. Regarding every question without prejudice, and solely in the interest of Art, it will encourage in its contributors and correspondents that free expression of ideas which ultimately establishes truth. Above all, it will be actuated by a desire to recognise and promote whatever is good in the new developments which are inseparable from the progressive nature of Music.

A leading feature of Concordia will be the number and importance of its original Articles and Essays. Among the gentlemen who have already signified their willingness to contribute are:—

J. BARNBY.	H. SUTHERLAND EDWARDS.	G. A. MACFARREN, Prof. Mus., Cantab.	C. K. SALAMAN.
JOSEPH BENNETT.	Rev. H. R. HAWEIS, M.A.	WALTER MACFARREN.	HENRY SMART.
W. CHAPPELL, F.S.A.	HENRY HOWE.	PROFESSOR H. S. OAKELEY.	Dr STAINER, M.A.
W. H. CUMMINGS.	JOHN HULLAH.	EBENEZER PROUT, B.A.	T. L. STILLIE.
E. DANNREUTHER.	H. C. LUNN.		Dr W. H. STONE, M.A.

From week to week notices of subjects connected with the sister Arts of Poetry and Painting, the Drama, &c., will be contributed to Concordia by able writers.

As a medium of news, Concordia will be singularly complete.

Special attention will be paid to that criticism of Art and its exponents which is the greatest responsibility as it is the greatest privilege, of such a Journal. On all matters involving criticism, Concordia will speak with a single desire that the truth may be known.

The department of Reviews will receive the care demanded by its importance, and prominence will be given to the leading works published abroad.

Among other valuable features of Concordia will be, subject to the co-operation of the various publishers, a weekly list of new Music, and of Services, Anthems, &c., to be sung in the Cathedrals and chief Parish Churches on the Sunday following each issue.

It is believed that, in Concordia, the art-loving public will have a thoroughly readable Journal—one, that is to say, which interests the Amateur not less than the connoisseur. No pains will be spared in order to secure this desirable result.

Annual Subscription, including postage, 19s. 6d.

A scale of charges for Advertisements in Concordia may be had on application to the publisher.

CONTENTS OF No. I.

WITTY FRENCH SONGS OF THE LAST CENTURY. Collected by Dr Montesquieu.
PERSONAL RECOLLECTIONS (MADAME CATALINI). By Charles K. Salaman.
SOCIETY OF BRITISH ARTISTS AND INSTITUTE OF PAINTERS IN WATER COLOURS.
LEADING ARTICLES: INTRODUCTORY.
THE ALEXANDRA PALACE.
OCCASIONAL NOTES.
THE OPERA: CONCERTS.
THE DRAMA: "TOM COBB."
FOREIGN AND PROVINCIAL NOTES.
ART GOSSIP.

OFFICE—LONDON: 1, BERNERS STREET, W.

Printed by Henderson, Raff, and Fenton, at No. 69, Marylebone Lane, Oxford Street, in the Parish of Marylebone, in the County of Middlesex.
Published by William Duncan Davison, at the Office, 244, Regent Street, Saturday, May 1, 1875.

Digitized by Google

The Musical World.

(REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.)

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST, 20s. PER ANNUM,
Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to DUNCAN DAVISON & CO., 244, Regent Street, London, W.

VOL. 53—No. 19. SATURDAY, MAY 8, 1875. PRICE { 4d. Unstamped. 5d. Stamped.

HER MAJESTY'S OPERA, THEATRE ROYAL, DRURY LANE.

Second Appearance of Mdme Christine Nilsson.

THIS EVENING (SATURDAY), May 8th, will be performed (for the first time this season), VERDI'S Opera, "IL TROVATORE." Manrico, Signor Campanini; Il Conte di Luna, Signor Galassi; Ferrando, Signor Costa; Ruiz, Signor Rinaldini; Un Zingaro, Signor Casaboni; Azucena, Madame Trebelli-Bettini; Inez, Mdlle Bauermeister; and Leonora, Mdme Christine Nilsson. Director of the Music and Conductor—Sir Michael Costa.

Third Appearance of Madame Christine Nilsson.

Extra Night.—"Il Talismano."

On MONDAY Evening next, May 10, will be performed (for the second time this season) BALFE'S Grand Opera, "IL TALISMANO." Sir Kenneth, Signor Campanini; Richard Cœur de Lion, Signor Galassi; Nectabanus, Signor Catalani: Il Re di Francia, Signor Costa; Il Duca d'Austria, Signor Casaboni; Il Barone de Vaux, Signor Rinaldini; L'Emiro, Signor Grazzi; Queen Berengaria, Mdlle Risarelli; and Edith Plantagenet, Madame Christine Nilsson (her third appearance this season).

Mdlle Tietjens.

On TUESDAY evening next, May 11, will be performed, for the second time this season, "LES HUGUENOTS."

On THURSDAY next, May 13, Subscription Night (being the third of the six Subscription Thursdays announced in the prospectus). Fourth appearance of Madame Christine Nilsson.

Fifth Appearance of Mdlle Elena Varesi.

On SATURDAY, May 15, will be presented, for the first time this season, BELLINI'S Opera, "LA SONNAMBULA." Amina, Mdlle Elena Varesi (her fifth appearance this season).

Doors open at Eight o'clock. Commence at Half-past Eight. Amphitheatre stalls, 7s. and 5s.; amphitheatre, 2s. Box-office open daily from Ten till Five, under the direction of Mr Bailey.

GREAT SUCCESS OF "GIROFLE-GIROFLA."

CRITERION THEATRE, Regent Circus. — Sole Proprietors and Responsible Managers, SPIERS & POND. — "GIROFLE-GIROFLA," new Comic Opera in English, by CHARLES LECOCQ. Adapted by CAMPBELL CLARKE, and produced under the direction of Mrs W. H. LISTON. Conductor—Mr F. STANISLAUS. The Opera commences at Eight, and is over by Eleven o'clock. Mesdames Pauline Rita, Emily Thorne, Rose Keene, and Alice Hamilton; Messrs A. Brennir, Perrini, Loredan. Private boxes from £1 1s. to £3 3s.; stalls, 7s. 6d.; dress circle, 5s.; boxes (bonnets allowed), 5s.; pit, 2s.; amphitheatre, 1s. To be obtained at the Box Office of the Criterion. Acting Manager—Mr EDWARD MURRAY.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY. Conductor—Mr W. G. CUSINS. FOURTH CONCERT, at ST JAMES'S HALL, on MONDAY, May 10th, at Eight o'clock. Symphony in D, No. 43, Köchel (Mozart); Aria, "Cangio d'aspetto" (Handel)—Mdlle Enriquez; Chorus, "Gipsy Life" (Schumann); Scena (Robin Hood) (G. A. Macfarren)—Mdme Blanche Cole; Concerto for pianoforte in E flat (Liszt)—Signor Lodovico Breitner (his first appearance in England); Choral Symphony, No, 9, composed expressly for the Philharmonic Society (Beethoven)—principal parts by Mdme Blanche Cole, Mdlle Enriquez, Mr Henry Guy, and Mr Wadmore. Stalls, sofa or balcony, 10s. 6d.; balcony, reserved, 7s.; unreserved, 5s.; admission, 2s. 6d. Stanley Lucas, Weber & Co., 84, New Bond Street, W.; usual Agents; and Austin's Ticket Office, St James's Hall.

THE "TALISMAN" CHORUSES.

(IN BALFE'S GRAND OPERA.)

No. 1. Chorus of Arabs.
„ 2. Salve Regina (Trio and Chorus).
„ 3. Draw Your Swords (Concerted Morceau).
„ 4. Hours and Hours Roll Slowly on (Chorus of Ladies).
„ 5. Thy Kinswoman Edith (Concerted Morceau).
„ 6. Farewell, my Beloved Edith (Finale to Act 2nd).
„ 7. A Song to Merrie England.
(Part Song—Soprano, Tenor, Alto, and Bass.)
„ 8. Glorious England (Finale).

No collection of Choruses equal in merit to the above has been published for years. The great success with which the "TALISMAN" has been received is sufficient evidence of the beauty of the entire Opera, in which the Choruses form, of course, one of the most effective features.

London: DUFF & STEWART, 147, Oxford Street.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA, COVENT GARDEN.

THIS EVENING (SATURDAY), May 8th, will be produced RICHARD WAGNER'S celebrated Romantic Opera, entitled "LOHENGRIN." Elsa di Brabante, Mdlle Albani; Ortruda, Mdlle D'Angeri; Federico di Telramondo, M. Maurel; L'Araldo del Re, Signor Capponi; Enrico l'Uccellatore, Herr Seideman; 4 Cavalieri: Signori Rossi, Manfredi, Fallar, Raguet; 8 Paggi: Mdlles Parry, Pocchini, Estelle, Portaluppi; Ferrari, Vianello, Abraham, Martini; and Lohengrin, Signor Nicolini (his first appearance this season). Conductor—Signor Vianesi.

On MONDAY next, May 10 (in lieu of the subscription for Tuesday, July 27), second performance of RICHARD WAGNER'S Romantic Opera, "LOHENGRIN."

On TUESDAY next, May 11, MEYERBEER'S Opera, "DINORAH." Dinorah, Madame Adelina Patti (her first appearance this season); Una Caprais, Mdlle Cottino; Un Capraio, Mdlle Scalchi; Corentino, Signor Marini; Un Cacciatore, Signor Capponi; Un Mietitore, Signor Sabater; and Hoel, Signor Graziani.

On THURSDAY next, May 13, ROSSINI'S Opera, "IL BARBIERE DI SIVIGLIA." Rosina, Madame Adelina Patti; Bertha, Mdlle Pocchini; Figaro, Signor Cotogni; Bartolo, Signor Ciampi; Basilio, Signor Bagagiolo; and Almaviva, Signor Piazza.

On FRIDAY next, May 14, "GUGLIELMO TELL." Mathilde, Mdlle Bianchi; Eduidge, Mdlle Ghiotti; Guglielmo Tell, M. Maurel; Walter, Signor Bagagiolo; Gessler, Signor Tagliafico; Un Pescatore, Signor Sabater; and Arnoldo, Signor Marini.

The Box Office, under the portico of the Theatre, is open from Ten to Five. Pit tickets, 7s.; amphitheatre stalls, 10s. 6d. and 5s.; amphitheatre, 2s. 6d.

ST GEORGE'S HALL.

MDLLE IDA HENRY begs to announce that her EVENING CONCERT will take place, on May 8th, at ST GEORGE'S HALL. Vocalists—Mdlle Levier and Mr Cummings. Violin—Herr L. Ries. Violoncello—Herr Daubert. Piano—Mdlle Ida Henry. Conductor—Mr THOULESS. Tickets, 10s. 6d. and 5s.; of Stanley Lucas, Weber & Co., 84, New Bond Street; and of Mdlle IDA HENRY, 19, Elm Road.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY, EXETER HALL. Conductor—Sir MICHAEL COSTA. Special Extra Performances of "ST PAUL" and "ISRAEL IN EGYPT," on FRIDAYS, May 14 and 21, at 7:30. Principal Vocalists—Madame Sherrington, Miss Edith Wynne, Mrs Suter, and Madame Patey; Messrs Edward Lloyd, Hilton, Chaplin Henry, and Santley. Organist—Mr Willing. Tickets, 3s., 5s., and 10s. 6d., now ready. Note.—A larger space than usual for 3s. and 5s. tickets will be available for these occasions, but early application is essential to secure them.

MISS STEELE'S EVENING CONCERT, at ST JAMES'S HALL, on THURSDAY, May 13, at Eight o'clock. Vocalists—Mesdames Corani, Severn, and Steele; Mr Ed. Lloyd and Mr Santley. Mr Corney Grain (by kind permission of Mrs German Reed) will give one of his celebrated Musical Sketches. The Vocal Concordia. Grand Pianoforte—Mr Walter Bache. Violoncello—M. Paque. Conductors—Herr WM. GANZ and Mr GEO. FORBES. Sofa stalls, 10s. 6d.; reserved seats, 5s.; balcony, 3s.; admission, One Shilling; to be had of all the usual Agents; and of Miss STEELE, 10, Regent's Park Terrace, Gloucester Gate, N.W.

GEMME D'ANTICHITA.

RACCOLTA DI PEZZI VOCALI.

COMPOSTI DAI PIU CELEBRI

MAESTRI ANTICHI.

This unique Work has been carefully revised, and is now re-issuing in 200 Numbers, selected from the most esteemed Works of Bach, Handel, Beethoven, Spohr, Stradella, Scarlatti, Mozart, Pergolesi, Paesiello, Carissimi, Cimarosa, &c., &c. Edited by Lady Thompson, Macfarren, Wilhelm Ganz, Adolphe Ganz, Callcott, Lucas, Molique, Perugini, &c. The whole carefully revised and edited by JOSIAH PITTMAN. Lists Gratis.

C. LONSDALE'S

Musical Circulating Library,

26, OLD BOND STREET, W.

Digitized by Google

MADAME MARIE ANGELO will give a PIANOFORTE RECITAL (under distinguished patronage), at ST JAMES'S HALL, on WEDNESDAY Afternoon next, May 12th, commencing at Three o'clock precisely. Vocalists—Miss Edith Wynne and Mr Santley. Accompanist—Mr Alfred Gilbert. Stalls, reserved, Half-a-Guinea; balcony, 3s.; admission, One Shilling. Tickets and Programmes may be obtained at the usual Ticket Agents; Messrs Chappell's, 50, New Bond Street; and at Austin's Ticket Office, St James's Hall, W.

MR TRELAWNY COBHAM'S MATINÉE MUSICALE, MONDAY, May 10th, at 27, Harley Street. Artists—Mesdames Enequist, Bunsen, Purdy, and José Sherrington; Signori Trelawny Cobham, Federici, and Caravoglia. Instrumental—Signori Mattei, Romano, and Pinsuti, Mdlle Castellan, and Herr Ganz.

MISS FLORENCE MAY'S PIANOFORTE RECITAL, at WILLIS'S ROOMS, St James's, on SATURDAY Afternoon, May 8th, at Three o'clock (under the patronage of H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh). Pianoforte—Miss Florence May. Violin—Signor Papini. Vocalist—Mdlle Sophie Löwe. Accompanist—Mr Zerbini. Stalls (reserved), 5s.; unreserved, 3s.; may be obtained of Messrs Stanley Lucas, Weber & Co., 84, New Bond Street; and of Messrs Chappell, 50, New Bond Street.

VERDI'S REQUIEM.—ROYAL ALBERT HALL, SATURDAY Afternoon, May 15, and WEDNESDAY Evening, May 19. Conductor—Signor VERDI. The Solos by Madame Stoltz, Mdlle Waldmann, Signor Mosini, and Signor Medini. Royal Albert Hall Choral Society. Tickets, amphitheatre stalls, 21s.; arena stalls, 10s. 6d.; balcony, 5s.; admission, 2s. 6d.; for which immediate application should be made to NOVELLO'S, 1, Berners Street, and 35, Poultry; and at the Royal Albert Hall.

NEW GALLERY, 7, Argyll Street, Oxford Circus, Regent Street.—Messrs JOSEF LUDWIG and HUGO DAUBERT'S CLASSICAL CHAMBER CONCERTS, on the Evenings of WEDNESDAY, May 12th and 26th, June 9th and 23rd. Programme of the First Concert: Pianoforte Quartet in A major, Op. 26 (Brahms); Lieder by Schubert and Schumann; Introduzione e Polacca, Op. 3, for pianoforte and violoncello (Chopin); Solos, violin, Adagio (Spohr), Moto perpetuo (Paganini); Divertimento in E flat, Op. 19, for violin, viola, and violoncello (Mozart). Misses Sophie Löwe and Agnes Zimmermann; Herren Josef Ludwig, Otto Bernhardt, and Hugo Daubert. Subscribers' names received at Messrs Chappell & Co.; Stanley Lucas, Weber & Co., New Bond Street; C. E. Flavell, 26, North Audley Street; and Siegle, 110, Leadenhall Street.

"MEDEA."

MISS JESSIE JONES (Student and Silver Medallist of the Royal Academy of Music) will sing RANDEGGER'S Grand Scena, "MEDEA," at the Concert of the British Orchestral Society, on Wednesday Evening, May 19.

WANTED, some FIRST CLASS CONCERT PARTIES, for beginning of December next, on Provincial Tour. Full particulars to be addressed, "Entrepreneur," care of DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

WANTED, an Immediate ENGAGEMENT, as MUSIC-SELLER'S ASSISTANT. Good Experience; Wholesale and Retail, and all the branches, Town or Country. Address, S. F. STEVENS, 41, Bermondsey Square, S.E., London.

A LADY, having quitted the Operatic Stage, will be happy to give Accompanying LESSONS to Artists. Apply, by letter, addressed "Accompanist," care of DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

THE GUITAR.—MDME SIDNEY PRATTEN, Teacher of this elegant Instrument, is in Town for the Season. For LESSONS and Private CONCERTS, address to her residence, 22A, Dorset Street, Portman Square, W.

MR RICCARDI (the new Bass), who made so successful a debut at St James's Hall, March 12th, begs to announce his Return to London for the Season. All applications for ENGAGEMENTS to be addressed, Care of DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

CONCERTS, PRIVATE THEATRICALS, and ENTERTAINMENTS.—To be LET, by the Night, Handsome SUITE of ROOMS, adjoining Hengler's Cirque, Argyll Street, Regent Street. The Large Hall (52 ft. by 35 ft., and 22 feet high) will seat about 300 people. Apply to HAIG & Co., 7, Argyll Street, W.

Just Published, Eighth Edition, 12mo, cloth (316 pages), price 12s. 6d.; postage, 3d.

MUSIC (A RUDIMENTARY AND PRACTICAL TREATISE ON). With numerous Examples. By CHARLES CHILD SPENCER.

Also, by the same Author, New Edition, just Published, 12mo, cloth (144 pages), price 1s. 6d.; postage, 2d.

THE PIANOFORTE, THE RUDIMENTS OF THE ART OF PLAYING. Written and selected from the best Masters.

London: LOCKWOOD & Co., Stationers' Hall Court, E.C.

BRIGHTON CONCERT AGENTS,

PIANOFORTE AND MUSICSELLERS,

LYON & HALL,

WARWICK MANSION.

VICTORIA. The new National Song. Written by W. CLARK RUSSELL. Music by HENRY SMART. In two keys (G and B). 3s. each; free by post, 18 stamps each. The Part Song, 4 stamps.

DEAR ENGLAND. New Song. Words by CHARLES MACKAY. Music by LOUIS DIEHL. 3s.; post free at half price. "Signor Foli has already won encores at the Crystal Palace, Manchester, and elsewhere."—Norwich Mercury.

HOPKINS'S and Dr RIMBAULT'S GREAT WORK on the HISTORY and CONSTRUCTION of the ORGAN. New Edition, pp. 780. Price £1 11s. 6d., postage free. A Catalogue of Organ Music, Masses, and Oratorios, gratis and postage free.

THE KISS OF A LITTLE CHILD. New Song. Words by CHARLES ROWE. Music by JOHN HULLAH. 3s. Also, by the same Composer, "ANGELS OF THE HEARTH." Free by post, 18 stamps each. London: ROBERT COCKS & Co., New Burlington Street. Order of all Musicsellers.

NEW COMPOSITIONS BY WILHELM SCHULTHES.

"COR JESU, SALUS IN TE SPERANTIUM." Dedicated to His Holiness Pope Pius the Ninth, Motett for Three Equal Voices (Soli and Chorus), with Organ Accompaniment (and Harp ad lib.)—5s. The same arranged for a Choir of Mixed Voices (S.A.T.B.), with Organ Accompaniment—4s. Also in an Abridged Arrangement for Congregational Use, with Organ Accompaniment—3d. net.

"VENI DOMINE," Motett for Four Equal Voices (Soli and Chorus), with Organ Accompaniment (and Harp ad lib.); and "ELEVATION," Solo for Organ and Harp—4s. A Vocal Arrangement of the Motett for a Choir of Mixed Voices (S.A.T.B.)—1s.

"GUIRLANDES DE MAI." Hymns to B.V.M. (French and English Words), with Organ Accompaniment, Three Parts—3s. each; post free, 19 stamps.

"TWELVE LATIN HYMNS," for Vespers, Complin, &c., with Organ Accompaniment—2s. net. NOVELLO, EWER & Co., 1, Berners Street.

"SHALL I WEAR A WHITE ROSE?"

BALLAD.

Words by H. SAVILLE CLARKE.

Music by EMILY BARDSLEY FARMER.

Nett, 2s.

JOSEPH WILLIAMS, Berners Street, and Cheapside, E.C.

Now Publishing,

ANDANTE and ALLEGRO CAPRICCIOSO,

For PIANO and ORCHESTRA, Op. 5.

By THOMAS WINGHAM.

Dedicated to Signor RANDEGGER.

SOLO, 7s. 6d.

Also, by the same Composer,

SYMPHONY, in B flat, No. 2, Op. 6.

Dedicated, by kind permission, to Sir W. STERNDALE BENNETT.

PERFORMED AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE CONCERTS.

DUET, 15s.

FESTAL OVERTURE, in C, Op. 8.

Composed in Commemoration of the Jubilee of the Royal Academy of Music.

Dedicated to JOHN HULLAH, Esq.

DUET, 7s. 6d.

To Subscribers, the above works will be issued at 12s. 6d. the Set. Names received by the Publishers—

LONDON: LAMBORN COCK & CO., 63, NEW BOND STREET.

In the Press,

"BY THE WILLOWS."

A WREATH OF SONGS, Op. 11.

Words (from the German) by L. N. PARKER.

MUSIC BY

THOMAS WINGHAM.

Dedicated to Dr FERDINAND HILLER.

Price 7s. 6d.

LONDON: BOOSEY & CO., 295, REGENT STREET.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF VOICE.

(Reprinted from the "Medical Press and Circular.")

AND

THE BASIS OF MUSICAL EXPRESSION.

Second (Popular) Edition, much Enlarged.

By CHARLES LUNN.

One Shilling.

BAILLIERE, TINDALL & COX; and all Booksellers.

"Mr Lunn is one of the most earnest and conscientious thinkers of the day."—Musical Times.

"Birmingham may well be proud of such a citizen."—Orchestra.

"Mr Lunn is well known as an able writer on musical subjects."—The Rock.

"A method of reasoning at once lucid and forcible, and, for the greater part, unanswerable."—Catholic Times.

Digitized by Google

MUSIC PAST AND PRESENT IN IRELAND.

No. I.

So much has been thought and expressed of late, both in the public journals and in private circles, upon the unsatisfactory state of musical art in this city, that we are induced to open our columns to a short series of articles upon the subject. As the inquiry would be incomplete without a retrospective glance at the state of music in this country when it was pre-eminently the land of song, it is necessary to preface the future articles with an introduction, taking in, as far as space will permit, the early past of the art, when it may be said Ireland became the instructor of other nations in music. It appears to be indisputable that, when the Continent of Europe was in a state of barbarity, learning and the elegant arts were cultivated in this country. It was the office of the bards not only to render in song deeds of valour and of love, but to become the historians of the period in verse. In these records any deviation from truth was a punishable offence. Ollamh Fodhla, who was really a sage, as well as a king, and who reigned 200 years before the Christian era, was surrounded by bards in his conventions at Tara. Their doings were versified and inserted in the Psalter of Tara. Bishop Nicholson says these poems are "the chief pillars upon which our history is founded;" and Dean Swift writing to the Earl of Oxford on this subject observes that "there was more care taken by our ancestors to preserve the memory of times and persons than we find in this age of learning and politeness, as we are pleased to call it." Ossian, who lived in the third century, was the chief of the bards, and some idea may be formed of the cultivation of music at that period, when it is stated by historians that there was a band of singers attached to each battalion of the Finnian troops. Mr Holmes observes that "Ireland was famous for the cultivation of the kindred arts of poetry and music; and we find the names of several bards and musicians who flourished before the Christian era in the chronicles of the country." It is curious to learn that, after the peaceful conversion of the Irish to Christianity by St Patrick, A.D. 462, the bards still continued their important offices, now tuning their harps to the praises of the Most High, instead of, as heretofore, to false deities. Dr Blair says:—"So strong was the attachment of the Celtic nations to their poetry and bards, that amidst all the changes of their government and manners, even long after the Druids were extinct, and the national religion altered, the bards continued to flourish as an order of men highly respected in the State and supported by a public establishment. We find them, according to the testimonies of Strabo and Diodorus, before the age of Augustus Cæsar; and we find them remaining under the same name, and exercising the same functions as of old in Ireland, and in the north of Scotland, almost down to our own times." In the seventh century choral psalmody and antiphonal singing was to be heard in the monastery of Bangor, county Down; and it is said to have derived its name from the "sweet choir" which belonged to it. The learned Gerbert asserts that Germany had her ecclesiastical music from this monastery. From the eighth to the tenth century literature and the fine arts progressed almost to perfection, and Ireland was the first seat of learning in Europe. Upon this Dr Johnson, writing to the historian, Dr O'Connor, says, that "Dr Leland begins his history too late. The ages which deserve an exact inquiry are those times (for such times there were) when Ireland was the school of the West, the quiet habitation of sanctity and literature." But, alas! the progress of the arts was checked by the invasion of the Danes. These barbarians gloried in the destruction of literature and music, and their professors. However, after the defeat of the Northmen, art was resuscitated and shone brightly again under the fostering care of Brian Boru. It was during this monarch's reign that the fair maiden walked unmolested through the land, whom Moore has celebrated in the beautiful song, "Rich and rare were the gems she wore." Brian himself cultivated music, and his harp is still preserved in the Museum of Trinity College. The harp was used in Ireland long before the instrument was known to the other nations of Europe. Dante mentions the instrument as being brought from Ireland to Italy. There cannot be a better testimony to the cultivation of music in this country during the mediæval period than that of O'Hallaran, who says that, "in every house, there was one or two harps free to all travellers, who were the more caressed the more they excelled in music." Now, the people of Ireland must have been in a much higher state of civilization at that time than they are at present. Then were those thrilling airs composed whose melodious sweetness of expression still enchains the hearts of the hearers of all classes, as if by some magic spell. Those melodies which Moore has wedded to his immortal verses, and which will be handed down to future generations linked to the inspirations of the illustrious bard; aye, and they will continue to fascinate and enchant so long as a love for pure melody—which is in reality music—exists. Though this music still charms the dwellers in the land, it does not seem to inspire them with its rays. Where are our native composers? Balfe and Wallace, both gifted children of song, left the land of their birth and became famous. They have passed away. Where are their successors? More of this anon. But now to return. The people must have been at the period spoken of much more refined than at the present. Dr Sherlock's observations will go far to prove the truth of this. He says—"If a man naturally rough becomes softened for the time by music—if those times are continually renewed, habit will take the place of nature, and that man's character will, to a certain degree, change." If this be true—and we think it is—the deterioration of the people, both morally and physically, may be found in their ceasing to cultivate the divine art. Many other instruments besides the harp were known and used by the ancient Irish, but our space will not permit us to dwell upon them. In the eleventh and twelfth centuries anarchy began to show its head in the country. There was no foreign foe, and the cheftains became impatient of subordination, and were inclined to revolt against their rulers. Happily the Crusades gave the chivalrous and unruly a vent for their ardour. Many Irish princes and their followers enrolled themselves under the banner of Goffrédo. Tasso alludes to them in his "Jerusalem Delivered." Fuller, writing of those expeditions, speaks in the warmest terms of the music in Ireland. "Yea," says the old historian, "we may well think all the concert in Christendom in this warre could have made no musick if the Irish harp had been wanting." Walker, in his memoirs of the Irish bard, states that when Geraldus Cambrensis visited Ireland in the retinue of Henry II. he was enchanted with the instrumental music, and pronounced it superior to any he had heard in other lands. The following is translated from the original Latin of Giraldus:—"The attention of this people to musical instruments I find worthy of commendation, in which their skill is, beyond comparison, superior to any nation I have seen; for in these the modulation is not slow and solemn, as of the instruments of Britain, to which we are accustomed, but the sounds are rapid and precipitate, yet at the same time sweet and pleasing. It is wonderful how, in such rapidity of fingers, the musical proportions are preserved, and, by their art, faultless throughout in the midst of their complicated modulations and most intricate arrangements of notes, by a rapidity so sweet, a regularity so irregular, a concord so discordant, the melody is rendered harmonious and perfect, whether the chords of the diatessaron or diapente are struck together; yet they always begin in a soft mood, and end in the same, that all may be perfected in the sweetness of delicious sound. They enter on and again leave their modulations with so much subtlety, and the tinglings of the small strings sport with so much freedom under the deep notes of the bass, delight with so much delicacy and soothe so softly, that the excellence of their art seems to lie in concealing it." It would appear from this that instrumental music was cultivated in Ireland, and that there must have been a musical system of notation, time, and counterpoint practised by the Irish harpists long before the art was developed on the Continent. Dr Burney says—"The Irish had long been in possession of musical characters, and of a slight knowledge of counterpoint. Hence we may infer that the gamut and time-table where known here before they were constructed by Guido Aretine and Franco of Cologne. All historians agree that the Welsh had their music from Ireland, and that at the first Eistedfodd given by Griffith ap Conan, Prince of North Wales, A.D. 1175, the Irish won the prizes." Dr Campbell asserts that the Scotch had their music likewise from Ireland, and goes on to say that there is "proof presumptive, the strongest the nature of the thing is capable of, that the British Scots borrowed their music from the same quarter." Goldsmith quotes Geminiani, who said "there was no original music in these countries, except the Irish." The Anglo-Norman invaders during the middle ages caused the chieftains, in self-defence, to resort to arms. Yet, amid the continual din of war, music was not neglected, and the art was still cultivated by the people as a solace in their misery. According as the English succeeded in the conquest of the country, laws were enacted against the bards; but such was the love of music that more than a century after the reign of Elizabeth, who was their bitterest persecutor—at the period of the Revolution, in the lists that were made of the properties of the proscribed adherents of James the Second, almost all, even the Anglo-Norman families, had a harp among their effects. This was the sorrowful time of the bards. Their chiefs were in exile, their lands confiscated, and those who succeeded in possession had no sympathy for them. They were reduced by the penal enactments against them to seek the hospitality of the humbler classes, and to wander from door to door until they met a cead mille failthe, from the Irish peasant who always loved and still cherishes the children of song. Having now, in these prefatory observations, glanced at the history of music up to the decline of the bards, we shall here close with the name of Denis A. Hempsey, who lived to the almost miraculous age of 112 years. He was born in 1695, and died in 1807. He was the last of the bards. Hempsey, or Hempson as he was more generally designated, is highly spoken of by the musical antiquarian Bunting. The Rev. G. Sampson, the historian of Londonderry, in a letter to Lady Morgan, to be found in her novel, "The Wild Irish Girl," narrates many interesting anecdotes of Hempson. He lost his sight, when three years old, from smallpox. He travelled for ten years through Ireland and Scotland. When in his fiftieth year, during his second tour in the latter country, he was introduced to the Pretender, and played "The King shall enjoy his own again." He died with the harp in his hand. Having heard that Sir Harvey Bruce, his friend, had come to visit him, he was raised in the bed and grasped the instrument to give his benefactor welcome. After striking a few chords he fell back, and gave his last sigh. Thus ended the life of the last of the bards. H. T.

Digitized by Google

(To be continued.)

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.

The regular season of this society ended on Friday week with a performance of Sir Michael Costa's Eli—the first, and many think the better, of the two works of its class which have come from the pen of the Neapolitan musician. Concerning the oratorio itself we have nothing new to say. Its claims were long ago decided upon, and the position it holds is such as to warrant the Society in giving an occasional performance, apart from the fact that the implied compliment to its own conductor is a very natural and graceful thing. The work had a generally good rendering, band and chorus taking special pains; while the solos could hardly have been in better hands than those of Madame Sherrington, Madame Patey, Mr Vernon Rigby, Mr Lewis Thomas, and Mr Santley. Madame Sherrington was heard to particular advantage in Hannah's jubilant air, which suits her admirably; while the two solos allotted to the representative of Samuel were perfectly sung by Madame Patey—one having to be repeated. Mr Vernon Rigby has made the tenor music of Eli his own in a special manner, and the composer usually entrusts it to him as to safe hands. This preference was justified on Friday night—above all by a delivery of the war-song, "Philistines, hark!" which wanted nothing of energy and truthful expression. Mr Rigby made a great success by this effort, and was loudly applauded. Mr Thomas as the Man of God, and Mr Santley as the Prophet, amply sustained their several reputations, and contributed to the effect of a performance in all respects creditable.

Two extra concerts are announced, at which St Paul and Israel in Egypt will be given.

St Petersburgh.—Two performances of Handel's Messiah were lately given with great success by the Philharmonic Society. The chorus numbered 300 voices, and the orchestra, 60 performers. The work was got up by M. Homilius, who, at the public performances, handed over his bâton to M. Davidoff, the violoncellist, officiating himself as organist.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

Last week began with successive repetitions of Guillaume Tell, Un Ballo in Maschera, and Don Giovanni. The fourth appearance of Mdlle Zaré Thalberg as Zerlina was just as successful as its precursors, and the house was the most crowded of the season. No official statement has yet enlightened the public as to the new character in which they may be called upon to judge Mdlle Thalberg, who is again announced for Zerlina (fifth time)—a good sign of the attraction of the performance. The Don Giovanni of M. Maurel, by the way, becomes more and more a finished impersonation. There are now rumours that another Zerlina—the Zerlina of Auber's Fra Diavolo, is in consideration for the interesting new comer; but amateurs, we believe, look forward rather to Susanna, or Cherubino, in the Nozze di Figaro. Cherubino, it is hardly requisite to hint, was intended by the composer for a soprano.

That Il Flauto Magico would be one of the productions of the early season might have been surmised. Mr Gye has at ready command all the means indispensable to an adequate presentation of this singular work, in which a seemingly chaotic jumble of materials has, by aid of the musician's art, been fashioned into an enduring masterpiece. In none of his operas has Mozart shown a more inexhaustible vein of melody, or more wonderful variety in the form and development of his concerted pieces. Beethoven placed Die Zauberflöte before all the dramatic works of its author, as being, according to his idea, the most thoroughly German, and set to a libretto which, however fantastic, had none of those features that in Le Nozze, Cosi fan tutte, and Don Giovanni, were more or less repugnant to the taste and feelings of the, in some respects, austere and unbending creator of Fidelio. But it would be needless to reopen a discussion which the opinion of nearly a century has proved to be of little avail. Le Nozze, Don Giovanni, and Die Zauberflöte all composed within the space of five years (from 1786 to 1791) are still surviving, and have every chance of surviving so long as music is recognized as an art. The cast of Il Flauto Magico at Covent-garden is, on the whole, very efficient, the chief characters being assigned to Mdlles D'Angeri, Marimon, and Smeroschi (Pamina, Astrifiammante, and Papagena), Signors Pavani, Bagagiolo, and Maurel (Tamino, Sarastro, and Papageno). Mdlle Marimon possesses the indispensable vocal means, rare now-a-days, to execute the difficult bravura airs allotted to the "Queen of the Night," while the rich bass voice of Signor Bagagiolo is precisely suited to the more solemn utterances of the High Priest of Isis. Tamino has a sensible and artistic representative in the but recently arrived new tenor, Signor Pavani; Mdlle D'Angeri finds all the impassioned expression requisite to give proper effect to the music of Pamina; Mdlle Smeroschi is a piquant and lively Papagena; Signor Tagliafico is as droll a Monostatos as could be imagined; and, if good singing fulfilled every exigency of the part, it would be difficult to meet with a more acceptable Papageno than M. Maurel, to whom, however, we must not look for the grotesque humour of Ronconi, the original "Bird-catcher" at our Royal Italian Opera. Here M. Maurel stands in about the same predicament as Signor Cotogni, his immediate predecessor. The general cast of Il Flauto, including the three genii, the three followers of Astrifiammante (personifications of good and evil), is for the most part almost precisely the same as last year. It will therefore suffice to add that the performance (directed by Signor Bevignani) afforded general satisfaction, and that the two airs of Sarastro, "I possenti Numi" and "Qui sdegno," the second air of Astrifiammante, "Gli angui d'inferno," and Papageno's little song, "Colombo, o Tortorella," were encored and repeated.

On Saturday night the opera was Rigoletto, in which Mdlle Albani, as the innocent, unhappy Gilda, confirmed the impressions she had made last season, and the season before last. A fresh description of her performance is not required. To say that it has still further improved is saying a good deal, but not too much. It is an ideal embodiment of the character, touching in its simplicity, yet impassioned in those movements where a strong display of emotion is required by the situation, and invariably true to nature. The duets with Rigoletto and the Duke (disguised as the student, Walter Maldé), so opposite in character, were equally effective; and the soliloquy, "Caro nome," where Gilda dwells with lingering tenderness on the name and remembrance of her unknown lover, was given throughout with genuine musical feeling.

Digitized by Google

The pathetic scene with Rigoletto, in the palace of the Duke, showed to admirable advantage the dramatic power which, season after season, becomes more remarkably exemplified in the assumptions of the young Canadian, whose every conspicuous effort was greeted with the warmest tribute of applause. The new tenor, Signor de Sanctis, for whom, being still indisposed, a printed apology circulated in the house, was so clearly unable to do justice to his powers that it would not be fair to judge of his performance until a more favourable occasion offers. Signor Graziani's Rigoletto was as earnest, emphatic, and studiously elaborated as from time out of mind; the Maddelena of Mdlle Scalchi was, as usual, clever and intelligent; and the Sparafucile of Signor Tagliafico, sui generis, the most picturesque and inimitable of assassins. The famous quartet for the leading characters, near the end of the opera, produced its accustomed effect. Signor Bevignani was conductor.

The opera on Monday last was the Huguenots; Der Freischütz was given on Tuesday; Don Giovanni, for Mdlle Zaré Thalberg, on Thursday. Last night was to be devoted to a full rehearsal of Wagner's anxiously expected Lohengrin, the first public performance of which is announced for this evening.

MUSIC AT DRESDEN.

(From our Correspondent.)

Imitating the recent regulations adopted at the Imperial Opera-house and Burgtheater, Vienna, the management of the Theatre Royal recently issued an order forbidding the performers to acknowledge, as they had always been accustomed to do, during the actual performance of an opera or other piece, whatever applause the public might think fit to bestow on them. The public fancied the order applied to them as well as to the artists, and, being an orderly, well-behaved, law-fearing race, or, perhaps, not wishing to lead the said artists into temptation, forthwith ceased applauding any one or anything. In fact, they were too obedient, too good; much more so than was either agreeable or inspiriting to the actors and singers, to whom outward marks of approbation are about as necessary as the air they breathe. The consequence was that the management had to issue a second notice, in which the somewhat too reverential Dresdeners were told, among other things that "it was never intended the artists should be denied all applause; for an air well sung, for a speech well delivered, etc., the public can manifest as hitherto their appreciation of what they hear; their own delicacy of feeling will teach them when applause following immediately what the artist does, however fine that may be, is a mistake, marking the want of proper tact."

MUSIC AT BRUSSELS.

(From our Correspondent.)

The season which began, and for a considerable period continued so disastrously at the Théâtre Royal de la Monnaie, is drawing to its close in a manner much more agreeable to all concerned—manager, artists, and public. Comic opera, previously greeted with ironical cheers or almost hissed off the stage, has once more appeared behind the footlights. First came La Dame Blanche, with M. Achard as the hero. This was succeeded by M. Ambroise Thomas' Songe d'une Nuit d'Eté. M. Achard again produced a highly favourable impression. His William Shakspere was an undeniable success. He was ably supported by M. Dauphin as the fat knight, Sir John Falstaff. Mdlle Priolo, also, shaking off the evil influence which, during the winter months, paralysed her powers, contributed largely towards the gratifying result. Nor was she less satisfactory in Le Domino Noir, which added another laurel to the wreath M. Achard has been gathering on Belgian soil. M. Campocasso's lucky star, so long obscured, or so late to rise, has even shone benignantly upon Mignon, though Madame Nilsson has unfortunately left. But, despite the formidable recollections she had to encounter, Mdlle Reine got through her task satisfactorily.

The programme of the last concert by the Société de Musique included portions of Schumann's Faust and Haydn's Seasons. The principal artists were Madame Walter Strauss, MM. Henschel, Boyer, and Meissen. The King and Queen were present, and warmly congratulated both artists and directors on the performance.

HER MAJESTY'S OPERA.

The strong impression created by Mdlle Varesi when she made her début in Rigoletto caused all amateurs to look forward with more than common interest to her next attempt in Lucia di Lammermoor, which belongs more properly to the school of opera in which her proficiency had been heralded from afar. Nor was expectation disappointed. On the contrary, the Lucia of Mdlle Varesi, to all artistic purposes, far outstripped her Gilda. She had a more conspicuous part to play, and she proved herself fully equal to the task. As we were persuaded from the first, Mdlle Varesi is a thorough mistress of the genuine Italian style. Though her voice is deficient in power, it has been cultivated on such excellent principles that she has obtained complete control over it, has subdued it to her will, and, in fact, can do with it just what she pleases. Her sustained singing ("sostenuto") and her florid singing ("agilità") are alike exemplary. In the first scene of Lucia, the familiar "Regnava nel silenzio," with its brilliant sequel, at once put her on the best terms with the audience, who greeted both this and the duet with Edgardo, upon which the curtain falls, with well-merited applause. As the opera proceeded, Mdlle Varesi strengthened more and more the high opinion entertained of her. In the duet with Enrico (the duet of the forged letter) the young artist showed a dramatic power which, in the scene of the contract and Edgardo's indignant reproaches, was still more emphatically demonstrated. But her success culminated in that of the madness of Lucia, many passages in which we have never heard rendered more perfectly, whether eloquent truth of sentiment, or facility and unerring neatness of execution be considered. Her reading of this elaborately worked out scena, from the larghetto, "Alfin son tua, alfin sei mio," to the melodious peroration, "Spargi d'amaro pianto," was well-nigh irreproachable. As in one part of this scena the voice may be said to join in a duet with the flute, it is only fair to the gentleman who represents the first flute in Sir Michael Costa's admirable orchestra, and plays the "obbligato" part which Donizetti has made so important a feature, to say that he supported the singer so skilfully as to add no little to the general effect. At the termination of the scene the applause was loud, prolonged, and unanimous, and Mdlle Varesi may be congratulated on a legitimate artistic success. The Edgardo was Signor Fancelli, who returns to us with a voice that may now almost compare with that of any tenor on the Italian lyric stage, and a style of singing which, allowing for occasional exaggeration, is acceptable as a style which, promising from the beginning, has ripened with experience. Enrico was represented by Signor Galassi, Raimondo by Herr Behrens, and Arturo by Signor Rinaldini. The "ensemble" was for the most part very good.

Repetitions of Lucrezia Borgia, with Mdlle Tietjens as the Duchess of Ferrara and Signor Campanini as Gennaro; of Il Barbiere, in which Mdlle Anna de Belocca more than confirmed the brilliant success of her début; and of Lucia di Lammermoor, again with Mdlle Varesi as the heroine, complete the history of the week.

On Monday last Le Nozze di Figaro was given, for the second appearance of Mdlle Pernini. The Huguenots was the opera on Thursday, and for to-night we are promised Il Trovatore, with Mad. Nilsson as Leonora. About the "rentrée" of Mad. Nilsson, on Tuesday (Il Talismano), see another page. Lohengrin, although not yet definitively announced, is, we understand, in active preparation.

A QUERY.

F. G. Haig will feel obliged if the Editor of the Musical World, or any of his readers can enlighten him as to whether the following pieces in Acis and Galatea were composed by Handel:—Chorus, "Haste! oh, haste;" chorus "From the azure bowers;" solo, Cupid, "Hark! hark! hark!" with chorus, "Careless and rapid, and fleet and free," and if so, why they are omitted from Novello's and other editions. The pieces referred to will be found in Davidson's handbook of the Serenata.

CARLSRUHE.—Herr Dessoff, late of the Imperial Operahouse, Vienna, entered upon his duties as Capellmeister at the Grand Ducal Theatre by conducting Guillaume Tell.

Digitized by Google

CHRISTINE NILSSON'S RETURN.

(From the "Daily Telegraph," May 5.)

After wandering about the Continent, from the frozen North to the genial South, and finding summer everywhere in the warm welcome of the public, Mdme Christine Nilsson has returned to us with the flowers of May. It was no ordinary crowd that greeted her last night, as she stepped upon the stage which will always be associated with her successes. Not only was every part of the house crowded by enthusiastic amateurs, but English Royalty was represented as it is only on rare and special occasions. The Prince and Princess of Wales, the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, the Prince and Princess Christian, and a numerous party, were among those who applauded the rentrée of the prima donna, and by their presence lent additional significance to the welcome she received. Who will say that royal patronage and public favour were, in this instance, wasted, or that the recipient of so much honour did not well deserve it? Mdme Nilsson is no mere idol of an hour, forced upon deluded worshippers by the dictates of fashion. She is an artist pur sang, tried and proven over and over again, and as such, if art be what we are fond of considering it, her reward is no more than she has earned.

The opera chosen for the occasion was the Talismano of Balfe and Arthur Matthison, as adapted to the Italian stage by Signor Zaffira. This work, produced only last season, and then discussed to the full extent of its merits, supplied Madame Nilsson with a character (Edith Plantagenet) which suits her perfectly in many ways, not to insist upon the fact that it is her latest assumption and her own property by such right as "creation" implies. But may we not regard Mdme Nilsson's choice for her rentrée as a graceful compliment paid to English art? Balfe was a cosmopolitan, it is true, and his opera, as we now have it, presents an un-English aspect; yet, after all, it belongs to us, and we take to ourselves whatever credit the work reflects upon the land of its birth. Let us also take to ourselves the delicate homage which its performance last night conveyed in the most natural and unaffected way. As it was, the whole house, from the occupant of the cheapest seat to the illustrious tenants of the Royal boxes, were unmistakably glad to see Madame Nilsson, and exhibited their feeling without restraint. It was soon evident that the Swedish artist had come back in complete possession of her means. Herself graceful and charming as ever, her voice seems to have gained in sonority and volume, without losing one iota of that sympathetic quality, which makes its tones so easily appeal to the heart of the listener. Madame Nilsson's mezza voce is still wonderfully touching, and she uses it as freely as heretofore; but there can be no questioning the fact that, in so far as power is essential to a "dramatic soprano," she is more than ever qualified to take that position. To go with the prima donna through Il Talismano would be to travel over ground the most familiar. Enough if we say that all the customary points were made in the earlier acts; and that, as usual, the duet of Edith and Sir Kenneth, at the end of Act 3, gave occasion for the triumph of the evening. Here the applause, liberal throughout, became enthusiastic; and the morceau, once repeated, was actually demanded a third time. But Madame Nilsson, using one of her expressive gestures, declined compliance, and retired laden with the flowers which had rained down upon her. From a dramatic point of view, the character of Edith was made more truthful and effective than ever. Indeed, it is clear that Madame Nilsson the actress now rivals Madame Nilsson the singer. We can hardly say more.

(From the "Times," May 5.)

The return of Madame Christine Nilsson was, as usual, the "gala" night of the season at Her Majesty's Opera. The welcome event was made all the welcomer by the opportunity it afforded the public of once more hearing the posthumous work of our countryman, Michael William Balfe, for which Mr Arthur Mattheson supplied the English, and Signor Zaffira the Italian version. To the gifted Swedish lady—our second "Swedish Nightingale"—we were indebted for the original production of Il Talismano; and now she again comes forward, of her own good will, to help in strengthening the opinion so freely and so generally expressed last year. The occasion was, therefore, one of double interest, and fully accounted for the brilliant audience which crowded Her Majesty's Opera, boxes, gallery, and stalls, on Tuesday night—an audience conspicuous among whom were the Prince and Princess of Wales, the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, and other distinguished persons. Madame Nilsson was greeted with an enthusiasm which may be attributed not only to the public gratification at seeing her once more, but also, in no small measure, to the graceful tribute of sympathy paid by her to a composer who worked so long and successfully for the English operatic stage. Though Il Talismano is ours by right of birth, it was the accomplished Swede who presented us with it, inasmuch as she gave life and breath to that which only existed upon paper. She, too, has, therefore, made it her own, and the admirers of Balfe's operatic music—which signifies the large majority of amateurs in this country, to say nothing of other countries—will gladly share with her the possession of what, but for her, might up to the present moment have remained unknown.

Madame Nilsson's travels in Russia and elsewhere, like her travels in the New World, not long since, have exercised no prejudicial influence upon a voice that from the first was accredited with exceptional qualities, and now has few rivals. On the contrary, it has gained in power and richness, and is more than ever under the control of its possessor. This was speedily declared in the tranquil apostrophe to Night ("Placida notte!"), when Edith Plantaganet first appears upon the scene, and in its lively sequel, "Gran Dio! il mio diletto," in which she gives vent to her satisfaction on learning that Sir Kenneth of Scotland, her lover, has arrived in the camp. The sustained tenderness of the introductory movement, and the fluent execution of the "cabaletta" at once convinced the audience that a rare performance was in store for them. They expressed as much through the genuine applause and recall that ensued. Nor were they disappointed. The end of the first act, when Edith, as it were insensibly, drops the flower, which Sir Kenneth picks up with rapture, created its accustomed effect, enhanced by the manner in which Signor Campanini delivered the charming romance, "Candido fiore" ("Flow'ret, I kiss thee")—encored and repeated as a matter of course. In the second act Edith does not appear; but in the third she shines forth in all her radiance; and here Madame Nilsson, both as singer and actress, reached the loftiest point, and won a fair artistic triumph. Passing by the pretty, tuneful romance of "Evelina," which could hardly be sung with more simple and unstudied grace, we come to the exciting duet between Edith and Sir Kenneth. In this Madame Nilsson so entirely won the sympathies of her audience that it seemed as if the applause would never cease. It is here that Edith, as all who have seen the opera are aware, forces upon her lover the acceptance of the ring, the possession of which, and the knowledge that the gift implies also the love of its donor, incites Sir Kenneth to patriotism and honour, independently of all other considerations. Madame Nilsson's share in the finale, when Edith supplicates Richard Cœur de Lion for the pardon of Sir Kenneth, who had temporarily abandoned his watch over the English standard for her sake alone, was no less forcible; and the curtain fell amid the continued plaudits of the whole house. The bravura air, "Nella viva trepidanza," in the next and final act, given with singular ease and fluency, accompanied by a "sotto voce," in some of the florid passages, alone enough to distinguish it from ordinary exhibitions of vocal art, was the worthy climax to a performance in every respect admirable.

Signor Campanini's Sir Kenneth is precisely what it was last season; and, on the whole, we cannot wish for a better. Mdlle Risarelli has succeeded Mdme Marie Roze, in the part of Queen Berengaria, acquitting herself with ability; and Signor Galassi played King Richard—vice Signor Rota of last year—with appropriate dignity. Other less important modifications of the cast were to be remembered, but Signor Catalani again appeared as the wily Nectabanus. The orchestra and chorus, under Sir Michael Costa, were irreproachable, and the scenery of Mr W. Beverley, who has the rare secret of making much out of little, was admired as before. On the whole, the revival of Il Talismano could hardly have been more successful.

Digitized by Google

Mdme Nilsson's next part is to be Leonora, in the Trovatore (Saturday).

SIMS REEVES AT MANCHESTER.

(From the "Manchester Examiner and Times")

Last week Mr W. Pyatt gave the first of the ballad concerts, with Mr Sims Reeves as the leading artist. The large room of the Free Trade Hall was crowded to an extent seldom seen even during the winter months. As a rule Manchester audiences do not like to go to concerts in daylight, but the promised appearance of Mr Sims Reeves proved just as attractive as ever. Every corner of the floor and the gallery was occupied, and for once the orchestra was made available for the overflowing audience. It had been generally known that Mr Reeves had arrived; but possibly previous disappointments were in the recollection of some of his admirers, and the enthusiastic welcome which greeted the most popular singer of the day was unmistakably intensified by the gratification due to the fact that the pleasure of the hour was all the more precious by its rarity. We have so often declared it impossible to define the charm of Mr Reeves' superb singing that we may be excused from attempting to do so now. Assuredly he possesses, in addition to his other accomplishments, the indefinable power to touch the heart and imagination, attainable by so few artists, for which there is no other word than charm. It is true that Mr Sims Reeves owes much to his splendid voice, and that the power by which he elevates a ballad like "Tom Bowling" into a powerfully pathetic dramatic story is due to earnest study and to a finish which can only be the result of zealous and incessant labour; but something more than exceptional vocal power, and the effect of studious exercise, are displayed, and the delight experienced seems in a great measure due to the inspiration of the moment. Even to those who have frequently heard it, the great recitative and air from Jephtha excites scarcely less surprise than admiration every time Mr Reeves sings it. Mr Reeves was in splendid voice, and sang with his old vigour, as well as with the old refinement; and, though this was the first time he had sung for nearly two months, no signs of his recent indisposition were apparent. And as it may be confidently asserted that Mr Sims Reeves is still unapproached—we may, indeed, say unapproachable—it was satisfactory to find his vocal powers in such excellent condition.

Jus Liverpool.

The * * * * * * * * * tells me that a Miss Williams is to sing at Liverpool. If this be Miss Anna Williams, as I suppose it must be, for no other Miss Williams is discernible just now above the horizon, I will tell you who the lady is. She is the daughter of Mr Williams, who for years was a manager in the house of Smith, Elder, and Co., the eminent publishers. Mr Williams was occasionally book taster to the firm, and it fell to his lot to taste "Jane Eyre," when the manuscript of that remarkable novel was received by the firm. "Taste this MS., Mr Williams, and see how you like it, and tell us whether you think the public will like it." Mr Williams did more than taste. Could not be satisfied with a taste, but feasted on the work, and, when he had finished, reported his satisfaction to the head of the firm so strongly that he, too, read the work with equal satisfaction, and straightway the book was published. In the course of publication, and after, many letters passed between Charlotte Bronte (the writer of the work) and Mr Williams, who, for some time after the publication, did not know whether Currer Bell (Charlotte Bronte's nome de plume) was a man or a woman. An exigency compelled Charlotte and her sister to go to London to see the publishers, and then the secret was revealed. Mr Williams was the chaperon to these ladies while they were in town. Mr Williams, now a venerable and much venerated old man, has just left the service of the great publishers on terms honourable to the firm and satisfactory to his family. Miss Williams has had a capital musical education both in England and Italy. I have not heard her sing, but my belongings have, and speak very highly of her powers. The Williams family are, I believe, all musical. A brother of hers is a particular friend of mine, and has, in the room you know so well, Mr Editor, by his singing—as I lolled in my easy chair oft times—taken my prisoned soul and lapped it in Elysium with his wonderful melody. If the Rhadamanthus of the * * * * * * * * * in whom I have the greatest confidence, should say "well done," when he shall have heard this lady, I shall be delighted; for I have confidence in your critic, but no confidence in some that I know—those who criticise singers and performers whom they don't hear, and those who fancy that it adds more to their fame to condemn than to praise, and who "Send ane to Heaven and ten to H—ll, a' for their glory." The former are very plentiful; the latter happily dying out. They belong more to the time of Queen Anne, when John Dennis, immortalized in the Dunciad, could make Addison tremble. Fuchs Reynard.

ALEXANDRA PALACE INAUGURATION CONCERT.

This was excellent in its kind. With the chorus, the regular band of stringed and wind instruments, the military bands of the Grenadier Guards (conductor, Mr Dan Godfrey), the Coldstreams (conductor, Mr Fred Godfrey), and the military band of the Alexandra Palace Company (conductor, Mr Robert Wheatley), the orchestra which forms so conspicuous a feature of the Grand Hall must have found room for something like 1,500 performers, vocal and instrumental. To judge fairly of the effect under such exceptional circumstances as those of Saturday's exhibition was hardly possible. The silence which has been pronounced the fittest homage to music was by no means observed, while the incessant movement to and fro of those who were not accommodated with, or could not find their seats, was another serious impediment to just appreciation. Nevertheless, we are inclined to think favourably of the ultimate results. At the farthest end of the hall the voice of Mdlle Tietjens sounded forth with all its glorious sonority. But such, as many will have not forgotten, was the case at the opening of the Crystal Palace at Sydenham (1854), when Clara Novello declaimed the solos in "God save the Queen"—a proof that a genuine and exceptional soprano voice tells at no matter how great a distance. The programme for the occasion under notice was most judiciously selected by Sir Michael Costa, who conducted the whole performance. True, all the pieces of which it consisted were by foreign composers, and all the singers were foreigners—which, for the inauguration of a new English art edifice, might be considered as somewhat anomalous; but we are used to these things. The concert began with the National Anthem (Sir M. Costa's arrangement) which came out imposingly. The overture to Meyerbeer's Etoile du Nord, for full orchestra and Coldstream band; the overture to Rossini's Gazza Ladra; the marches from Sir Michael Costa's Eli, and Meyerbeer's Prophète, were among the instrumental pieces—all superbly executed. Between the first and second parts of the concert the Coldstream band (Mr Fred Godfrey) played Sir Michael Costa's spirited March composed for, and dedicated to, King Victor Emanuel II. The vocal pieces comprised "Qui sdegno," from Il Flauto Magico (Herr Behrens); the "Inflammatus" from Rossini's Stabat Mater (for Mdlle Tietjens, with chorus); an air from Donizetti's Don Sebastian (Signor Campanini); Costa's quartet, "Ecco quel fiero istante" (Tietjens, Trebelli, Campanini, and Behrens); an air from Weber's Oberon (Madame Trebelli); and the finale to Mendelssohn's Loreley, for soprano solo (Mdlle Tietjens), with chorus. It was in this, as in Rossini's "Inflammatus," that the voice of Mdlle Tietjens produced the effect to which we have passingly referred; and, what seemed most surprising, whether she sang piano, or whether she sang forte, it was just the same; she was distinctly heard above all the hubbub and commotion. The last piece set down in the programme was the the grand unison prayer from Rossini's Mosé in Egitto, one of those unique inspirations that sound well anywhere, and under any circumstances. The eminent artists who took part in the performance were, one after another, cordially greeted on their appearance in the orchestra, especial marks of distinction being conferred upon Mdlle Tietjens, and also upon Sir Michael Costa, who had presided with dignity over almost every important "inauguration" of the kind during the last 20 years and more. Of the new grand organ (as yet unfinished) upon which Mr F. Archer is the chosen (and worthily-chosen) performer, we must take another occasion of speaking.

Digitized by Google

ST JAMES'S HALL,

REGENT STREET AND PICCAILLY.

MR CHARLES HALLÉ'S

Pianoforte Recitals.

MR CHARLES HALLÉ has the honour to announce that his Fifteenth Series of PIANOFORTE RECITALS will take place on the the following afternoons:—

FRIDAY, May 14, 1875.
FRIDAY, May 21, 1875.
FRIDAY, May 28, 1875.
FRIDAY, June 4, 1875.

FRIDAY, June 11, 1875.
FRIDAY, June 18, 1875.
FRIDAY, June 25, 1875.

SECOND RECITAL,

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, MAY 14, 1875.

To Commence at Three o'clock precisely.

Programme.

GRAND TRIO in E minor, Op. 119, for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello—Mr CHARLES HALLE, Madame NORMAN-NERUDA, and Herr FRANZ NERUDA .. .. Spohr.

HUMORESKE in B flat, Op. 20, for pianoforte alone—Mr CHARLES HALLE .. .. Schumann.

CAVATINA in D } for violin, with pianoforte accompaniment } Raff.
TAMBOURIN in D } Madame NORMAN-NERUDA } Leclair.

PRÆAMBULUM, ARIA, PASSEPIED, and GIGUE, in G, for pianoforte alone—Mr CHARLES HALLE .. .. Bach.

VARIATIONS in G major, Op. 121A, on an Air, "Ich bin der Schneider, Kakadu," for pianoforte violin, and violoncello—Mr CHARLES HALLE, Madame NORMAN-NERUDA, and Herr FRANZ NERUDA .. .. Beethoven.

PRICES OF ADMISSION.

	For the Series. £ s. d.	Single Tickets. £ s. d.
Sofa Stalls (numbered and reserved)	2 2 0	0 7 0
Balcony	1 1 0	0 3 0
Area		0 1 0

Subscriptions received at Chappell & Co.'s, 50, New Bond Street; Mitchell's, 33, Old Bond Street; Ollivier's, 38, Old Bond Street; Keith, Prowse & Co.'s, 48, Cheapside; Hays's, 4, Royal Exchange Buildings; Austin's Ticket Office, 28, Piccadilly; and by Mr CHARLES HALLE, 11, Mansfield Street, Cavendish Square.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

LAVENDER PITT.—It was Heine—not Janin—who, in speaking of the Sirène, said of its joint authors, Scribe and Auber—"Ils relient ensemble les plus mignonnes bagatelles, et l'on oublie chez eux qu'il y a une poesie. Ils sont une espèce de lorettes dans l'art," &c.

A DEMISEMIWAGNERITE.—No; in Tristan und Isolde, of all Wagner's operas the most solidly Wagnerian, the motto of the great iconoclast is "absolutamente todo," or "absolutamente nada"—the Wagner, the whole Wagner, and nothing but the Wagner. A door must be open or closed. If summer, let its heat be of the hottest; if winter, let cold be of the coldest. Wagner knows not spring, and repudiates autumn.

LUPUS.—The additions to the company, to which our correspondent refers, would doubtless entail great expense; but this would be more than defrayed by a largely increased audience. No offence is intended, we are aware, by "Lupus," who evidently holds forth exclusively in the cause of music. It is a pity that otherwise perfect performances should suffer, because connoisseurs are afraid to speak out plainly. After this, to print the interminable (however eloquent) epistle of "Lupus" would be useless. Let him write again shortly (and shorter).

DR GRIPER.—No. Abbé Vogler was a charlatan (see Mozart's letters from Mannheim, a town with straight streets). He spoiled Weber and Meyerbeer. He did not spoil Gänsbacher, because there was nothing to spoil. Dr Griper is altogether wrong about the Gluck (not Glück) and Piccini (or Piccinni) controversy. It was Piccini (or Piccinni) who composed Roland; Gluck (not Glück) never put his hand upon it. Piccini (or Piccinni) was a much bigger man than Dr Griper supposes—certainly a bigger musician, if not a bigger poet, than his renowned adversary, from whom Wagner derives all his ideas of the form which, in his (Wagner's) opinion, opera should assume.

G. W. F. SKIPPINGTON.—The article to which our correspondent refers did not appear in the Daily News, but in the Daily Telegraph. As, by chance, we have it in the Musical World folio of etcetéras, we reproduce it for the enlightenment of Mr C. W. F. Skippington.

"Madame Arabella Goddard has commenced a series of pianoforte recitals of the very highest interest. The speciality of these performances consists in the comparative novelty of all the instrumental pieces. It seems to have been Madame Goddard's object to prove how much music of the very highest class, by some of the most admirable writers for the pianoforte, has been allowed to fall into disuse. Much research must have been brought to bear upon the programme framed for Thursday's recital, the first of the series. Each selection gave token of a full memory, and of a highly-cultivated taste. The most important, and on the whole the most interesting, piece chosen was Woelfl's grand sonata in C minor. It is an ambitions composition, of original design and elaborate construction. An introduction leads to a vigorously-conducted fugue of large proportions. This is followed by a highly sprited allegro, and an adagio of remarkable grandeur, while the concluding allegretto is full of life and strength. Those who do not know this sonata can have no idea of the real power possessed by the man whose reputation has chiefly rested on the far inferior Ne Plus Ultra. Scarcely less interesting was the sonata in A major by Woelfl's rival, Dussek. It is in two movements only, the second, a rondo, being full of exquisite grace. A fugue in B flat, by Albrechtsberger, and a much more interesting one in F from Handel's Suite de Pièces, were played immediately before Mendelssohn's superb prelude and fugue in B flat, to the happy composition of which imagination and science have worked with an equal will. Madame Goddard also introduced studies by Hiller, Hummel, Moscheles, and Sterndale Bennett; the last-named—a charming piece in B flat—being the most engaging. Steibelt's Pastorale in G, a Nocturne by John Field ("Russian Field"—a favourite pupil of Clementi's), and Valses by Chopin, made up the remainder of a rich programme. It is utterly needless to say that the playing of each piece fully came up to the ideal standard of the most critical and exacting listener; but we cannot refrain from drawing attention to the extraordinary versatility displayed in the adequate performance of such a programme as that we have detailed. Every school is familiar to Mdme Goddard, and each author she interprets as though she had devoted all her attention to the exclusive study of his style. The pianoforte pieces were intermixed with songs sung by Miss Annie Edwards, and accompanied by Mr Benedict."

Mr Skippington is right about the six pianoforte sonatas by Cherubini (of which Ernst Pauer played one at a Monday Popular Concert), but wrong about Puppo, Boccherini, Haydn, and the rest. He must have read the anecdote upside down.

MARRIAGE.

On May 3, at St Thomas's, Camden Town, Mr THOMAS DARBY to Miss HELEN A. MUIR.

NOTICE.

To ADVERTISERS.—The Office of the MUSICAL WORLD is at Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & Co.'s, 244, Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street (First Floor). It is requested that Advertisements may be sent not later than Thursday. Payment on delivery.

The Musical World,

LONDON, SATURDAY, MAY 8, 1875.

Bayreuth.

THE peroration to Herr Carl Kossmaly's article, "Bayreuth," is too good for any other place in the Musical World than that devoted to its leading columns. Here is the translation, literatim et verbatim, of our invaluable foreign editor, "J. V. B.":—

"Just as the composer previously caused vapour-pictures of tone to sweep past before the mental eye of his auditor, the orchestra now paints, in a grandiose crescendo, immediately before the commencement of the duet, the rising of the sun, that is: again offers descriptive eye-music.—From these specimens, the reader will, probably, have obtained a tolerably clear idea of the severity of the Wagner-fever from which the critic is suffering. To complete this anthological collection, however, we must mention the last 'combined glowing of the two voices,' and, likewise, state that the most moving and electrifying effect was produced by the third Fragment, the grand 'final scene' of the Götterdämmerung, and, consequently, of the entire festival-play, the crowning glory of which scene begins with the concluding words, of Brunhilde: 'Grane, mein Ross—sei mir gegrüsst,' the description of this, by the way, being, perhaps, the crowning glory of the critic himself, who here surpasses even his former ecstatic raptures. Let the reader listen: 'Once more is all her wild Walkyre nature awakened in Brunhilde, who, torn by grief, has just delivered the corpse of her beloved husband, Siegfried, to the flames of the pyre. She shouts shrilly in blissful despair'; (Sic) 'absolutely neighing out with her steed!' (So, we have, at last, a real duet—though only neighed.) When referring to the boldness, characteristic of genius, with which he finds this expressed in the music, the critic says: that it will, perhaps, offend an ear accustomed to Mozart, every impartial and competent judge will agree with him, for in these few words he has happily characterised and justly valued the Raphael of Music and Priest of the Beautiful. His warning to us, not to give ourselves up too innocently and unsuspiciously to the influence of this scene, is, perhaps, all the more seasonable, because (according to him) the scene 'almost knocks the hearer down!' Mention is, also, made of an eminently musical climax, beginning at the words and 'belonging to the most magnificent and, at the same time, most passionate inspirations that ever struck a dramatic composer.'—As we see, the critic is partial to summary conclusions, and likes to cut through things as if he were merely cutting, with a pair of scissors, through a sheet of paper. The termination of his notice takes us by surprise. In the long final orchestral postlude—which is, moreover, repeated—he finds revealed all Wagner's boundless mastery over the instruments, from which the master extorts unheard of effects of sound; but he finds also that the limits of the Æsthetically-Justifiable are overstepped. The reasons for this censure are given at length. The plan pursued by the composer: Here, as in Siegfred's Tod, of introducing nothing but previous motives, and, moreover, to a much greater extent than in that piece (there are here, at least, seven or eight such motives), and introducing them not in succession, but simultaneously—is critically considered, and what in the pages of the score may appear indescribably artistic, is censured as producing a deafening effect. The reader may form some notion of this effect, when the critic goes on to inform us that: 'One motive pushes, hustles, and struggles with another; it is an absolute battle of tone with which the master here dismisses us.' Compared with the 'trombones of the Walhalla motive from Rheingold, at last overpowering everything else,' the trumpets which once caused the walls of Jericho to fall down must, indeed, have been only harmless oaten pipes. Despite, however, this preponderance given to the brass, the accumulation of motives, mentioned above, prevents the theme from coming out with complete plastic clearness. On the contrary it strikes the critic that: 'it ought here to disappear in a sea of colour and fire' (?) It is more than probable that this formed part of the composer's intention, for Wagner wished to illustrate the fall of the glory of the old gods and the dawn of a new world; at least, the critic finds this view which he takes of the case—a view with which I, too, thoroughly agree—corroborated by the 'greatest noise anyone ever ventured to make in an orchestra,' and intended to suggest the destruction of everything in existence.

Digitized by Google

'Fühl' meine Brust auch—
Wie sie entbrennt.—'

"We must here note not only the frankness with which this fearful hubbub, surpassing anything ever known before, is confessed, but, also the fact that, at a second performance of this final music, the critic hopes to experience a 'more conciliatory impression,' an avowal that tells us plainly enough how acutely the want of such an impression is felt. But, when even Wagner-Exaltados, worked up to a pitch of mad fanaticism, find that 'the limits of the Æsthetically-Beautiful are overstepped' by 'the master,' and frankly object to such a course; when, with scarcely concealed reproach, they speak of 'the greatest noise anyone ever ventured to make in an orchestra,' and unreservedly inform us that it causes them to long for a more conciliatory impression, what shall those persons say and do, who, for good reasons of their own—with all their willingness to acknowledge the high natural gifts with which he is endowed and duly to appreciate his earlier works in which those gifts were unmistakably revealed—by no means regard Richard Wagner either as the sole god of music, alone capable of rendering us blessed, or as the dramatico-musical Messiah. Are these persons, we may, moreover enquire, so very much to blame if, in such important objections raised by the most inveterate Wagnerites, they perceive a corroboration, by no means without weight, of their own obstinate doubts, and that they frankly publish the fact? "CARL KOSSMALY."

As Lohengrin is to be brought out this evening at the Royal Italian Opera, we refrain just now from any comment on the foregoing. Sufficient for the day is the Wagnerism thereof. OTTO BERG.

PREVIOUS to the fifteenth century, the weight of church bells was not very great. From that period, however, it has gone on increasing to a marvellous extent. Charlemagne had many bells cast, but there is reason to believe that none of them weighed more than 400 pounds. The monk, Helgaud, in The Life of King Robert, which he wrote in 1050, states that the above monarch presented five bells to the church of St Aignau, at Orleans, and that one of them —the largest, no doubt—weighed 2,600 pounds. In 1250, Jean d'Hardivilliers, in concert with the fathers of the College of St Juste-Chaussée, had a bell cast which weighed 4,000 pounds. The bell called "Emanuel," and presented, in the year 1,400, to the metropolitan church of Paris by Gérard de Montaigu, ninety-fifth bishop of that city, weighed 15,000 pounds. The Chapter gave orders for it to be recast and enlarged in 1680. As the casting proved a failure, the operation was repeated the following year. This bell was consecrated on the 29th April, 1682, by François Harlay de Champvallon, native of Franche Comté, and fifth archbishop of Paris. Louis XIV. and his wife, Louise Thérèse, at the request of the Chapter, bestowed on the bell the names of "Emanuel Louise Thérèse." But, not being in tune with the others, it was again recast and augmented in 1685. Its weight is 32,000 pounds. It is 8 feet in diameter, the same in height, and 8 inches thick round the edge. It is melodious and solemn in tone, and its reverberations emit the perfect chord. In the year 1794, fears were entertained of its being used to sound the alarm, and it was unhung, but restored to its place on the occasion of the ceremony of the Concordat, celebrated at Easter, 1802. The second large bell of Notre Dame of Paris was cast on the 1st October, 1472, and weighed 25,000 pounds. In 1792, eight men worked for two-and-forty days, endeavouring to break it with a machine.

The large bell at Rheims, cast in 1570, and christened "Charlotte," by Cardinal Charles de Loraine, Archbishop of Rheims, weighs 23,000 pounds. The bell of the Kremlin, at Moscow, was cast in 1733, by Michael Muterine. It is 21 feet in height, and 23 in diameter, and weighs 492,000 pounds.

IN his report of the musical part of the ceremony at the inauguration of the Alexandra Palace, the admirable musical critic of the Daily Telegraph has the following:—

"But, while acknowledging this cheerfully (meaning the general excellence of the programme), no English amateur could regard certain features of the concert without a degree of shame and pain. One would have thought that on such an occasion native art would at least have been represented. But, in point of fact, it was conspicuously, not to say offensively, absent. The conductor was a Neapolitan, the soloists comprised two natives of Germany, one of France, and one of Italy, and the programme contained not a single piece of English music. In pointing this out we are not censuring the managers, who took the course which, in their judgment, seemed best adapted to please the public; but it may fairly be said that nothing like it could happen in any other country, simply because no other people would tolerate such a decided snub of their national art."

On the same theme the Times, after also bearing testimony to the general attractions of the musical programme, says:—

"True, all the pieces of which it consisted were by foreign composers, while all the principal singers were foreigners—which, for the inauguration of a new and important English art-edifice, might, to some, appear more or less anomalous. But we are used to these things."

And so, alas! might we go on preaching to the middle of the 20th century. But have we not deserved it? Is there any common sympathy among British musicians? To the first question, we answer emphatically, Yes; to the second, as emphatically, No. Lacking the bond of union—the "esprit de corps" which binds men who pursue the same craft, we have absolutely no raison d'être. "True, 'tis a pity; pity 'tis 'tis true."

Digitized by Google

MDME ARABELLA GODDARD is still in California, giving concerts at Los Angeles, San José, and Santa Barbara. She will pass the summer months at San Francisco, and thence, at the fall, proceed to New York.

OCCASIONAL NOTES.

MR SIMS REEVES, our great tenor, has been singing at Dublin, and thus speaks the Dublin Review:—

"'What pleases many must have merit,' says Dr Johnson, with whose maxims we by no means agree at all times. The condition of the large Concert Hall of the Exhibition Palace last evening, however, furnished a striking exemplification of the truth of the lexicographical dictum, crowded as it was in all parts. The floor, the gallery, the reserved seats, nay, even the benches of the orchestral platform, displayed tier upon tier of expectant auditors. The chief attraction was Mr Sims Reeves, who, in excellent health and spirits, was heartily welcomed by the public. The audience, too, was good-humoured, not noisy. Mr Reeves was in good vein, his phrasing as fine as ever, that admirable metallo di voce, which seems to make its way without the artist employing more than a slight degree of force, as good as before; his pronunciation clear and pure, and his one momentary assumption of the brogue irresistibly comic. He was compliant, too, just as when he last appeared here, some five or six years ago, at the Nilsson Festival, and was evidently gratified at the sight of the forest of pleased faces smiling upon him from all sides of the hall. "The Message," "My pretty Jane," and "It is a charming girl"—three songs all in quite distinct styles—proved unmistakably the versatility of the great tenor's powers. Much amusement was created in the course of the evening by an announcement made by the concert agent that in consequence of the warm reception and crowded attendance which had greeted the party, 'Mr Reeves, Signor Foli, and the other ladies would re-appear on the 8th of May.' The audience was one of the largest which the Palace has hitherto beheld."

IN a pamphlet—happily for the collection of rarities not obsolete—we have lately discovered some elevated writing. The highest falutin (to out-Americanize an Americanism) falls vastly short of the prodigious attitude reached by this soaring genius. The poet, whose shining light is for the present hid under the bushel—otherwise the appellation of "an able writer"—has something to say about a few particular trees, and thus he says it: "Very few such oaks are to be found within this island * * * not marked by the hollow boles and distant limbs of extreme old age, but in the very prime of vegetable manhood." A chestnut tree gives rise to this inspiration: "Its twining and bowing branches droop to the ground and rise again; resting, not rooting, to emulate the vegetable peristyle of the banyan (!)." By and bye we learn, àpropos of a collection of natural curiosities, that: "It is rich in its corals," &c. "It also rejoices in many skeletons." Surely the spirit of Bob Sawyer must inhabit the frame of the writer. His efforts to be plain are comically mysterious, and the description of "an open colonnade, where coffee-tables are placed for the leisure enjoyment of a summer evening," is quite too delightfully vague. We would not reveal the sacred name of the gifted author of the brochure for millions, but the name of the print we may give, if only for the satisfaction of a few old bookwooms we wot of. It is called "The Official Guide to the Alexandra Palace and Park," and may be purchased at the extremely modest outlay of one penny.

PHŒNICOPTERS.

MR EDITOR, I would suggest, privately and confidentially, that Phœnicopters be spelt—not Phe, since the Greek is (is it not?) φοινος.

COLOGNE.—Herr von Holstein was present at the last performance of his opera, Der Haidesschacht, which is popular with the patrons of the Stadttheater. After holding the reins of management for three years, Herr Behr retired on the 1st instant. He is said to have made an annual profit of 50,000 thalers. He will, probably, assume the management of the Leipsic Stadttheater, and be succeeded here by Herr Ernst, Stage-Manager-in-Chief at the Royal Operahouse, Berlin.

CONCERTS VARIOUS.

On Thursday, April 29, Mr Henry Parker gave a matinée at the Beethoven Rooms, Harley Street. Miss Annie Sinclair, Miss Purdy, and Miss G. Maudsley, assisted by Mr Stedman and Signor Caravoglia, contributed the vocal portions of the programme. Mr Parker was ably supported by M. Paque and Mr J. Thomas in the instrumental parts. The concert was conducted by Signor Romano.—F. A. JEWSON.

MR AGUILAR'S performance of pianoforte music on Monday last was listened to by as large a number of amateurs as the last. The programme is as follows:—Sonata pastorale—Beethoven; Andante—Thalberg; Prelude and Fugue—Aguilar; Overture, Scherzo—Aguilar; Nocturne in B and Etude in G flat—Chopin; Sonata in C minor—Aguilar; Lieder ohne Wörte—Mendelssohn; Fantasia on Faust—Aguilar; Farewell and Hunting Song—Schumann; Idyll and Bolero—Aguilar.

THE St Matthew's Choral Society, Brixton, lately gave a concert before a large and appreciative audience, at the Schools in Church Road, consisting of a performance of Spohr's "God, Thou art great," Mendelssohn's "Hear my prayer," and Rossini's Stabat Mater, under the direction of Mr Geo. Shinn. The vocalists were Miss Matilda Scott, Miss Bolingbroke (Parepa-Rosa scholar of the Royal Academy of Music), Mr Stedman, and Mr J. C. Kneale; Master Tomey (of the Temple Church) taking the solo in Mendelssohn's motett. Mr G. S. Minson and Mr S. Fisher were the accompanists.—(From a Correspondent.)

A concert d'invitation given by Mrs Dutton Cook (Miss Linda Scate), associate of the Royal Academy of Music, at the Beethoven Rooms, Harley Street, on the evening of Wednesday, May 5th, was very fully and fashionably attended. Mrs Dutton Cook played the Lite Sir Sterndale Bennett's sonata, The Maid of Orleans; Schumann's "Abschied," and the second "Tarantella" of Mr Walter Macfarren; Dussek's duet in B flat, for piano and violin, with Mr Wiener, and Mendelssohn's pianoforte duet, "Allegro Brillante," with Mr Walter Macfarren, who presided as conductor. Mrs Dutton Cook was assisted by the following vocalists:—Miss Reimar, Miss Gertrude Richardson, Miss Mary Davis (Welsh Choral Union scholar, R.A.M.), and Mr Howells.

MISS LILLIE ALBRECHT made her third and last appearance this season on Friday evening, the 30th ult., at the Athenæum, Camden Town, where she gained even more favour than on the preceding occasions. She played Talexy's brilliant arrangement of "Cujus Animam" with precision and clearness, but her grand success was Thalberg's "Masaniello," in which she brought out the well-known air, "Sautée sur ses propres arpèges," in a highly finished manner, and met with well deserved applause. She has evidently studied hard, and we hope to have many opportunities of hearing her again at these agreeable evenings. The remainder of the programme consisted of a cornet solo (MS.), by desire, composed by King Hall, played by Mr E. R. Barrett, and accompanied by the composer; "Oh! ye voices gone," by Signor Pinsuti, sung by Miss Baker; Bishop's "Bid me discourse" sung by Miss Baker; a Polonaise for two cornets, by King Hall, played by Messrs E. R. Barratt and W. Ivimey, and accompanied by the composer; and various "recitations" by Mr Ashe Payne and Mr Raw. Miss Kenny accompanied the vocal music on the pianoforte, and the evening was altogether most agreeably passed.

LONDON ACADEMY OF MUSIC.—The annual Easter Term concert, by the professional students of the London Academy of Music, was given on Tuesday afternoon, the 4th inst., in St George's Hall, and was attended by a very large audience. It is only fair to the numerous performers, both vocal and instrumental, to say that they acquitted themselves to their own credit, and to that of their respective masters. Dr Wylde conducted a small orchestra, headed by Herren Pollitzer and Ludwig. Amongst the pianists we must make special mention of Miss Codd, Miss Hutchinson, Miss Deacon, Miss Willett, and Mr George Gear. Miss Codd, in the Andante and Finale of Mendelssohn's G minor Concerto, Miss Willett, in the same composer's Rondo in B minor, and Miss Deacon, in Weber's Concerto in C, all displayed talent of a high order. Mr George Gear gained an enthusiastic recall after his performance of Chopin's Polonaise in E flat, in which he showed himself a first-rate executant, and to possess other qualities that fully justified the committee in awarding him the gold medal of the institution. Miss Hutchinson also earned a recall for her clever rendering of Mendelssohn's Concerto in D minor. The singing of Miss Myers, in the Morning Hymn, from Sir Michael Costa's Eli, was much admired; also that of Miss Kate Gordon, Miss Putney, Miss Athanase, and Mr Thomas. The violin playing of Miss Perkins, in Spohr's Concerto Dramatique, Master Jefford, in the first movement of Mendelssohn's Concerto, and Miss Janie Hutchinson, in some variations by De Beriot, were all appreciated as they deserved; and the concert was throughout an entire success.

Digitized by Google

The third concert of the Schubert Society (forty-seventh since its formation), took place on Wednesday, the 28th April. The first part was devoted to Brahms' and Spohr's compositions. Brahms' "Ungarische Tanze," for two performers on the pianoforte, opened the concert, and was played by Mdlle de Lucie and Miss Kate Lyons (Royal Academy of Music), Miss Lily Holcroft sang "Sonntag and Wiegenlied," and Mr Christie "Fruhling," by the same composer; Miss Malraison gave Spohr's "The Bird on the alder bough," Miss Bella Marie Root, "What draws me thus," and Herr Schuberth played a solo on the violoncello, by the same composer. The second part was miscellaneous, and opened with Haydn's Trio in C, played by Mdlle de Lucie (pianoforte), Mr Downs (violin), and Herr Schuberth (violoncello). The other members who appeared included Mr Wilford, who was much applauded for his performance on the pianoforte of Liszt's "Rhapsodie;" Mdme Lucci de Sievers, who, with Herr Schuberth, played one of her own arrangements—for harmonium and piano—on airs from Il Barbiere de Seviglia. The rooms were well filled. The fourth concert is announced to take place on the 2nd of June, when Sir Julius Benedict's vocal and instrumental compositions will form the first part of the programme.

Mr Ridley Prentice's "Pianoforte Recital" came off at St George's Hall, on Wednesday morning, when a large audience assembled, who were evidently gratified with Mr Prentice, as well as with the performance of the two artists who "assisted" him—Miss Georgina Maudsley, vocalist, and Herr Straus, violinist. We subjoin the programme, with which, we think, no one will find fault, either for its quality or its length. Mr Prentice's good judgment in both cases cannot be questioned. Prelude and Fugue, in B flat, Op. 35, No. 6, for pianoforte alone—Mendelssohn; Sonata, in A minor, Op. 19, for pianoforte and violin—Rubinstein; Aria, "Though clouds by tempest"—Weber; Studies, for pianoforte alone, Op. 11, Nos. 4, 5, and 6 (Vivace giocoso, Andante capriccioso, Allegro agitato)—Sterndale Bennett; Præludium and Fuga, in G minor, for violin, without accompaniment—J. S. Bach; Sacred Song, "The God of love my Shepherd is" (George Herbert's 23rd Psalm)—Ridley Prentice; Sonate Pathetique, in C minor, Op. 13, for pianoforte alone—Beethoven; Song, "Autumn song"—John Gledhill; Pianoforte Solos, Tempo di Ballo, and Siciliano—Scarlatti, and Impromptu—Hird; Rondeau Brillant, in B minor, Op. 70, for pianoforte and violin—Schubert. As most of the compositions enumerated above are well known to professors as well as to most amateurs, we need not comment upon them; we cannot, however, conclude these few remarks on Mr Prentice's agreeable entertainment without saying how pleased we were with his interpretation of the three Studies by the late Sterndale Bennett (especially the "Allegro agitato"); Miss Maudsley's singing of Mr Prentice's devotional setting of the psalm, "The God of Love my Shepherd is"; and Herr Straus's musicianly execution of Bach's prelude and fugue for violin alone.

Miss Ada Lester gave a very successful concert at the Vestry Hall, Chelsea, on the 30th ult. The hall was crowded, the bénéficiaire having obtained the assistance of Miss Gertrude Ashton, Miss Augusta Roche, Mr Wharton, Mr Lindsay Sloper, and Mr Wilford Morgan. Miss Ashton distinguished herself by her charming singing of Blumenthal's song, "Love the Pilgrim," and of the "Blue Bells of Scotland," the latter of which was loudly encored. Miss Roche gave a nice reading of the page's song in Les Huguenots, "Nobil Signor," as well as of the well worn "Skipper and his Boy." Mr Wilford Morgan introduced a new song, composed by himself expressly for the occasion, and set to some charming words by Miss Lester, entitled "I would be a boy again." The melody is very taking, and the song was vociferously encored and repeated, with, if possible, greater success. Mr Wilford Morgan's popular song, "My sweetheart when a boy," has now a formidable rival in the field. Miss Ada Lester, whose performances though named last were not least, either in our estimation or in that of her audience, was received in a most enthusiastic manner. Her contributions to the pleasures of the evening were Ascher's "Le Chant les Naiades," M. de Kontski's "Le Reveil du Lion" and "Caprice Heroique." She also joined Mdme Vittoria de Bono in Osborne and De Beriot's duet for pianoforte and violin on airs from Guillaume Tell, which was most charmingly played by both artists, and unanimously encored. Mr Lindsay Sloper conducted with rare judgment, as well as played the Barcarolle from the late Sterndale Bennett's Fourth Concerto, and his own arrangement for four hands (with Miss Ada Lester) of some admired airs by Sir Julius Benedict.

The Welsh Choral Union gave the first concert of their fifth season at St James's Hall, on Monday evening, under the direction of Mr John Thomas. The hall was well attended by the general public, as well as by natives of the Principality. The concert opened with the late Sir Sterndale Bennett's charming pastoral, The May Queen. The solo parts were sung by Miss Edith Wynne (the May Queen), Miss Jane Williams (the Queen), Mr Henry Guy (the Lover), and Mr Lewis Thomas (Robin Hood). We need hardly say that the solos were given to perfection. Miss Edith Wynne sang con amore; Miss Jane Williams gave the music allotted to the Queen capitally; and Mr Guy, who is making rapid strides in his profession, gave due effect to the music of the Lover. Mr Lewis Thomas sang like a thorough artist, and obtained an encore in the famous ballad, "'Tis jolly to hunt." The solos were accompanied on the pianoforte by Mr W. H. Thomas, who assisted in a great degree to their success by his musicianly knowledge. The choruses were capitally sung by the students of the Royal Academy of Music. In the second part, a band of harps accompanied a Welsh chorus, "Cwynfan Prydain" ("Britain's Lament"), from Mr John Thomas's excellent collection, which was heartily enjoyed and deservedly applauded by the audience, who were also highly delighted with the Welsh songs given by Miss E. Wynne, Miss Mary Davies (Welsh Choral Union scholar) of the Royal Academy of Music, and Miss Marian Williams, accompanied on the harp by Mr John Thomas, in his usual artistic manner. Miss Reimar sang Randegger's pretty song, "Sleep, dearest, sleep," and was loudly applauded. Mr Henry Guy gave, in excellent style, Beethoven's "Adelaida," accompanied on the pianoforte by Mr W. H. Thomas. Messrs Puddicombe, W. W. Bampfylde, and Mr Thomas Sylver were the accompanists of the vocal music. The concert was a decided success.

PROVINCIAL.

Pembroke Dock.—An "Evening of Sacred Song" was lately held in the Wesleyan Chapel School Room. The chair was taken by the resident minister, the Rev. E. N. Maidmont. The musical part of the programme was under the leadership of Mr Thomas Blake. The accompaniment was played by Miss Davies (Mega Cleddau), who is often called upon to preside at musical gatherings. The soloists were the Misses Cole, Wilkins, C. Eynon, Mr E. Cooper, and Messrs J. G. Smith, Edwin Williams, Hanson, &c.

Narbeth.—A concert lately took place at the National School Room, under the auspices of the Rev. W. Wilson, the rector. Those who took part were the church choir, Mr Henry Shield (Gilfach), and the Misses Lewis, of St James's Street. The accompaniments were played by Mrs Wilson. The temperance brass band was in attendance, the programme was varied, and the several pieces were rendered satisfactorily There was a large and appreciative audience, and the whole of the entertainment gave unqualified satisfaction. The proceeds of the concert will be devoted to the funds of the National School.

Liverpool.—English opera—writes the Daily Post—appears to have turned the corner, and Mr Carl Rosa will be memorable for a long while to come as the wizard who has accomplished for it that proverbially difficult and long-deemed hopeless operation. At the performance of the Bohemian Girl, the Alexandra Theatre was crowded, as on the previous evening, in every place where even standing room could be purchased; and a most enthusiastic audience gave the stamp of popular approval to a performance which, judged by a high standard, left very little to be desired. To this result Mr Rosa's conducting, and his admirable band, in which the violins were especially perfect, greatly conduced, and suggested very forcibly that it is by other magic than care and taste and viligance that Mr Rosa has accomplished his great success.

Liverpool.—We read in the Daily Post of 6th May, that the "Societa Armonica" gave a complimentary concert to their conductor and leader, Messrs Armstrong and Lawson, in the concert-room of the Institute, where a large and appreciative audience assembled. The vocalists were Madame Billinie Porter, Miss F. Armstrong, Mr H. C. Harrison, and Mr T. J. Hughes. The instrumental portion of the programme comprised the overture to Zampa, and the ballet music entitled Rosamunde, by Schubert. The delicate grace and flowing melody, characteristic of this composer, are specially remarkable in the above named composition, which was rendered in an extremely creditable manner by the orchestra. A showy and effective military fantasia by Leclair enabled Mr Lawson to display to advantage his command over the violin. The vocal gem of the evening was Arditi's sparkling and tuneful valse, admirably sung by Madame Billinie Porter, whose voice is as sweet as ever. A quartet by Costa was well sung, and special mention should be made of the thoroughly accurate and artistic rendering of the duet, "Quis est Homo" by Madame Billinie Porter and Miss Armstrong. Mr Hughes sang "Revenge" with great vigour, and narrowly escaped an encore. Mr Harrison's efforts were well received. The concert was, on the whole, highly enjoyable.

Birmingham.—The Morning News of May 4th informs us that Mr Carl Rosa's grand English Opera Company have commenced a series of six performances at the Theatre Royal with extraordinary success. The performances have been excellent, calling forth enthusiastic applause, and the houses well filled. The opera on the opening night was Maritana. The cast was an excellent one. Miss Rose Hersee is a favourite here, and on each succeeding appearance she gains in esteem. Gifted with a beautiful voice, her artistic training has secured for her the highest qualifications both as a vocalist and as an actress. Perfect intonation, exquisite tenderness in pathetic passages, and astonishing accuracy and clearness in the execution of ornament, are noteworthy characteristics of her style. Miss Hersee is mistress of a shake of rare regularity, and she occasionally introduces this embellishment in her cadences with enchanting effect. The part of the Spanish Gitana is one well adapted to Miss Hersee's powers; and in every scene she acted and sang admirably. Miss Annie Goodall, who played Lazarillo, sings with expression and feeling, and, as an actress, displays grace and vivacity. Mr Henry Nordblom was Don Cæsar de Bazan. Mr Aynsley Cook, Mrs Aynsley Cook, and Mr Brooklyn were the other artists. In the band and chorus departments, Mr Rosa's performances are as perfect as anything of the kind ever presented in Birmingham. His orchestra, numbering many London artists of high reputation, is full, powerful, and complete in all important parts. The chorus singing last night was distinguished by accuracy and precision, and by rarely attained justness of intonation Mr Rosa himself conducted in a masterly manner.

Digitized by Google

SAN FRANCISCO.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The many days of Lent caused my silence respecting my musical reports, &c., from San Francisco and the state of California. I do so now, as I have written to you already on the 24th of February last, in which I have given you a descriptive review respecting Madame Arabella Goddard's concerts in San Francisco. Since then she remained here until last week, and left to give three concerts at the city of Los Angeles, one in San José, and one in Santa Barbara—the first to take place last night, Tuesday, the 6th inst. Its result as yet I ignore, although she promised to write to me, when on her return to this city. She intends to remain during the summer months, and intends to obtain some pupils until September, and then leave for New York and different parts of the United States.

Mdlle Ilma di Murska and her concert combination are expected here next month, to give several concerts and operas here. Signor De Vivo is the impresario. The Howard Paul and Legarde Troupe are shortly expected. Madame Ristori and company, and C. H. Vandenhoff, with Howley's Company, are also coming.

April 8th. VAN PRAAG.

A FAIR PROTEST.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

SIR,—The article which appeared in your last week's issue, headed "Singers, Beware," contained a well-merited rebuke against the parties who engaged the artists named; but I think it only fair, in justice to those resident in Leeds who do pay the artists they engage their terms at the proper time, you should have given the names of the promoters of this concert.—I am, Sir, you obedient servant,

ARCHIBALD RAMSDEN.

12, Park Row, and 26, Basinghall Street, Leeds,
May 4, 1875.

Aus Colmey Patch.

As M. Schoelcher says in his Life (which we wish he had published in French).

B. the granite rock, or Parian marble, out of which, &c.

Messiah—narrative and didactic.

Passions (Matthew)—dramatic.

Dramatic form generally most easily appreciable, and yet evidently as the comparative non-popularity of Beethoven's Christus (Am Oelberg), and B.'s unwillingness to make it, &c., show not. Popularly suited to the subject of the Redemption. Would Mendelssohn, had he finished his Christus, have made it otherwise? We think not.

Had H. lived in and laboured for Germany, instead of England, would it have been the same? The question is one of great interest.

Something to do with Bach's style of composition, as compared with Handel's. H., though above us, is always able to lift us up with him. B., always above us, but not often, even in his most elevated moments, able to let us see where he is. Strong sympathy with Handel of the masses, whom music touches. His melody—his picturesque treatment of objective passages.

He has even penetrated to Wales, where the Saxon music is snubbed for the more richly suggestive (and more intoxicating) Pennillion. Ask Talhaiarn, who built, for 1850, at Rhuddlyn (Rhyl), the structure which tumbled down. Luckily the Welsh are not superstitious, but only patriotic and ancestral. Mefisto.

MUSIC AT BERLIN.

(From our Correspondent.)

The success achieved by M. Anton Rubinstein's Maccabäer on the night of its production has been corroborated by the reception accorded it at subsquent performances. On the second, and third night, the Royal Operahouse was crowded in every part, the principal artists, Mesdes Brandt, Lehmann, Grossi, Herren Betz, and Ernst, being called for after every scene.—Herr Niemann has left "on leave," for, without "leave," an artist of a Prussian Theatre Royal no more dare absent himself from his professional duties, than a sentinel on guard, in the service of his Majesty, William Emperor of Germany, dare deposit his needle-gun in the sentry-box, and leave his post before he is duly relieved. Les Huguenots had been chosen as the opera in which Herr Niemann was to bid a temporary farewell to his admirers here. He requested permission to substitute Rienzi or Tannhäuser as Herr Wagner was in the Prussian capital, and Herr Niemann wished the Composer of the Future to hear him in one or other of the works named. The Intendant-General, Herr von Hülsen, turned, however, a deaf ear to the singer's prayer. It is true that Les Huguenots was not performed, but only to spare Mdlle Brandt, who sustains one of the principal parts, and was fatigued by her exertions in Die Maccabäer. Neither Tannhäuser nor Rienzi figured in the bills, and Herr Niemann was condemned to take his leave in—Fidelio! By the admirers of real music, this little incident is regarded with satisfaction, as indicating, to a certain extent, the feeling of the Intendant-General. The above undoubted fact does not tally very well with a report to the effect that, in virtue of an oral arrangement between Herr von Hülsen and Herr Richard Wagner, during the recent visit of the latter to this capital, Tristan und Isolde is to be produced next winter, under the composer's own direction, with Mad. Mallinger, Herren Betz and Niemann in the principal characters. What appears much more certain is that Herr Wagner's "Kaisermarsch" was hissed at Herr Bilse's concert. Herr Bilse will shortly start with his orchestra for St Petersburgh. He intends giving five concerts at as many different towns on his road.—Herr von Strantz, stage-manager at the Stadttheater, Leipsic, has been appointed artistic director of the Royal Operahouse.

The concert season just ended has been characterized by a growing appreciation of Handel. Israel was performed by the Singacademie; the Messiah, by Stern's Verein; Herakles and Saul, by the students of the High School; Acis and Galatea, by the Bach Association; Semele, by the Cecilia Association; and Samson, by Schnöpf's Association.

STERNDALE BENNETT.

Would I could touch with fairy fingers
The keys which erst we heard thee play!
In vain, in vain the mem'ry lingers,
Each magic chord hath passed away.

The tones which oft rapt ear enchanted
Thy hand, alas! can wake no more,
And yet thy music lives to glad us,
'Twould seem, more deeply than of yore.

But though I lack the power to waken
The nameless charm thou mad'st us feel,
I know, while each rich strain essaying,
A thrill through every breast must steal.

Then let my soul—my play inspiring—
Breathe something of thy gloried art,
Enough, if happily I borrow
One touch of thine to fill the heart.

ADA LESTER.

CORRECTION.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

SIR,—I beg to call your attention to a mistake made in the Musical World of Saturday, April 24, in regard to a concert given by Mr Pollard, of Ramsgate, at the Granville Hall of that town, and not Brentwood, Essex, as stated in the Musical World. If you would kindly make a correction of this in your next issue, I shall feel grateful. H. M.

Brentwood, May 3, 1875.

Digitized by Google

INTERNATIONAL COPYRIGHT.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

Sir,—May I request the insertion of the following letter from the authors of France, which explains the result of my mission as representative of the Association to Protect the Rights of Authors? The reservation made by M. Paul Féval refers to that short bill repealing the adaptation clauses which has just passed the House of Commons. He and his friends feared lest, in pressing for the full measure of equity which they and we desire, they might lose even the poor instalment which their Foreign Office had obtained from our Government. But that they earnestly desire the full measure, and are determined to press resolutely for it, I can testify, and am permitted to bear witness. The subject was discussed with enthusiasm at the recent annual gathering of the society, and the resolution in favour of our propositions was carried unanimously by the commission the society appointed to examine and report upon them. I may add that the subject is still before the French Dramatic Authors' Society, and that it has been most favourably discussed by them. Their report, however, has been delayed by the illness of their president, M. Auguste Maquet. I have the honour to remain, Sir, your obedient servant, BLANCHARD JERROLD.

Reform Club, May 1, 1875.

A Monsieur Blanchard Jerrold, Délégué de l'Association to Protect the Right's of Authors de Londres à la Société des Gens de Lettres de Paris.

Monsieur,—La Société des Gens de Lettres de Paris a vu avec un vif intérêt que l'Association pour la Protection du Droit des Auteurs s'est occupée des droits des écrivains français en Angleterre.

La France, par un décret sur la propriété littéraire en date de l'année 1852, abolit le droit d'aubaine en matière de propriété littéraire. Ce décret reconnait aux auteurs étrangers les mêmes droits que la loi accorde aux auteurs français. Votre lettre du 22 courant à notre délégué nous fait connaître les propositions de l'honourable association que vous représentez, et qui consistent:

1. Assimiler les droits des auteurs français à ceux des auteurs anglais; c'est à dire, à donner un copyright de 42 ans, ou durant la vie de l'auteur et 7 ans après sa mort; ce qui est le copyright dont jouit l'auteur anglais.

2. A supprimer la nécessité d'enregistrement, ou de traduction dans un certain delai.

3. A donner à l'auteur français seul le droit de traduire ou d'adapter son œuvre en Angleterre.

Le Comité de la Société des Gens de Lettres voux exprime sa reconnaissance pour votre juste et généreuse initiative dans l'intérét général des œuvres de l'esprit et de la fidèle expression de la pensée de l'auteur, si souvent compromise par des traductions inexactes.

Nous faisons donc des vœux pour que le Parlement adopte vos propositions si équitables pour les hommes de lettres français et si profitables aux deux nations. Recevez, Monsieur et honoré confrère, l'assurance de nos sentiments confraternels et nos salutations très distinguées.

PAUL FEVAL, President.

Adhésion cordiale, sous réserve de ce que j'ai dit à mon cher confrère Blanchard Jerrold, "que nous garderons de tout ce qui pourrait entraver l'effort de la diplomatie français."

Eugène d'Auriac, Louis Collas. Paul Saulnière, Gourdon de Genouillac, Constant Guéroult, Paul de Musset, Eugène Bonnemère, Hector Malot, Adolphe Belot, Pierre Zaccone, Félix Jahyer, Emile Richebourg, Henri Celliez, Germond de Lavigne, Oscar Commettant, Jules Claretie, Michel Masson, Jules Sandeau, Edmond About, Legouvé, Georges Sand, Dandet, Champfleury, François Coppée, Alfred Assolant, Aurélien Scholl, Frédéric Thomas (honorary president), Victor Hugo (honorary president), Jules Simon (honorary president), Francis Wey (honorary president), Baron Taylor (honorary president), Ed. Thierry (honorary president), Emmanuel Gonzalès (delegate — honorary president).

Société des Gens de Lettres,

5, Rue Geoffroy-Marie, le 26 Avril, 1875.

LEEDS EXHIBITION.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

SIR,—Dr Spark does not inaugurate the organ at the exhibition in this town. The building will be opened, on the 13th inst., by the Duke of Edinburgh; the musical performances on that day will be conducted by Mr R. S. Burton, and Mr W. T. Best is the organist. Dr Spark will play the organ on Friday, the 14th instant, which is the day after the opening of the exhibition.—Yours, &c., VERITAS.

Leeds, May 4.

RIGA.—Some amateurs have subscribed funds for establishing a Conservatory of Music here. Herr Pabst is appointed director.

SIENNA.—A new opera, Il Ritorno del Coscritto, has been produced at the Teatro Rinnovati. The composer is Signor Tolomei, member of the local bar.

REVIEW.

My Favourite Song. Ballad. Words by T. H. BAYLY, Esq. Music by AMY WEDDLE. London: WOOD & Co., Guilford Street and Great Marlborough Street, W.

Miss AMY WEDDLE, though a very young composer, has already won an enviable reputation for her interesting, though unpretentious, lyrical productions. There is at all times a freshness of thought and freedom of expression in this young lady's compositions, which argue well for her future, and should indeed tend to make her career both brilliant and successful. Perseverance and application Miss Weddle must have, or her efforts would not be so decidedly progressive. Let her but adhere to the principles she has already followed, and her success is assured. "My Favourite Song" is the most ambitious of Miss Weddle's vocal compositions, and is decidedly the best in point of originality, grace of treatment, and charm of contrast. The alternative between 3-4 and common time is very effective, and the accompaniments are diversified and pleasing. The voice part is not difficult, but is capable of much effect in able hands, and the words are poetical and eminently singable. This being the fact, Miss Weddle's "Favourite Song" ought to be everybody else's favourite song. Written in the key of F, compass E to F.

WAIFS.

What shall be said of Giroflé-Girofla, the most popular work by M. C. Lecocq after the apparently imperishable Fille de Madame Angot, as has been already proved by the performance of the work in French at the Opéra Comique, and in English at the Philharmonic? Simply that Mr Campbell Clarke's excellent version has been brought out at the Criterion, with distinguished success, and that the artists are for the most part the same who secured so long a "run" to Les Près Saint Gervais, Mdlle Pauline Rita, representing the twin sisters; M. Loredan, Marasquin; Mr Brennir, the Moor; and Mr Perrini and Miss E. Thorne, the pusillanimous Don and his wife. The scenery and costumes are magnificent.

In art, respect ability, but don't respectability.

Herr Maurice Strakosch has returned to Paris.

Mr Sims Reeves, with Signor Foli, Miss Helen d'Alton, &c., has been singing at Belfast.

Optime consiliarii mortui. Therefore read of the past. Books will speak plain when counsellors blanch.

It is now whispered in well-informed circles that Mdlle Zaré Thalberg's next part is to be Zerlina in Fra Diavolo.

Dr Hans von Bülow will pass some time on the continent before going to the United States, under the auspices of M. Ullman.

Madame Essipoff—in consequence, it is said, of an interesting event—will not be one of our artistic visitors this season. Tant pis.

Mr Bishenden informs us that he has received an offer from Mr Sasson (Boston), of £960, for a three months' tour in America, which Mr Bishenden, however, has declined.

NOTICE.—We are requested to state that the Hanover Square Rooms have been let on lease for a club (by Messrs Robert Cocks & Co.), and that they are no longer available for concerts, &c.

There was no alarm whatever about the fire which broke out in the room of M. Garnier in the new Grand Opera. It was a mere accidental paper burning, extinguished almost as soon as it had declared itself.

Mr Richard Hoffmann played the Barcarolle from the late Sterndale Bennett's fourth concerto, at the Brooklyn (New York) Philharmonic Society's concert of April 17th, with, we are informed, the greatest success, the audience unanimously expressing a wish to hear it again.

M. Michel Levy, the well-known publisher, died very suddenly on Wednesday night. He had been to the Variétés Theatre, and took a cab home to the Place Vendôme; but, on arriving at the house, the cabman found him apparently asleep, and life was extinct. His death is attributed to the rupture of an aneurism of the heart. He was in his 55th year.

Mr Manns, the eminent conductor of the Crystal Palace concerts, was among the audience at the opening of the Alexandra Palace, on Saturday. The concerts and operatic performances, under the direction of Mr Weist Hill, have already begun. To-day we are promised the cantata called May day, composed by Professor Macfarren for the first Bradford festival more than twenty years ago.

ROYAL ALEXANDRA THEATRE.—La Fille de Madame Angot is being played nightly, at the Royal Alexandra Theatre, Park Street, Regent's Park, with Miss Beresford, a comparatively new name in the theatrical world, as Clairette. Mr Pede has been lucky also in finding new and clever artists to fill the other characters in this popular opera comique. We advise all those who have not yet seen La Fille de Madame Angot, to pay a visit to the Alexandra Theatre, and they will be highly gratified with the performance.—F. A. JEWSON.

Digitized by Google

The Queen's first state ball at Buckingham Palace is fixed for Friday next, the 14th inst.

St Etheldreda's Chapel in Ely-place.—We mentioned the other day that, on an examination of the crypt, the timbers which supported the structure, though 400 years old, were found to be perfectly sound. We are now able to state that, it having been suspected that above the modern ceiling of the chapel the ancient timber roof was in existence, a further exploration has been made, and that such has been found to be the case. On removing a few days ago the slates in a line up to the ridge, the architects brought to light a timber roof in the simple and severe style of the 14th century work. Its construction is that of a coupled rafter roof; there is no ridge piece, and no longitudinal tie, excepting the two wall plates and the external boarding. The rafters, averaging 8in. by 6in., laid flatways, are about 9in. apart; there is a vertical strut framed into the inner wall-plate and the rafters, and above are cross-pieces and a collar, all about 8in. by 4in. All the pieces are united by double tenons, and secured with projecting wooden pegs. The material used is chestnut timber, and it is in a good state of preservation, and the architects were able to make a measured drawing of this interesting piece of ancient carpentry, which does credit to the craftsmen of the "Edwardian" era.

Tonic Sol-fa Concert.—The annual juvenile concert, organized by the Tonic Sol-fa Association, established in 1853 for the promotion of vocal music in schools, homes, and congregations, was given on Saturday at the Crystal Palace, when upwards of 4,000 children, from about 100 schools of the metropolis, sang a selection of songs—Sabbath, school, holiday, and home—chosen with a special view to their usefulness in each division. The singing, if anything, was steadier than that of previous years, and this was accounted for by the committee inviting only those children who had gained junior certificates of merit, probably not more than 5 per cent. of those who are actually attending school. The Tonic Sol-fa method has been adopted in most of the Board Schools, and some idea of the progress it is making generally may be conceived from the fact that the principal hymn tune-books of England, Scotland, and Wales are published in the Sol-fa notation, and that several thousand pieces in four parts, including standard glees and madrigals, songs, &c., have been issued in the same notation, besides many volumes of the principal oratorios, odes, and masses by the great masters. There are more than 3,000 teachers, and most of them voluntarily promote the movement. The conductors on Saturday were Messrs Proudman and M'Naught, and the organist Mr J. Coward, and their patience was somewhat tried by the number of encores called for. As is usual on these occasions, a sight-singing test was adopted, in order that the power of the young choristers might be determined publicly, and for this purpose a piece of music, a simple song, which had not been seen previously by any of the singers, was unsealed and distributed in the orchestra, and, after being "sol-fa'ed" once without accompaniment, was sung to the words, "Wintry winds no more annoy," &c., in the most harmonious manner. The pieces most applauded were, "The Children of Jerusalem," the "Bellringers' Glee," the "Monkey Song," "Rule Britannia," and the "Christian Mariner's hymn."—D. T.

IN MY TEENS.*

It's quite unkind, where'er I go,
They laugh at me, and slight me so;
And whisp'ring say, "What courtship means
She cannot know, she's in her teens."
Yet, when the sun's deep golden rays
O'er Nature's mossy carpet plays,
I learn, within my jasmine bow'r,
The love-name of each fairy flow'r.

I now by secret name can greet
The lily and the woodbine sweet;
And every varied-tinted rose
Can into spells of love compose.
I know that in the daisy dale
Each velvet flow'ret breathes a tale,
Which Cupid tells in happy scenes—
Suppose I am still in my teens.

John Young.

* Copyright.

Chemnitz.—After bringing out Aida at the Stadttheater with splendour and completeness, Herr Sasse is going about the country with his company, band, chorus, scenery, &c., giving performances at various theatres.

Salzburgh.—On the 20th ult., Beethoven's Ninth Symphony was for the first time publicly performed here.—The directors of the Mozarteum have decided on issuing a complete and uniform edition of Mozart's works, including all those hitherto unpublished.

Ghent.—Under the spirited direction of M. Samuel, a performance of Handel's Alexander's Feast has just been given with triumphant success. At the same concert, M. Alfred Jaëll, who had come from Paris on purpose, played Schumann's Concerto, evoking loud and continuous applause. Some fifty lady dilettanti, who had been admitted to the rehearsal, were so impressed by his playing that they clubbed together and presented him with a gigantic bouquet. On the following day, the masters and pupils of the Conservatory marked their appreciation of his talent by a votive offering in the shape of a crown, or wreath.

Advertisements.

THE VOICE & SINGING
BY
ADOLFO FERRARI.
THE FORMATION AND CULTIVATION OF THE VOICE FOR SINGING
Price 12s.
London: Duncan Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"The remarkable qualities of this book are the author's freedom from conventional trammels, the strong sense of his opinions, and the novelty yet evident soundness of his precepts; his work has consequently come into general use as a manual of vocal instruction."—Daily News.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE,
For invigorating and enriching the voice, and removing affections of the throat.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE is universally acknowledged to be the most valuable remedy for sore throat, hoarseness and relaxed throat. It should always be taken before singing or reciting, as it strengthens the vocal organs. It is most extensively prescribed by the faculty for the throat and voice. Dr Lewis of Basingstoke says he finds them most efficacious, and in Dr Copland's Dictionary of Practical Medicine (Longman & Co.), they are strongly recommended at pages 872 and 1492. They are used by all the greatest vocalists and orators in Europe, and have been established over a quarter of a century. Testimonials from Patti, Grisi, Lablache, Santley, &c. Sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d. by all Chemists throughout the United Kingdom and the Colonies.

MDLLE ZARE THALBERG.
LE CARNEVAL DE VENISE, with Variations, by Sir Julius Benedict, as sung by Mdlle Zare Thalberg, at the Floral Hall Concerts, is published—price 4s.—by Duncan Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.
"A DREAM WISH."
GIPSY SONG.
The Poetry by M. A. BAINES.
The Music by MICHAEL BERGSON.
Price 4s.
London: Duncan Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

VOCAL EXERCISES.
Composed by FRANK MORI.
Price 4s.
London: Duncan Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.
N.B.—These Vocal Exercises, as taught by Frank Mori, are invaluable both to Students and Professors.

Published This Day.
"THE FAIREST FLOWER WILL PERISH."
SONG.
The Words by Mrs HYPPOLITE VAN LANDEGHEM.
The Music by HYPPOLITE VAN LANDEGHEM.
Price 3s.
London: Duncan Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"CUPID'S APPEAL,"
BALLAD,
And the Sequel,
"MARRIAGE BELLS,"
SONG.
Price 3s. each.
London: Duncan Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Digitized by Google

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

PRODUCTION OF WAGNER'S 'LOHENGRIN.'

The Books of Airs (in Two Books), arranged for Pianoforte, with ad. lib. accompaniments for Flute, Violin, and Violoncello, by

W. HUTCHINS CALLCOTT

PRICE.

Solos	...	...	5*s. each.*
Duets	...	...	6*s.* ,,
Accompaniments	...	...	1*s.* ,,

LONDON:
HUTCHINGS & ROMER,
9, Conduit Street, Regent Street, W.

ARTHUR SULLIVAN'S NEW SONG,

"THOU ART WEARY."

WORDS BY ADELAIDE PROCTOR.

MUSIC BY ARTHUR SULLIVAN.

SUNG BY

Miss ANTOINETTE STERLING

AT THE

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

"The singer was Miss Antoinette Sterling, who, always heartily admired in those German ballads, for which she exhibits so marked a sympathy, introduced in a group four of Schumann's most graceful contributions to the Lieder repertory, and, later in the evening, a new song by Mr Arthur Sullivan, 'Thou art weary' (set to words by Adelaide Proctor)—one of the most charming recent emanations from the pen of our gifted compatriot."—The Times, Nov. 10.

"Miss Sterling was the vocalist, and sang, in addition to selections from Schumann, a new song by Arthur Sullivan, entitled, 'Thou art weary,' which is one of the most beautiful and thoughtful effusions of the composer's graceful music."—Daily Telegraph, Nov. 12.

"Miss Antoinette Sterling was the vocalist. In the second part she introduced a new song by Mr Sullivan, an admirable setting for a contralto voice of some very touching lines by the late Miss Adelaide Proctor, addressed by a poor mother to her starving child, the burden being—

'Sleep, my darling, thou art weary;
God is good, but life is dreary.'

The song exactly suited Miss Sterling's voice and style, and it will assuredly become as great a favourite as 'Will he come,' to which it is a worthy pendant, and the words of which are also by Miss Proctor."—Standard, Nov. 12.

"Miss Antoinette Sterling repeated Mr Sullivan's new song, 'Thou art weary,' a second hearing of which has confirmed our good opinion of it."—Standard, Nov. 16.

"At the concert on Monday, Miss Sterling had introduced a series of charming Lieder by Schumann, and a new song by Mr Arthur Sullivan, 'Sleep, my darling, thou art weary,' an admirable setting of Miss Proctor's poem, 'Hush, I cannot bear to see thee,' which, like everything Miss Proctor wrote, was well adapted for, and, in fact, seemed to invite musical treatment. Her verses have inspired Mr Sullivan with a genuine melody, of which the refrain is particularly remarkable; and the song, both at Monday's and Saturday's concert, pleased so much that Miss Sterling was called upon to repeat it."—Pall Mall Gazette, Nov. 17.

"Miss Sterling sang discreetly and sympathetically four of Schumann's 'Dichterliebe' (Nos. 1, 2, 7, and 8); but came off still better in a new song by Mr A. Sullivan, who has set words by Adelaide Proctor, 'Thou art weary,' the dying consolation of a starved mother to her child, the refrain of which is—

'Sleep, my darling, thou art weary;
God is good, but life is dreary.'

It is a painful theme; but the composer has treated it with such pathos that the air tells powerfully."—Athenæum, Nov. 14.

"The vocalist was Miss Sterling, who sang four songs by Schumann (Nos. 1, 2, 7, and 8 of the 'Dichterliebe'), and a new song, entitled 'Thou art weary,' written by Miss Adelaide Proctor. The words are good, and have been fitted to charming and expressive music by Mr Arthur Sullivan, who has added a pianoforte accompaniment worthy his high reputation, and worth listening to for its own sake."—Observer, Nov. 15.

Published in the keys of D minor and F minor, Price 4s.

ARTHUR SULLIVAN'S NEW SONG,

"TENDER AND TRUE,"

SUNG BY

MISS EDITH WYNNE

AT THE

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS, ST JAMES'S HALL.

"The vocalist was Miss Edith Wynne, who sang a new song, 'Tender and True,' by Arthur Sullivan, the beauty of which, aided by a most tasteful rendering, elicited an encore."—Daily Telegraph, January 13.

"Mr Sullivan's graceful song—a novelty—was rendered by Miss Edith Wynne with much refined expression; and the applause which followed necessitated its entire repetition."—Daily News, January 13.

"A very expressive new song, by Mr A. Sullivan, 'Tender and True,' was sung with such effect by Miss Edith Wynne that it had to be repeated."—Illustrated London News, January 16.

"Miss Edith Wynne, who gave, in her own genuine and expressive manner, a graceful new song, 'Tender and True,' by Mr Arthur Sullivan, which was encored, and repeated."—Graphic, January 16.

Published in the keys of E flat and F, Price 4s.

CHAPPELL & CO., 50 NEW BOND ST.

Digitized by Google

BOOSEY & CO.'S
NEW PUBLICATIONS.

This Day, price 3s. 6d. paper, 5s. cloth, gilt edges.

THE ROYAL EDITION OF "L'ELISIR D'AMORE," with English and Italian words.

This Day, price 3s. 6d. paper, 5s. cloth, gilt edges.

THE ROYAL EDITION OF "LA FILLE DE MADAME ANGOT," with English and French words.

In One Vol., price 5s. cloth, or separately, 1s. each.

THE ROYAL EDITION OF BALLAD OPERAS, with Dialogue, Stage Directions, &c., complete:—

LOVE IN A VILLAGE. | THE BEGGAR'S OPERA.
ROSINA. | NO SONG, NO SUPPER.

Edited by JOHN OXENFORD and J. L. HATTON.

"Should be in the hands of the amateurs of the period seeking for a genuine air to sing."—Athenæum.

"Should find an honoured place in every library. It is a pleasure to meet the sterling old melodies, after the surfeit of thin, tuneless compositions, of which opera-bouffes are made up."—Graphic.

Just Published, price 7s. 6d.

NEW ORGAN TUTOR—DR SPARK'S HANDY-BOOK FOR THE ORGAN, containing complete Instructions for the Use of the Manuals and Pedals, with 150 various examples, by the best Composers, for the Organ.

"Dr Spark has supplied a real want. He has compiled an excellent Manual of Instruction for the Organ, by the use of which many of the faults of other bad systems may be avoided. Young organists can have no better tutor than Dr Spark."—Nottingham Guardian.

"A more thorough and complete Organ Tutor than this we have never seen. Every point of difficulty in the study of the instrument is fully elucidated, and the treatment of all parts and peculiarities is exhaustively dealt with. Let every one who would learn to play the organ well, obtain and study Dr Spark's Handy-book."—Edinburgh Daily Review.

NEW HALF-CROWN MUSIC BOOKS.—

ROBERT SCHUMANN'S 86 SHORT PIECES	2s. 6d.
MENDELSSOHN'S 36 SONGS WITHOUT WORDS	2s. 6d.
STRAUSS' 18 SETS OF NEW WALTZES	2s. 6d.
TWENTY-EIGHT PIECES FOR THE DRAWING-ROOM	2s. 6d.
THIRTY-SIX BALLADS, by ARTHUR SULLIVAN, MOLLOY, GATTY, and CLARIBEL	2s. 6d.

This Day, price 1s. each.

NEW ILLUSTRATED SERIES OF DANCE BOOKS.—BOOSEY & Co. beg to announce that the success of their late Christmas Annual has induced them to bring out the following Dance Numbers of the Musical Cabinet, illustrated in colours by Leighton Brothers. Each number contains Six Complete Sets of Waltzes, price 1s.; post-free, 1s. 2d.

167. STRAUSS' "WEINER BLUT," "DOCTRINEN," "Wein, Weib, und Gesang," "Ball Promessen," Lilien Kranze," and "Fesche Geister" Waltzes.

157. STRAUSS' "THOUSAND AND ONE NIGHTS," "Telegramme," and four other Waltzes.

101. STRAUSS' "BEAUTIFUL DANUBE," "Good Old Times," "Wiener Kinder," and three other Waltzes.

155. GUNGL'S "DREAM OF THE OCEAN," "Peterhoff," and four other Waltzes.

ALSO,

164. CHRISTMAS NUMBER, containing the "Madame Angot" dance music.

This Day, price 1s.

TEN POPULAR PIECES FOR THE PIANOFORTE (Boosey's Musical Cabinet, No. 166), including the "Golden Waves," Ghys' "Air of Louis XIII.," "Voix du Ciel," "Le Zephyr," and Wollenhaupt's "Styrienne," "Caprice Arien," "Gazelle," and "Scherzo Brillante," &c.

This Day, price 1s.

TEN CLASSICAL PIECES FOR THE PIANOFORTE (Boosey's Musical Cabinet, No. 165), including Hiller's "Guitarre," Henselt's "Berceuse" and "Love Song," Rubenstein's "Barcarolle," Von Bülow's "Carnival of Milan," "Les Deux Alouettes," Raff's "Abend," Gluck's "Gavotte," "The Harmonious Blacksmith," &c.

Published This Day, price 1s. 6d.

FIFTY FINGERED EXERCISES FOR THE VIOLIN, selected and Edited by HUBERT RIES. Dedicated to Herr Joachim, who thus writes of the work to the editor:—

"I was very happy to become acquainted with your 'Fingered Exercises, which, through your ingenious manner of distinguishing the fingers that are to be elevated, and held down, offer an essential help in imparting to scholars an easy position to the hand and an exact knowledge of fingering. I accept, therefore, the dedication of your work thankfully, and will gladly assist in disseminating it."

LONDON: BOOSEY & CO., 295, REGENT STREET, W.

Digitized by Google

Printed by HENDERSON, RAIT, AND FENTON, at No. 69, Marylebone Lane, Oxford Street, in the Parish of Marylebone, in the County of Middlesex.
Published by WILLIAM DUNCAN DAVISON, at the Office, 244, Regent Street, Saturday, May 8, 1875.

The Musical World.

(REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.)

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST, 20s. PER ANNUM,
Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to DUNCAN DAVISON & CO., 244, Regent Street, London, W.

VOL. 53—No. 20. SATURDAY, MAY 15, 1875. PRICE { 4d. Unstamped. 5d. Stamped.

HER MAJESTY'S OPERA, THEATRE ROYAL, DRURY LANE.

Fourth Appearance of Mdme Christine Nilsson.
"Il Talismano."

THIS EVENING (SATURDAY), May 15th, will be performed (for the second time this season) BALFE'S Grand Opera, "IL TALISMANO." Sir Kenneth, Signor Campanini; Richard Cœur de Lion, Signor Galassi; Nectabanus, Signor Catalani; Il Rè di Francia, Signor Zoboli; Il Duca d'Austria, Signor Casaboni; Il Barone de Vaux, Signor Rinaldini; L'Emiro, Signor Grazzi; Queen Berengaria, Mdlle Risarelli (her second appearance this season); and Edith Plantagenet, Mdme Christine Nilsson (her fourth appearance this season). Director of the Music and Conductor—Sir Michael Costa.

Fifth Appearance of Madame Christine Nilsson.

On MONDAY next, May 17 (second time this season), GOUNOD'S Opera, "FAUST." Faust, M. Capoul (his second appearance this season); Mephistophiles, Signor Rota (his second appearance this season); Valentino, Signor de Reschi; Wagner, Signor Costa; Siebel, Mdme Trebelli-Bettini; Marta, Mdme Demeric-Lablache; and Margherita, Mdme Christine Nilsson (her fifth appearance this season).

Mdlle Elena Varesi.

On TUESDAY next, May 18, BELLINI'S Opera, "LA SONNAMBULA." Elvino, Signor Fancelli; Il Conte Rodolfo, Signor Castelmary; Lisa, Mdlle Bauermeister; and Amina, Mdlle Elena Varesi (her sixth appearance this season).

Extra Night.—Tietjens—Trebelli-Bettini—Campanini—Rota.

On THURSDAY next, May 20, "LUCREZIA BORGIA." Gennaro, Signor Campanini; Il Duca Alfonso, Signor Rota; Maffio Orsini; Mdme Trebelli-Bettini; and Lucrezia Borgia, Mdlle Tietjens.

On SATURDAY, May 22, Mdme Christine Nilsson.

Doors open at Eight o'clock. Commence at Half-past Eight. Amphitheatre stalls, 7s. and 5s.; amphitheatre, 2s. Box-office open daily from Ten till Five, under the direction of Mr Bailey.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—SUMMER CONCERTS.—The First of the Series will be given This Day (SATURDAY), at Three, when the Programme will comprise: Overture, William Tell (Rossini); Fantasia for pianoforte, soli voices, chorus, and orchestra (Beethoven); Symphony in B minor, unfinished (Schubert); and Overture, Rienzi (Wagner). Vocalists—Mdme Lemmens-Sherrington, Mdme Patey, Mr Vernon Rigby, and Signor Foli. Pianist—Mr Charles Hallé. Crystal Palace Choir and Orchestra. Conductor—Mr MANNS. Transferable stall tickets for the Series of Six, Half-a-Guinea; single stalls, Half-a-Crown; admission to Palace, Half-a-Crown, or by Guinea Season Ticket.

GREAT SUCCESS OF "GIROFLE-GIROFLA."

CRITERION THEATRE, Regent Circus.—Sole Proprietors and Responsible Managers, SPIERS & POND.—"GIROFLE-GIROFLA," new Comic Opera in English, by CHARLES LECOCQ. Adapted by CAMPBELL CLARKE, and produced under the direction of Mrs W. H. LISTON. Conductor—Mr F. STANISLAUS. The Opera commences at Eight, and is over by Eleven o'clock. Mesdames Pauline Rita, Emily Thorne, Rose Keene, and Alice Hamilton; Messrs A. Brennir, Perrini, Loredan. Private boxes from £1 1s. to £3 3s.; stalls, 7s. 6d.; dress circle, 5s.; boxes (bonnets allowed), 5s.; pit, 2s.; amphitheatre, 1s. To be obtained at the Box Office of the Criterion. Acting Manager—Mr EDWARD MURRAY.

THE "TALISMAN" CHORUSES.

(IN BALFE'S GRAND OPERA.)

No. 1. Chorus of Arabs.
,, 2. Salve Regina (Trio and Chorus).
,, 3. Draw Your Swords (Concerted Morceau).
,, 4. Hours and Hours Roll Slowly on (Chorus of Ladies).
,, 5. Thy Kinswoman Edith (Concerted Morceau).
,, 6. Farewell, my Beloved Edith (Finale to Act 2nd).
,, 7. A Song to Merrie England.
(Part Song—Soprano, Tenor, Alto, and Bass.)
,, 8. Glorious England (Finale).

No collection of Choruses equal in merit to the above has been published for years. The great success with which the "TALISMAN" has been received is sufficient evidence of the beauty of the entire Opera, in which the Choruses form, of course, one of the most effective features.

London: DUFF & STEWART, 147, Oxford Street.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA, COVENT GARDEN.

THIS EVENING (SATURDAY), May 15th, will be performed "FRA DIAVOLO." Mdlles Zaré Thalberg (her sixth appearance on any stage) and Scalchi; Signori Ciampi, Sabater, Tagliafico, Capponi, and Naudin. Conductor—Signor Bevignani.

On MONDAY next, May 17, "LA TRAVIATA." Mdme Adelina Patti (her third appearance this season); Signori Graziani, Tagliafico, and De Sanctis.

On TUESDAY next, May 18, a favourite Opera, in which Mdlle Zaré Thalberg will sing.

On WEDNESDAY next, May 19, third performance of WAGNER'S Romantic Opera, "LOHENGRIN." Elsa di Brabante, Mdlle Albani; Lohengrin, Signor Nicolini. Mdlles D'Angeri, Parry, Pocchini, Estelle, Portaluppi, Ferrari, Vianello, Abraham, Martini; Signor Capponi, Rossi, Manfredi, Fallar, Raguer, M. Maurel, and Herr Seidemann. Conductor—Signor Vianesi.

On THURSDAY next, May 20 (in lieu of the subscription for Saturday, July 24), "LES DIAMANS DE LA COURONNE." Mdme Adelina Patti, Mdlle Smeroschi; Signori Ciampi, Capponi, Sabater, and Naudin.

On FRIDAY next, May 21, "LES HUGUENOTS." Mdme Vilda, Mdlles Marimon and Scalchi; Signori Capponi, Bagagiolo, Sabater, Naudin, and M. Maurel.

The Box Office, under the portico of the Theatre, is open from Ten to Five. Pit tickets, 7s.; amphitheatre stalls, 10s. 6d. and 5s.; amphitheatre, 2s. 6d.

MISS LILLIE ALBRECHT has the honour to announce that her SECOND MATINEE MUSICALE (by kind permission of George Eyre, Esq.) will take place in Lowndes Square, Belgravia, early in June. Particulars duly announced.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL.—VERDI'S REQUIEM, This (SATURDAY) Afternoon and WEDNESDAY Evening, May 19. Conductor—Signor VERDI. The Solos by Madame Stoltz, Mdlle Waldmann, Signor Maas ni, and Signor Medini. Royal Albert Hall Choral Society. Organist—Dr Stainer. Band of 150 performers. Tickets, amphitheatre stalls, 21s.; arena stalls, 10s. 6d.; balcony, 5s.; admission, 2s. 6d.; for which immediate application should be made to NOVELLO'S, 1, Berners Street, and 35, Poultry; and at the Royal Albert Hall.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL.—WHIT-MONDAY, May 17 (Bank Holiday), GRAND AFTERNOON CONCERT, at Three. Mdme Lemmens-Sherrington, Mdlle St Alba, Mdme Patey, Mr Vernon Rigby, Mr Cummings, Signor Foli. Glee Party—Messrs Baxter, Montem Smith, Carter, Distin, and Winn. Solo French Horn—M. Lichtle. Solo Organ—Mr Hoyte. Tickets, 5s., 4s., 2s. 6d. (5,000 admissions, One Shilling), at NOVELLO'S, 1, Berners Street, and 35, Poultry; and at the Royal Albert Hall.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL.—WHIT-MONDAY, May 17 (Bank Holiday), GRAND EVENING CONCERT, at Eight. Mdme Lemmens-Sherrington, Mdlle St Alba, Mdme Patey, Mr Sims Reeves, Mr Cummings, Signor Foli. Glee Party—Messrs Baxter, Montem Smith, Carter, Distin, and Winn. Solo Violin—Mdlle Clarita Sangrian. Solo Organ—Mr Hoyte. Tickets, 5s., 4s., 2s. 6d. (5,000 admissions, One Shilling), at NOVELLO'S, 1, Berners Street, and 35, Poultry; and at the Royal Albert Hall.

MR SIMS REEVES, on WHIT-MONDAY, at Eight.—ROYAL ALBERT HALL. Tickets, 5s., 4s., 2s. 6d. (5,000 admissions, One Shilling); at NOVELLO'S, 1, Berners Street, and 35, Poultry; and at the Royal Albert Hall.

GEMME D'ANTICHITA.

RACCOLTA DI PEZZI VOCALI.

COMPOSTI DAI PIU CELEBRI

MAESTRI ANTICHI.

This unique Work has been carefully revised, and is now re-issuing in 200 Numbers, selected from the most esteemed Works of Bach, Handel, Beethoven, Spohr, Stradella, Scarlatti, Mozart, Pergolesi, Paesiello, Carissimi, Cimarosa, &c., &c. Edited by Lady Thompson, Macfarren, Wilhelm Ganz, Adolphe Ganz, Callcott, Lucas, Molique, Perugini, &c. The whole carefully revised and edited by JOSIAH PITTMAN. Lists Gratis.

C. LONSDALE'S
Musical Circulating Library,
26, OLD BOND STREET, W.

Digitized by Google

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Under the immediate Patronage of
Her Most Gracious Majesty the QUEEN.
His Royal Highness the Prince of WALES.
Her Royal Highness the Princess of WALES.
His Royal Highness the Duke of EDINBURGH.
Her Royal Highness the Princess CHRISTIAN.
His Royal Highness the Duke of CAMBRIDGE.
Her Royal Highness the Duchess of TECK.
His Serene Highness the Duke of TECK.
and
His Royal Highness the Prince CHRISTIAN.

President—The Right Hon. The Earl of DUDLEY.

Principal—Professor MACFARREN.

The next STUDENTS' CONCERT, open to Subscribers, Members, and Associates, will take place at ST JAMES'S HALL, on THURSDAY Evening, the 20th inst., commencing at Eight o'clock. Conductor—MR WALTER MACFARREN.

By Order, JOHN GILL, Secretary.

Royal Academy of Music,
4, Tenterden Street, Hanover Square.

MDLLE MARIE KREBS begs to announce that she will give TWO PIANOFORTE RECITALS, in ST JAMES'S HALL, on WEDNESDAY Afternoons, May 19 and June 2, to commence each day at Half-past Three o'clock precisely. Programme of the First Recital, Wednesday Afternoon next, May 19: Prelude and Fugue in A minor (Bach); Sonata in A flat, Op. 26 (Beethoven); Three Musical Sketches—The Lake, The Millstream, and The Fountain (Bennett); Nocturne in C minor, Op. 48, No. 1, Etudes in G flat, C sharp, and A minor (Chopin); Variations in F minor, Op. 94 (Haydn); Arabesks, novelette, Op. 21, No. 7 (Schumann); Bourrée (Baumfelder); Pensée (Krebs); Tarantelle-toccata (Charles Mayer). Sofa stalls, 7s. 6d.; balcony, 3s.; admission, One Shilling. Tickets at Chappell & Co.'s, 50, New Bond Street; and at Austin's Ticket Office, 28, Piccadilly.

MR BRINLEY RICHARDS on WELSH and other "ANCIENT NATIONAL MUSIC," with Selections from the Songs of England, Scotland, Ireland, and Wales, at ST GEORGE'S HALL, May 27. The Right Hon. Lord CLARENCE PAGET in the Chair. Particulars will be announced.

MDLLE VICTORIA BUNSEN has the honour to announce that she will give a GRAND EVENING CONCERT, at 28, Ashley Place, Victoria Street, S.W. (by kind permission of Major Wallace Carpenter), on WEDNESDAY, May 26th, 1875, to commence at Half-past Eight o'clock, under the immediate patronage of his Excellency the Count Münster (German Ambassador), his Excellency the Count de Bylandt (Netherlands Minister), his Excellency the Baron Hochschild (Swedish and Norwegian Minister), the Baroness Hochschild, the Right Hon. Lord Eliot, and Mdme Jenny Lind-Goldschmidt. Vocalists—Miss Edith Wynne and Mdlle Victoria Bunsen; Herr Werrenrath (the Danish tenor), Mr Shakespeare (his first appearance since his return from Italy), Signor Campobello, and Signor Caravoglia. Instrumentalists: Violin—Mdme Varley-Liebe. Pianoforte—Mdlle Felicia Bunsen. Conductors—Sir Julius Benedict, the Marquis d'Havet Zuccardi, Il Cavaliere Campana, and Herr Ganz. Tickets, One Guinea each; to be obtained of Messrs Stanley Lucas, Weber & Co., 84, New Bond Street; and of Mdlle VICTORIA BUNSEN, 22, Seymour Street, Portman Square, W.

MONS. PAQUE begs to announce that his MATINÉE MUSICALE will take place on THURSDAY, June 3, at 27, Harley Street, Cavendish Square. Tickets at 120, Great Portland Street, W.

"ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?"

MR GERARD COVENTRY will sing (for the first time since his return from Milan), at Signor Zerreti's Concert, on the 24th inst., ASCHER'S popular Romance, "ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?" and Sir JULIUS BENEDICT'S "NULLA DA TE."

"MEDEA."

MISS JESSIE JONES (Student and Silver Medallist of the Royal Academy of Music) will sing RANDEGGER'S Grand Scena, "MEDEA," at the Concert of the British Orchestral Society, on Wednesday Evening, May 19.

WANTED, some FIRST CLASS CONCERT PARTIES, for beginning of December next, on Provincial Tour. Full particulars to be addressed, "Entrepreneur," care of DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

A LADY, having quitted the Operatic Stage, will be happy to give Accompanying LESSONS to Artists. Apply, by letter, addressed "Accompanist," care of DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

In the Press,

"BY THE WILLOWS."

A WREATH OF SONGS, Op. 11.

Words (from the German) by L. N. PARKER.

MUSIC BY

THOMAS WINGHAM.

Dedicated to Dr FERDINAND HILLER.

Price 7s. 6d.

LONDON: BOOSEY & CO., 295, REGENT STREET.

THE GUITAR.—MDME SIDNEY PRATTEN, Teacher of this elegant Instrument, is in Town for the Season. For LESSONS and Private CONCERTS, address to her residence, 22A, Dorset Street, Portman Square, W.

MR RICCARDI (the new Bass), who made so successful a debut at St James's Hall, March 12th, begs to announce his Return to London for the Season. All applications for ENGAGEMENTS to be addressed, Care of DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

CONCERTS, PRIVATE THEATRICALS, and ENTERTAINMENTS.—To be LET, by the Night, Handsome SUITE of ROOMS, adjoining Hengler's Cirque, Argyll Street, Regent Street. The Large Hall (52 ft. by 35 ft., and 22 feet high) will seat about 300 people. Apply to HAIG & Co., 7, Argyll Street, W.

NEW COMPOSITIONS BY WILHELM SCHULTHES.

"COR JESU, SALUS IN TE SPERANTIUM." Dedicated to His Holiness Pope Pius the Ninth, Motett for Three Equal Voices (Soli and Chorus), with Organ Accompaniment (and Harp ad lib.)—5s. The same arranged for a Choir of Mixed Voices (S.A.T.B.), with Organ Accompaniment—4s. Also in an Abridged Arrangement for Congregational Use, with Organ Accompaniment—3d. net.

"VENI DOMINE," Motett for Four Equal Voices (Soli and Chorus), with Organ Accompaniment (and Harp ad lib.); and "ELEVATION," Solo for Organ and Harp—4s. A Vocal Arrangement of the Motett for a Choir of Mixed Voices (S.A.T.B.)—1s.

"GUIRLANDES DE MAI." Hymns to B.V.M. (French and English Words), with Organ Accompaniment, Three Parts—3s. each; post free, 19 stamps.

"TWELVE LATIN HYMNS," for Vespers, Complin, &c., with Organ Accompaniment—2s. net. NOVELLO, EWER & CO., 1, Berners Street.

DEAR ENGLAND.—Signor FOLI will sing this new Song at the Albert Hall, May 17th; and Alexandra Palace, the 22nd. Price 3s.; post free, 18 stamps.

W. T. WRIGHTON'S best Songs: "Christ walking on the Sea," 3s.; "The Fountain," 3s.; "A River through each winding Glade," 3s.; "The Blessing of Flowers," 3s.; "What Chants the Nightingale?" 3s; "Thy Voice is Near, 4s.; "Her Bright Smile," 4s.; "Only One to Bless and Cheer Me," 4s.; "The Wishing Cap," 4s.; "The Liquid Gem," 4s.; "O, would I were a Fairy Queen!" 3s.; "Be Happy, and Never Despair," 3s.; "What though thy Sun be Clouded," 3s. N.B.—All post free at half price in stamps.

LET THE HILLS RESOUND. A New Song. By the Composer of "God Bless the Prince of Wales." Post free for 18 stamps Piano Solo and Duet, 24 stamps each; the Part Song, 4 stamps.

HOME TREASURES.

TWENTY-FIVE Admired MELODIES, arranged and fingered for the Pianoforte by WILLIAM SMALLWOOD. 2s. 6d. each; free by post at half price in stamps. London: Sole Publishers, ROBERT COCKS & Co., New Burlington Street. Order everywhere.

"SHALL I WEAR A WHITE ROSE?"

BALLAD.

Words by H. SAVILLE CLARKE.

Music by EMILY BARDSLEY FARMER.

Nett, 2s.

JOSEPH WILLIAMS, Berners Street, and Cheapside, E.C.

Now Publishing,

ANDANTE and ALLEGRO CAPRICCIOSO,

For PIANO and ORCHESTRA, Op. 5.

By THOMAS WINGHAM.

Dedicated to Signor RANDEGGER.

SOLO, 7s. 6d.

Also, by the same Composer,

SYMPHONY, in B flat, No. 2, Op. 6.

Dedicated, by kind permission, to Sir W. STERNDALE BENNETT.

PERFORMED AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE CONCERTS.

DUET, 15s.

FESTAL OVERTURE, in C, Op. 8.

Composed in Commemoration of the Jubilee of the Royal Academy of Music.

Dedicated to JOHN HULLAH, Esq.

DUET, 7s. 6d.

To Subscribers, the above works will be issued at 12s. 6d. the Set. Names received by the Publishers—

LONDON: LAMBORN COCK & CO., 63, NEW BOND STREET.

BRIGHTON CONCERT AGENTS,

PIANOFORTE AND MUSICSELLERS,

LYON & HALL,

WARWICK MANSION.

Digitized by Google

LOHENGRIN.

(From the "Times," May 10.)

The English public has at length heard Lohengrin, and, if outward appearances may be trusted, heard it with satisfaction. That it was thoroughly understood and appreciated it would be rash to assert; but that a deep impression was created upon a majority of one of the largest audiences ever assembled within the walls of Covent Garden Theatre, may fairly be stated. In a work constructed as is Lohengrin, frequent plaudits cannot be expected. Each successive act may be regarded almost as one continuous piece, and when expressions of approval might reasonably be looked for, the composer, by aid of the peculiar form adopted in those lyric dramas (operas they are not) which represent more or less emphatically the theory he, with the co-operation of zealous disciples, has been preaching for 30 years and upwards, makes them inconvenient, if not impossible. In fact, he regards all such fugitive manifestations with indifference, avoiding them with studious consistency. His motto is "Excelsior." We must follow him to the end, or leave him, in haughty solitude, at the summit of the mountain, towards which, with sure and measured steps, he has been travelling. Once arrived, the pent-up feelings may have issue; and, to judge by his polemical writings, the musical resuscitator of Lohengrin and other half-forgotten myths, sympathizing with the ordinary mortals to whom he has successfully communicated himself, would listen with complacency to any amount of lively demonstrations. Why Wagner, who has striven with such pains to show the world what the "Art Work of the Future" must inevitably be, should go back for his materials to the obscure past—the past of legion and romance, before printing was dreamt of—it is difficult to guess; still more why what is intended for the crowning achievement of his artistic life should, as in the Trilogy of the Ring of the Niblung, be founded upon the deeds of gods and giants belonging to the Teutonic "Sagas" of Iceland. Wagner, in one of his writings, says of Mendelssohn, that, unable to go on with the tide, he constructed a boat in which he could row against the stream back to the old contrapuntists. But, if this be true of Mendelssohn's music, why should not a similar process of reasoning be applied to Wagner's drama? It is surely easier to become familiar with John Sebastian Bach than with Siegmund and Sieglinde. However, myth has always been advocated by Wagner as the most proper subject for the lyric drama, to which all the arts must contribute, and over which the poet, to whom they minister, reigns supreme. Even after the success achieved at Dresden by his historical opera, Rienzi, his thoughts being absorbed in the Thuringian legend of Tannhäuser, he threw aside another historical story which he had contemplated setting to music; and the comic opera, Die Meistersinger zu Nürnberg, of which Hans Sach is the hero, was the last work that diverted his ideas from the Mythos. With the Flying Dutchman Wagner became his own poet; and here, in the truly ethereal character of Senta, he created the first image of the redeeming woman, subsequently typified, first, as Elizabeth, next as Elsa—"woman," to quote from the "Communication to his Friends," which forms a preface to a printed edition of the three librettos, "for whom the Flying Dutchman yearned from out the ocean depths, of his wretchedness, who, as a celestial star, showed Tannhäuser the way out of the enervating precincts of the Venusberg, and who, again, from the sunny heights, attracted Lohengrin down to the warming bosom of earth." With the Fliegende Holländer, Mr George Wood and Signor Arditi made us acquainted some years ago, at Her Majesty's Opera (Drury Lane). Tannhäuser and Lohengrin have on various occasions been promised at our Italian Opera Houses, but neither of them until now has been forthcoming. The prospectuses, both of Mr Gye and Mr Mapleson, for the actual season, announced Lohengrin. Lohengrin at one theatre and Tannhäuser at the other would probably have been more welcome. Nevertheless, we are thankful for what is vouchsafed to us; and the magnificent style in which Lohengrin is produced at the Royal Italian Opera must have contented the most uncompromising advocate of Wagner's original genius. The outlay upon scenery, costumes, mechanical contrivances, and other indispensable accessories must have been very considerable. The first scene, when the King of Germany comes to levy troops among the lieges of Brabant, in order to carry on the war against his Hungarian invaders, is one blaze of splendour. It is difficult, indeed, to think how Henry the Fowler, after long marches, could have brought his followers to Antwerp in such glittering and superb condition. Thanks to the Wagner controversy—which, in the shape of essays, criticisms, biographies, autobiographies, and pamphlets of all kinds, has been unceasing for the last quarter of a century and more—the story of Lohengrin is tolerably familiar to all who take an interest in the subject of modern German dramatic music. Independently of that, however, it is so simply constructed, and involves so few incidents, that a sentence or two may suffice to call it to memory. Why "Henry the Fowler" comes to the city on the Scheldt we have stated. Meanwhile, he finds Brabant in a state of commotion, Godfrey, heir to the late Duke being missing, and Elsa, his sister, resting under the suspicion of having made away with him for selfish purposes. Elsa's accuser is Count Frederick of Telramund, husband of Ortrud of Friesland, in whose right he claims to rule the Duchy. The King, on hearing Elsa declare her innocence, decides that the case shall be put to the test of a combat between the accuser and whatever champion may appear for the accused. Elsa has conjured up in her dreams an imaginary Knight, and, convinced that he will come to her aid, will accept none other. After the trumpet summons has been given twice, and Elsa is almost in despair, a boat glides up the river, drawn by a swan, its sole occupant being a Knight in the full panoply of war. The Knight having landed, the swan and boat gradually recede into the distance; and Lohengrin (for it is he—son of Percival, and one of the keepers of the Holy "Grail") proclaims the innocence of Elsa, offering to be her champion on two conditions; first, that, in case of his proving victorious, she becomes his wife; secondly, that under no circumstances will she ever ask him what may be his name and rank. Elsa gladly consents; the duel ensues, and Lohengrin is the conqueror. He, however, spares the life of Telramund, and preparations for the marriage of the unknown champion with Elsa are immediately ordered by the King. Meanwhile, Ortrud, who has deceived her husband in the matter of the supposed murder of Godfrey, and who is a sorceress besides, pacifies him with the assurance that she will persuade Elsa to ask the secret she has pledged herself never to ask, and which, once revealed, the magic spell that surrounds Lohengrin must be broken. The persuasive powers of Ortrud are successful, and the fatal questions are urged persistently and passionately by Elsa in the nuptial chamber. Telramund, confiding in the result, forces himself into the presence of Lohengrin, who, snatching his own sword from Elsa's hands, despatches without remorse the foe whose life he had already spared. The tie between the stranger champion and his charming earthly bride is now for ever dissolved; and, after a brief explanation to the King and Court, amid the despairing protestations of Elsa, the boat, drawn by the swan, returns to take him away from Brabant to his own distant home. At the same time, Lohengrin removes a gold ring from the neck of the swan, and in its stead appears Godfrey, rightful Duke, who, by the magic of Ortrud, had been metamorphosed into a bird, and now reclaims his inheritance. A white dove, which has been hovering over the boat, descends to fulfil the office until now in charge of the swan; Lohengrin glides away, as at the beginning of the opera he had approached the shore, and, no longer in view, a wail of sorrow is uttered, and Elsa falls senseless to the ground. Such, in few words, is this singularly interesting drama—in feeling so truly poetical, in simplicity of design, in purity of conception and logical symmetry of form, so beautiful that, from a certain point of view, it seems almost incredible how Wagner the poet should also be Wagner the composer. Whatever may be said, and from whatever point of view, about the music of Wagner, and the theory upon which he constructs it, as a necessary element of the drama, to deny his high poetical tendency, even in the musical treatment of the subjects he appropriates—would be absurd. We may question the soundness of his theories; we have often questioned it, and see no reason, even while acknowledging the genuine beauties that save Lohengrin and Tannhäuser (whatever may be urged against Tristan und Isolde, and the Trilogy hovering in the distance) from the charge of unceasing monotony, why we should not question it again. But what cannot fail to enlist sympathy is an earnestness which carries him with more or less artistic self-contentment through every task he undertakes. No libretto manufacturer would be satisfied with Wagner, and with no libretto manufacturer would Wagner feel satisfied For this reason he makes his poems for himself, and in their way these poems are unexampled. The style in which they are forced to submit to the exigences of music will, however, always be discussed.

Digitized by Google

Excerpts from Lohengrin have been frequently heard in public since the year 1855, when Wagner was temporary director of the Philharmonic Concerts, between the nine years of Sir Michael Costa's reign, and the eleven years of Sir Sterndale Bennett's, and the orchestral prelude to the opening act was first made known here. At the same time, it is but fair to add that fragments from the dramatic music of Wagner cannot be appreciated at their actual value. His work, to be judged with anything like fairness, must be considered as a whole. He has an original system, and defends it with pertinacity. He will have no abstract music, no "set pieces."

That Wagner is quite competent to use with advantage the kind of musical structure which seems inherent to the musical art he has shown many times, not only in his earlier compositions, but in this very opera of Lohengrin, in which many themes are indicated, that, carried out in the spirit which suggested them, might live as melodies for all time. As a master of orchestral combinations he has very few rivals; although, as Cherubini would have remarked, "il depense trop de son étoffe." What more remains to be said about the music of Lohengrin must be left for another notice. Meanwhile, the cast of the chief personages was in almost every instance good. Mdlle Albani was an ideal Elsa, meeting every requirement, poetical and musical, of the character; Mdlle d'Angeri did her utmost to make prominent the by no means grateful part of Ortrud; M. Maurel gave due importance to Telramund, also not a very inviting personage; the music of the Herald was just suited to the sonorous bass of Signor Capponi; Herr Seidemann, a new comer this season, although somewhat deficient in vocal power, showed an intelligent appreciation of what was set down for him as the King; and Signor Nicolini, the "Knight of the Swan," was not only personally all that could be imagined, but had made himself thoroughly at home in the music. For the general execution of this, one of the most difficult and complex of operas, the orchestra, chorus, and their conductor, Signor Vianesi (who, with the leading singers, was called on at the end), deserve all praise. The Prince and Princess of Wales were among the audience—as was also Dr Hans von Bülow, Wagner's most illustrious disciple.

—o—

FRENCH PLAYS AT THE OPÉRA COMIQUE.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

DEAR MR EDITOR,—One of the most inimitable of modern French comedies, La Boule, was produced here on Wednesday last, with a success unprecedented. Let some of the modern dramatists take a lesson in the art of construction from this piece, and study it in its minutest details. From first to last the piece never flags, every phrase has its meaning. The humour is most racy, yet perfect of its kind, not a word seems "de trop," and that the audience thought so was evident, for not a point escaped them. The domestic sorrows and difficulties of the husband and wife; the intrigues of Le Baron Musardière with the actress; the plots and strategies of the man-servant; the humours of the court of justice, are depicted with a force and vigour undeniable. Of the acting little can be said but praise. Schaub, as the Baron; James, as the irritable husband; Lecourt, as the man-servant; and Perrier, as Judge, were all excellent. Mdlle Desirée, Mdlle Fabert, and Madame Wilhem, never played better. A special word is due to the latter, who, as Mariette, the actress, entered "con amore" into the spirit of the character, and acted with a sprightliness truly refreshing. The comedy promises to have a long run.—I am, dear Mr Editor, yours faithfully,

IGNACE GIBSONE.

May 7th, 1875.

NAPLES.

(From a Correspondent.)

The Politeama is announced to open very shortly with opera. Three new works are to be produced, the first being La Fata, by Sig. Miceoli. The Teatro Sannazzaro is occupied by a French opéra bouffe company, playing Les Braconniers, La Fille de Mad. Angot, Le Canard à trois Becs, &c. Fra Diavolo was, a few weeks since, attracting large audiences to the same theatre. Speaking of Auber's score, a well-known Italian critic observes: "To conclude, I maintain that this Fra Diavolo deserves to be known throughout the Peninsula. Confound it! When Madame Angot and her Daughter travel from one extremity to the other of our beautiful country, why should we not acclimatise works which merit universal citizenship, even though they are of French origin? It is disgraceful that, while people mention complacently Lecocq, Hervé, &c., they ignore the fact that the modern Babylon gave birth, also, to Auber, Hérold, and Boieldieu, who are truly worthy of the admiration of Italians. Let us circulate the musical French gold from the mine of Boieldieu, Hérold and Auber, but let us reject the tinsel of . . . . well, intelligenti pauca."

Christine Nilsson at Sydenham.

The Crystal Palace concert on Saturday afternoon was a "special" entertainment. The engagement of Mdlle Christine Nilsson, the most popular singer of the hour, having expired with the Royal Italian Opera season of 1869, she was at liberty to make terms with the authorities of the Crystal Palace, and the "eighth Summer Concert" was in a great measure organized with a view to the exhibition of her powers. A more complete success could hardly have been obtained. Mdlle Nilsson was set down for three pieces—two sacred and one secular—each of which she sang to the entire gratification and delight of one of the most crowded audiences of the year. Her reception was enthusiastic. How admirably Mdlle Nilsson could sing sacred music had already been proved on various occasions, in London and elsewhere, and was only the more convincingly established now. The truth is that she is a genuine artist, with a genuine claim upon public sympathy, the very rarest natural endowments being in her person combined with a degree of cultivation almost as rare; and, where the means exist, intelligence, accompanied by industry, it need scarcely be said, can effect wonders. Mdlle Nilsson has made no child's play of her vocation, but, the rather, a serious and well-directed study; and when she came forward in sacred music (the first two parts of Haydn's Creation) she had taken quite as much into consideration her own glory as the wishes of a large section of the public disinclined to attend theatrical performances in a theatre, but not the less desirous of hearing theatrical singers of eminence in a concert-room. A more spirited and brilliant rendering of Handel's "Let the bright Seraphim" (Samson) than that of Mdlle Nilsson has seldom been heard; and this notwithstanding that the trumpeter of trumpeters being ill, the obbligato part was, perforce, executed upon the cornet-à-piston. Haydn's more quiet and melodious air, "With verdure clad," was another legitimate triumph. In beauty of vocal tone, finished phrasing, and truth of expression, Mdlle Nilsson's delivery of this air has not often been equalled, still less often surpassed. About the famous scene of the madness from Lucia di Lammermoor (her secular contribution), when we have said she gave it from end to end as forcibly, expressively, and poetically as ever, another word will not be expected, unless it be to record how well she was supported in the flute obbligato. Mdlle Nilsson had been already unanimously called back at the termination of each of her sacred songs, but her reception after the scena di bravura of Donizetti was something out of the common—nothing more, however, than was amply merited by one of the most eloquent displays of dramatic singing that have marked our time.

Not long ago.

Digitized by Google

THE ELFIN TREE AT THE ALEXANDRA PALACE.

On Wednesday afternoon there was a special attraction at the Alexandra Palace, a new operetta (The Elfin Tree), composed by Louis Diehl, already well known as a composer, by his popular songs, "The Mariner," "Dear England;" etc. Rumour had whispered favourably of the forthcoming work, and, before the commencement of the performance, the spacious theatre was filled with an audience, among whom might be recognized many of the leading members of musical London. The libretto, (by "Peyton Wrey") is a dramatic trifle, containing, not alone the nucleus of an ingenious plot, but many charming ideas and some sparkling dialogue; all of which had a fitting prologue in the musical introduction—a piece of descriptive writing, foreshadowing the idyllic character of the operetta,—which at once riveted attention, by its originality and mastery of the resources of orchestration. A striking effect produced by a sudden pause in the orchestral music, and the introduction of a vocal unaccompanied quartet, sung upon the still curtained stage, (Villagers' Evening Hymn), elicited a burst of applause, and obtained at once the sympathies of the audience.

The first scene represents the garden of a castle in Germany, with the usual parterres, statues, fountains, etc., among which a young peasant maiden (Maria, waiting-maid to the Countess Anna, personated by Miss Gaylord, soprano) is regretfully soliloquising upon the impecuniosity of her lover (Hans, a peasant), which prevents the usual finale to their mutual affection. Her meditation terminates in a song ("If Hans were rich"), a graceful melody in 3-4 time, waltz-like in its easy swing, but managing to evade conventionality while affording scope for the exhibition of vocal skill. Interrupted by the entrance of her lover, Hans (Mr Nordblom), Maria soon recurs, with feminine pertinacity, to the subject of her thoughts, and, full of an old legend that tells of an Elf dwelling in a certain tree in the neighbouring forest, whose protection may be claimed by those born on a certain day and hour, is agreeably surprised to find that Hans may reasonably lay claim to be one of the individuals thus favoured by the caprice of Time. Hearing that, to assert his right to the Elf's good-will, he must go at midnight into the forest and sing an incantation to the mysterious tenant of the enchanted tree, Hans (evidently of a nervous disposition) does not exactly share as he might in the ardour of his betrothed at the possibility of good fortune, and the sentiments of both are well expressed in a dramatic duet ("Into the forest dark and grim,") whose bright refrain, betokening the half-reluctant assent of Hans to brave and dare all for Maria's sake, gleams like a sunbeam amid the shadows of the dreamy forest music. A consequent love-scene between the peasant pair is interrupted by the entrance of the remaining dramatis personæ—Count Rudolf (Mr Aynsley Cook) and his betrothed, the Countess Anna (Miss Goodall), upon the horizon of whose happiness a cloud seems to have gathered; the Count sorrowfully informing Anna that he has lost all his property, and has nothing left to console him but his chivalrous sentiments and the assurance of her love. A martial solo for the Count (likely, we imagine, to be a favourite bass song) is followed by a short duet (allegro moderato), whose charm lies almost as much in its graceful construction as in its flowing melody. Immediately upon these follow a no less melodious song for Anna ("Happy days in store")—a half-plaintive, half-hopeful strain, with a choice accompaniment that supports, while not overloading, the voice. A repetition of the peasants' Evening Hymn in the distance leads to the second scene. The sunset fades, the stage darkens, and the scene changes to a forest glade—the Elfin Tree mysterious in the gloaming. The suggestive and romantic phrases which commenced the introduction are here repeated, and Hans and Maria re-enter: Hans, uncertain of gait and reluctant of aspect; Maria more confident, encouraging her timid lover with appropriate remarks in recitative. The orchestration here, and in the duet which follows, can hardly be too highly praised, exhibiting as it does a power in the composer to realize snatches of delicate fancy, which is a true indication of an original and capable mind. In fact, throughout the operetta, the music is so aptly wedded to the libretto, so thoroughly significant of the author's meaning, that, in spite of the incoherence with which the text was rendered by the performers, the audience could hardly fail to grasp that which should have been conveyed to them by words. After stage business (Maria's coaxing, Hans' reluctance and fear, &c.), he at last advances, and, singing the incantation in hurried tones, breaks off the "magic branch" from the "Elfin tree" (which, by the way, might, with advantage, be a more prominent object in the scenery at the Alexandra Palace). This manœuvre is instantly followed by a declamation from the Elf of the Tree ("Rash mortal, &c., thou diest within the hour"), a threat considerably alarming to the lovers, which is subsequently withdrawn by the Elf after a second singing of the incantation. The Elf then proceeds to ask Hans his demand. Hans, prompted by the good-natured Maria, asks for the restoration of Count Rudolf to the rights and riches of which some barely-explained circumstance has deprived him. Upon the Elf's assurance that this desired restoration has already taken place, and inquiry as to what further desire the petitioner may have, Hans, emboldened by the seeming good temper of the dreaded sprite, suggests that he would not object to call "his little love, Maria, wife." Immediately upon this occurs the denouement: the Elf, who in reality is Count Rudolf, steps from behind the tree, followed by Anna; the aristocratic pair, suddenly restored to wealth and happiness, having overheard the plan of the less exalted lovers, and determined to have some amusement out of their credulity, have come hither to personate the Elf. The Count, touched by the good feeling shown by his dependants, appoints Hans head-ranger, and, thereby removing the obstacle to their marriage, makes Maria happy, and leads to the descent of the curtain upon the general satisfaction of the quartet. Not, however, before that satisfaction has been agreeably made manifest in a brilliant finale: a quartet which is a fitting and worthy conclusion to the foregoing music, and whose construction stamps Mr Louis Diehl a thorough musician as well as a gifted melodist.

The singers acquitted themselves of their task with uniform ability, and the orchestra, under the direction of Mr Weist Hill, executed all that was required of them with delicacy and precision. Miss Gaylord has a pure soprano voice, a good method, and is a promising actress. Mr Nordblom did ample justice to his part. The Count and Anna are secondary characters, but were redeemed from being actually so by the care with which they were represented by Miss Goodall and Mr Aynsley Cook. The performance had hardly ended before the performers were summoned to receive the congratulatory plaudits of the audience; and, upon their retiring, a perfect storm of applause arose, and would not subside until the composer had appeared and bowed his acknowledgments. A more legitimate success could hardly be obtained, and we hope it may encourage Mr Diehl to persevere, and let us hear still greater achievements from his able and fluent pen. Z.

BRUSSELS.

(From our Correspondent.)

The Théâtre de la Monnaie has closed its doors until the Autumn, and a considerable number of persons once more complain that they do not know where to spend their evenings. They say that the weather is not such as to entice them to the al fresco delights of the "Waux-Hall" concerts, and that the Monnaie ought to remain open another month. But, supposing the Corporation, as the Guide Musical remarks, were to stipulate that the manager should prolong his Winter season for the period mentioned, they could not expect him to do so at his own risk. If the temperature were cold or humid, provocative of colds and rheumatism, the public would doubtless patronise him; but, were the weather warm and genial, his chance of profit would be nil. Thus, unless the Corporation consent to make up any deficit, which is unlikely, things will pursue their old course.

At the second Concert of the Royal Conservatory the programme included Viotti's 17th Concerto for Violin; Bach's Piano Concerto in C, for Two Pianos; Beethoven's music to Prometheus and Eighth Symphony; Mendelssohn's Overture to A Midsummer Night's Dream, and the music of Gluck's ballet Iphigénie en Aulide. The principal artists were MM. Wieniawski, Brassin, Dupont, Joseph Servais, Neumann, Poncelet, and Dumon.

MILAN.—M. Lecocq's Près-St-Gervais has been brought out at the Teatro Santa Radegonda, and well received. Signore Preziosi, Boccabadati, Manzoni, Signori Caroselli and Forelli, were the representatives of the leading characters.

Digitized by Google

THE NEW PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

(From an Occasional Contributor.)

With such an orchestra as this society has, including among its members some of our very best solo performers upon their respective instruments (to name one, without giving the names of several, would be invidious), it would be more than strange if the performance of the symphonies and overtures which form the chief attraction in its programmes were other than excellent. The second concert of its present series, which took place on Saturday afternoon last, was fully equal to the first. If it lacked the novelty of a symphony which had not been previously heard in London, this want was counterbalanced by its including perhaps the very finest purely orchestral work in existence—the C minor Symphony of Beethoven. The performance of this sublime creation (under the direction of Dr Wylde) was what might have been expected from an orchestra so well-balanced with respect to its various instruments—the wood, the brass, and the strings being in due proportion. Failing such an adjustment, the finest performance would but inadequately present a great composer's conception.

The concert began with Mendelssohn's exquisitely-beautiful overture, The Hebrides; and, the conditions we have named being satisfied, it may be accepted as a foregone conclusion almost, that the result was worthy the society's reputation, giving equal delight to the musical cognoscenti, who can trace to its true cause the pleasure they experienced, and to that much larger class, who know not whence their source of enjoyment really arises. This, as well as the overture with which the concert terminated (Le Domino Noir), was conducted by Mr Ganz, in his usual firm manner. Much interest was attached to this concert by reason of the appearance at it of Dr Hans von Bülow and a lady of whom—it is said—the doctor has expressed his high approval—Mrs Beesley. Bach's Concerto in C minor, for two pianofortes, was performed by the lady and the gentleman. After this, Mrs Beesley appeared as the exponent of the pianoforte part of Liszt's Concerto in E flat; and, towards the close of the concert, the lady and the gentleman were heard in Schumann's Andante with Variations in B flat, for two pianofortes. That the lady was very nervous, and, consequently, not in complete possession of her powers, was very evident; and, therefore, justice requires that we should have a further opportunity of hearing her, and in music of a somewhat different character from Liszt's Concerto, ere a definite opinion can be expressed of her, even as an executant. It is possible to play a Liszt concerto with effect, without the ability to give a perfect presentation of a sonata by Beethoven. Excellence in pianoforte playing is produced by a combination of essentials. It is not always shown in playing forte passages with great brilliancy, or piano passages with extreme delicacy. For this may be done without the ability to play, with adequate sentiment, well-written phrases replete with meaning; without, in short, having the power to transfer to the mind of the intelligent listener the full intention of the composer, who has felt what he has written, and who wishes those who hear it to sympathize with his emotions. This was what we expected and always found in the playing of the lady whose name gets constantly wafted to us from the other side of the world by the breath of the applause her performances evoke. Mrs Beesley—for we would not be misunderstood—may be equal to this, but we want opportunities of ascertaining the truth in the matter. If the lady be a pupil of Dr Hans von Bülow, it is but natural to expect that she will evince the possession of something of the great pianist's style, with some of its characteristics and excellences. But it is right to insist upon the great difference between the calm presentation of a classical work, and the impulsive and fantastic playing required in order to give a seemingly correct performance of a romantic work by Liszt, in which the absence of the triangle would be detrimental to its proper effect. The difference is about as great as that subsisting between a beautiful statue from the chisel of Canova, or the equally great Thorwaldsen, and a painting of high colour by a disciple of the modern realistic school. The concerto produced a great effect, the orchestra being conducted by Dr von Bülow, who has the entire score in his memory, whose admirable conducting is well known, and who, on this occasion, was enabled to make his bâton second any possible departure from the most strict tempo that the pianist might make. After her performance the lady was twice summoned to the platform to receive the plaudits of her friends and admirers. In the Duet by Schumann there is scarcely any hiding of the fact that the attention of the audience was principally directed to the gentleman. Where Art is concerned, gallantry is partly forgotten. In this piece Hans von Bülow had not opportunities for displaying all his usual excellences and characteristics. There was, however, the customary "intellectuality" on the one hand, and the wont manipulative skill on the other; the same gradations there were of musical colouring; the same crescendos and diminuendos; the same reductions from forte playing to that of pianissimo (not by jerks, which occasion little surprise in the case of some performers), which have been often held to be not among the least of the charms of his playing. There was, too, the same power of overcoming the most extreme executive difficulties, with all the rest of the qualities (some of which he possesses in common with a few other performers, and some of which are exclusively his own) which distinctively mark this popular interpreter of pianoforte music. In a word, Hans von Bülow was in his usual form; and, as the present was his last public appearance for the season, he was received with a full amount of the favour which invariably greets him.

The vocalist was Mdlle Friedlander, another German soprano, a young lady from Leipzig; and like the lady who sang at the previous concert, her best efforts were in some Lieder, one of which, by Ferdinand Hiller, she was compelled to repeat. The hall was crowded.

ANT-EATER.

—o—

BERLIN.

(From a Correspondent.)

The fourth and last performance during the present season of Anton Rubinstein's Maccabäer filled every place in the Royal Operahouse, the principal artists being rewarded for their efforts by repeated applause and recalls. The composer has been made a corresponding member of the French Academy of Fine Arts. Two concerts were lately given in the Concerthaus, under the direction of Richard Wagner, for the benefit of the Grand-National-Festival-Stage-Play performances at Bayreuth. The programme included the "Kaisermarsch," and fragments from the Götterdämmerung. Mad. Friedrich Materna and Herr Niemann were the vocalists.

—o—

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(From our Correspondent.)

Our musical season may at last be said to have come to an end, for, as you are probably aware, our recess takes place at the time when you are most active in London, and it may be some time before I shall again have anything to communicate likely to interest your readers. Last night the last of the Gentlemen's Concerts for the present season was given, when a programme of Chamber Music and Part Singing, sufficiently attractive to please a large audience, concluded the season in a very satisfactory manner. The programme will speak for itself:—

Grand Trio in G major, for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello (Mr Charles Hallé, Mdme Norman-Neruda, and Herr Franz Neruda)—Raff; Glee, "Come see what pleasure" (Manchester Vocal Society)—Elliott; Rondo in A, for two violins (Mdme Norman-Neruda and Mdme Arlberg Neruda)—Maurer; Part-song, "You stole my love" (Manchester Vocal Society)—Macfarren; Trios, "Sheherazade" and "Träumerei," arranged for two violins and violoncello by F. Neruda (Mdme Norman-Neruda, Mdme Arlberg Neruda, and Herr Franz Neruda)—Schumann; Grand Sonata in E flat (Op. 12, No. 3), for pianoforte and violin (Mr Charles Hallé and Mdme Norman-Neruda)—Beethoven; Part-songs, Songs of Innocence—"Night" and "Laughing Song" (Manchester Vocal Society)—Blumenthal; Solo Pianoforte, "Novellette in F" (Mr Charles Hallé)—Schumann; Three Swedish Melodies, arranged for two violins and violoncello (Mdme Norman-Neruda, Mdme Arlberg Neruda, and Herr Franz Neruda); Hunting Song, "Onward Roaming," (with echo) (Manchester Vocal Society)—Muller.

The concert might almost be called a Neruda family's concert, assisted by Mr Charles Hallé and the Vocal Society. The playing of Madame Arlberg Neruda and Herr Franz Neruda was very much admired, and it is to be hoped that their next visit to England will be at a time when the Manches ter public can enjoy their performances.

May 12th, 1875.

Digitized by Google

SIGNOR SALVINI.

The tragedy, Il Gladiatore, in which at Drury Lane, on Friday week, this eminent artist appeared in his second character, is an Italian version of a French tragedy by M. Alexandre Soumet, known as the author of the tragedy Norma, on which Bellini's more celebrated opera was based. It is a strange, wild piece, standing midway between the old classical drama and the romanticism of the Hugo school, and it abounds in opportunities for acting of the most powerful kind.

Niger, a Thracian combatant of the Amphitheatre, known at Rome as the "Gladiator" par excellence, has been the slave of the Lady Faustina, subsequently the Empress-mother, who, by the advice of a sorceress, has cruelly murdered his wife, that she may obtain a philter enabling her to become a parent. When 15 years have elapsed, Niger has escaped from Faustina, and has attained his high celebrity in the arena, but he has lost his infant daughter, who came into the world about the time of her mother's death, somewhat after the fashion of Macduff. In the meanwhile, Faustina has given birth to a son, who now rules as the Emperor Gordian. The Empress-mother and the Gladiator meet in the Catacombs, the asylum of the Christians, and, in spite of the natural enmity between them, it seems not impossible that they may conclude a treaty of peace. Gordian's seat is by no means secure, and the gods have decreed that his fate shall be indissolubly bound up with that of the Gladiator's child. She can probably be traced to Egypt, and the question is whether her father, by the hope of wealth and freedom, can be tempted to find her.

Faustina has another trouble besides the doubtful lot of her Imperial son. She is deeply enamoured of Flaviano, a noble Roman, whom she would gladly make her husband, but Flaviano, instead of reciprocating her feeling, has fallen in love with Neodamia, one of his slaves, whom he emancipates for the purpose of marrying her. The Empress would employ the Gladiator to assassinate her humble rival, but he no sooner finds himself alone with his intended victim than he instinctively relents and declares that he will be her protector.

When the marriage of Flaviano and Neodamia is about to be celebrated in the Temple of Juno, a new complexity arises. Origene, a Christian priest, named, no doubt, after the Alexandrian Father, is brought in a prisoner, pursued by an infuriated mob, and is defended by Neodamia, who not only declares that she herself holds the persecuted faith, but overturns the tripod which stands by the statue of the goddess. She is at once condemned to the Circus.

Now comes the most powerful scene in the entire play. The stage represents the Circus, the background being occupied by the seats, thronged with spectators; while on one side is the place occupied by Faustina, and on the other the priests' place, the chief figure in which is a fanatical priest of Juno. In the arena is the Gladiator, not unwilling to distinguish himself by some feat of arms, and disappointed when he finds that, instead of fighting lions, he is bound to exterminate a weak girl. Neodamia is brought in; and, as he at once recognizes her as the person whom Faustina required him to murder, he implores the spectators to allow him to spare her life. But people, priests, and Empress are inexorable, Faustina insisting that if the Gladiator proves contumacious, the victim shall be given to the lions. Perceiving that under the circumstances the use of the sword will be merciful, the Gladiator removes the veil from Neodamia, and by a mark on the shoulder discovers that she is his lost child. When he proclaims the terrible fact, the feeling of the priests and the populace remains unaltered, for, in their opinion, a slave has no right to parental affections. But a change has come over the spirit of Faustina, who is now as anxious as the Gladiator to save the life of the girl, whose fate is so mysteriously combined with that of her son, and at last succeeds in obtaining a day's respite.

That this situation is most striking the driest description would suffice to show, but to know the full effect it is capable of producing it is necessary to see the magnificent acting of Signor Salvini as the Gladiator. As in Othello, he long indulges in a reserve of power. In the previous scenes he has given a fine exhibition of a naturally noble nature oppressed by an ineradicable sense of wrong. Now, in his delineation of the sudden outburst of paternal emotion, he abandons himself to the situation with a force which causes the whole picture to appear a reality, and the audience are roused into a state of excitement that could hardly be exceeded were they transferred into a Roman circus. That this scene alone will insure popularity to the play there is no reason to doubt.

The same spirit is continued through the concluding act. Aided by Faustina, Neodamia, with her father, is on the point of escaping from the prison in which she is confined; but the place is surrounded by the mob, who would again drag her to the Circus. To prevent the outrage the Gladiator kills her with his own hand, and the decree of Fate is fulfilled, for almost at the same moment Faustina learns that the Imperial Palace is destroyed, and that her son is slain.

It cannot be denied that Il Gladiatore, considered apart from the acting, gives evidence of decided genius and extraordinary inventive faculty. Whether it would be received with favour by an admiring English public may be doubted. The circumstances under which the Gladiator's wife was killed, and which are narrated with a minuteness which we have purposely avoided, are revolting, and a free use is made of sacred names, which ill accords with the general feeling on this side of the Channel. But associated with the acting of Signor Salvini, the play is received with an enthusiasm not often to be found; and the simple fact that a numerous audience follows, with undisguised admiration the words of a language but little known to the theatrical public, save in connexion with music, is of itself a marvel.

On Monday morning Signor Salvini appeared as Othello, and Il Gladiatore was repeated on Wednesday.

SIGNOR VERDI.

The Requiem composed by Giuseppe Verdi in honour of his illustrious compatriot and friend, the late Alessandro Manzoni, is to be publicly performed this afternoon. On Wednesday night, in the Royal Albert Hall, a full rehearsal was held, the conductor being Signor Verdi himself. With what genuine English heartiness he was received may be imagined. Now, for some thirty years, the most gifted of living Italian musicians has charmed the English operatic public with his lyric dramas, which, from Nabucco and Ernani to Il Trovatore, Rigoletto, and La Traviata (passing by a good many others) have, with rare exceptions, been eminently successful. Among us the name of Verdi has long been a household word, and some of his melodies are as familiar and as much in vogue as the most beautiful of our own national airs. Signor Verdi's visits to this country have been few and far between. The first was in 1847, to superintend the production of his Masnadieri (an opera founded upon the Robbers of Schiller), when Her Majesty's Theatre was directed by the late Mr Benjamin Lumley and Jenny Lind was the reigning "star." The second was in 1862, when, as the acknowledged existing representative of Italian musical art, he composed an ode for the opening of our International Exhibition, which, however, for reasons unexplained, was not performed on that occasion, and, but for its production by Mr Mapleson at Her Majesty's Theatre, would, though an undoubtedly fine and characteristic piece, in every likelihood not have been heard at all—at any rate in London. That Signor Verdi should, in the zenith of his career, betake himself to writing music for the Catholic Church can surprise no one who is thoroughly acquainted with his compositions. He has the true instinct for that particular school, of which no more convincing proof could be cited than the solemn Mass for Manzoni, rehearsed on Wednesday night, in presence of one of the most crowded audiences ever brought together within the precincts of the Royal Albert Hall. There was an orchestra strong in number and efficient in executive power; there was the Albert Hall chorus, of which Mr Joseph Barnby has been the indefatigable trainer, aided by delegates from other choral bodies; the leading vocalists were Mesdames Stoltz and Waldmann (soprano and contralto), Signor Masini and Medini (tenor and bass), who have been singing the Requiem in the principal towns of Italy, France, and elsewhere—a quartet fully up to the desired standard. Lastly, as we have said, the composer of the Requiem was also the conductor of the performance, and an admirable conductor he showed himself. This introduction of Verdi's newest work, however, being officially advertised as a "rehearsal," we await the public performance, announced for to-day, which will also be under his direction. Meanwhile, we may briefly state that the Requiem made an evidently deep impression, and that closer acquaintance with it can only lead to a conviction that the dramatic genius which has long distinguished its author as a composer for the stage is likely to serve him in a very different sphere of art. One thing is unquestionable—what Verdi has here put down is, as usual, emphatically his own, and, as in his operas so in his Requiem, he is indebted to neither predecessor nor contemporary.

Digitized by Google

ST JAMES'S HALL,

REGENT STREET AND PICCADILLY.

MR CHARLES HALLÉ'S

Pianoforte Recitals.

MR CHARLES HALLÉ has the honour to announce that his Fifteenth Series of PIANOFORTE RECITALS will take place on the he following afternoons:—

FRIDAY, May 21, 1875.	FRIDAY, June 11, 1875.
FRIDAY, May 28, 1875.	FRIDAY, June 18, 1875.
FRIDAY, June 4, 1875.	FRIDAY, June 25, 1875.

THIRD RECITAL,

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, MAY 21, 1875.

To Commence at Three o'clock precisely.

Programme.

QUARTETT in G major, Op. 50 (first time), for pianoforte, violin, viola, and violoncello—Mr CHARLES HALLÉ, Mdme NORMAN-NERUDA, Herr STRAUS, and Herr FRANZ NERUDA .. .. .. F. Kiel.

SONATA in F sharp, Op. 78, for pianoforte alone—Mr CHARLES HALLÉ .. .. Beethoven.

GRAND FANTASIA, Op. 159, for pianoforte and violin—Mr CHARLES HALLÉ and Mdme NORMAN-NERUDA .. .. .. Schubert.

NOCTURNE in E, Op. 62 } for pianoforte alone—Mr
MAZURKA in C sharp minor } CHARLES HALLÉ Chopin.

TRIO in E flat, No. 5 (first time), for pianoforte violin, and violoncello—Mr CHARLES HALLÉ, Mdme NORMAN-NERUDA, and Herr FRANZ NERUDA .. .. Haydn.

Sofa Stalls (numbered and reserved), 7s.; balcony, 3s.; area, One Shilling.

Subscriptions received at Chappell & Co.'s, 50, New Bond Street; Mitchell's, 33, Old Bond Street; Ollivier's, 38, Old Bond Street; Keith, Prowse & Co.'s, 48, Cheapside; Hays's, 4, Royal Exchange Buildings; Austin's Ticket Office, 28, Piccadilly; and by Mr CHARLES HALLÉ, 11, Mansfield Street, Cavendish Square.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

DR CUBBING L. SOFORTH.—The four chief singers in Verdi's Requiem are Mdme Stolz (soprano), of Milan, Cairo, and St Petersburg; Mdme Waldmann (contralto), of Milan, Cairo, and Naples; Signor Massini (tenor), of Florence and Cairo; and Signor Medini (bass), of Milan, Cairo, and Rome. Dr Soforth is wrong about the State Concert at Buckingham Palace. Three pieces by the late Sir Sterndale Bennett were in the programme; two from The May Queen, and one from The Woman of Samaria.

DEATHS.

On Sunday last, Mrs RICHARD TEMPLE, late Miss BESSIE EMMETT, in her 30th year.

On May 4th, at St Leonard's Terrace, Chelsea, Mr CHARLES D. BETTS, member of Her Majesty's Private Band, aged 64.

NOTICE.

To ADVERTISERS.—The Office of the MUSICAL WORLD is at Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & Co.'s, 244, Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street (First Floor). It is requested that Advertisements may be sent not later than Thursday. Payment on delivery.

The Musical World,

LONDON, SATURDAY, MAY 15, 1875.

ABOUT MOZART.

IN 1756, Leopold Mozart published a Violin Method at Augsburg. It was translated into French and Dutch, and subsequently reprinted by Kühnel, at Leipsic.

According to the testimony of great masters, the plan of this Method was very good. The contents are enriched by fingered passages, alla Tartini. The book served to form some excellent musicians in Germany during the 18th century. Independently of theoretical works, L. Mozart is the author of six Trios for Stringed Instruments; Twelve Pieces for Piano, Augsburg; "Morning" and "Evening," in harmony, for the inhabitants of Salzburg. He left in manuscript: twelve oratorios, and several pieces of Church music; a great number of pieces for the theatre, some symphonies, thirty serenades, and a goodly number of concertos for wind instruments.* His correspondence with his family proves him to have possessed excellent qualities both of heart and head. At Salzburg he was considered satirical. He married, in 1748, Anna Bertlina, and had by her seven children, two of whom survived. The great glory of Leopold Mozart, says a French author, "consists in his being the father of the author of Don Juan, and of having understood and directed his genius. He saw at a very early period his son's destiny. In his deep piety, he believed that he beheld a ray of divine grace on Wolfgang's forehead, and from that moment all his existence was devoted to the education of the boy whom he considered a superior being, committed by Providence to his care." Little Wolfgang, born on the 27th January, 1756, had an elder sister, Maria Anna, who manifested great natural aptitude for music. She was born in 1751, and was already a very good executant on the piano, at the time of the first tour in 1768. She was applauded in France, England, Holland, and Vienna. She married, in 1784, Baron von Sonnenberg, Councillor at the Court of Salzburg. Having become a widow about 1801, she returned and taught the piano in her native town, where she died, aged eighty-four.

Her brother was only three when she began the piano. On seeing her practising, little Wolfgang would often go up to the instrument, and try to find out thirds with his tiny hands. A harmonic interval caused him a feeling of lively emotion. When he was four, he already recollected the solos in a pianoforte concerto. His father played him little pieces, which Mozart learned in half-an-hour, and then executed in measure and very neatly. When he was five, he composed short pieces, which his father helped him to write down, and which have been preserved.

Professor Fröhlich, who had an opportunity of seeing the book in which were written all the little pieces learnt by Mozart, and those which he composed and wrote down himself, thus refers to them in the Leipsic Musical Gazette of 1817. . . "Every person of genius takes his proper direction at an early epoch. Mozart felt strongly attracted to music, and the pieces he composed when five years old, though nothing extraordinary as compositions, prove that this infant prodigy even then possessed exceptional natural aptitude for the art. From his tenderest age he received the gift of formulating his thoughts, to which he was destined to give so great an elevation."

Before he applied himself to music, his ardent temperament caused him to embrace everything with extreme eagerness. He busied himself with the most childish matter to such an extent as neither to eat nor drink. He was possessed of an amiable, tender, and gentle disposition. He would frequently ask the persons who called at his father's: "Are you fond of me?" and, if he did not at once receive a favourable reply, would be grieved even to tears. From the time he began learning music, he lost all taste for childish games. In his moments of recreation, music was his companion just as at other times. He played tolerably on the violin, and manifested a natural talent for mathematics. Grave and thoughtful, he was never unoccupied. He exhibited extreme zeal in all he undertook. One day, Wengl, the violinist, brought several trios to try over with L. Mozart. Little Wolfgang took his violin and wanted to join the party. On his father remarking that he had not practised the instrument enough, the boy replied that there was no need of being a very good player to take the second part, and executed his

* Some writers attribute to him also an operetta, Bastien und Bastienne; La Cantatrice ed il Poeta, intermezzo a due Persone, and Musikalische Schlittenfahrt, arrangirt für Piano-Forte. (Note by M. N[illegible]) task with such precision, that his father and Schachtner, a friend of his, could not recover from their surprise. He would frequently endeavour to find out themes on his piano; he possessed the instinct of harmony. When he was six, he set about composing a concerto. He had finished the first part, when his father, accompanied by a friend, came in. The following conversation then ensued. The Father: What are you about there?—Wolfgang: I am writing a pianoforte concerto, of which the first part will soon be finished.—The Father: Let me see it; it must be something very fine.—Wolfgang: No, it is not ready.—The father took the paper from the boy, and showed it to his friend. It was a mass of scribbling, almost illegible on account of the blots. The two friends at first laughed at it. But, when the father examined it, his eyes remained long riveted upon what he beheld. With tears of admiration in his eyes, he said to his friend: "See how admirably all this is arranged according to rule! But," he added, "no one will be able to play such a composition." "As for the matter of that," replied the child, "a person must work at it; it is a concerto, and requires to be thoroughly studied. Look, father, it ought to go thus." With this he began playing, but was unable to render his ideas. The concerto, by the way, was written with an accompaniment of trumpets, kettle-drums, etc.

Digitized by Google

At this epoch little Wolfgang's progress on the piano was so remarkable that his father no longer hesitated undertaking his grand tour, that his son's extraordinary talent might be heard abroad.

* * * * * * * * *

The town of Salzburg, whence they set out, now boasts of the statue of him on whom Germany has conferred the title of: Divine. Salzburg, the ancient Juavavia of the Romans, and the birthplace of W. A. Mozart, is situate at the foot of the Italian Alps. In the distance are seen the snow-capped mountains, at whose base reposes the white town, built in the Italian style. At every moment, the eye discovers forests, cascades, and rivers, separated by blocks of granite. The Hunterberg towers like a giant over the scene, to the splendour of which a few old ruins also contribute. The memory of Charlemagne hovers over the ancient castle of Hohen-Salzburg. In the town, behold the Mozarteum, behold the street—the Getreidegasse—where, in a house of modest appearance, No. 225, was born the infant prodigy, on the 27th January, 1756. It was in this town, too, that his father, L. Mozart, died in 1787.

Of the great composer's six children, two only survived him. The youngest, Wolfgang, manifested at an early age great natural talent for music, and it is of him that Mozart said he cried in the key in which he heard his father playing on the piano! After a long stay at Leopol in Gallicia, Mozart, Jun., set out on his journey, 1819—1820, towards Copenhagen, where his mother had resided, since her marriage with M. Nissen, Danish Councillor of State, and author of the Biography of Mozart.

After travelling through Prussia, Saxony, and Italy, and subsequently paying a visit to Prague, Mozart, Jun., arrived at Warsaw. According to an account in the Leipsic Musical Gazette, he gave a very brilliant concert at the Grand Theatre, when, after playing several of his father's compositions, and several of his own, he extemporised, at the end of the concert, on national Polish airs. The following year he gave a fine concert at Prague, the inhabitants of which were enthusiastic admirers of his father's music. After his return to Leopol in Gallicia, where he taught the piano, he was asked, in 1826, by his mother to come to her at Salzburg. She had just lost her second husband, and returned to her native place, after having been married to M. Nissen seventeen years.

That same year Mozart's Requiem was performed at Salzburg, on the anniversary of his death, in the presence of his relatives and under the direction of his son. The performance is said to have been one of the finest ever known in Germany. Some months afterwards, Mozart, Jun., gave a concert in which he introduced his Pianoforte Concerto in E flat, as well as a Quintet for Piano, Hautbois, Clarinet, Horn, and Bassoon. He thus laid the first stone of a funereal monument to his father.

On returning to Leopol, he established a vocal association, called the Cecilien-Chor, with a view of encouraging a taste for music. The association, composed of the most eminent persons in all classes of society, rendered good service, and did great honour to its founder.

Several of his letters, addressed from Lemberg, to his mother, refer to a grand funereal service performed, with the co-operation of the Cecilien-Chor, in memory of Mozart. The Requiem was admirably got up and executed under the direction of the celebrated violinist, Lipinski, at St George's.

M. Nissen's biography contains six of these letters, which extend to the 16th January, 1828, and are full of interesting details concerning the musical doings in this part of Poland. The town of Leopol, or Lemberg (in Polish: "Lwow"), was always celebrated for its artistic tastes. It was the residence of the great families of Poland, and the society there was charming. Mozart, Jun., was favourably received in the place, and his stay was productive of good. He associated more particularly with the German colony, but he praised the Polish society very much, and formed among its members many excellent pupils.

Thanks to his long stay in Leopol, a taste for good music was propagated there and in Gallicia. That province can boast of having given birth to several great musicians of the 16th century, such as Valentin Brzozowski, Sebastien de Felsztyn, Martin Leopolita, etc. Among the talented musicians of modern times may be mentioned J. Lipinski, Serwaczynzki, N. Biernacki, and M. Starzewski, violinists; MM. Charles Mikuli, a pupil of Chopin's, composer and pianist, and conductor of the Musical Society, J. Milan, L. Marek, and K. Ziembicki, pianists; A. Korytynski, composer, and Mad. Croisez (the lamented Clotilde Bogdanowicz), vocalist, possessing a very fine voice, besides a large number of distinguished artists and singers belonging to the new musical society Towarzystwo muzyczne Lwowkie, which gives excellent concerts. Independently of a great many compositions published for piano, W. Mozart is the author of a Cantata entitled Der erste Frühlings-Morgen, dedicated to the Empress Caroline. It was performed at a grand musical festival given in 1828 by the Cecilien-Chor, which sang, also, a chorus in honour of its founder, W. Mozart, Jun.

To complete our account of Mozart's two sons, we may mention that the eldest, Charles, held a place in the government offices, Milan, and was considered a great musical amateur.

ALBERT SOWINSKI.

—o—

THAT to which Richard Wagner objects (principally) in the works of masters hitherto recognised as "great," is the return to themes already heard. According to these acknowledged masters, with whose views we feel compelled to agree, the absolute thing here represents "form" in music. Can Wagner desire that chaos, moulded by the Divine will into a shape from the proportions of which all artistic labour is clearly derived, should be reimposed? We sincerely hope not; and yet otherwise how explain his criticism on the grandest of Beethoven's Leonora overtures? To go no further, the return to the leading theme in the opening movement of Beethoven's "Ninth Symphony" is one of the most superlative passages in music—nay, in Art. A much muchness (we are tolerably aware) of Wagner's theory proceeds from Gluck; but Gluck could produce rhythmical melody when so disposed, and, being not unfrequently in that humour, gave reins to his Pegasus. The very overture to Iphigenia—to which Wagner passingly alludes—goes directly, on the strength of its form alone, to the heart of the question—that is against Wagner's theory, a theory to which Beethoven, "the immeasurably rich master," would under no conditions have ever given acquiescence. Que diable! Otto Beard.

Digitized by Google

DONIZETTI AND MAYR.

YESTERDAY (26th April), about ten o'clock a.m., a Committee appointed by the Corporation proceeded to the Valtesse Cemetery, for the purpose of removing from their respective coffins the bones of Gaetano Donizetti and of Simon Mayr, and placing them in the two copper urns made by order of the Corporation, to contain permanently the precious relics. The process lasted four long hours. The bones of the two masters were so much decayed as to forbid any idea of cleaning, varnishing, and arranging them in the form of regular skeletons. Such was acknowledged to be the case the first time the coffins were examined. Only the larger bones, such as the thigh bones, the tibiæ, the fibulæ, the ribs, and the spine were still well preserved and solid; all the rest, reduced to a kind of black friable paste, crumbled away at the merest touch. All the articles of clothing, too, in which the corpses were dressed at the time of interment, had nearly disappeared, though Donizetti's remains had still around them the faded tatters of a silk waistcoat, and of a long-skirted overcoat of fine dark green cloth, but nothing was left adherring to those of Mayr except a few pieces of some stuff or other, a few metal buttons, a few beads belonging to a rosary, and, on the feet, the soles of the shoes, the last being in a tolerably good state of preservation.

The lower segment of Donizetti's skull was much corroded on the righthand side. Mayr's skull, on the contrary, was in a state of excellent preservation, most of the teeth being still in the jaws.

The two heads and the two skulls were almost exactly the same as regards size; they were two magnificent heads, and two tall and well-knit frames. The circumference of Donizetti's skull, measuring fifty-two centimetres and a half, is only two millemetres larger than Mayr's. Similarly the occipito-frontal diameter of Donizetti's head is three millemetres longer than Mayr's. They are both strong, ample, and well-formed heads.

When the bones—those of Donizetti first, and then those of Mayr—had been carefully collected by the surgeons, they were reverently placed in the respective copper urns which are lined inside with wood. Above the thick wrapper of textile material in which the bones are enveloped inside the urns, there is deposited, in a sealed glass tube, a parchment document. Both these documents are signed by the Members of the Committee, and attested by a notary. The urns, having been closed and hermetically soldered, were then temporarily placed in a mortuary cell in the cemetery and bricked up. Each urn bears engraved on the cover the name of the master whose bones it contains.

The following is an extract from a letter addressed by the Chairman of the Committee to Sig. Verdi:—

"The Committee do not venture to raise their aspirations so high as a performance of the celebrated Mass written by you in memory of Alessandro Manzoni; the means for the execution of that colossal work would here be wanting. On this occasion, Bergamo is content simply to hope from your noble disposition some advice as to the selection of appropriate musical pieces, and, if you would deign to offer some inspiration of your own as a mark of homage to your two great predecessors, it would be the most brilliant seal that any one could set on our solemnity; the most worthy mark of reverence for Donizetti and Mayr; and the most marked favour bestowed not only on the inhabitants of this City, but on all the artists taking part in the ceremony, and on musical art, which would gain a fresh treasure."

The following was Sig. Verdi's reply:—

"Most Illustrious President, notwithstanding my willingness to be present, I cannot, in consequence of previous engagements, attend the solemnity which the City of Bergamo is organizing for the purpose of doing honour to the memory of the two great masters of our age. For this reason, too, and on account of my old and now well-known habit of not composing detached pieces, I cannot write what you ask me to write for the occasion.

"Nor am I in a position to advise you as to the Mass to be performed. The men of art on the spot, being acquainted with the artistic and pecuniary resources at your disposal, will know far better than myself how much should be done for the pious ceremony to honour, at one and the same time, the illustrious Dead and the noble city of Bergamo that conceived that ceremony. Profoundly flattered by your having thought of me when it was a question of honouring men of such artistic eminence, I beg you will excuse me for not responding as I could wish to your courteous invitation. With the highest esteem, I have the honour to be, your most devoted servant. "G. Verdi.

"Genoa, 11th March, 1875."

ROME.

(From a Correspondent.)

The Teatro Apollo is now closed, after a disastrous season. The pecuniary loss cannot be less than 100,000 francs, and may be more. Alarmed by such a result, the Municipality have resolved to suppress the subvention, so that there is a probability that next season the Apollo will remain deserted.

The Teatro Rossini, more fortunate, continues to be well patronised. But ere long the public will probably cease to flock to it, for it will have to compete with the Politeama and the Capranica. The first opera at the Politeama will be Semiramide—with Signore Pozzi-Ferrari, Guidotti, and Sig. Beneventano del Bosco—to be followed by Luisa Miller and Sig. Libani's Conte Verde. Macbeth will inaugurate the season at the Capranica, where, as the manager is a dancer, ballet will figure in the bills side by side with opera.

There have been many concerts lately, but, as a rule, of no importance. A noteworthy exception, however, was the first concert of the Società Orchestrale Romana. This Society has made remarkable progress. Its founder, Sig. Pinelli, has happily surmounted the most formidable difficulties, and can afford to regard with indifference the lesser obstacles he has to overcome. The satisfactory manner in which his subscription list for six concerts was filled up is a sign of the growing taste here for first-class music. The programme of the first concert included Symphony in G, Mozart; Overture to Fidelio, Beethoven; Overture to Oberon, Weber; Overture to A Midsummer Night's Dream, Mendelssohn; and "Hungarian March," (scored by Liszt) Schubert.

Bologna.—There died here lately the once celebrated tenor, Antonio Poggi, husband of Signora Frezzolini, from whom, however, he was separated. He left various sums to charities, for instance, 20,000 francs to the Mendicity Asylum, and the like sum to the hospitals here.

Florence.—A monument has been erected in the church of Santa Croce to the memory of Pacini. It consists of a bust due to the chisel of Professor Vicenzo Consani, and standing upon a corbel bearing the simple inscription: A Giovanni Pacini Catanese—Creatore di elette Melodie—Gli Ammiratori—Q. M. P.—nel mdccclxxiv.

Digitized by Google

CONCERTS VARIOUS.

Mr F. Sewell Southgate gave a concert, on Wednesday evening at 1, Wigmore Street, assisted by his pupils, Miss Crundall, Herr C Schneider (violin), Mr Wadmore, and Miss Ellen Glanville. Mr Southgate played one of Schubert's sonatas, (Op. 120), Chopin's second Scherzo, and a piece by Mr Ritter, as his solos, and, in conjunction with Herr Schneider, a sonata for violin and piano by Beethoven, and with his pupil, Miss Crundall, an arrangement for four hands of some airs from L'Elisir d'Amore. Mr Wadmore was called upon to repeat "Eri tu" (Ballo in Maschera), but he sang instead "To Anthea," and, for an encore to "The warrior bold," he gave "Bella siccome un Angelo." Miss Ellen Glanville sang Macfarren's "The beating of my own heart," and joined Mr Wadmore in a duet by the late Vincent Wallace.

Miss Madelina Cronin gave a matinée, on Thursday, at the residence of Mrs Owen Lewis, Seymour Street. Miss Cronin was assisted by Mdme De Solla, Miss Sophie Ferrari, Mr Bernard Lane, Sig. Adelmann (vocalist), and Sig. Pezze (violoncellist). Beethoven's Sonata in A major, and three numbers of Schumann's "Stücke im Volkston," for pianoforte and violoncello, headed the first and second parts of the programme, played by the bénéficiaire and Sig. Pezze. Miss Cronin's solo performances were Mendelssohn's Fantasia in F sharp minor, Liszt's transcriptions of two of Chopin's "Chants Polonais," Rheinberger's "Die Jagd," Schubert's Minuetto in B minor, and Rubinstein's Grande Valse in A flat. Mdme De Solla gave an aria by Verdi, and joined Sig. Adelmann in a duet by the same composer; Mr Lane, a song by Mr Cowen, and one by M. Blumenthal; and Miss Sophie Ferrari sang Gounod's "Au Printemps" and Mr Sullivan's "Night and Morning." The rooms were filled by an elegant company.

Mr and Madame Osborne Williams gave a matinée musicale, on Saturday last, at 27, Cleveland Square, Hyde Park (by the kind permission of Mr and Mrs Everitt). They were assisted by Miss Edith Wynne, Mdlle Bartkowska, Mr Henry Guy, Mr Maybrick, Mr Charles Fletcher (violin), and Mr Richard Blagrove (concertina). Among the pieces that were more than usually applauded by the audience were Signor Randegger's admired duo, "Mille Volte," sung by Madame Osborne Williams and Mr H. Guy (accompanied by the composer); the scena from Sir Julius Benedict's Undine, and his trio, "The Forest Home," sung by Madame Osborne Williams, Miss Edith Wynne, and Mdlle Bartkowska, and accompanied by the accomplished composer; and a "Saltarella" for the violin, capitally played by Mr Charles Fletcher. The rooms were crowded by a fashionable audience, among whom we noticed her Grace the Duchess of Sutherland, Mrs Morant, the Lady Victoria Grosvenor, Mrs Deverill, &c., &c.

Mdlle Ida Henry, the clever young pianist, gave her annual concert, on Saturday evening last, in St George's Hall; and we are glad to say it was well filled by her friends and pupils. There was an excellent programme, which was executed to the gratification of all present. Miss Ida Henry, with Herr L. Ries (violinist) and Herr Daubert (violoncellist), commenced the concert with Beethoven's Trio in B flat. Mdlle Henry afterwards gave Chopin's Berceuse and Polonaise, Op. 35, and (with Herr Daubert) Beethoven's Sonata in D for pianoforte and violoncello. Both artists rendered the latter work capitally. Herr Daubert also played Schumann's "Abendlied" with finish and expression. Herr L. Ries played Tartini's Sonata in G —well known to violinists—and played it well. Mdlle Johanna Levier and Mr W. H. Cummings were the vocalists. The former sang, in true Teutonic style, lieder by Rubinstein, Schubert, Mendelssohn, and Brahms; the latter two of his own songs in his usual artistic manner.

The first of Messrs J. Ludwig and H. Daubert's Classical Chamber Concerts took place in the "New Gallery" in Argyll Street, on Wednesday evening last. The musical qualifications of the concert givers are so well known that they need no eulogium from us. Suffice it that both were in their best "form," and exerted themselves in every way to justify the position they have deservedly obtained in the artistic world. We subjoin the programme, and merely add, that the assistance of so accomplished a pianist as Miss Agnes Zimmermann, and so favourite a vocalist as Mdlle Sophie Löwe, added greatly to the pleasure of the audience:—

Quartet in A major (Op. 26), for pianoforte, violin, viola, and violoncello (Miss Agnes Zimmermann, Messrs Josef Ludwig, Otto Bernhardt, and Hugo Daubert)—Brahms; Lieder, "An die Leyer" and "Lachon und Weinen" (Miss Sophie Löwe)—Schubert; Introduzione e Alla Polacca in C major (Op. 3), for pianoforte and violoncello (Miss Agnes Zimmermann and Herr Hugo Daubert)—Chopin; solos, violin, Adagio from the seventh Concerto and Moto perpetuo (Herr Josef Ludwig)—Spohr and Paganini; Lieder, "Stille Liebe" and "Wann soll ich denn wandern" (Miss Sophie Löwe)—Schumann; Divertimento in E flat (Op. 19), for violin, viola, and violoncello (Messrs Josef Ludwig, Otto Bernhardt, and Hugo Daubert)—Mozart. Herr C. Armbruster accompanied the vocal music.

Mr Walmsley Little, pupil of Mr F. B. Jewson, gave a concert, by permission of the Committee of Management of the Royal Academy of Music, on Monday, the 3rd of May, and played with much effect the second Scherzo by Chopin and Mendelssohn's grand duet, "Allegro Brillante," with Mr Smith, another of Mr Jewson's pupils. Two new compositions by F. B. Jewson, entitled, "Dashing Spray" and "The Mountain Stream," were brilliantly performed by his pupil, Miss Edridge, who was favoured with a recall. The principal vocalists were pupils of the Royal Academy of Music, and did credit to the institution.—Q.

Mr Trelawny Cobham gave his matinée musicale on Monday last, at the Beethoven Rooms, assisted by Mdlle Mathilda Enequist, Miss José Sherrington, Miss Purdy, Signor Caravoglia, and Signor Federici; Signor Tito Mattei (pianoforte) and Mdlle Castellan (violin). Mr Trelawny Cobham, whose excellent method of singing, combined with the pleasing quality of his voice, makes him deservedly so great a favourite in the drawing-rooms of the "upper ten," sang "Ah! si ben mio," Mr J. L. Roeckel's "Only for thee" (encored), and "Tom Bowling." He also joined Mdlle Enequist and Signor Caravoglia in the trio, "Guai se ti sfugge" (Lucrezia Borgia), and, with the addition of Signor Federici, in the quartet, "Chi mi frena" (Lucia). In the second part of the concert Mr Cobham sang, with Miss José Sherrington, Miss Purdy, and Signor Caravoglia, Signor Pinsuti's quartet, "I canta storie;" and, with the same two ladies and Signor Federici, "Montre fl piè" (Marta). Mr Cobham was in capital voice, and his friends were evidently highly delighted with all he did. Miss Purdy, who is becoming more and more a favourite, sang Mr Cowen's "It was a dream" and Herr Brahms' "Good night," showing herself the possessor of a most agreeable contralto voice and of a refined method of singing. Mdlle Castellan was recalled after both her solos on the violin. Signor Caravoglia's musicianly knowledge was prominent in all he undertook; and Mdlle Enequist was, as usual, listened to with pleasure. Signor Tito Mattei's elegant nocturne, "Souvenir d'Italie," and his brilliant "Valse di Concert" showed his executive powers to advantage; and the accomplished Italian pianist was called upon to repeat the latter piece. Herr Ganz, with Signori Romano and Pinsuti, were the accompanists of the vocal music.

PROVINCIAL.

Welshpool.—The Montgomeryshire Choral Union gave a performance of Haydn's Creation, on Friday morning last week, followed, in the evening, by a miscellaneous concert, on the occasion of the opening of the new assembly room at the Town Hall. Miss Edith Wynne, Mr Kerr Gedge, and Mr Orlando Christian being the principal vocalists at both; Mr C. A. Stephenson, leading violin, and Mr Bervon and Mr Gittins, conductors. In the Creation Miss Wynne was most successful in "With verdure clad," and in the duets with Mr Christian; while the choruses were effectively sung by the members of the Union. In the evening Bishop's trio, "Maiden Fair," sung by the principals, and Sullivan's song, "Little Maid of Arcadée," sung by Miss Wynne, were encored; while Mr Gedge, in "The snow lies white," and Mr Christian, in Hatton's "Wreck of the Hesperus" and Gounod's "The valley," came in for deserved approbation. There were bumper houses on both occasions. Mr Bervon and Miss Helen C. Porteous were accompanists.

Kingston-on-Thames.—Messrs Rivenhall Brothers gave an evening concert in the Drill Hall, on May the 4th, under very distinguished patronage, which brought together a numerous assemblage of the gentry and residents of the town and neighbourhood. Madame L. Sherrington, Miss Alice Fairman, with Mr Santley and Mr William Byrom, and the Band of the Grenadier Guards (under Mr D. Godfrey's direction) assisted. Miss A. Fairman sang "Kathleen Mavourneen" and Mr Hullah's setting of "The Three Fishers"—both were loudly applauded; Madame Sherrington, two songs—Mr Molloy's "Dresden China" and her husband's "Bird of Love"—both of which were encored, and, with Mr Santley, "La ci darem," which was also encored. Mr Santley gave the "Shepherd's Lay," of Mendelssohn, Mr Hatton's "To Anthea" (encored and repeated), and "The Vicar of Bray," as an encore to Mr Molloy's "Polly." Mr Wm. Byrom played solos by Thalberg and Herr Ernest Pauer, in all of which he evidently pleased his audience. A concertina performer, Mr Henry Roe, of the Grenadier Guards' Band, proved himself an able executant; and the Grenadier Guards' Band gave proof of excellence by their admirable performance of a selection from Balfe's Il Talismano.

Glasgow.—The ninth concert given by the members of the Glasgow Amateur Orchestral Society took place in the Queen's Rooms. It is pleasing to be able to state (says the Glasgow Herald) that, under Signor Zavertal, they continue to progress. The execution of the several selections was not in all respects faultless, but altogether afforded grounds for satisfaction. In the overture to La Gazza Ladra the orchestra did not start well, but they rapidly came together, and it was soon apparent that they were held well in hand by the conductor. The andante movement from Mendelssohn's Italian Symphony was very artistically played; and the serenade for pianoforte and orchestra from B minor, Op. 43, by the same composer, elicited enthusiastic applause, the young lady who played the pianoforte part acquitting herself with exceeding credit. The second part of the programme was devoted to Beethoven's Symphony No. 1 in C, Gounod's "Funeral March of a Marionette," and Rossini's overture to L'Italiana in Algeri. Miss Kemlo Stephen was the vocalist, and sang "Non pianger mia compagna," from Verdi's opera, Don Carlo, and M. Barri's "Murmuring Streamlets."

Digitized by Google

CRITERION THEATRE.

The brilliant success of Les Près St Gervais at the Criterion Theatre seems to have marked out that choice and luxurious little house as the home of opera bouffe in the refined stage of development which it owes to the genius of M. Lecocq. In fact, in combining his bright and sparkling melodies and skilful orchestration with the comic drama in which Mdlle Dejazet has so often delighted the Parisians, all trace of the vulgarity which had hitherto been considered almost inseparable from opera bouffe had completely vanished; and, but for a vein of humour, both in the melodies and in their treatment, it would have been difficult to find anything in common between Les Près St Gervais and works of the class to which it claimed to belong. When this pleasing opera was produced at Messrs Spiers and Pond's new theatre in November last it was felt at once that no kind of entertainment could be more in accord with the elegance and good taste with which it was surrounded. It was therefore to be expected that when this opera, then but recently produced in Paris, should have lost its freshness, the management would turn their attention to a similar work. Nor is it perhaps to be wondered at that they have exhibited their faith in M. Lecocq by turning—for want of something fresher—to an opera of his already to a considerable extent known to English audiences. Giroflé-Girofla, which has taken the place here of Les Près St Gervais, was performed for some weeks, at the Opéra Comique in the Strand, by the original company from Brussels. It was afterwards produced in an English version at the Philharmonic Theatre, and has since been performed, in many provincial cities, by Mrs Liston's Opera Company. It is a work distinctly of the same character as that which it replaces. In fact, there is a peculiarity in the rhythm, and in the flow of melody, as well as an amount of invention in the mode of handling the orchestra which would alone stamp these works as from the same mind. The opera has been reproduced with the same careful attention to details which characterised the production of its predecessor. In brilliancy of scenery and richness of costumes it could hardly be excelled; and if the representatives of the various characters, with the exception of Madame Pauline Rita, cannot be said to possess much voice, they sing at least with taste and act generally with grace and refinement. M. Loredan is perhaps as good a Marasquin as could be easily found on our stage, and he has at least the advantage of youthful appearance. Those who can recall M. Ginet's performance of the Moorish chief would doubtless have willingly exchanged some of the rather superabundant fierceness of Mr Brennir for a little more humour. Miss Emily Thorne, as the mother of the twin princesses, however, not only acted with a strong sense of the drollery of the situation, but justly won applause by her distinct style of vocalization. The choruses assigned to the male characters were in every way satisfactory. The famous chorus of pirates and the equally well remembered chorus of retainers without accompaniment, could indeed have hardly been rendered with more force or dramatic effect. Unfortunately, the dialogue portion of this version is wanting in point; and hence a certain flatness in the performance generally, which was certainly not observable when the French company represented it here. Giroflé-Girofla will serve to sustain for awhile the new reputation of the Criterion for this kind of entertainment, but it is to be hoped that the management will not take a narrow view of their province. There is an abundance of light French comic operas which, though not classed as opéra-bouffes, are admirably adapted to this theatre, while they have the advantage of being but little known to the English public.

MDME ADELINA PATTI.

The opera at the Royal Italian Opera on Tuesday night was Dinorah, one of the most romantic as well as one of the most charming of lyric pastorals. Since 1859, when Le Pardon de Ploermel was first introduced to the London public through the Italian version, for which Meyerbeer composed the admirable accompanied recitatives that now enrich it, and when the name of the heroine was substituted for that of the ceremonial procession upon which the curtain falls, Dinorah has been popular among us. Nor can any one be surprised at the enduring favour it enjoys; for, if—as many, not easily disturbed in their convictions, insist—original and continuous tune is one of the prime elements of the musical drama, under whatever form exhibited, this production of the musician to whom art is indebted for Robert, the Huguenots, the Prophète, and the Africaine, may stand side by side with almost any similar work. The first performance of Dinorah would alone suffice to account for the brilliant audience assembled yesterday evening within the walls of Covent Garden Theatre. The event, however, was combined with another no less likely to attract the operatic public. The return of that universal favourite, Mdme Adelina Patti, has, year after year, been eagerly looked forward to; and never, on any previous occasion, was it welcomed with more genuine satisfaction. To dwell in detail upon her impersonation of the demented love-lorn maiden, would be as superfluous as to analyse, piece by piece, the work itself. Both are, happily, familiar with amateurs and connoisseurs. That Mdme Patti has seldom, if ever, presented a more ethereal embodiment of the character may be stated without reserve. With what perfection she can act as well as sing Dinorah has been repeatedly and convincingly shown. The part was always a special favourite with Mdme Patti, and equally so with her many admirers; but never, perhaps, since, in the summer of 1862, she first attempted it (with what applause is still remembered) was her performance more striking and admirable. Its exquisite grace and finish, combined with the simplicity that enhances its charm, were never more keenly appreciated. That Mdme Patti, on appearing before the foot-lights, was greeted in the heartiest manner, will easily be credited. Every one in the house was glad to see her again, and to pay her the homage due to zealous service and well-established merit. Her voice, in power and flexibility, is what it has long been known to be; moreover, while the higher notes retain all their freshness, strength, and brilliancy, the middle and lower notes are still more remarkable for richness of quality and evenness of tone. The "lullaby" addressed by Dinorah to her imaginary goat ("Si carina"), sung with the utmost tenderness, and rounded off with a delicately finished shake, was enough to prepare the audience for what was to follow; the scene in which Dinorah pertinaciously annoys the timorous half-witted Corentino, and the finale to Act 1 (Il tintinnar), when Dinorah slowly winds her way up the rock in pursuit of her favourite goat, heightened the impression. About the second act, of which the culminating effect, both vocal and dramatic, is invariably the scene with the shadow, comprising the well-known "Ombra leggèra," we have so often spoken, that to say it roused the audience to an ebullition of enthusiasm, ending with an encore for the last movement, three or four "recalls," and bouquets without number (of which extraneous manifestation Mdme Patti stands in no requirement), will answer every purpose. The whole scene, in a word, was irreproachable, and fully accounted for the lively sensation it created. And so the opera proceeded till the curtain descended upon a new success for one who has been used to successes from the beginning of an exceptional career.

The other chief parts were sustained by Signor Graziani (Hoel) and Signor Marini (Corentino); the Goatherd being represented by Mdme Scalchi; and the subordinate characters by Mdlle Cottino, Signors Capponi and Sabater. The Prince and Princess of Wales were in the Royal Box. Mdme Patti's next part is to be Rosina (Barbière).

RUBINSTEIN'S new opera, Maccabäer, has achieved a genuine success at Berlin.

SEVERAL weeks ago Herr Joachim was bitten by a dog, and since then certain papers have hebdomadally announced the fact as "news." The latest discovery has been made by Figaro, who states that the dog in question is a Scotch colley. We rejoice to learn that the great violinist is rapidly recovering from his mishap, and that the unfortunate inoculation had led to no serious effects. Possibly some gooseberry hunter may later inform us that Herr Joachim exhibits, as a consequence thereof, a predilection for the Scotch bagpipes.—Liverpool Mail.

Digitized by Google

WAIFS.

Auber's Fra Diavolo has been produced with great success at Naples.

Mr Joseph Traynor is a singer justly esteemed among his brethren.

A monument to the late composer, Pacini, has been erected in the church of Santa Croce, Florence.

The Théâtre de la Monnaie, at Brussels, is closed; so that there will be no more opera, properly so styled, till next autumn.

Sig. Arditi, after finishing a brilliant season in Vienna, with Mdme Patti, has gone to Bologna and Milan. He will arrive about the 17th inst.

Messrs Ricordi & Co., of Milan, have decided, on Friday last, on producing Signor Tito Mattei's opera, Marie il Gand, at the San Carlo, Naples, in the autumn.

Mr Francis Howell's oratorio, The Land of Promise, is to be given at Loughborough in the course of this month, for the benefit of the Convalescent Home of that town.

Verdi has politely declined to write the Mass in commemoration of Donizetti and Simon Mayr, suggested to him by the corporation of Bergamo, the birth-place of both composers.

Madame Lemmens-Sherrington was the bright particular star at the special concert in the Southport Winter Garden and Aquarium. Other celebrated vocalists, including Mr Santley, are engaged for following Saturdays.

The Mersey Musical Union are entitled to thanks for charitable efforts on behalf of the Children's Infirmary. The programme could hardly be termed a high class one, but the audience were amused and the charity benefited.

Mr Hollingshead begins his French operatic season at the Gaiety this evening with Halévy's Mousquetaires de la Reine. We should have preferred one of the lesser known operas of Auber—Le Maçon, for example, or Lestocq.

Mr Ashdown, of the well-known and esteemed firm of Messrs Ashdown and Parry, of Hanover Square, has started for a two months' tour through the United States and Canada, in the Egypt, one of the finest of the National Line of steamers, which left Liverpool for New York on Wednesday. Bon voyage.

At the last concert of the Philharmonic Society, besides one of the many symphonies of Mozart, the "No. 9" of Beethoven (with chorus) was performed. There was also another attempt to play the pianoforte concerto in E flat of Liszt (and a very successful one), by Signor Ludovico Breitner, a pianist new to this country.

A rumour is current that a conference of the Catholic clergy of Liverpool will take place, in order to consider the early promulgation of Cardinal Manning's edict forbidding women to sing in choirs. This is in accordance with the canons of the Catholic Church, but it remains to be seen how far the scheme will answer in Liverpool.

At the second concert of the New Philharmonic Society, Mrs Beesley, a pianist enjoying high repute at Liverpool, may be said to have won the artistic freedom of London, through her brilliant execution of Liszt's Concerto in E flat—a genuine tour de force, whatever may be thought of the music. Mrs Beesley also played duets by Bach and Schumann, for two pianos, with her eminent master, Dr Hans von Bülow.

Mr Sims Reeves, who has not been seen on the London stage for some time, will appear as Tom Tug in the opera of The Waterman at the Queen's Theatre on Saturday, 22nd inst., on the occasion of the annual benefit of Mr S. Hayes, of the West End Box Office. Miss Blanche Cole, Mr George Perren, and Miss Lucy Franklein appear on the same occasion. The programme also includes Balfe's Bohemian Girl and other entertainments.—Daily Telegraph.

Mr Charles Hallé has commenced his interesting Pianoforte Recitals in St James's Hall. Two have already been given. Mr Hallé again enjoys the co-operation of the queen of violinists, Mdme Norman-Neruda. His programmes hitherto have consisted, for the most part, of well-known pieces; but at the third recital we are promised an unknown quartet, for piano, with stringed instruments, by F. Kiel, one of the most promising composers of chamber music of whom Germany now can boast. Mr Hallé is playing his very best.

Miss Gertrude Ashton, the young prima donna of Mr Thorpe Pede's late English opera company at the Royal Alexandra Theatre, Regent's Park, has been playing with decided success in the operetta of Breaking the Spell, at the Alexandra Palace Theatre, Muswell Hill, with Mr Temple and Mr Wilford Morgan. The Court Circular, in its record of the performance of M. Offenbach's operetta, praises Miss Ashton highly, and remarks that "Miss Ashton's voice was never heard to better advantage. It was sufficiently powerful to be distinctly heard in every part of the house. The applause bestowed upon the young vocalist showed that the management had entrusted the part of the heroine to not only an accomplished vocalist, but a talented actress."

Adelina Patti has appeared once more as Rosina (Barbière); Christine Nilsson has played in Trovatore and Faust (Leonora and Margaret). Need it be added with what success?

Two concerts, under the direction of Richard Wagner, have lately been given in the Prussian capital, in aid of the "Grand-National-Festival-Stage-Play performances," to come off next year at Bayreuth.

From the programme lying before us we perceive that the concert to be given in Whit-week by the representative children of the National Schools of Liverpool promises to be especially interesting. One of the pieces noted is the "Gloria" from Mozart's Twelfth Mass. Such an effort can hardly be too highly commended. It is removed from many similiar schemes in the general catholicity of its tone. There is liberality of sentiment, and none of the "goody-goody" sentimentalism in laudation of the "crystal spring" of "Sabbath Schools," &c. Far be it from us to condemn good or holy things, but the proper place for dilating on the horrors of a drunkard's life is Renshaw Street, and the place for expounding Scripture or extolling Sunday Schools is within their own walls, or in the Churches or Chapels to which they are allied; and it is of questionable taste when concert-givers appeal to the public for support, and ram their own particular doctrines down the throats of their audiences.—Liverpool Albion.

The concert given by Mr Mapleson, at St James's Hall, in honour of the Prince of Wales's installation as Grand Master of the English Freemasons, gave high satisfaction to an audience by no means backward in expressing their feelings. All the leading artists of Her Majesty's Opera took part, and won distinguished honours. Mdlle Tietjens was called upon to repeat "Radiant splendours," from Balfe's Talisman, and an encore rewarded Mdme Trebelli for her "Non più mesta." In the second part, Mdlle Tietjens gave "Kathleen Mavourneen," substituting, in response to a second encore, Cowen's "It was a dream," in which she had the advantage of the composer's accompaniment. Mr Mapleson's new prime donne ran the old favourites hard, Mdlle Varesi being twice called after Benedict's "Carneval de Venise," while Mdlle Pernini had to repeat Auber's "Eclat du Rire" (Manon Lescaut). Mdlle Singelli, Mdlle Risarelli, MM. Campanini, Brignoli, De Reschi, Gilassi, and Herr Behrens, were also heard in familiar pieces. The accompanists were Signor Li Calsi and Mr Cowen, who opened the second part with a fantasia for two pianofortes on themes from Il Talismano.

Mdlle Varesi, by voice and physique, is better fitted to Donizetti and Bellini than to Verdi. Her Lucia is much more effective than her Gilda, as a display of vocal art. Donizetti's music is better suited to her physical powers and distinctive acquirements. It was imagined that a début in Lucia, before an audience familiar with the highest excellence in that particular part, involved special risk; but there was small cause for anxiety. Mdlle Varesi's Lucia is dramatically a graceful assumption, of high technical culture and artistic feeling. This is no common praise, but no amateur who witnessed her performance will challenge the judgment of Mdme Ristori, from whom she came with flattering credentials. Her success was unequivocal. The naturalness of her acting, and her pure Italian vocalization, delighted everybody. Her "mad scene" excited enthusiasm throughout the house. That enthusiasm led Mdlle Varesi to the only violation of dramatic propriety her performance showed. Such applause followed that the artist, throwing off her character, became herself in order to acknowledge it with bows and smiles, subsequently putting on the mad heroine again. Offences of this kind are rank on the operatic stage, and if Sig. Salvini, with his utter unconsciousness of self, could teach our lyric actors a lesson, they would be much the better for it.

The annual "Summer Concerts" of the Crystal Palace—like those in the winter and spring, chiefly devoted to music on its own account, instead of to music on account of the style and manner of its performance—have never been carried on with greater spirit or with greater success than now. In former years the vogue of these concerts mainly depended upon singers from the two Italian Operas; but, unable to conclude a satisfactory arrangement with Messrs Gye and Mapleson, the directors have been compelled to seek for attraction elsewhere; and that they were able to find it may be gathered from the fact that their concerts have invariably been well attended. Both vocal and Instrumental artists where at hand worthy to uphold the musical reputation of the Crystal Palace and to help Mr Manns, the zealous and excellent conductor, in constructing programme after programme of increasing variety and interest. An orchestra materially fortified in a numerical, and it is but just to add in an efficient sense has equally put it in his power to enrich his selections with operatic overtures; while the Crystal Palace Choir has contributed part songs and choruses, for the most part so effectively as to afford general satisfaction. Thus the "Summer Concerts" have prospered as much this year as in previous years when the Italian "stars" used regularly to lend their services, and when, it may be imagined, the expenses must have been very considerably heavier.—Diary of Dr Ghost.

Digitized by Google

C'est dans le nez que ça mè chatouille!—On se souvient encore de la grâce enchanteresse dont le chanteur ondulait le dernier mot, en le hérissant de vocalises: Chatou-ou-ou-ille. Et la salle de menacer de crouler, tant on applaudissait avec frénésie. Je nomme Thérésa. Je n'en dirai ni du mal ni du bien.

The other vocal performers were Mr Vernon Rigby, who was applauded for his vigorous and pointed declamation in "Sound an alarm;" Mdlle Sinico, who in "Ernani involami" (Verdi) sang her very best, and created an impression which culminated in a very grand "recall;" Mons. Urio, who has appeared on several occasions at the "Summer concerts," where, to judge by the applause bestowed upon his energetic delivery of an air from Rigoletto and the "Cujus animam," from Rossini's Stabat Mater, he seems to have found favour; Signor Foli, who, as usual, imparted due weight and dignity to "Qui sdegno"—Sarastro's second air in Il Flauto Magico; and Mdlle Hélène d'Alton, a young lady with a very pleasing contralto voice, who sang touchingly the devotional air "O Lord, Thou hast searched me out," from Professor W. Sterndale Bennett's Woman of Samaria, and the pretty romance, "Gentle Troubadour," from Vincent Wallace's Lurline, extremely well—the first (and most trying) especially. The chorus, on this exceptional occasion some 2,000 strong, consisting of the metropolitan contingent of the Handel Festival Choir, was heard to eminent advantage in the prayer from Masaniello (Act III.); "See the conquering hero comes" (Judas Maccabœus); Mendelssohn's exquisite part song, "O Hills and Vales;" and the prayer from Rossini's Mosè in Egitto. Mr James M. Wehli, the pianist, who has hitherto particularly excelled as a showy player of showy fantasias, chiefly of his own composition, came boldly forward with Mendelssohn's Rondo Brillante (or Capriccio Brillante, as it was originally entitled) in B minor; and the orchestra gave the overtures to Auber's Masaniello and Mendelssohn's Athaliah superbly. The concert was altogether one of the best of the summer series. On Wednesday next (to commence at 5 p.m.) we are promised the first of a series of "Ballad Concerts," in which Mdlle Sinico, Misses Banks and Edith Wynne, Signor Foli, and Mr Sims Reeves will take part. No school of art is beneath the attention of these veritable eclectics the directors of the Crystal Palace music. So much the better for the musical public at large.—DIARY OF DR GHOST.

Advertisements.

THE VOICE & SINGING
BY
ADOLFO FERRARI.
THE FORMATION AND CULTIVATION OF THE VOICE FOR SINGING
Price 12s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, REGENT STREET, W.

"The remarkable qualities of this book are the author's freedom from conventional trammels, the strong sense of his opinions, and the novelty yet evident soundness of his precepts; his work has consequently come into general use as a manual of vocal instruction."—Daily News.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE,
For invigorating and enriching the voice, and removing affections of the throat.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE is universally acknowledged to be the most valuable remedy for sore throat, hoarseness and relaxed throat. It should always be taken before singing or reciting, as it strengthens the vocal organs. It is most extensively prescribed by the faculty for the throat and voice. Dr Lewis of Basingstoke says he finds them most efficacious, and in Dr Copland's Dictionary of Practical Medicine (Longman & Co.), they are strongly recommended at pages 872 and 1492. They are used by all the greatest vocalists and orators in Europe, and have been established over a quarter of a century. Testimonials from Patti, Grisi, Lablache, Santley, &c. Sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d. by all Chemists throughout the United Kingdom and the Colonies.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF VOICE.
(Reprinted from the "Medical Press and Circular.")
AND
THE BASIS OF MUSICAL EXPRESSION.
Second (Popular) Edition, much Enlarged.
By CHARLES LUNN.
One Shilling.
BAILLIERE, TINDALL & COX; and all Booksellers.

"Mr Lunn is one of the most earnest and conscientious thinkers of the day."—Musical Times.
"Birmingham may well be proud of such a citizen."—Orchestra.
"Mr Lunn is well known as an able writer on musical subjects."—The Rock.
"A method of reasoning at once lucid and forcible, and, for the greater part, unanswerable."—Catholic Times.

MDLLE ZARE THALBERG.
LE CARNEVAL DE VENISE, with Variations, by Sir JULIUS BENEDICT, as sung by MDLLE ZARE THALBERG, at the FLORAL HALL CONCERTS, is published—price 4s.—by DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.
"A DREAM WISH."
GIPSY SONG.
The Poetry by M. A. BAINES.
The Music by MICHAEL BERGSON.
Price 4s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

VOCAL EXERCISES.
Composed by FRANK MORI.
Price 4s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.
N.B.—These Vocal Exercises, as taught by FRANK MORI, are invaluable both to Students and Professors.

Published This Day.
"THE FAIREST FLOWER WILL PERISH."
SONG.
The Words by Mrs HYPPOLITE VAN LANDEGHEM.
The Music by HYPPOLITE VAN LANDEGHEM.
Price 3s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"CUPID'S APPEAL,"
BALLAD,
And the Sequel,
"MARRIAGE BELLS,"
SONG.
Price 3s. each.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

GUGLIELMO'S LAST BALLAD.
"WERT THOU WITH ME."
The Words by GEORGE LINLEY.
The Music by P. D. GUGLIELMO.
Price 4s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

WILFORD MORGAN'S SONGS.
HER I LOVE .. .. 4s.
COULD I BUT CALL HER MINE.. .. .. 4s.
MY SWEETHEART WHEN A BOY .. .. 4s.
SWEET EVENING AIR .. .. 4s.
(N.B.—The above Songs have been sung with distinguished success by Mr WILFORD MORGAN.)
LITTLE BIRDIE, SING TO ME .. .. 4s.
(Sung by Miss EDITH WYNNE.)

ANTHEM.
IF THOU WILT FORGET ME (THE 13TH PSALM) .. .. .. 4s.
(For Tenor or Soprano Solo, with Chorus ad. lib., as sung at the Temple Church. Composed by WILFORD MORGAN.)
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street.

Just Published.
GRAND MARCH (BRIDAL or PROCESSIONAL), for the Pianoforte or Organ. Composed by W. F. TAYLOR. Price 3s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.
THE LARK'S SONG. The Poetry by FREDERICK ENOCH. The Music by HENRY SMART. Price 3s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"DREAM ON,"
SONG,
Words and Music by ERNEST HOUGHTON.
Price 3s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Digitized by Google

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

PRODUCTION OF WAGNER'S 'LOHENGRIN.'

The Books of Airs (in Two Books), arranged for Pianoforte, with ad. lib. accompaniments for Flute, Violin, and Violoncello, by

W. HUTCHINS CALLCOTT

PRICE.

Solos	5*s.*	each.
Duets	6*s.*	,,
Accompaniments	1*s.*	,,

LONDON:

HUTCHINGS & ROMER,

9, Conduit Street, Regent Street, W.

ARTHUR SULLIVAN'S NEW SONG,

"THOU ART WEARY."

WORDS BY ADELAIDE PROCTOR.

MUSIC BY ARTHUR SULLIVAN.

SUNG BY

MISS ANTOINETTE STERLING

AT THE

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

"The singer was Miss Antoinette Sterling, who, always heartily admired in those German ballads, for which she exhibits so marked a sympathy, introduced in a group four of Schumann's most graceful contributions to the Lieder repertory, and, later in the evening, a new song by Mr Arthur Sullivan, 'Thou art weary' (set to words by Adelaide Proctor)—one of the most charming recent emanations from the pen of our gifted compatriot."—The Times, Nov. 10.

"Miss Sterling was the vocalist, and sang, in addition to selections from Schumann, a new song by Arthur Sullivan, entitled, 'Thou art weary,' which is one of the most beautiful and thoughtful effusions of the composer's graceful music."—Daily Telegraph, Nov 12.

"Miss Antoinette Sterling was the vocalist. In the second part she introduced a new song by Mr Sullivan, an admirable setting for a contralto voice of some very touching lines by the late Miss Adelaide Proctor, addressed by a poor mother to her starving child, the burden being—

'Sleep, my darling, thou art weary;
God is good, but life is dreary.'

The song exactly suited Miss Sterling's voice and style, and it will assuredly become as great a favourite as 'Will he come,' to which it is a worthy pendant, and the words of which are also by Miss Proctor."—Standard, Nov. 12.

"Miss Antoinette Sterling repeated Mr Sullivan's new song, 'Thou art weary,' a second hearing of which has confirmed our good opinion of it."—Standard, Nov. 16.

"At the concert on Monday, Miss Sterling had introduced a series of charming Lieder by Schumann, and a new song by Mr Arthur Sullivan, 'Sleep, my darling, thou art weary,' an admirable setting of Miss Proctor's poem, 'Hush, I cannot bear to see thee,' which, like everything Miss Proctor wrote, was well adapted for, and, in fact, seemed to invite musical treatment. Her verses have inspired Mr Sullivan with a genuine melody, of which the refrain is particularly remarkable; and the song, both at Monday's and Saturday's concert, pleased so much that Miss Sterling was called upon to repeat it."—Pall Mall Gazette, Nov. 17.

"Miss Sterling sang discreetly and sympathetically four of Schumann's 'Dichterliebe' (Nos. 1, 2, 7, and 8); but came off still better in a new song by Mr A. Sullivan, who has set words by Adelaide Proctor, 'Thou art weary,' the dying consolation of a starved mother to her child, the refrain of which is—

'Sleep, my darling, thou art weary;
God is good, but life is dreary.'

It is a painful theme; but the composer has treated it with such pathos that the air tells powerfully."—Athenæum, Nov. 14.

"The vocalist was Miss Sterling, who sang four songs by Schumann (Nos. 1, 2, 7, and 8 of the 'Dichterliebe'), and a new song, entitled 'Thou art weary,' written by Miss Adelaide Proctor. The words are good, and have been fitted to charming and expressive music by Mr Arthur Sullivan, who has added a pianoforte accompaniment worthy his high reputation, and worth listening to for its own sake."—Observer, Nov. 15.

Published in the keys of D minor and F minor, Price 4s.

ARTHUR SULLIVAN'S NEW SONG,

"TENDER AND TRUE,"

SUNG BY

MISS EDITH WYNNE

AT THE

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS, ST JAMES'S HALL.

"The vocalist was Miss Edith Wynne, who sang a new song, 'Tender and True,' by Arthur Sullivan, the beauty of which, aided by a most tasteful rendering, elicited an encore."—Daily Telegraph, January 13.

"Mr Sullivan's graceful song—a novelty—was rendered by Miss Edith Wynne with much refined expression; and the applause which followed necessitated its entire repetition."—Daily News, January 13.

"A very expressive new song, by Mr A. Sullivan, 'Tender and True,' was sung with such effect by Miss Edith Wynne that it had to be repeated."—Illustrated London News, January 16.

"Miss Edith Wynne, who gave, in her own genuine and expressive manner, a graceful new song, 'Tender and True,' by Mr Arthur Sullivan, which was encored, and repeated."—Graphic, January 16.

Published in the keys of E flat and F, Price 4s.

CHAPPELL & CO., 50 NEW BOND ST.

Digitized by Google

ARTHUR SULLIVAN'S CELEBRATED SONGS.

"LITTLE MAID OF ARCADEE."
Price FOUR SHILLINGS.

"GUINEVERE."
Price FOUR SHILLINGS.

"THE SAILOR'S GRAVE."
Price FOUR SHILLINGS.

"O FAIR DOVE, O FOND DOVE."
Price FOUR SHILLINGS.

"WHAT DOES LITTLE BIRDIE SAY?"
Price FOUR SHILLINGS.

"AH! COUNTY GUY."
Price FOUR SHILLINGS.

LONDON:
ASHDOWN & PARRY,
HANOVER SQUARE.

Digitized by Google

Printed by HENDERSON, RAFF, AND FENTON, at No. 69, Marylebone Lane, Oxford Street, in the Parish of Marylebone, in the County of Middlesex.
Published by WILLIAM DUNCAN DAVISON, at the Office, 244, Regent Street, Saturday, May 15, 1875.

The Musical World.

(REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.)

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST, 20s. PER ANNUM,
Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to DUNCAN DAVISON & CO., 244, Regent Street, London, W

VOL. 53—No. 21. SATURDAY, MAY 22, 1875. PRICE { 4d. Unstamped. 5d. Stamped.

HER MAJESTY'S OPERA, THEATRE ROYAL, DRURY LANE.

Sixth Appearance of Mdme Christine Nilsson.

THIS EVENING (SATURDAY), May 22nd, will be performed GOUNOD'S Opera, "FAUST." Faust, M. Capoul; Mephistophiles, Signor Rota; Valentino, Signor de Reschi; Wagner, Signor Costa; Siebel, Mdme Trebelli-Bettini; Marta, Mdme Demeric-Lablache; and Margherita, Mdme Christine Nilsson (her sixth appearance this season). Director of the Music and Conductor—Sir Michael Costa.

Extra Night.—Tietjens—Mdlle Anna de Belocca—Mdlle Pernini.

On MONDAY next, May 24, MOZART'S Opera, "LE NOZZE DI FIGARO." Cherubino, Mdlle Anna de Belocca (her first appearance in that character); Il Conte d'Almaviva, Signor de Reschi; Figaro, Signor Galassi; Il Dottore Bartolo, Signor Costa; Basilio, Signor Rinaldini; Don Curzio, Signor Grazzi; Susanna, Mdlle Pernini; Marcellina, Mdme Demeric-Lablache; and La Contessa, Mdlle Tietjens.

Seventh Appearance of Madame Christine Nilsson.

On TUESDAY next, May 25, VERDI'S Opera, "IL TROVATORE." Manrico, Signor Campanini; Il Conte di Luna, Signor Galassi; Ferrando, Signor Costa; Ruiz, Signor Rinaldini; Un Zingaro, Signor Casaboni; Azucena, Mdme Trebelli-Bettini; Inez, Mdlle Bauermeister; and Leonora, Mdme Christine Nilsson (her seventh appearance this season).

Mdlle Elena Varesi.

On THURSDAY next, May 27 (Subscription Night, being the fourth of the Six Subscription Thursdays announced in the prospectus), will be presented BELLINI'S Opera, "LA SONNAMBULA." Amina, Mdlle Elena Varesi (her second appearance in that character).

Doors open at Eight o'clock. Commence at Half-past Eight. Amphitheatre stalls, 7s. and 5s.; amphitheatre, 2s. Box-office open daily from Ten till Five, under the direction of Mr Bailey.

MISS JULIA MATTHEWS as GIROFLE-GIROFLA.

CRITERION THEATRE, Regent Circus. — Sole Proprietors and Responsible Managers, SPIERS & POND. — "GIROFLE-GIROFLA," new Comic Opera in English, by CHARLES LECOCQ. Adapted by CAMPBELL CLARKE, and produced under the direction of Mrs W. H. LISTON. Conductor—Mr F. STANISLAUS. The Opera commences at Eight, and is over by Eleven o'clock. Mesdames Julia Matthews, Emily Thorne, Rose Keene, and Alice Hamilton; Messrs A. Brennir, Perrini, Loredan. Private boxes from £1 1s. to £3 3s.; stalls, 7s. 6d.; dress circle, 5s.; boxes (bonnets allowed), 5s.; pit, 2s.; amphitheatre, 1s. To be obtained at the Box Office of the Criterion. Acting Manager—Mr EDWARD MURRAY.

WESTMINSTER HOSPITAL.

Mdme CHRISTINE NILSSON
HAS THE HONOUR TO ANNOUNCE THAT SHE WILL GIVE

A GRAND MORNING CONCERT,

IN AID OF THE FUNDS OF THE

WESTMINSTER TRAINING SCHOOL & HOME FOR NURSES,

ON

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 23RD, AT ST. JAMES'S HALL.

GEMME D'ANTICHITA.

RACCOLTA DI PEZZI VOCALI.

COMPOSTI DAI PIU CELEBRI

MAESTRI ANTICHI.

This unique Work has been carefully revised, and is now re-issuing in 200 Numbers, selected from the most esteemed Works of Bach, Handel, Beethoven, Spohr, Stradella, Scarlatti, Mozart, Pergolesi, Paesiello, Carissimi, Cimarosa, &c., &c. Edited by Lady Thompson, Macfarren, Wilhelm Ganz, Adolphe Ganz, Callcott, Lucas, Molique, Perugini, &c. The whole carefully revised and edited by JOSIAH PITTMAN. Lists Gratis.

C. LONSDALE'S
Musical Circulating Library,
26, OLD BOND STREET, W.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA, COVENT GARDEN.

THIS EVENING (SATURDAY), May 22nd, will be performed (first time this season), GOUNOD'S Opera, "FAUST E MARGHERITA." Margherita, Mdlle Albani (her first appearance in that character); Mdlle Scalchi; M. Faure (his first appearance this season), M. Maurel, Signori Tagliafico and Nicolini.

On MONDAY next, May 24, "DINORAH." Dinorah, Mdme Adelina Patti; Mdlles Cottino, Scalchi; Signori Marini, Capponi, Sabater, and Graziani.

On TUESDAY next, May 25, "FAUST E MARGHERITA." Margherita, Mdlle Albani (her second appearance in that character).

On THURSDAY next, May 27, "IL TROVATORE." Leonora, Mdme Adelina Patti; Mdlle Scalchi; Signori Marini, Tagliafico, and Graziani.

On FRIDAY next, May 28, fourth performance of RICHARD WAGNER'S celebrated Romantic Opera, "LOHENGRIN." Elsa di Brabante, Mdlle Albani; Mdlle D'Angeri; M. Maurel, Signori Capponi, Nicolini, and Herr Seidemann. Conductor—Signor Vianesi.

On SATURDAY, May 29. "FRA DIAVOLO." Zerlina, Mdlle Zaré Thalberg (her third appearance in that character, and her eighth on any stage); Mdlle Scalchi; Signori Ciampi, Sabater, Tagliafico, Capponi, and Naudin. Conductor—Signor Bevignani.

The Opera commences at Half-past Eight.

The Box Office, under the portico of the Theatre, is open from Ten to Five. Pit tickets, 7s.; amphitheatre stalls, 10s. 6d. and 5s.; amphitheatre, 2s. 6d.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL.—VERDI'S REQUIEM. To-Day (SATURDAY), at 3·30.

VERDI'S REQUIEM.—Special Repetitions at cheap prices, This (SATURDAY) Afternoon, May 22, and May 29. In consequence of the immense success of the REQUIEM, Signor VERDI has been induced to give two more performances on the above dates; and in order that every one may have an opportunity of hearing this great work, the prices will be fixed as follows:—Stalls, 10s. 6d.; arena stalls, 6s.; balcony, 3s.; admission, One Shilling. The Solos will be sung by Mdme Stoltz, Mdme Waldmann, Signor Mazini, and Signor Medini. Organist—Dr Stainer. Royal Albert Hall Choral Society. Full Band of 150. Conductor—Signor VERDI. These performances will commence at Half-past Three, and conclude about a Quarter-past Five. Tickets at NOVELLO'S; and the Royal Albert Hall.

MISS LILLIE ALBRECHT has the honour to announce that her SECOND MATINEE MUSICALE will (by kind permission) take place at 59, Lowndes Square, Belgravia, on MONDAY, June 7th, at 3·30, on which occasion she will play works by the following Masters: Ballade in G minor, Op. 23, and Tarentelle in A flat, Op. 43 (Chopin); Fugue Allegro con fuoco in F minor, No. 5 (Mendelssohn); Etude, "Si oiseau j'étais" (Henselt); Andante in D flat, Op. 32, and Fantasia (Masaniello) (Thalberg); Grand Octave Galop de Concert (Ketterer). Miss Lillie Albrecht will be assisted by Mdlles J. Sherrington and Enriquez, and Signor Monari-Rocca. Conductor—Mr, CHARLES E. STEPHENS. Tickets, Half-a-Guinea; family tickets (to admit three), One Guinea; to be had at Messrs Cramer, 201, and Duncan Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street; or of Miss LILLIE ALBRECHT, 38, Oakley Square, N.W.

MONS. PAQUE begs to announce that his MATINÉE MUSICALE will take place on THURSDAY, June 3, at 27, Harley Street, Cavendish Square. Tickets at 120, Great Portland Street, W.

THE "TALISMAN" CHORUSES.

(IN BALFE'S GRAND OPERA.)

No. 1. Chorus of Arabs.
„ 2. Salve Regina (Trio and Chorus).
„ 3. Draw Your Swords (Concerted Morceau).
„ 4. Hours and Hours Roll Slowly on (Chorus of Ladies).
„ 5. Thy Kinswoman Edith (Concerted Morceau).
„ 6. Farewell, my Beloved Edith (Finale to Act 2nd).
„ 7. A Song to Merrie England.
(Part Song—Soprano, Tenor, Alto, and Bass.)
„ 8. Glorious England (Finale).

No collection of Choruses equal in merit to the above has been published for years. The great success with which the "TALISMAN" has been received is sufficient evidence of the beauty of the entire Opera, in which the Choruses form, of course, one of the most effective features.

London: DUFF & STEWART, 147, Oxford Street.

Digitized by Google

MR HENRY LESLIE'S CHOIR, May 27th.—Mr Sims Reeves, Miss Eva Leslie, Signor Federici, and Mons Paque. ST JAMES'S HALL, Eight o'clock. Tickets, 6s., 3s., 2s., 1s.; at Austin's; and all Music Publishers.

MR HENRY LESLIE'S CHOIR, May 27th.—Mr SIMS REEVES will sing "THE MESSAGE" (accompanied by the Composer) and "TOM BOWLING." ST JAMES'S HALL, Eight o'clock.

MDLLE VICTORIA BUNSEN has the honour to announce that she will give a GRAND EVENING CONCERT, at 28, Ashley Place, Victoria Street, S.W. (by kind permission of Major Wallace Carpenter), on WEDNESDAY, May 26th, 1875, to commence at Half-past Eight o'clock, under the immediate patronage of his Excellency the Count Münster (German Ambassador), his Excellency the Count de Bylandt (Netherlands Minister), his Excellency the Baron Hochschild (Swedish and Norwegian Minister), the Baroness Hochschild, the Right Hon. Lord Eliot, and Mdme Jenny Lind-Goldschmidt. Vocalists—Miss Edith Wynne and Mdlle Victoria Bunsen; Herr Werrenrath (the Danish tenor), Mr Shakespeare (his first appearance since his return from Italy), Sig. Campobello, Sig. Caravoglia, and Sig. Urio. Instrumentalists: Violin—Mdme Varley-Liebe. Pianoforte—Mdlle Felicia Bunsen and Signor Tito Mattei. Conductors—Sir Julius Benedict, the Marquis d'Havet Zuccardi, Il Cavaliere Campana, and Herr Ganz. Tickets, One Guinea each; to be obtained of Messrs Stanley Lucas, Weber & Co., 84, New Bond Street; and of Mdlle VICTORIA BUNSEN, 22, Seymour Street, Portman Square, W.

Under the Patronage of the Right Hon. the EARL and COUNTESS of DUDLEY.

MDME MANGOLD DIEHL begs to announce that she will give a MORNING CONCERT at ST JAMES'S HALL, on SATURDAY Afternoon, June 12th, on which occasion she will be assisted by Miss Edith Wynne, Miss Elizabeth Philp, Signor Foli, and Mr Santley. Other eminent artists will appear. All communications to be addressed to Mdme MANGOLD DIEHL, at her residence, 7, Regent's Park Terrace, Gloucester Gate, N.W.

MESSRS J. LUDWIG and H. DAUBERT'S CLASSICAL CHAMBER CONCERTS, at LANGHAM HALL, 43, Great Portland Street, on WEDNESDAYS, May 26th, June 9th and 23rd, at Half-past Eight o'clock. Programme of Second Concert, Wednesday next: Trio, B flat, Op. 97, for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello (Beethoven); Lieder by Liszt and Brahms; Sonata in A major, for pianoforte and violin (Bach); Solo, violoncello, Sonata in A major (Bocherini): Spring Song (Willem Coenen); String Quartet in G minor, Op. 74, No. 3 (Haydn). Executants—Messrs Franklin Taylor, J. Ludwig, C. Jung, J. Zerbini, and H. Daubert. Vocalist—Mdlle Helene Arnim. Conductor—Mr J. ZERBINI. Stalls, 7s.; to be had at Chappell & Co., Stanley Lucas, Weber & Co., New Bond Street; C. E. Flavell, 26, North Audley Street; and Siegle, 110, Leadenhall Street, City.

MISS PURDY'S MATINÉE MUSICALE will take place (by kind permission) at 70, Queen's Gate, South Kensington, on MONDAY, the 7th June. Address to Miss PURDY at her residence, 35, Victoria Road, Kensington, W.

AGNES and VIOLET MOLYNEUX (the Juvenile Pianists) will give a SOIRÉE MUSICALE, at the BEETHOVEN ROOMS, on THURSDAY Evening, May 28. Vocalist—Mdme Poole. Accompanist—Mr Lindsay Sloper. Tickets, 7s. 6d., 5s., 2s. 6d.; at Messrs Chappell's, 50, New Bond Street; Messrs Cramer, Regent Street; Mr Austin, St James's Hall; and of Madame MOLYNEUX, 22, Euston Square, where terms for the above Entertainment may be obtained.

MR SYDNEY SMITH'S PIANOFORTE RECITAL (Fourth Season), at ST GEORGE'S HALL, Langham Place, on June 2nd (Afternoon). Vocalists—Mdme Patey and Mr Vernon Rigby.—No. 45, Blandford Square, N.W.

MR BRINLEY RICHARDS' LECTURE on "ANCIENT and MODERN NATIONAL MUSIC," with Vocal and Instrumental Illustrations—Greek, Gregorian, and Hungarian Scales—Pentatonic Music. Vocalists—Miss Mary Davies (Welsh Choral Scholar), Miss Marian Williams, and Miss Lizzie Evans (by permission of Dr Macfarren), at ST GEORGE'S HALL, on THURSDAY Evening next. The Right Hon. Lord CLARENCE PAGET in the Chair. Tickets, 5s., 2s. 6d., and 1s., at the Musicsellers.

"I WOULD BE A BOY AGAIN."

MR ARTHUR THOMAS will sing WILFORD MORGAN'S new Song, "I WOULD BE A BOY AGAIN," at Woolwich, May 21st; and Westbourne Hall, June 1st.

"HOW LONG WILT THOU FORGET ME?"

MR ARTHUR THOMAS will sing "HOW LONG WILT THOU FORGET ME?" (Sacred Song), by WILFORD MORGAN, on June 1st, at Westbourne Hall.

"ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?"

MR GERARD COVENTRY will sing (for the first time since his return from Milan), at Signor Torreti's Concert, on the 24th inst., ASCHER'S popular Romance, "ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?" and Sir JULIUS BENEDICT'S "NULLA DA TE."

BRIGHTON CONCERT AGENTS,
PIANOFORTE AND MUSICSELLERS,
LYON & HALL,
WARWICK MANSION.

WANTED, some FIRST CLASS CONCERT PARTIES, for beginning of December next, on Provincial Tour. Full particulars to be addressed, "Entrepreneur," care of DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

A LADY, having quitted the Operatic Stage, will be happy to give Accompanying LESSONS to Artists. Apply, by letter, addressed "Accompanist," care of DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

THE GUITAR.—MDME SIDNEY PRATTEN, Teacher of this elegant Instrument, is in Town for the Season. For LESSONS and Private CONCERTS, address to her residence, 22A, Dorset Street, Portman Square, W.

CONCERTS, PRIVATE THEATRICALS, and ENTERTAINMENTS.—To be LET, by the Night, Handsome SUITE of ROOMS, adjoining Hengler's Cirque, Argyll Street, Regent Street. The Large Hall (52 ft. by 35 ft., and 22 feet high) will seat about 300 people. Apply to HAIG & Co., 7, Argyll Street, W.

MR RICCARDI (the new Bass), who made so successful a debut at St James's Hall, March 12th, begs to announce his Return to London for the Season. All applications for ENGAGEMENTS to be addressed, Care of DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

MR EMILE BERGER will arrive in London the first week in June. All communications to be addressed care of DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, London, W.

MRS ELIZABETH BEESLEY (Pupil of Dr. Hans von Bülow), who made so successful a debut at the New Philharmonic Concert at St James's Hall, on the 8th inst., will remain in Town for the Season, and can accept ENGAGEMENTS for Concerts and Private Parties. Communications to be addressed to Mr N. VERT, 52, New Bond Street.

MONSIEUR DIAZ DE SORIA begs to announce his arrival in London for the Season, and that he can accept ENGAGEMENTS for Concerts, Soirées, &c. Address, 42, Great Portland Street, W.

CIRO PINSUTI'S LATEST SONGS.—"And so will I," 3s.; "Waiting for the Swallows," 3s.; "The Land of Love," 3s.; "Don't Forget Me," 3s. Post free 18 stamps each.

HENRY SMART'S NEW and STIRRING SONGS.—"The Old Flag of England" (in C and E), 3s.; "Victoria" (in G and B flat), 3s. Post free for 18 stamps each. London: ROBERT COCKS & Co., New Burlington Street.

Now Publishing,
ANDANTE and ALLEGRO CAPRICCIOSO,
For PIANO and ORCHESTRA, Op. 5.
By THOMAS WINGHAM.
Dedicated to Signor RANDEGGER.
SOLO, 7s. 6d.
Also, by the same Composer,
SYMPHONY, in B flat, No. 2, Op. 6.
Dedicated, by kind permission, to Sir W. STERNDALE BENNETT.
PERFORMED AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE CONCERTS.
DUET, 15s.
FESTAL OVERTURE, in C, Op. 8.
Composed in Commemoration of the Jubilee of the Royal Academy of Music.
Dedicated to JOHN HULLAH, Esq.
DUET, 7s. 6d.
To Subscribers, the above works will be issued at 12s. 6d. the Set. Names received by the Publishers—
LONDON: LAMBORN COCK & CO., 63, NEW BOND STREET.

In the Press,
"BY THE WILLOWS."
A WREATH OF SONGS, Op. 11.
Words (from the German) by L. N. PARKER.
MUSIC BY
THOMAS WINGHAM.
Dedicated to Dr FERDINAND HILLER.
Price 7s. 6d.
LONDON: BOOSEY & CO., 295, REGENT STREET.

"SHALL I WEAR A WHITE ROSE?"
BALLAD.
Words by H. SAVILLE CLARKE.
Music by EMILY BARDSLEY FARMER.
Nett, 2s.
JOSEPH WILLIAMS, Berners Street, and Cheapside, E.C.

Digitized by Google

MUSIC PAST AND PRESENT IN IRELAND.

(Continued from page 299.)

Having in the former essay closed with the last of the bards, we still deem it our duty to continue looking back at the history of the art for more than a century, in order to be able draw a fair comparison between the past and present.

Handel arrived in Dublin Nov., 1741. But, long before he honoured this city with his presence, music had been cultivated heartily and progressively. We start from Carolan, of whom Goldsmith says that, "of all the bards this country ever produced, the last and the greatest was Carolan the blind. He was at once a poet, a musician, a composer, and sung his own verses to the harp." Goldsmith was wrong here, for the last of the bards was Denis A. Hempsey, whom we have spoken of in the former essay. Carolan was born at the village of Nobber, county Westmeath, in 1670, on the same lands which had been wrested from his ancestors. He really was a musical genius. His devotion to the fair Bridget Cruise, whom he so fondly loved, but whom he was never to wed, though, it is said, her heart was not denied him, and whom he has immortalized in song, is one of those charming episodes which spring from the poetic temperament. Nothing can be more touching than the incident which occurred on his returning from St Patrick's Purgatory, a cave in the Island of Lough Derg; when, on reaching the shore, other devout travellers wishing to get on board, he chanced to take the hand of a lady, and instantly exclaimed, "This is the hand of Bridget Cruise!" and so it was. His sense of feeling had become intensified. This event is the subject of the late Samuel Lover's charming lyric—

"True love can ne'er forget
Fondly as first we met,
Dearest, I love thee yet,
My darling one!"

Carolan was a man of genius, endowed with a stupendous memory, as the following, quoted from the Monthly Review, will prove:—"At the house of an Irish nobleman, where Geminiani was present, Carolan challenged the eminent composer to a trial of skill. The musician played over on his violin the fifth concerto of Vivaldi. It was instantly repeated by Carolan on his harp, although he had never heard it before. The surprise of the company was increased when he said he would compose a concerto himself at the moment; and more so when he actually played that admirable piece, known since as "Carolan's Concerto." We think this piece has imperfectly come down to us, for Goldsmith says that, "for spirit and elegance, it might be compared with the finest compositions of Italy." Carolan died in 1739, in his 68th year. He is buried in the parish church of Kilronan, Ardagh, Westmeath, where his skull is preserved in a niche. He may be called the last of the bards. But his history and previous records prove that music was cultivated in Ireland when melody was scarcely known in other lands. Lord Kames says that the old Scottish tunes were originally Irish compositions, which James I.—who was himself a fine musician—had adapted to the Church service; and Pope calls Ireland "the mother of sweet singers." If space permitted, we could give many interesting anecdotes of the bards.

A Philharmonic Society and an Academy of Music existed in Dublin long before Handel's visit. The Academy built a music hall in Crow Street for the practice of Italian music. There were likewise many other musical societies in Dublin at that time. The Charitable Music Society—par excellence—also entitled the Philharmonic, that met at the Bull's Head in Fishamble Street—originated the funds which built the large music hall in that street—afterwards turned into Fishamble Street Theatre—where Handel's Messiah was first introduced, under the direction of the immortal composer. Previously it was the practice of those societies to amalgamate, and, with the additional assistance of the Choristers of St Patrick's, Christ Church, and the Chapel of Trinity College, give annually concerts of sacred music in the Round Church—St Andrew's—for the relief of distressed debtors in the Marshalseas of Dublin, and also in aid of Mercer's Hospital. At these meetings some of the works of Handel, such as the Utrecht Te Deum and Jubilate, and the Coronation Anthem—with anthems by Green and Boyce, formed the programme. The Lord Lieutenant and Lords Justice always attended in State, and gentlemen of rank officiated as stewards. The service was rendered after the manner of the cathedral, and a sermon was preached for the charity. Now, let the reader remember that this was so far back as the year 1730, and let him contrast the present state of music with the past. At the present there is certainly a Philharmonic Society, thanks to Apollo—of which more will be said in a future notice. There is a University Choral Society, supported by the students, whose efforts are calculated to keep up a taste for music in college, and also to disseminate it wherever they may be placed in after life. There is an Academy of Music, with a Government grant, which has done little as yet towards art progress—save to enable the affluent to get short lessons in singing and playing the pianoforte from competent professors at lower terms than could be accepted by the numerous outside teachers, giving to the rich the advantages of a Government grant and the subscriptions of the benevolent, which we deem were originally intended to be expended upon the musical education of young persons who manifested a natural instinct for the art, but whose means would not permit them to pay for the instruction necessary to its development. An admirable concert, lately given under the auspices of the Academy of Music, deserves mention here. It was a step in the right direction, and a more legitimate application of the funds of the institution than that just alluded to. Yet it must be kept in mind that the chorus was augmented from without, and the band consisted mainly of performers unconnected with the Academy. There is in Dublin no choral society for the masses of the people—no permanent orchestra. Therefore none of the oratorios of the great masters can be produced, and we are left behind the large towns in England in musical culture, though possessing ample material for the formation of a large choral body. Certainly glees are sung by one or two parties in admirable style, and there are likewise a few good solo singers and players; yet what a contrast to the last century, when the highest in rank and opulence not only patronized the art, but assisted at the performances. Marmontel remarks that "le goût se rectifie à mesure que l'art l'eclaire en lui presentant d'age en age pour objets de comparison, des modèles plus accomplis." But where are our citizens to seek their models, and what opportunity have they at present of drawing a comparison between what is false and true in art? The Earl of Mornington—father of the great Duke of Wellington—was leader of the Philharmonic Society, which held its meetings in the Music Hall, Fishamble Street, in the year 1740. Among the violoncellos were Lord Bellamont, Dean Burke, afterwards Archbishop of Tuam, and Sir John Dillon. The harpsichord was taken by Lady Freke and the Hon. W. Brownlow, and the principal flute was Lord Lucan. The members were numerous, and each performed on some instrument. Once a year they gave a public concert for some charity, to which all who purchased tickets were admitted. The present state of music in Dublin forms but a sorry contrast to this. We shall close with a short account of Lord Mornington. His father played well on the violin, which delighted the child in the nurse's arms long before he could speak. Dubourg, who was the leader in Handel's time, was on a visit at the family seat, but the child would not permit him to take the violin from his father until his little hands were held. After hearing Dubourg the case was altered, and there was much more difficulty to persuade him to let Dubourg give the instrument back to his father. Nor would the infant ever afterwards permit the father to play when Dubourg was in the house. This anecdote is related by the Hon. Daines Barrington in his Miscellanies, 1781. At nine years old he could play, and shortly after he took the second violin in Corelli's Sonatas. At fourteen he studied the harpsichord, and afterwards so quickly qualified himself for the office of organist, that in less than a year and a half he astonished his audience by sitting down and playing an extempore fugue on the organ erected by his father in the private chapel. The Dublin University conferred upon him the degree of Doctor of Music, and nominated him to the Chair of that Faculty. He was the first Professor of Music in the University. His works are full of graceful melody; with harmonies which show the hand of the musician. "Here in cool grot" gained the prize given by the Catch Club in 1779. Among others of his vocal compositions we may mention "O bird of eve" for five voices, a glee of great beauty, and full of that unspeakable charm which makes its way through the ear to the heart. H. T.

(To be continued.)

Digitized by Google

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

The second performance of Lohengrin may be said to have justified the impressions created by the first. To speak in any other than general terms about the music of such a peculiarly constructed work is out of the question; but to listen without being deeply impressed by certain passages, as, for instance, the duet between Lohengrin and Elsa, after the bridal ceremony, and again the final scene, when the "Knight of the Swan" takes eternal leave of his disconsolate bride, argues, in our opinion, insensibility to the highest beauty of which musical expression is capable. We have never advocated the peculiar theories the application of which Herr Wagner thinks indispensable to ideal perfection; on the contrary, we have been unable and see little chance of our ever being able to understand and admit their truth. But to deny the stern consistency with which he has endeavoured, and still endeavours, to enforce and carry them out is manifestly unjust. His method of treating lyric drama is, no doubt, opposed to what has hitherto been generally accepted as "form," and formless music is thus, again, according to those accepted ideas, the rule rather than the exception. But now that, at last, after a storm of discussion which has for more than a quarter of a century divided the champions of the musical art into two hostile camps, Herr Wagner has obtained a hearing among us, let him be fairly judged. Truth must prevail in the end, however loud the talking on either side. We have hitherto, in this country—the two performances of the Fliegende Holländer at Her Majesty's Opera some years ago allowed for—exclusively been permitted to judge of Wagner's music through the medium of detached pieces; and these, for the greater part, when separated from the context, especially in considering his later works, fail to make any strong impression. As component parts of the whole, however, they possess a clear significance which, if admitted in Lohengrin, will probably appear still clearer when what Wagner regards as the full expression of his ripe maturity comes before us. A more convincing proof could scarcely be named than the instrumental prelude to Lohengrin, which when played apart from the rest seems, to ordinary musical understandings, little else than a brief display of unusual orchestral colouring; but, when heard in conjunction with the opera, assumes both importance and poetical significance. Meanwhile Lohengrin is to be given for the third time very shortly, and, doubtless, will be given a fourth time and a fifth; so that closer familiarity will enable impartial judges to form an opinion as to whether such an endless succession of declamatory recitative is in the construction of an operatic entertainment ever to supersede the rhythmically proportioned melody to which up to the present time the greatest dramatic composers have accustomed us. That Beethoven was not of that mind, any more than was Mozart, is evident in his Fidelio; and Beethoven, according to Wagner, spoke the last word, until Wagner himself arrived to set on foot a new form of art combination, and invent a new musical phraseology. All we wish to urge is—let him speak for himself, and be judged dispassionately. Mr Gye, with the aid of Signor Vianesi, Mdlle Albani, Signor Nicolini, and the rest, has given him a fair chance; and now another awaits him at the theatre hard by.

That the Barbière di Siviglia of Rossini was speedily to follow upon the coming of Mdme Adelina Patti might have been taken for granted; and few were surprised, none disappointed, at seeing it chosen for the gifted lady's second appearance. The characters of Dinorah and Rosina are about as unlike to each other as two things of a kind can well be—as unlike, in fact, as the music of Meyerbeer is to the music of Rossini. But Mdme Patti of recent years has made both of them her own so completely as to justify the opinion that she has no rival in either. As her reception was on Tuesday in Dinorah, so was it on Thursday in the Barbiere. All the old "points" were reproduced, all the old demonstrations of satisfaction were repeated. The cavatina, "Una voce poco fa," was never vocalized with more facility, or ornamented with happier profusion; the duet with Figaro, "Dunque io son," never more effectively sung, or acted with shrewder significance. But why enter further into particulars about a performance so familiar? Enough to add that as it began, so it proceeded, and that a crowded and brilliant audience was from first to last enchanted. In the scene of the "Lesson" Mdme Patti introduced a waltz air from Gounod's Mireille, and for the inevitable encore substituted "Home, sweet home," a ballad for which she entertains a marked predilection and sings with expressive tenderness. What "Home, sweet home" can have to do with the Barbière, the audience, so long as Mdme Patti makes choice of it, neither know nor care. Her companions were Signors Piazza, Cotogni, Ciampi, and Bagagiolo. As times go, Signor Piazza, who has a light and flexible tenor voice, and acts with spirit, is a sufficiently agreeable Almaviva. The Figaro of Signor Cotogni is familiar; so are the Bartolo and Basilio of the other two gentlemen. All three, Signor Cotogni especially, exhibited those qualities which have obtained for them general acceptance. Signor Vianesi presided in the orchestra.

During the week there was another performance of Guillaume Tell, the noticeable feature in which was the return of Mdme Campobello Sinico, in her own part of Mathilde. Mdme Sinico received a cordial welcome, as might have been expected.

On Saturday night the opera was Auber's ever welcome Fra Diavolo. The second part essayed by Mdlle Zaré Thalberg suits her quite as well as the first. She enters with the same intelligence into Auber's Zerlina as into the Zerlina of Mozart. To name only the most trying situation—the opening Act 2, where, in the solitude of her chamber, little dreaming she is watched by the unscrupulous brigand and his associates, the innocent maiden gives free expression to delight at the thought of her approaching nuptials with Lorenzo—nothing can be more engaging than Mdlle Thalberg's conception. There was all the requisite spirit and spontaneity, accompanied by a gentle unobtrusiveness investing it with a charm apart. We need not describe the familiar incidents of which the scene is composed, and must be satisfied with this general expression of approval. It may be added, nevertheless, that Mdlle Thalberg's execution of the music was as finished as her delineation of the character was attractive—not merely in the well-known air before the looking-glass, the repetition of which by his confederates leads in the end to the capture of Fra Diavolo himself, but in the opening cavatina. Here Mdlle Thalberg combined the song originally written for the situation with a quick movement, in waltz-measure, from Haydée, a much later opera by the same composer. The perfect manner in which the whole was given pleased the audience so greatly that an "encore" was unanimously asked for, and the quick movement repeated. Enough for the present that the young débutante has, by this performance, earned another success which enhances the general interest felt in her artistic progress. To have accomplished thus much already, with only seventeen summers to account for, says no little. The other characters were sustained by the same artists as those associated with the clever Mdlle Smeroschi a short time ago. The conductor was Signor Bevignani.

The operas performed during the week have been La Traviata, with Madame Patti (Monday); Fra Diavolo, with Mdlle Thalberg, (Tuesday); Lohengrin, third time (Wednesday); the Barbiere (Thursday); and the Huguenots (last night). Faust, with Mdlle Albani, Signor Nicolini, and M. Faure is announced for this evening—six performances!

THE YORKSHIRE EXHIBITION.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

Sir,—A person hailing from Leeds on May 4th, and who, unfortunately for himself, has the temerity to sign himself "Veritas," informs us that "Dr Spark does not inaugurate the organ at the exhibition in this town," &c. All I have to remark on this gratuitous piece of information is to give you the following extract from the first official communication I received on the subject:—"Will you provide music on the grand organ on Friday, 14th May, by performances, morning and afternoon? This is the first half-crown day, and will, in point of fact, be the opening of the organ," &c. Also, in the official advertisement which appeared in all the local papers, Saturday, May 8th, it was prominently announced that—"The committee have made arrangements with Dr Spark (Borough organist) to inaugurate the organ on Friday." . . . . You will, in future, be wary of trusting your correspondent "Veritas," who is probably the author of an equally true statement which appeared in your issue of May 1st, respecting the payment of artists for their services at Leeds, in the performance of Elijah, on March 18th. Your insertion of this in your next number will oblige.

Yours faithfully,

Springfield Villa, Leeds, May 17, 1875. Wm Spark.

Digitized by Google

HER MAJESTY'S OPERA.

The return of Signor Fancelli has enabled Mr Mapleson to bring out, once more, the Huguenots, with great completeness of effect. Such a Valentine being at hand as Mdlle Tietjens, who made her still-remembered début in the same character at Her Majesty's Theatre, in 1858, two years later than Piccolomini, and three years earlier than Adelina Patti became known to the English public, the superb lyric drama of Meyerbeer was looked forward to as a matter of course. Then, to Signor Castelmary was assigned the character of Marcel, which stands side by side with those of Valentine and Raoul; while Madame Trebelli-Bettini, as the page Urbano, in which her supremacy has long been acknowledged, placed the distribution of the four chief personages well nigh beyond criticism. In the duet with Marcel (scene of the Pré aux Clercs), efficiently supported by Signor Castelmary, Mdlle Tietjens created, as always, a striking impression; but the culminating point, as from time out of mind, was the grand scene between Valentine and Raoul, after the "Benediction of the Swords." Here Signor Fancelli rose to the dignity of the occasion, and the applause at the descent of the curtain was more than ever enthusiastic. Beyond saying that to the new soprano, Mdlle Pernini, was intrusted the part of Marguerite de Valois; that Signor Galassi represented St Bris; that Signor de Reschi was Nevers; and that Sir Michael Costa's orchestra and chorus, under the sway of their distinguished master, displayed their accustomed zeal, it is unnecessary to add another word about the Huguenots, the second representation of which was as effective as the first.

M. Capoul's reappearance has materially strengthened the tenor department of Mr Mapleson's company. It has also brought back Gounod's Faust, for years regarded as indispensable at both our opera houses, and, with so poetical a Margaret as Mdme Christine Nilsson, invariably a strong attraction. It was as Margaret that the admirable Swedish songstress, early in her career, gave indications of those qualities which, by aid of assiduous study, have enabled her to rise to the position she now occupies, both as a vocalist of high attainments and as an actress of high rank. She is not simply the familiar Margaret of the painter, but the no less familiar "Gretchen" of the poet. With the experience of years her portrayal has gained in ripeness and consistency, and is now, beyond question, without a superior. On no occasion that we can call to mind has Mdme Nilsson created a livelier and more genuine impression. The meeting with Faust at the "Kermesse" was acted with the retiring grace which always distinguished it; the ballad at the spinning-wheel ("C'era un Ré di Thulé") was perfect in its way; and the love-duet with Faust exhibited more impassioned feeling than it had ever exhibited before. But the Cathedral scene, and that of the prison, brought a conviction more forcibly to the mind that Mdme Nilsson, with the inward consciousness of power, had determined to become actress as well as singer, and thus to realise the "ideal" which should be the ambition of every lyric artist aiming at the highest honours. Mdme Nilsson was admirable in both of these scenes, into a detailed description of which, so familiar are they, we may be dispensed from entering. Her voice was in excellent condition; and, to go back to an earlier incident of the opera, her execution of the famous "Jewel Song," in the Garden scene, was so facile and brilliant as to elicit an encore, with which there was no alternative but to comply. M. Capoul is precisely such a Faust as the French composer must have imagined. In the scenes with Margaret, this artist, long recognized as the love-maker par excellence at the Opéra Comique, throws a sentiment in its way irresistible. Signor Rota was welcomed again, as one of the most competent existing representatives of Mephistopheles; Signor de Reschi was an acceptable Valentine, Mdme Demeric Lablache an excellent Marta, and Mdme Trebelli a Siebel not to be surpassed. How familiar is the orchestra with M. Gounod's work every amateur knows. Repetitions of Lucia and Il Talismano, and a performance of the Trovatore, with Mdme Nilsson as Leonora, completed the proceedings of last week.

The operas performed during the present week have been Faust—with Mdme Nilsson (Monday); La Sonnambula—with Mdlle Varesi (Tuesday); Lucrezia Borgia (Thursday). Faust is to be repeated this evening.

BERLIN.

(From our Correspondent.)

At the Royal Operahouse, Mdlle Keller, from the Stadttheater Leipsic, has appeared as Azucena in Il Trovatore, and Ortrud in Lohengrin, producing a favourable impression in both characters, though her voice somewhat lacks strength and richness in the lower notes. A still more successful candidate for public favour was Mdlle Hasselbeck from the Stadttheater, Königsberg. As Agatha, in Der Freischütz, she won golden opinions from all sorts of persons: from the military exquisites, with fine padded chests, clanking sabres, and jingling spurs, in the stalls; from fair and blue-blooded "Vons" in the first tier; and from the equally æsthetically inclined, though more plebeian, patronisers of the Paradies, or gallery. Her next character, if we may trust the current report, is to be that of Ines in L'Africaine. Mdlle Stolberg, a young and talented member of the Theatre Royal, where she is a popular favourite, will shortly leave that institution for the Royal Operahouse. She possesses a fine contralto voice, which she has been assiduously cultivating for some time past, and her training as an actress will infallibly stand her in good stead on the lyric stage. It seems by no means unlikely that Mad. Lucca will shortly be heard here once more. The Berlin Echo, referring to this contingency, observes: "The appearance of Mad. Lucca as Selica, a short time since, before his Majesty the Emperor, at Wiesbaden, has given rise in the Berlin papers to conjectures that somewhat resemble fears lest the capricious little vocalist should again gain a footing here. The writers attempt, however, to calm their apprehensions by asserting it to be utterly impossible for the Royal Intendant-General to agree to, and to pay, even such a salary as would be far inferior to that which the Diva now receives from her present manager, Sig. Merelli. Moreover, she evidently will not, it is asserted, sing in Berlin, where she fears a coalition against her (?), because the manager of Kroll's Theater, as, likewise, the manager of the Victoria Theater, has in vain offered her 1,000 thalers a night for every night she plays. But all these convulsively consolatory arguments fall to the ground if we weigh them against the following certainly striking facts. The Intendant-General arranged with Mad. Lucca for a short starring engagement at the very time the Emperor was stopping at Wiesbaden, and his Majesty conversed most affably with the lady during the entr'actes. Now, if an invitation to return, though only for a flying visit, to the scene of her former triumphs be not on the cards, we may as well give up anything like surmise. That the lady should be unwilling to come out at a second class theatre, simply strengthens the supposition that she prefers appearing as a star at the Royal Operahouse.

The projected performances of a Russian company at the Theatre Royal will not take place, the agreement made between the Russian manager and Herr von Hülsen having been cancelled, by mutual consent, in consequence, it is alleged, of the discovery that the pieces to be represented were of the most childish and farcical character, utterly out of keeping with an institution like the Theatre Royal. Pecuniary considerations, moreover, were not foreign to the question. The Russians had performed and failed in Paris, where the manager contracted liabilities to the extent of 3,000 thalers. He requested Herr von Hülsen to advance him this sum "on account." Herr von Hülsen declined to accede to the application, and both parties, as before mentioned, cancelled the agreement by mutual consent.

Of the members of the Royal Operahouse now absent "upon leave," Mad. Mallinger will perform, towards the close of the present month, four times at the Imperial Operahouse, Vienna, the characters selected by her being Elsa in Lohengrin, Elisabeth in Tannhäuser, Susanne in Le Nozze, and Marguerite in Faust. Mdlle Brandt first sang a few nights at Stuttgart; she next proceeded to Gratz, and thence she will probably go to Vienna. Mdlle Grossi winged her flight to the Stadttheater, Hamburgh, and made her début as Isabella in Robert le Diable. Herr R. Wagner, it is now confidently stated, will himself superintend the getting up, and conduct his Tristan und Isolde at the Operahouse next winter. Mad. Mallinger will represent Isolde; Herr Niemann, Tristan; and Herr Betz, Kurwenal.

The title: Professor, has, by a ministerial edict, been conferred upon Herr A. H. Ehrlich, pianist and musical feuilletoniste.

Digitized by Google

LOHENGRIN.

(From the "Daily Telegraph.")

At last, after years of waiting—weary waiting, perhaps, we may not call it—the English opera-goer has seen and heard Richard Wagner. There is reason for congratulation in the fact itself, stripped of all attendant significance. Ever since the reformer of opera began to make a noise in the world, he has been to us a vaguely-defined and shadowy personality. Now and then, in concert-rooms, we have caught a glimpse of a figure which, we were told, resembled him very slightly; and once, on the stage of Drury-lane Theatre, appeared a strange, but not unattractive, personality which Wagner's friends said was a representation of his immature youth. Otherwise, the great man has resembled to us one of Ossian's shadowy heroes, "orating" from a distant mountain-top, while his form loomed vaguely and mysteriously through a fog. For a long time English amateurs cared little about the matter. They had their Beethoven and Mozart, their Rossini and Meyerbeer, their Donizetti and Auber—operatic composers quite good enough for them; and so it happened that, if ever their eyes rested upon the misty outlines of Wagner's figure, no special desire was excited. But men and women cannot long see anything dangled just out of their reach without wishing to grasp it. For this reason, if not on account of an intelligent interest in the question which Wagner represents, there grew up amongst us a real curiosity to know what the most notorious of modern musicians really is. The extent and depth of that curiosity may be measured by the fact that Mr Gye now counts upon it to repay an expenditure of some £4,000 upon the production of Lohengrin. It was well, therefore, to have it appeased. But what Wagner did the people go out for to see on Saturday night? There are many forms of him. Here he shows himself barely distinguishable from the mass who labour in the same field of art. There he is recognized by wearing a kind of motley, half conformable to usage, half eccentric, if not wholly new. Yonder he stands alone in his glory, bearing no likeness to anything in heaven above or in the earth beneath. The revelation of this latest development would perhaps have been too much for us, and it was fortunate that Mr Gye presented Wagner in an earlier and less strange aspect. There are some things, and Wagnerism is one, up to which men must be educated. The eye accustomed to darkness is blinded by a rush of light. It needs to pass gradually into the full glory of day. So must the musical amateurs of our benighted nation—Philistine, we believe, is the appropriate term—progress towards the complete Wagner. The Nibelungen Trilogy would confound us. The milder dose of Lohengrin may do us good. Let us see how the dose was mixed, administered, and received.

Nearing Covent Garden we are sensible of a special occasion. The long "rank," the hurrying of visitors on foot, the prevalence of "scores" appropriately bound in the loudest of colours, and the feverish activity of those who sell books of the words "in both languages" all bespeak a great night. The lobby is crowded, and long before the time when Signor Vianesi lifts his bâton the unreserved parts of the house are crowded to excess. A good look at the packed amphitheatre and gallery, the tenants of which will "assist," in no conventional meaning of the term, at the performance, repays trouble. The Teutonic element is there in strong force, signalized by round florid faces, a profusion of straw-coloured beards, many spectacles, and a prevailing expression of that solemn thoroughness which characterises the worshipping German mind. It is a great occasion with our cousins. They are in earnest, and, should the indifference of Englishmen be very conspicuous, may wax angry—a grave matter in these times, if not a casus belli. Lower down, the reserved seats fill quicker than they are wont to do, and even there a certain gravity prevails. Eyes that most often have opera-glasses glued to them are fixed upon unfamiliar pages; heads that usually nod to a circle of acquaintances are quiescent in the act of trying to comprehend the "myth-matter," which, as we have lately been told, represents to us, who are only "compounds of consecutive generations," the "pure symbols of primeval forces." Even Royalty basks in the dawning light of the day of future opera. First to enter the Royal box are the Duchess of Cambridge and the Duke and Duchess of Teck, after whom come the Prince and Princess of Wales and the Duke of Connaught, with their respective suites. But much more conspicuous to discerning eyes than these "dignities" is the gathering of men and women famous in the worlds of literature and art. "Everybody is here who can claim to be anybody," a magnificent compliment to Wagner, which should gratify his ambition, even though his opera be hissed off the stage. But now appears Signor Vianesi, with a shade of care upon his face, which those who know what Wagnerian opera exacts can readily understand. A minute's pause, and then the prelude begins. We do not like the manner of its beginning. Liszt describes the opening bars as a "vaporous ether," but we find them neither vaporous nor ethereal, but simply a commonplace sequence of chords for violins, in eight parts, played much too loudly. This ill-advised opening lessens the effect of the crescendo which illustrates the descent of the Holy Grail. Wagner himself says of this prelude that it suggests a "miraculous troop of angels bearing in their midst the sacred vessel." He goes on: "The holy procession draws nearer; the heart of the elect of God gradually exalts itself, it enlarges, it dilates; ineffable aspirations awaken in him; he experiences increasing happiness in finding himself attracted by the luminous apparition, and when, at last, the Holy Grail itself appears in the midst of the sacred cortége, he falls into ecstatic adoration, as though the entire world had suddenly disappeared." All this is hidden from the bulk of the audience, who recognize no more than a highly-coloured but vaguely suggestive movement, wherein the orchestra is handled with consummate skill. The Teutons aloft are, of course, an exception. With them "the entire world had suddenly disappeared," and they like vacuum so much as to clamour for its renewal, which boon Signor Vianesi obligingly grants. Then the curtain rises, and we are translated to the banks of the Scheldt, near Antwerp, nine hundred years ago—a splendid picture, and one that does infinite credit to Messrs Dayes and Caney. Over the foreground stretch the arms of royal oaks, and in the distance, bordered by rushes, flows the "lazy" river, while a bright sun sheds its glory upon all. But the proper study of mankind is man; and we turn from the natural features of the scene to the glittering array of princes, knights, and soldiers, drawn up around King Henry the Fowler. The action soon begins. Four trumpeters —there are sixteen somewhere about the theatre, and all are not good—execute a fanfare, and a Herald (Signor Capponi) steps forward to explain why the King has summoned his vassals. The vassals say they are ready to fight, and the King (Herr Seidemann), in a voice which suggests that the damp air of the Low Countries scarcely agrees with him, gives particulars, winding up by demanding of Frederic of Telramund (M. Maurel) why disunion and strife prevail in those parts. Frederic steps forward to say that Elsa (Mdlle Albani), his ward, and daughter of the late Duke of Brabant, was strongly suspected of having made away with her brother Gottfried. On this account, he (Frederic) could not marry her, as had been arranged, but had chosen Ortrud (Mdlle d'Angeri), whom he presents to the monarch. Frederic winds up by charging Elsa with fratricide, and claiming the Duchy as his own. All this (13 pages) goes on mostly in such recitative as proves the truth of what was said of Tannhäuser—"the four-and-twenty keys do not afford a good basis for the ear." A German critic once wrote, apropos to the music of this scene: "It is mere bungling—nay, it is filth, the most despicable violation of the rules of art; and if any one should cry out and tell us that we are stupid because this music does not please us, we appeal to a far more certain organ than the brain, and reply, 'You cannot possess ears if you are fond of revelling in such discord.'" We will hardly go so far as this writer, but in good sooth Wagner's wild shrieks of liberty from the dominion of the tone-family are distressing enough to make us ask him for an explanation. He is ready, of course, and tells us, referring to the discovery of the relationship of all tones, that "music shot up into an immense and varied expanse, in which the absolute musician, swimming about without an object and without repose, began to lose courage. Before him he saw naught but an endless heaving mass of possibilities, but was conscious of no object within himself to determine them. . . . . Thus the musician almost felt obliged to regret his immense swimming capabilities; he yearned for the still creeks of his original home again, where, between narrow banks, the water flowed tranquilly in one definite stream." Hence the sway of the limited tone-family, from which a strong swimmer like Wagner is of course free. He can plunge about, shooting rapids, tumbling down cataracts, and gyrating in whirlpools, with an immunity of which Captain Boyton never dreamed—and he does it. But the action of the drama goes on. Henry determines to sit in judgment then and there upon Elsa, whom the Herald summons to appear. The royal maid is supposed to be wandering that way. At any rate, she hears the trumpeters (as we do emphatically), and enters, attended by her women. The King asks if she will be judged by him. Elsa consents, and goes on to tell, in dreamy fashion, of a resplendent knight and champion, whom visions have made known to her. The music is here full of tenderness and beauty. It is melodious besides, and the ear rejoices in it as the eye, after long gazing at sandy desolation, revels in the sight of verdant fields and towering palms. Moreover, Mdlle Albani sings charmingly, and gives a foretaste of the excellence which will characterize her performance as a whole. Moved by the favourable impression which Elsa has produced, Frederic claims the ordeal of single combat. The King consents, and, the lists having been prepared in solemn form, calls upon Elsa to name her champion. She chooses the hero of her dreams, vowing that his shall be her hand and crown; whereupon the Herald, backed by his noisy trumpeters, again and again calls for the favoured warrior without avail. In an agony of apprehension, Elsa and her ladies fall upon their knees to pray for his advent. As they do so, the crowd nearest the river utter words of astonishment, and presently is seen, in a small boat drawn by a swan, a Knight covered with resplendent silver armour. It is Lohengrin (Signor Nicolini), who comes, not in visions now, to fight for the cause of innocence and beauty. A wonderful double chorus expresses the astonishment of the on-lookers—such a chorus as only genius could have written; because suggestive in itself, without help from words, of the tumultuous feelings incidental to the situation. Here, not the Germans up aloft merely, but everybody is delighted, and, in response to loud applause, Signor Vianesi repeats the chorus. Well for him that Wagner is not present to witness the dramatic absurdity of a crowd making believe to see an apparition in the distance, when, all the time, it is waiting only a few feet off. The assembly welcomes Lohengrin in a few jubilant bars, after which the strange Knight dismisses his swan, and comes to the front as a short chorus is sung in his honour. At this point recitative begins again. Lohengrin is accepted by Elsa as her champion and husband, subject to the condition of asking no questions about his name, race, or country. This matter arranged, Lohengrin denies the charge of Frederic, and the two knights prepare for combat, while the Herald warns all and sundry not to interfere. But, before the struggle, it is necessary to invoke the justice of Heaven; Henry descends from his throne to act as priest as well as king; and another vast ensemble echoes his prayer. The episode is grandly conceived and worked out, but its execution is a sad business; ears already shocked enough by Wagner's doings among the "endless heaving mass of possibilities," being tortured by singing not even approximately in tune. We now watch the encounter with breathless interest. Frederic is worsted, of course; and, as he creeps away, Elsa begins a song of triumph, which expands into a lengthened and elaborate finale of a commonplace character, and productive of no more than vulgar effects. Upon this the curtain descends amid roars of applause that only cease when the principal performers have twice bowed their acknowledgments. So far the opera is a success. We are dazzled by the splendour and chivalry of the scene, impressed by the poetic beauty of the story, and, hardly less, by the novel character of its musical treatment. But are we satisfied as well as excited? Some of us, at least, must answer, "No." Weary of blazing tone-colour, endless surprises, unmelodious declamation, and the constant strain at which the composer works, we doubt—while calling to mind the dungeon scene in Fidelio, and the supper scene in Don Giovanni—if this be the only true dramatic music.

Digitized by Google

(To be continued.)

MELBOURNE.

(From a Correspondent.)

The Allen English Opera Company has returned, after a successful and lengthy tour. Miss Alice May left behind her the most pleasant recollections. Since the Allen troupe left, we have had Italian opera, with Mdme Palmieri, and opera bouffe, with Miss Thompson, Miss Winstone (who has become a great favourite), Messrs Fox, Bracey, and Farley. M. Blondin now appears nightly between the acts of the Grand Duchesse. To-night is to be his last; and the great rope-walker leaves by the mail which takes this letter. Mdme Bishop gives a sacred concert at the Theatre Royal on Good Friday, and a series of concerts in Easter week. The Royal English Opera Company are resting for a short period, and will appear next in Adelaide.

Melbourne, March 24.

DÜSSELDORF.—A one-act romantic opera, entitled Der Geiger von Gmünd, has been successfully produced at the Stadttheater. The libretto is by Herr Hermann Hirschel, and the music by Herr Josef Stich.

HANOVER.—Liszt played recently at a concert in the Theatre Royal, in aid of the fund for erecting a monument at Eisenach in honour of Johann Sebastian Bach. The programme, composed exclusively of works by that great master, included a Church Cantata for Solo Singers, Chorus, and Orchestra; Sonata for Pianoforte and Violoncello; "Präludio, Sarabande, and Bourrée for Violoncello; two Chorales (the Cathedral Choir); Concerto in C major, for Two Pianofortes, and Fantasia with Fugue on the notes B A C H; and Liszt's Variations on the Basso continuo from the sacred cantata: Weinen—Klagen—Sorgen—Zagen.

MUSIC AT VIENNA.

(From a Correspondent.)

At the Imperial Operahouse, Miss Minnie Hauck has been engaged for a few performances in the first week in June. Immediately afterwards, Aida will be played twice, under Verdi's direction. The characters of Aida and Amneris will be sustained by Mesdes Waldmann and Stolz, who sustained them on the first production of the opera at Cairo. The first appearance of Herr Hans Richter as Capellmeister was marked by a change in the mode of performing a well-known work—Beethoven's Fidelio, to wit. The overture No. 3 to Lenore was played before the curtain went up, instead of, as hitherto, between the acts. The reason for this innovation is that the action of the opera may not be interrupted, and that the prelude to the second act may be heard to advantage. For next season there is a prospect of Les Vêpres Siciliennes (not performed for thirteen years), Rigoletto, and Le Fils Prodigue, which was once a favourite opera here, but has disappeared from the repertory since the death of Herr Ander. The novelties are to be Tristan und Isolde; Carmen, by Bizet; Timbre d'Argent, by St Saëns; and a romantic opera by Ivar Hallström. There is a talk of an Italian season in March and April, with Patti and Lucca, Nicolini, Capoul, Debassini, and Zucchini.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL.

The concerts given on Whit Monday at the Albert Hall were not so well attended as they probably would have been had not their promised attractions been outbid by the pleasures elsewhere—those brought about by fine weather and the enjoyments of the green fields. There was a tolerably large audience in the evening. The programme was good of its kind, and compiled wholly in the interest of the holiday-makers, whose tastes were propitiated by a round of songs and ballads, most of them "familiar as household words," interspersed with the pleasant part-singing of the Albert Hall glee party. Mr Sims Reeves was announced, and, not only so, appeared, much to the satisfaction of the sceptics, who, taught by experience, had hoped against hope and dreaded a repetition of old disappointments. The great tenor, however, was, upon this occasion, at hand, and, happily, in excellent health. He sang a new song, of the plaintive school, by Arthur Sullivan, called "The love that loves me not," and Hatton's never failing "Good bye, sweetheart, good bye," in both of which he challenged the encores to which he is entitled by right as well as by compliment. The new song by Arthur Sullivan will, doubtless, meet with a cordial welcome in the drawing-room. Its dreamy tenderness will invite the sympathies of many a gentle amateur, who will essay it accordingly, and in many cases, it may be assumed, with success. The delicate finish with which Mr Sims Reeves rendered it was beyond all praise, and the song had the further advantage of being accompanied by the composer. Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, another of the fixed stars at the Royal Albert Hall, headed the list of vocalists, and her well-known version of "John Anderson, my jo," and "I dreamt that I dwelt in marble halls"—the latter followed, upon encore, by her husband's pretty song, "Down in my heart a little bird"—were received with the customary marks of approbation. Equal in importance to Madame Lemmens-Sherrington was Madame Patey, who is now also one of the indispensables of a popular concert. Wallace's charming setting of "Sweet and low," Barnby's new song, "Thou whom my heart adoreth," and "The minstrel boy," were the vehicles chosen to exhibit her fine voice and exemplary taste; and two of them, if not the whole three, were redemanded. Mr W. H. Cummings was in good voice and good spirits, and contributed Blumenthal's dainty song, called "Yes!" and "Draw the sword, Scotland," in his own neat and unaffected manner. And then there was Signor Foli to sing Diehl's patriotic song about "Dear England"—

> "Where a slave cannot breathe, or invader presume
> To ask for more land than will cover his tomb"— and "Hearts of oak"—gems both in the ears of a Whitsuntide audience. Besides the above singers, Mdlle St Alba warbled, in a showy style, the bolero from Verdi's Vespri Siciliani, and, later in the evening, "Kathleen, mavourneen." Among the best events of the programme, however, were the performances of a pair of De Beriot's ornate violin solos, by a Mdlle Clarita Sanjuan—a lady who, there is every probability, will be in request at other concerts during the present season, on the strength of her very remarkable ability as an executant—a beautiful quality of tone and consummate tenderness of expression being also characteristics of her playing that will not be overlooked. The glee singers interposed their part-songs at frequent intervals, their most acceptable exploit being the "Three chafers," which was encored; and Mr Hoyte topped and tailed the concert with performances on the organ. The songs were accompanied by Mr W. H. Thomas.

D. H. H.

Digitized by Google

ST JAMES'S HALL,

REGENT STREET AND PICCADILLY.

MR CHARLES HALLÉ'S

Pianoforte Recitals.

MR CHARLES HALLÉ has the honour to announce that his Fifteenth Series of PIANOFORTE RECITALS will take place on the the following afternoons :—

FRIDAY, May 28, 1875.
FRIDAY, June 4, 1875.
FRIDAY, June 11, 1875.
FRIDAY, June 18, 1875.
FRIDAY, June 25, 1875.

FOURTH RECITAL,

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, MAY 28, 1875.

To Commence at Three o'clock precisely.

Programme.

TRIO in A, for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello—Mr CHARLES HALLÉ, Mdme NORMAN-NERUDA, and Herr FRANZ NERUDA .. S. Bennett.

GRAND SONATA in C, Op. 53, for pianoforte—Mr CHARLES HALLÉ .. .. Beethoven.

"GEDENBLATT," Serenade in B major, for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello (first time)—Mr CHARLES HALLÉ, Mdme NORMAN-NERUDA, and Herr FRANZ NERUDA .. .. T. Kirchner.

THREE PENSÉES FUGITIVES (a) Romance, (b) Intermezzo, (c) Lied, for pianoforte and violin—Mr CHARLES HALLÉ and Mdme NORMAN-NERUDA .. .. Heller and Ernst.

TRIO in E flat, Op. 40, for pianoforte, violin, and horn—Mr CHARLES HALLÉ, Mdme NORMAN-NERUDA, and M. VANHAUTE Brahms.

Sofa Stalls (numbered and reserved), 7s.; balcony, 3s.; area, One Shilling.

Tickets may be had at Chappell & Co.'s, 50, New Bond Street; Mitchell's, 33, Old Bond Street; Ollivier's, 38, Old Bond Street; Keith, Prowse & Co.'s, 48, Cheapside; Hays's, 4, Royal Exchange Buildings; Austin's Ticket Office, 28, Piccadilly; and by Mr CHARLES HALLÉ, 11, Mansfield Street, Cavendish Square.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

TORQUATO.—Goldoni (the Molière of Italy) was born at Venice, on the 25th of February, 1707.

LAVENDER PITT.—No. The opera, Tigrane, was by Righini. Mr Pitt probably refers to the Zaire of Winter.

AMATEUR.—The sisters Marchisio sang first at Paris, in 1864, when the opera selected for them was Semiramide.

DR EVERY.—When Dr Sloman's Supplication and Praise was performed in the Royal Albert Hall (June 17, 1874), Mr Edward Bending—not Dr Hough—was the organist, and Mr William Carter conducted everything except the work of Dr Sloman. Dr Every is right about the Processional March from Placida, but wrong in each of his other statements.

VERITAS.—The concert referred to by our correspondent was given at Dudley House (Park Lane), on the 4th of July, 1861. Madame Lind Goldschmidt did sing, as also Signori Giuglini and Belletti. Herr Otto Goldschmidt was pianist and conductor, Herr Deichmann violinist, and Signor Piatti violoncellist. The concert was for the benefit of the Society of Female Artists.

MARRIAGE.

On the 19th May, at the Chapel Royal of the Savoy, by the Rev. H. White, HARRY, eldest son of Mr Charles Turner, of the Royal Nurseries, Slough, to ELIZABETH, only daughter of Mrs Bacon (Miss Poole).

DEATH.

On May 17th, at 17, Keppel Street, Russell Square, ANTONINE, wife of Alexandre Billet, Esq., aged 51.

NOTICE.

To ADVERTISERS.—The Office of the MUSICAL WORLD is at Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & Co.'s, 244, Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street (First Floor). It is requested that Advertisements may be sent not later than Thursday. Payment on delivery.

The Musical World,

LONDON, SATURDAY, MAY 22, 1875.

WE are glad to find the "provincial" press exerting its influence in a direction we have always advocated, and, to the best of our ability, shall continue to advocate, for the benefit of art and its professors. Read the subjoined extract from a recent article in the Liverpool Mail:—

"The disgraceful turmoil amidst which a concert at the Philharmonic Hall terminated on Wednesday evening directs attention to a subject which stands in need of rational adjustment. We refer to encores. In many cases these uproarious manifestations of British delight have ceased to be a compliment; they have become a nuisance. The incident at the Philharmonic Hall was an illustration of the latter phase of the subject. Mr Sims Reeves is, no doubt, a popular man; but it is both unreasonable and ill-mannered in an audience which has gone to hear a specified programme insisting upon its principal items being duplicated. It is useless to pretend that this demand is dictated by uncontrollable admiration of the artist; it is pure selfishness and greed on the part of the audience, who want two concerts for their one payment. Mr Reeves was gracious enough to submit to one encore on Wednesday; but when, later in the programme, he again performed his allotted work, and the audience repeated their demand for a second ballad, Mr Reeves stoutly resisted the importunity. When the people shouted, he bowed, and on five successive occasions came before them in answer to their enthusiastic applause. Mr Reeves declined either to repeat "Tom Bowling," or to give another song in its place, and in this course we think he was entirely justified. The persistent enthusiasm was simply a vulgar demand for a second concert, and instead of being a true compliment to the artist was an attempted extortion. The encore nuisance, especially at "popular" entertainments, has become an outrage on good manners, and singers are fully justified in setting their faces against it. There are occasions when encores may be regarded as honest expressions of admiration, and it would be injudicious to abolish them utterly. But they ought to be reduced in frequency; and such scandalous outbreaks as occurred in Liverpool on Wednesday should be condemned as equally offensive to the artists and the reputable portion of the audience."

Our great singer is continually exposed to these annoyances; and his manful resistance redounds to his honour. The Liverpool Porcupine also appears in the lists, as champion for what is true and right. Thus speaks our polyquilled contemporary:—

"The disturbance at the Sims Reeves concert on Wednesday evening recalls disagreeably the encore nuisance against which from time to time we have protested. At almost every concert or operatic performance given in this town a small lot of persons seem to have it in their power to alter the whole scheme of the entertainment, by noisily insisting on the repetition of parts of the programme. These people are invariably a miserable minority of the audience, and their proceedings proclaim them to be as stupid as they are mean and greedy. They have paid the smallest sum that will gain them admission to the house, to hear a performance the particulars of which have been advertised, and their endeavours are to coerce the artistes to give them as much more as they can wheedle or bully out of them without additional payment. The rudeness with which they levy this black-mail is equalled by their artistic ignorance. They interrupt the prima donna in the middle of an air to show their admiration of some incidental embellishment, and they ruin the dramatic force of the most interesting operatic situation by insisting on the repetition of the hero's passionate avowals or the heroine's despair. It has been suspected that these fellows are sometimes paid by the managers of entertainments to stimulate the applause, and this would certainly account for the mal-apropos manner in which the duty is performed; but we more incline to the belief that they are of the mean class who seldom spend a shilling on music, and who are determined, when they do, to have all they can get for their money. From a crowded concert like that of Wednesday it is impossible to expel disturbers; but the moral resistance offered by Mr Sims Reeves, if generally imitated, would cure the evil."

Health and long existence to the Liverpool Porcupine! May its quills have point, and its shadow never be less. Be chesm!

FLORENCE.—The Teatro Nazionale is being repaired and redecorated. It will reopen in the autumn with opera and ballet.

OLDENBURG.—A monument in honour of J. F. Herbart, writer on philosophy, will be unveiled on the 100th anniversary of his birth, next year, he having first seen the light here on the 4th May, 1776. Herbart possessed considerable talent as a musician, composed Pianoforte Sonatas, and was the author of a work entitled: "Physiological Considerations on the Theory of Tone." There is an interesting article concerning him in H. Mendel's "Musikalisches Conversations-Lexicon."

Digitized by Google

OCCASIONAL NOTES.

At the recent Festival of the Sons of the Clergy, in St Paul's Cathedral, the orchestra (52) was led by Mr Frank Amor. Mr George Cooper being unwell, his place at the organ was taken by G. Martin, Mus. Bac. The overture to The Last Judgment was played before service, and about a dozen numbers from the same oratorio formed the anthem. The Canticles ("Magnificat" and "Nunc Dimittis"), by Mr Henry Gadsby, had already been performed on a previous occasion (St Paul's Day, Jan. 25), with full orchestral accompaniment. The chorus was nearly three hundred strong. The soloists were Masters Hollis, Grover, and Brereton (sopranos); Mr Frost (alto); Messrs Kerr Gedge, Thornton, Kenningham, and Raynham (tenors); Messrs De Lacey and Winn (basses)—all members of the St Paul's choir.

For the forthcoming Norwich Musical Festival (commencing on Monday, September 20th), the following artists have been engaged, viz.:—Mdlle Emma Albani, Mdme Lemmens-Sherrington, Mdlle Mathilde Enequist, Mdme Patey, and one of Mr Maplesson's most recent and brilliant successes, the charming Mdlle Anna de Belocca; Messrs Lloyd, Guy, Minns, Wadmore, and Foli, with Sir Julius Benedict as conductor. The sacred performances are to include Mendelssohn's Elijah and Hymn of Praise; Spohr's "God, Thou art great;" selection from Pierson's Jerusalem; Haydn's Imperial Mass; Sullivan's David and Jonathan (composed for this Festival); Sir W. Sterndale Bennett's Woman of Samaria; and Handel's Messiah. Among the attractions announced for the evening entertainments are Randegger's Fridolin, and Sir Julius Benedict's Legend of St Cecilia. The Festival is to take place in St Andrew's Hall.—Weston S. Jackson.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

The following is the programme of the Students' Concert, given at St James's Hall on Thursday evening:—

Allegro con fuoco, from Trio in B flat (Op. 6), for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello (Miss Emily Banks, Mdlle Gabrielle Vaillant, and Mr Buels)—Ferdinand Hiller; Songs, "Venetianisches Gondellied," and "Wanderlied" (Miss Amy Aylward)—Mendelssohn; Allegro, from "Faschingsschwank aus Wien" (Op. 26), pianoforte (Miss Edith Brand)—Schumann; Trio, "Words are weak" (Solomon) (Miss Shaboe, Miss Richardson, and Miss Arnold)—Handel; Song, "When the orb of day, reposing" (Euryanthe) (Mr Howells)—Weber; Notturno, in E flat (first movement), for pianoforte and violin (Miss Harper and Mdlle Gabrielle Vaillant)—Dussek; Song (MS.), "The Tree and the Maiden" (Miss Mary Davies, Welsh Choral Union Scholar)—H. C. Banister; Sonata, in E minor, pianoforte and violoncello (Miss Turner Burnett and Mr Buels)—Walter Macfarren; Lied, "Nachtgesang" (Miss Reimar—violin obbligato, Mdlle Gabrielle Vaillant)—Hauptmann; Motett, for female voices, "Surrexit Pastor" (solos by Miss Larkcom, Westmorland Scholar; Miss Farrar, Miss Grace Bolton, and Miss Bolingbroke, Parepa-Rosa Scholar)—Mendelssohn; Study in A minor and Traumeswirren, pianoforte (Miss Ethel Goold)—Thalberg and Schumann; Song, "On a Faded Violet" (Miss Annie Butterworth)—E. H. Thorne; Duet in F minor (MS.), pianoforte and violoncello (Miss Prescott and Mr Buels)—Oliveria Prescott (student); Songs, "Oh, Tell me, my Heart" and "A Hunter's Song" (Mr Wadmore)—Mendelssohn; Song (MS.), "The Grave" (Miss Grace Bolton)—Corder (student); Quartet, "Blessed are they," St John the Baptist (Miss Jessie Jones, Miss Thekla Fischer, Mr Howells, and Mr Wadmore)—G. A. Macfarren; Allegro Brillante in A (Op. 92), for two performers on the pianoforte (Mr G. F. Smith and Mr H. Walmsley Little)—Mendelssohn; Trio, "Le faccio," Il Matrimonio (Miss Marrietta, Miss Larkcom, Westmorland Scholar; and Miss Grace Bolton)—Cimarosa; Twenty-fourth Psalm, "The earth is the Lord's" (solos by Miss Marie Duval, Miss Grace Bolton, Mr Nichol, and Mr Ap Herbert)—Spohr.

The accompanists of the vocal music were Miss Alice Curtis (Potter Exhibitioner), Mr W. W. Bampfylde, Mr Walter Fitton. Mr Walter Macfarren was the conductor. Among the pieces that attracted more than usual attention were Dussek's Notturno for violin and piano, so capitally played by Miss Harper and Mdlle Vaillant that everyone regretted the minuet and trio, which complete the work, were not also given; Mr Walter Macfarren's clever sonata for pianoforte and violoncello; two songs by Mendelssohn, sung by Mr Wadmore, who pleases more and more every time he comes before the public; and Mr Banister's song, "The Tree and the Maiden," excellently sung by Miss Mary Davies.

PROVINCIAL.

Deptford.—A concert was given at the Christ Church Mission Hall, in aid of the Organ Fund. A number of ladies and gentlemen proffered their services in the cause, and gave a very agreeable entertainment. One of the hits of the evening was Mr Arthur Thomas's rendering of Wilford Morgan's new song, "I would be a boy again," which was unanimously encored.

Worcester.—The Worcestershire Chronicle informs us that the performance lately, of Macfarren's St John the Baptist, by the Worcester Philharmonic Society, is deserving of the highest praise. Mrs A. J. Sutton (soprano), Miss Minnie Watkins (contralto), Mr W. M. Dyson (tenor), and Mr Orlando Christian (bass), were the principal vocalists. The choruses were given with a precision that reflected credit upon the conductor (Mr Done), and those under his direction. The duet for tenor and bass, "Whatsoever mine eyes desire," was deservedly followed by universal commendation, and Mrs Sutton was called upon to repeat the song of Salome, "I rejoice in my youth," and the beautiful quartet, "Blessed are they," was also repeated. The audience was very numerous, all parts of the Music Hall being well filled; and we are sure that those present will join with us in expressing a hope that the society will give us the opportunity of listening to many more oratorios as promptly and satisfactorily performed as was Macfarren's.

Brighton.—There were no less than three prime donne at Mr Kuhe's concert given last Thursday week, in the Dome, viz., Mdlle Albani, Madame Marimon and Madame Vilda. The Guardian remarks that—"The improvement in artistic finish, and the development of sympathetic and intellectual qualities shown by Mdlle Albani since last year, make her perhaps the most promising artist now on the Italian lyric stage," and that she "won the hearts of the ladies immediately upon reaching the orchestra, for she gave them something to look at and talk about in a splendid example of the heavy floral trimming which is just now the tip-top of fashion in London!!" The same journal goes on to say—"Mdlle Marimon's reception was that of a great public favourite, her vocalization was as brilliant as ever and her voice appears to have increased in volume. Madame Vilda was recalled after Proch's "Air with variations" and Mr Kuhe, who was received with special heartiness, played his "Gondola," Thalberg's A minor study, Tito Mattei's "Grand Valse de Concert" and was recalled after each performance. Sir Julius Benedict was the conductor. The seating arrangements were carried out by Messrs R. Potts and Co. with the usual attention and completeness of that firm.—Madame Martorelli Garcia, Madame Osborne Williams, and Signor Gustave Garcia, have been singing at the Aquarium concerts. Madame Patey is to be the vocalist to day.

CHARLES HALLÉ'S RECITALS.

(From an Occasional Contributor.)

The second pianoforte recital of Mr Charles Hallé took place at St James's Hall on Friday last, by special desire. The Princess of Wales graced the performance with her presence. Mr Hallé had selected five morceaux from Spohr, Schumann, Raff, Leclair, Bach, and Beethoven, and was assisted by Mdme Norman-Néruda and Herr Franz Néruda, violinist and violoncellist. Spohr's Trio in E minor, Op. 119, commenced the recital. The first movement (moderato) was exquisitely given; the Larghetto in A major was much applauded; the Scherzo and Finale being equally successful. Schumann's "Humoreske" in B flat, Op. 20, No. 1, for pianoforte, is justly described in the programme as "simply a caprice of fancy, which defies analysis, being constructed in no form that can be reduced to rule." Mr Hallé played it to perfection. Mdme Norman-Néruda delighted the audience with a Cavatina in D, by Raff, and a Tambourin in the same key, by Léclair, being accompanied on the pianoforte by Mr Hallé. Mdme Néruda was at her best, and Léclair's Tambourin elicited a hearty recall. No. 4 was a "Præambulum, Aria, Passepied, and Gigue" for pianoforte, by J. S. Bach—the first and last in G major, the Aria and Passepied in E minor. Mr Hallé always plays the music of Bach con amore, and his hearers never fail to appreciate what he does. The recital was brought to an end with Beethoven's Introduction and Variations in G major, for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello, on the popular air, "Ich bin der Schneider, Kakadu," from Wenzel Müller's Schwestern von Prag, an opera produced at Prague in 1794, and afterwards performed in Vienna. These variations serve to show how the great musician could develop the most trivial theme. They were admirably played throughout. Mr Hallé must be congratulated not only on the selection of his programme, but also on his masterly performance.

Digitized by Google

MUSICAL MEANDERINGS.

(At a Concert in St James's Hall, Thursday Evening, May 18th.)

There seems to be a peculiar charm to the human mind in that which is connected with the past: in any relic, so to speak, which is suggestive of that relic's surroundings, now no longer to be realised except by the imagination. Whether this temper of humanity arises from curiosity, from a vanity that may nearly always be gratified by measuring the present with bygone times, or from a desire to gauge by comparison the exact rapidity with which our race continues to refine upon refinement, improve upon improvement, is a matter of speculation; but that it is by no means an exceptional temper among us none can deny. How otherwise can one account for the almost rabid covetousness with which the collector of supposed objects of beauty will pounce upon some hideous abortional shape in stone, or frailer substance—or stand in ecstatic devotion before some grotesque representation on canvas or paper which, if produced in the present day, would swiftly gravitate to its home behind the fire? The glamour which transforms the imperfections of the art-works of our ancestors into attractiveness, even to minds that perpetually bask in the bright presence of Art in her strong unveiled beauty, as revealed by the light of the nineteenth century, can proceed but from one cause. We do not regard them as co-existences with the Art that is—but as echoes of the Art which is not: that Art which was, one may almost say, but the distorted shadow cast before of those grand proportions we are ever scanning and essaying to measure with our eager eyes. Although this sentiment, in many cases but a half affectation, but lightly touches the taste whose roots are hardened and strengthened by years, it has its dangers for youthful, sensitive minds; minds that, regarding the present with wondering eyes, are glancing from the past into the future with a dangerous hesitation. If that is to be admired—they may reflect—how can this be right? If this, to which my whole soul cleaves, in whose beauty I would bathe and revel for ever, if need be, be true Beauty, how am I to acknowledge that for Beauty also, and compress and twist my power of appreciation to its strangeness, dwarf my own mental stature to bring me on a level with that for which I have a natural abhorence? This unsettled state engenders disquietude, which may subside out of sheer weariness of the perpetual battle of taste into an acceptation of the false: and there may be an artist lost. And we hold that every young being, as he bears within himself the elements of perfection, must be an artist in embryo; must have his little niche prepared for him in one of the long solemn vistas of the vast Palace of Art; and, should he turn aside from the search for the path thereto, there is an artist lost, and humanity suffers.

To this possible loss there is but a feeble counterbalance in the condemnable notion that age covers a multitude of art-sins; but counterbalance there is. Without its protection, what would become of those whose fault it is, not that they were born before the time that art development began with electric speed, and international commingling brought us fresh art blood and nerves, and the inundation of excellence in all branches that flooded and extinguished the weak pipings of the incompetent? None would listen to their meek and feeble antiquations. And some of the stronger among these stood against the overwhelming current, and even yet lift up their heads and pipe—not without some excellence, if one recedes into the shadows of the past, and judges them in its semi-obscurity. They should be protected; and protected by the strong shield of the sentiment above alluded to they are. They come before the public hand-in-hand with the renowned artists of the day, and the public tolerates them. They give concerts, as did Miss Steele the other evening, at St James's Hall, and a large circle of friends responds to the summons, applauding them with the same measure, overflowing into encores, that is accorded to such public favourites as, for instance, Mr Santley, whom Miss Steele showed much shrewdness in securing as the very corner-stone of her programme. Mr Santley's name is a sufficient guarantee for any programme in which it appears; nor can any audience be sufficiently chilled by continued applications of mediocrity, not to be instantly roused into enthusiasm by the first accents of a voice which, wherever heard—in opera, hall, or concert-room—has a power of magnetizing the emotions of the listener, which would seem almost superhuman, did it not proceed from a power which is occasionally permitted to stalk this matter-of-fact earth—Genius. To Genius belongs the power to electrify; in some cases where it is perverted, to disgust and offend; but always to produce a strong emotion. It may thrill the soul like a passionate spiritual embrace, or it may enter it to bring the cold shudder of a sword thrust—which impression it frequently makes when it exists without art. Genius is the kernel, art the fruit; imperfect apart, together they form a complete whole.

In Mr Santley we have an example of what Genius can be when devoted to the true interests of Art, instead of disdaining and casting aside her gentle harness. He does not alarm us with eccentricities, or startle us with inexplicable flights and flashes. Whatever we hear from the lips of this great singer, of whom we are so justly proud, is a legitimate and dignified exposition of musical idealism. It is hardly possible to overrate an artist, who, in full possession of that electrical ferocity which so often renders the mind of its possessor beyond control, can patiently devote himself to the study of the ideas of others, to the rendering of works with a religious regard to the intention of the composer. When Mr Santley sings, he seals the music upon the minds of his listeners, first melted by the warmth of his sympathetic tones; but he seals them with the true impression which would be recognized by the intelligence that conceived it. On the occasion to which we refer, he gave two songs of Schumann's (one the well-known "Widmung"), and introduced a new song by Louis Diehl, an impetuous setting of some five verses of Lord Lytton's, entitled "Absent, yet present." That the song was encored was not remarkable, as it is mostly Mr Santley's fate to be brought back to the platform; nor was it astonishing that in the repetition of the song the delicate touches of sentiment should be somewhat varied. Genius being a spark of the great creative power is nothing if not creative; and, however tutored and controlled, will hardly manifest itself twice alike in the whole of its erratic and restless career.

On this occasion, when the past was so curiously dragged into the light of the present, the concert-giver was assisted by many artists of note—Madame Corani, Miss Severn, Mr Lloyd, Messrs Walter Bache and Paque, Mr Corney Grain, and others whose performances demand no special comment. As at other benefit concerts, the music was chosen with reference to the brevity of programme and the taste of the audience, who, as long as Miss Steele tempts them with such allurements, will doubtless be ready to respond to her summons.—Z.

MDLLE MARIE KREBS.

(From the "Standard.")

The success of the two recitals recently given by Mdlle Marie Krebs was so great that the young artist has been prevailed upon to announce two more similar entertainments, the first of which took place on Wednesday afternoon, at St James's Hall, which, taking into consideration the untoward state of the weather, was remarkably well filled. There can be no doubt that performers falling in the least degree short of excellence are not qualified to come before the public in the character of reciters; for concerts of the recital class, besides affording intellectual gratification, play another and a far more important part—that of an educatory medium, in which a model of executive style is put forward for young aspirants to the honours of the pianoforte to take example by. Mdlle Marie Krebs has earned the right to have her performances accepted in the light of pure indications of the various composers' intentions, and hence her recitals are patronised largely by those who have a musical career before them, as well as by those skilled musicians and practised virtuosos who admire excellence in art for its own sake. Hence it behoves the pianist to choose her programme with care, selecting rather those classical works with which the rising generation of practical musicians are likely to make personal acquaintance, than pieces calculated to exhibit her own individual prowess over the instrument. With the selection of Wednesday's recital, no fault can be found. It opened with a prelude and fugue of Bach's in A minor, and included Beethoven's sonata in A flat major (Op. 26), the one containing the variations and the funeral march; Sterndale Bennett's three musical sketches, "The Lake," "The Mill Stream," and "The Fountain," the last of which was encored and repeated; Chopin's nocturne in C minor (Op. 48, No. 1); and Etudes in G flat, C sharp, and A minor; Haydn's variations in F minor (Op. 94); Schumann's Arabesque and Novelette (Op. 21, No. 7); a "Pensée" by Krebs; and a Tarantelle Toccata by Charles Mayer. Such a collection of pieces (with the exception of the prelude and fugue) might be found in the portfolio of many students of average proficiency; and young pianists should, therefore, be grateful to Mdlle Krebs for volunteering a lesson in them—for a lesson, and nothing short of it, it was, Mdlle Krebs playing with such beauty of phrasing, such admirable light and shade, and such delicacy and precision of manipulation, that each particular morceau was rendered a model thoroughly worthy of emulation. It would be invidious to particularize Mdlle Krebs's playing in each separate piece; it is enough to say that in all she was completely excellent, and that Sir Sterndale Bennett's beautiful sketches were so keenly relished by the audience, that Mdlle Krebs was fain to repeat the last. The compliment of a recall was also paid to the pianist after her admirable rendering of Chopin's very characteristic studies. Altogether the recital was an unalloyed success. The second recital is announced for June 2.

MANNHEIM.—Mozart's Zauberflöte was performed, on the 9th inst., at the Grand-Ducal Theatre for the 200th time. The performance was ushered in by a "Festspiel"; the chorus was increased; even the smaller characters were sustained by leading artists; and everything was done to celebrate worthily the occasion.

Digitized by Google

RICHARD WAGNER, AND HIS RING OF THE NIBLUNG.

BY F. HUEFFER.

(From the "New Quarterly Magazine.")

It is my purpose in the following pages to give some account to the English reader of a work which, to say nothing of the much-disputed question as to its musical or poetical beauties, commands by its scope and dimensions the attention of every student of literature and art. I am speaking of the drama, or rather, the sequence of four dramas, the tetralogy in which Wagner has grappled with those oldest and mightiest types of Teutonic lore which, in the Runic measures of the Icelandic sagas, strike us like the phantoms of a wild dream, gigantic at once in their beauty and boldness. The difficulties of handling such a subject need not be pointed out. These types, by their very essence, are entirely removed from the sphere in which our modern thoughts and actions lie. Our customs, our morals are unknown to them. The laws by which they act, or by the breaking of which they perish, are derived from an unwritten code of their own, being more intuitively felt than consciously known by themselves. They are led by their own free impulse, where we anxiously regard the opinions of others. They represent, in short, the pure symbols of primeval forces, while we are the compounds of consecutive generations. To bridge over this chasm, dividing the old age and the new, to strike that cord of purely human feeling which binds and blends men of all times and nations, is the work of the poet; for he alone is able to combine in his own nature the consciousness of modern thought with the intensity of prehistoric energy of action. But only to a man of the highest genius can it be given to combine in his own being and to symbolically unite in his creations two principles seemingly so antagonistic. Such a poet—for it is to his poetical no less, or even more, than to his musical capacity, that our attention will be directed—I recognize in Richard Wagner.

Before trying to prove the truth of this assertion by an analysis of Wagner's last and greatest work, the Ring of the Niblung, I must ask the reader to follow me in a short survey of our master's previous career; for only in this manner can it be shown how by the gradual purification of his own artistic nature he was led to the purest sources of poetry, the mythical creations of earliest popular feeling. A few biographical facts illustrating this artistic progress may prove an addition not unwelcome to the English reader.*

When, in 1838, in his twenty-sixth year, Wagner began the composition of his first important opera, the German and, indeed, the European stage, did not offer a hopeful aspect to a composer of artistic aspirations. In Germany, the later and lesser composers of the Italian and French schools, such as Bellini, Donizetti, and Adam, reigned supreme. Wagner himself has told us how the trivial productions of these men which, as musical director of a small theatre at Riga, he had to conduct, almost brought him to despair. In Paris, on the other hand, at that time the musical centre of Europe, the great traditions of Méhul, Cherubini, and Boieldieu, were more and more lost in the spectacular effects of a new school, at the head of which stood Meyerbeer, in the full splendour of a European reputation. He is the chief representative of what has been described as the "historic" opera, a branch of art which but too often renounced its high-sounding name by appeals to the lowest taste of the vulgar. No admirer of Meyerbeer's great and indisputable gifts can but regret the musical and poetical atrocities with which he and his librettists have defaced such works as the "Huguenots" or the "Prophet." Wagner, although filled with the grand inspirations of Beethoven's genius, was too much allured by the charms of immediate success not to accommodate himself to some extent to the clamorous demands of contemporary audiences. His Rienzi was written with a view to seeing it performed at the Grand Opera in Paris, and, in consequence, conceived in the spirit of coarse effectiveness prevailing at that institution. Fortunately, we may say, in the interest of true art, Wagner was to be utterly disappointed in the hopes founded on this work. In vain he went to Paris to gain by personal intercession a hearing for it. Theatrical managers looked with suspicion on a young, unknown foreigner, unsupported by a clique, and without journalistic or social interest of any kind. Wagner was brought to the verge of actual starvation. He had to undergo all the horrors of musical drudgery, such as arranging popular airs for the cornet-à-piston, to secure a scanty maintenance for himself, his wife, and an enormous black dog, with which, in his worst circumstances, he refused to part. His feelings at the time he has rendered in some small stories and essays, descriptive of the bitterest pangs of personal and artistic disappointment. But this misery eventually proved to be the cleansing fire of his artistic career, from which his strong nature sallied forth to purer and higher spheres of action. He soon felt the necessity of giving vent to his personal misery in song. Taught by misfortune, he learned to despise the gifts which Fortune refused to grant. Regardless, nay, scarcely desirous, of success, he now determined to follow only the voice of his own nature, which urged him to embody the sorrow of his heart in the creations of his genius. It was in this mood that Wagner began and finished in but seven weeks the composition of his second opera, the Flying Dutchman. The doomed wanderer of the main, homeless, and longing for home, on the waves of a borderless sea, expressed but too well the misery of his own situation. Indeed, this personal conception of the hero of his story strikes us in Wagner's score with almost lyrical power. The pity we feel for the fate of the unfortunate sailor is therefore of a personal kind. We look upon him not as an impossible phantom, but as a man overwhelmed by sufferings, such as we ourselves have experienced, or may be subject to any day of our lives. Pity and fear—Aristotle's criteria of the tragic subject—are roused in a sense all the more intense, and all the more lasting, as, on examining our sensations, we find that they have been excited by the purest creations of imaginative power, unaided, but also unencumbered by references to the unwieldy facts of history, or the narrow troubles of our daily existence. In this circumstance, the enormous superiority of the mythical over the historical or domestic subject-matter seems to consist. The latter only represents what actually has happened; the former leads us back to the fount of unalloyed volition, from which all actions flow—to the noumenon, indeed, of which the world and its appearances are only the shadow. It is in this way that, for instance, the Greek tragedy combines the closest realism of psychological detail with its sublime idealism of motive.

* For a more comprehensive account of Wagner's life and works, I reluctantly refer the reader to my book, "Richard Wagner and the Music of the Future," published last year.

SIR JULIUS BENEDICT.

(A Testimonial. May 19th, 1875.)

When blust'ring storms, which break the Sabbath's peace,
All through the morn and noon, sink down to rest,
As Nature bids their thousand voices cease,
And soothes young sobbing winds upon her breast,
Till, when the sunset hour at length draws nigh,
An unexpected calm reigns, soft and wide,
And from a grateful world goes to the sky.
The worship which the stormy morn denied.
The peace-crown'd worship of a Sabbath eve—
Can Heav'n from earth a fairer gift receive?
Fairer the ev'ning of a great man's day,
When noon-tide foes are silenc'd all, or slain;
When envy and neglect (worth-murderers they!)
Loosen their spite-charg'd bows, which twang'd in vain;
When honour's hand, though tardy, not too late,
With hard-won gems bedecks the artist's brow;—
Gems bright, yet not seductive; Heaven's near gate
Lets out such light, earth fails to dazzle now;—
When, after day-long storms, celestial rays
Thus softly paint his sky, 'tis with a sheen,
Straight from the Fount where light eternal plays.
And this, O Benedict! thy evening scene!
Grand master, when thine hour of rest draws near,
Fear not to sleep, for, waking, mayst thou find
The deathless beams thy genius kindled here
Have done the noble work by God designed,
And warm'd to life the heavenward spark in many a night-lock'd mind.

Mrs H. Van Landeghem.

Digitized by Google

PRESENTATION TO SIR JULIUS BENEDICT.

The long-talked of "presentation" to Sir Julius Benedict came off yesterday afternoon in Dudley House, by consent of its noble owner, next to whom, on the platform occupied by the Committee, was his Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh. A more gratifying ceremony has rarely been witnessed. It was a genuine acknowledgment of distinguished worth, to which the artistic talent and the personal qualities of its recipient may be said to have preferred equal claims. In 1835 a young German musician arrived in England, whose chief recommendation lay in the fact of his having been Weber's favourite pupil. That this predilection on the part of the composer to whom we owe Der Freischütz, Euryanthe, and Oberon had not been indiscriminately bestowed was soon made evident. In a short time Benedict earned a name and fame among us, which, as years rolled on, obtained more general and hearty recognition. How, with sure steps, he rose gradually to the place he now occupies, at the head of his profession, is familiar both to amateurs and musicians, by whom he is equally regarded and esteemed. It is not our object, however, to describe the public career of Sir Julius Benedict. His long residence in this country, which, since the date already specified, he has adopted as his own, absolves us from any such task. Enough that what during these years he produced as a composer—from the opera called The Gipsy's Warning to the oratorio St Peter and the orchestral symphony in G minor—is sufficient to declare him master of almost every form of musical expression; while in other branches of his calling he has laboured with no less industry, perseverance, and success, not only adding new treasures to the repertory of his art, but, through less demonstrative, though scarcely less useful, channels, striving to advance it. That a testimonial of esteem in acknowledgment of Sir Julius Benedict's eminent services had been projected some time ago, those interesting themselves in such matters were aware; nor was the fact that the idea met with unanimous approval among his numerous friends and admirers any secret. The presentation, originally advertised to be made on the 70th anniversary of his birth had, for various reasons, been postponed — one reason being the death of Mr John Mitchell, who was the first to assume the direction of the scheme. Mr Thomas Chappell, however, undertaking the responsibilities left open by his predecessor, there was no further cause for delay; and yesterday, as we have said, the presentation was made in Dudley House. A more distinguished company of art-representatives in every sphere has rarely been brought together on such an occasion. The chair was taken by Lord Dudley himself, who, in a very interesting and discursive speech, referred to Sir Julius Benedict's career, dwelling upon the qualities, artistic and social, which had raised him to eminence and achieved for him his well-merited position. The noble president then, in the name of the contributors, presented the testimonial to Sir Julius, who tendered his acknowledgments in such terms as expressed his strong sense of the honour, and his satisfaction at the manner in which that honour had been conferred. Although seemingly overpowered with emotion, Sir Julius Benedict spoke well and to the purpose. Under less trying circumstances he would have said more about the kindness he had experienced here, about his lengthened sojourn among us, about what he had observed, and what he thought of England and its musical representatives. But in his transient records of Mendelssohn and Weber, Sir Julius has exhibited a ready pen, which, let us hope, may, sooner or later, be employed on those particular topics. Not the least memorable incident of the day was a short address from the Duke of Edinburgh, in the course of which his Royal Highness desired to express his high esteem for the recipient of the testimonial. There were other speeches—among the rest one proposing thanks to the Committee (responded to by Mr T. Chappell), and one from Lord Dudley, who had travelled from Florence expressly to assist at the presentation, proffering the hospitality of his house to all who had come there to do honour to his friend, Sir Julius Benedict.

It should be added that the testimonial consists of a splendid ornamental silver table service, with the subjoined inscription:—"Presented to Sir Julius Benedict, Kt., at Dudley House, on the 19th of May, 1875, by a large circle of Amateurs and Artists, the Earl of Dudley, President, in appreciation of 40 years of labour for the Advancement of Art, and as a token of their esteem" —the arms of Sir Julius and the various decorations conferred upon him being engraved on the reverse.—Times, May 20th.

Verona.—A new theatre is to be constructed here for drama, opera, and equestrian performances.

THE "NOTTINGHAM JOURNAL" ON ISRAEL IN EGYPT.

Last night the Sacred Harmonic Society closed the season, with Handel's "greatest choral work"—Israel in Egypt. That this is his greatest choral work no one will dispute, for it is choral from beginning to end, with very little of either song or recit. to relieve the monotony. And ho! what monotony! Twenty-eight choruses (thirteen of them succeeding each other without a break) of the most stupendous character, most of them double choruses, written, not because the subject demanded such treatment, but simply dashed off, in one of the great master's most magnificent rages, in the incredibly short space of twenty-seven days, for the purpose—the only purpose—of showing his contempt for his English patrons who, for the most part, were more enamoured of song than of chorus. Handel and the public were not on good terms. Imperious, as great geniuses so often are, it was his fashion to give expression to his feelings in the orchestra, not in the "mildly persuasive manner of the Costas and the Farmers of our time, but by smashing a violin over the head of the leader, jumping into the big drum, kicking the double bass into the reserved seats, and then ejaculating 'Vat te tevil!" At the age of fifty-three (when he composed Israel), he was no longer able to give such striking proofs of his regard, and was therefore compelled to satisfy himself by piling chorus upon chorus in such reckless unnecessary fashion that the critics of that period declared that he "tore their ears to pieces." In spite of the motive which prompted him, Handel could not do other than write good music, and as such we must look at it. The opening chorus "And the children of Israel sighed" is wonderfully expressive of the wearisome burdens endured with enforced patience by the Israelites, the sighs and cries of the weaker ones blending with the steady tramp of the strong, the incessant toil pictured by the long succession of crotchets, while the minim, with its cres. and dim. effects, oft repeated on the word "sigh'd," combine to form a picture which one cannot contemplate without emotion. "They loathed to drink of the river," (No. 4), gives adequate expression to the words by the quaint and intricate modulations which must sadly have perplexed many a singer who thought himself well able to sing at sight. The succeeding air, "Their land brought forth frogs," is an indignity alike to the oratorio, to the performer, and to the listener. Handel forgot what was due to his art when he condescended to imitate the jumping of a frog by a squeaking fiddle. Imitation is not Art. How shall we complain of popular violinists imitating the crowing of cocks and the braying of asses on an instrument which has not deserved such degradation when we find Handel setting the example? Of No. 6 it suffices to say that no amount of good music can make so disgusting a theme tolerable. No. 7 is a masterpiece. Here we have true inspiration, and can understand how the hailstones and the fire mingled ran along the ground. We want no theatrical rain to make this picture complete, nor do we need the lights to be extinguished in order to realize the "thick darkness" (No. 8)—"The darkness which might be felt." In No .9 ("He smote all the first-born"), if Handel intended by the frivolity of the music to intimate that such smiting was a happy thing for the Israelites, the chorus is a success; if, on the other hand, the idea to be conveyed is that for every house in Egypt to find its first-born dead, an event which would cause such universal terror and grief, and which we, after a lapse of some three thousand years, must regard as an awful interposition of Divine wrath, the chorus is a failure, and needs excision. No. 10 ("But as for his people") is in violation of the rules of English accentuation. No. 12 is a gem in miniature, and makes us wish for more of the same sort. The accompaniment to No. 14 ("But the waters overwhelmed their enemies") induces one to believe that the enemies are rapidly running away, and that unless the waters are active they will not overtake them. The double chorus "I will sing unto the Lord," is thoroughly Handelian, and contains some of the finest writing in the work. No doubt this is a favourite chorus amongst singers, because of the hearty exercise it calls for. After singing ten pages of semi-quavers a tempo giusto with a dashing accompaniment, there is a sense of satisfaction apparent on the countenances of the members of the Sacred Harmonic Society, which indicates plainly that they have done their duty and they know it, and therefore (oh excellent logic!) the music is perfection. How often do we claim perfection for that which we admire, although such claim is founded on the shallowest of pretences. In aspiring to be a judge of what is artistic, there must be an utter abnegation of self; and just as a dramatic author is not competent to be a critic of the drama, so a member of a chorus is unqualified to form an opinion of the merits of a work in which he performs. In the second part we have more diversity, which is unquestionably a great relief to the listener. The duet, "The Lord is my strength," is a florid composition, which gives a rare opportunity for two sopranos to compete for honours, which opportunity is presented to the bassos, after two short choruses, in the fine duet "The Lord is a man of war." This composition is a masterpiece, and stands out prominently amongst its fellows as a genuine "Reubens" does in a gallery of pictures by inferior artists. "Thy right hand" is a dashing chorus which needs and generally receives, vigorous treatment. A couple of choruses which call for no special comment bring us to the chef d'œuvre, "I will pursue," a song which Sims Reeves has done so much to make famous by his execution, as Handel has by his composition. No doubt Mr Rigby would have done his best, but it is no disparagement to that gentleman to say that there has only been one Handel and only one Sims Reeves. The air "Thou didst blow" is a bravura which calls for great powers of execution. Passing on without remark we come to the final chorus, "The horse and his rider," which worthily brings the great work to a close. Our remarks upon No. 18 embody all we would say upon this chorus. And so ends the great work—the work which during Handel's life time was performed only nine times, so much was the popular feeling against it. We are told that we have yet to be educated up to it, which we trust is not the case. Minerva, saintly patroness of all that is good and beautiful, preserve us from being educated up to a succession of double choruses, big drums, trombones, and jumping frogs! Rather let us be educated to and by the soothing influence of the "still small voice" which Mozart, Beethoven, Mendelssohn, Weber, Rossini, and others found more powerful than the noise of earthquake and of hurricane. It is something like sixteen years since Israel was performed in this town: let us hope that at least another decade may pass before we hear it again, by which time it is to be presumed that some of the more venerable members of the society will have retired upon their laurels, and have given place to fresher if not more vigorous voices.

Digitized by Google

[Bravissimo! Nottingham. We shall henceforth to the gigantic capital of Nottinghamshire, for everything in the shape of unflinching musical criticism.] Otto Beard.

MICHAEL WILLIAM BALFE.*

Easy writing makes proverbially hard reading, but we should say of this book that it was as easy to write as to read. Those who knew Balfe in private can readily understand that his was just the life that would make a delightful biography. It is not the greatest men whose lives have the greatest interest. The true hero dwells apart, is a bright particular star, and the whole interest centres in himself. Balfe certainly was not a great man. We find no fault with Mr Kenney's estimate of his ability. Hero worship is a necessary quality in a good biographer. But Balfe's life could not but be interesting. It was essentially a public life. He was always more or less before the footlights. At the age of eight he played at a public concert, in a violin concerto of Mayseder's. He was one of those few "youthful prodigies" who not only came out, but did not go in again. Music seems singularly unfortunate in producing evidences of great promise and healthy performance. At nine he wrote a ballad, which Haynes Bayly afterwards set to words, and used to be sung by Vestris in Paul Pry. He used to tell that he went as a boy to the gallery of the theatre, and while the building rang with applause, could not help confessing to his neighbours that he was the composer, a statement received by them in a manner not flattering to their estimate of his truth. While the boy was still young his father died, and a few days after the funeral the future composer took, without suggestion or advice, a step that was all important in his career. Charles Horn was at that time in Dublin, playing at the theatre. Young Balfe called upon him, and the result of the interview was that he was articled to him for seven years, and started off for London. In London he soon got an appointment in the Drury Lane orchestra, then conducted by the famous Tom Cook, and made his mark so distinctly that he often wielded the bâton in the absence of the chief. On one occasion a foreign adventurer paid him £10 to write a fresh score for an old opera. Balfe wrote the score, and spent the money on a trip on horseback to Rochester with a friend, where they put up at an hotel, gave out their names as Sir George and Lord William, and had great deference paid to their assumed rank. His next effort was to succeed as a vocalist. Here fortune was less favourable. He got an opportunity of making his début as Caspar in Der Freischütz, and failed egregiously.

At the house of a wealthy banker he met one day at dinner an Italian nobleman. Even during the introduction the stranger seemed sadly put out, and in the course of the evening explained to his host that young Balfe bore a striking resemblance to a son he had just lost. The young musician was invited to show his art, and sung and played, and so won the heart of the stranger that he received an invitation to return to Rome with Count Mazzara, all the expenses of his journey to be defrayed by the Count. Such an opportunity was not to be neglected, and the journey was commenced a few days afterwards. On their way south the travellers stopped at Paris, and there Balfe was introduced to Cherubini, the director of the Conservatoire, who was so pleased with him that he offered to complete his musical education in Paris. But Balfe's ambition was only to be satisfied by a visit to Rome, and he proceeded with the Count. The kindness that began so suddenly did not end capriciously. The hospitality of the Palazzo Mazzara was extended freely to the young protégé, and, when at length he left Rome for Milan, his future wants were provided for by his romantically-attached host. Strangely enough, the great operahouse of La Scala was then managed by an Englishman, and to him Balfe brought letters of introduction from his friend and teacher Federici. But the manager, when he heard of the genius of his compatriot, shook his head, and said that nothing musically good came out of England. Perhaps the verdict was not very far wrong. However, there came a time in the management of the theatre when some music was wanted to introduce a ballet. The manager had "concocted" (we are using the word in the text) a grand ballet. The scenic artist—curiously enough also an Englishman—had done his part with, what was in those days no doubt, suitable magnificence. The music only was wanted, and that young Balfe supplied. It had a great success, and the composer seemed on the high road to fame. But fortune shook her wings and flew away. The English manager found he could not continue his rule at Milan, and Balfe determined to leave Italy and return home. On his journey he stopped a few days in Paris and called on Cherubini. The veteran composer had not forgotten him, asked him to dine to meet Rossini, then almost in the zenith of his fame. Balfe often described that memorable dinner party. Rossini played. His wife (Colbrand, the original Rosina in the Barber of Seville), sang. Balfe was invited to the piano. He had at that time a fine baritone voice, and, to the surprise and delight of the whole room, sat down and gave the "Largo al factotum" with such effect that Rossini offered to give him introductions to Bordogni, the then celebrated teacher. The offer was taken, and a new chapter in this eventful life opens. After a year's study he made his début, selecting the popular opera of his friend for his first appearance. The cast on that night is given by Mr Kenney, and the names take us back into old times. Sontag was the Rosina. Bordogni was the Count, Figaro was assigned to the débutant, and Bartolo fell to Graziani, the only present survivor of that brilliant company. The best test of Balfe's success was that on the third night the manager offered him an engagement for three years, on the extremely liberal terms of 15,000 francs for the first, 20,000 francs for the second, and 25,000 francs for the third year. Thus he gained a position which brought him at once fame and emolument. But the composer was not merged in the opera singer. Cherubini still gave him lessons and Rossini advice. He had now gained such faith in himself, that he resolved to pay a second visit to Italy, and it was on this occasion that he first met Grisi, whose beauty, he used to say, acted upon him like inspiration. He soon got another engagement, and shortly afterwards made his first appearance in the operahouse of Palermo, on the 1st of January, 1830, in Bellini's Straniera. His success was so unequivocal, that the opera was repeated for seventy nights, which nearly completed his engagement. That year he returned to Milan, where Malibran was prima donna, with whom he sang in the Cenerentola, Barbiere, and Otello. Mr Kenney mentions an amusing story in connection with this period of Balfe's life. A Venetian impresario had gone to great expense in the erection of a theatre, and the inauguration of the building had been fixed upon, when the untimely death of the Emperor of Austria rendered the ceremonial impossible. It was suggested to give a grand opera instead, and Malibran was appealed to. She consented to sing. The house was crowded; the opera was the Sonnambula. At the end of the "Ah! non giunge," Malibran's foot slipped as she trod on a leaf of one of the bouquets that had been flung on the stage. She would have fallen but that Balfe, who was the Rodolfo, caught her up. Even as it was, her slipper

* "A Memoir," by Charles Lamb Kenney. (Tinsley Brothers.)

Digitized by Google

came off, and fell into the pit. Immediately there was a skirmish for its possession, and, to create some diversion from that part of the house, Malibran deliberately threw the other shoe in an opposite direction. The curtain fell, and, amidst deafening cheers, the manager led out the prima donna, and announced that his theatre should be called, from the events of the evening, the "Teatro Malibran," a name which the building still retains. Here it is well that our notice of the book should stop. Mr Kenney has such an interesting story to tell that we have no desire to interpose between him and the public, to whom we can conscientiously recommend the "Memoir."—Globe.

WAIFS.

The Swedish Ladies Vocal Quartet, of the Royal Conservatoire of Stockholm, comprising Mdlles Hilda Wideberg, Amy Aberg, Maria Pettersson, and Wilhelmina Söderlund, have arrived in London.

VERDI'S REQUIEM.—In consequence of the great success which has attended the production of this work, we understand that Signor Verdi has decided to remain here a short time longer in order to give two special extra performances. These are to take place on Saturday and Saturday week, with the same advantages which have so materially contributed to the success of the previous performances. The tickets will be reduced to the ordinary concert tariff.

The Society for the Encouragement of the Fine Arts, of which his Grace the Duke of Manchester is president, held their third conversazione in the Suffolk Street Galleries, on Thursday evening. Receptions commenced at eight o'clock, and, three-quarters of an hour having been spent in the inspection of an admirable selection of paintings and objects of interest, a well-arranged programme of music was performed, under the direction of Mr Alfred Gilbert, supported by many well-known artists.

The International Mozart Institution in Salzburg, through their representative in London, Mr Sigmund Menkes, sent the following address to Sir Julius Benedict, on the occasion of the presentation to him of the testimonial at Dudley House. Sir Julius Benedict has acquired for himself the gratitude of the institution as one of its greatest and most zealous fosterers. He conducted last year the Mozart Festival at Covent Garden Theatre, and has promised to do the same at the grand concert which is being prepared at the Alexandra Palace during the present season.—"Illustrious Master,—If we enter on this festive day the circle of your numerous friends and admirers, to offer you, spiritually, our respects, may you be pleased to accept this address as a proof of our wish to take every opportunity of expressing the gratitude we feel to our zealous and noble fosterer. May God preserve you still many years, for the benefit of humanity—for the joy of art. (Signed) Baron STERWECK (President), Count LAMBERG (Lord Lieutenant of the Province of Salzburg)."

A SINGULAR LETTER.—Sir,—I am directed to say that it is considered that an undue interval has elapsed between the close of the Worcester Festival and your return to home duties. The Festival terminated (with the Messiah) at 8h. 35m. 17½s. on Friday. A train left Worcester within three hours from that time, allowing ample opportunity for "packing up." You might (and should) have been back in London on Friday night. Yet you are still loitering. These provincial festivals are all very well in their way, and must be recorded; but they cannot be allowed to supersede events of nearer interest; among which must be reckoned the Gun-Cotton concerts about to take place, in which that explosive will be found to supply a hitherto unfulfilled want—a very deep, full note, answering instantly to the bâton of the conductor. To treat this most important and novel musical feature properly, a series of preliminary chemical studies is essential; and for this arrangements have been made by the office, requiring your presence in London forthwith. Owing to your extraordinary delay, this had to be forwarded by special engine from Paddington Station this morning (see date), the expense of which (the cashier informs me) will be debited to you.

London, September 13, 1869. W. J. W. H. L.

WEIMAR.—Liszt has been here for some little time, and, with a few short breaks, intends remaining the whole summer. Tristan und Isolde was to have been performed on the 15th and 19th inst., with Mdme and Herr Vogl, from Munich, as representatives of the principal parts, but the performances had to be put off in consequence of the artists having sustained a severe loss by the death of a child.—Preparations are being made for a memorial service to Mad. von Mouchanoff, who died last year. A Requiem by Liszt will be included in the programme. Wagner will come over expressly from Baireuth for the occasion. Mad. von Mouchanoff was the lady to whom—greatly to her annoyance—Wagner dedicated his treatise; "On Judaism in Music."

THE VOICE & SINGING

BY

ADOLFO FERRARI.

THE FORMATION AND CULTIVATION OF THE VOICE FOR SINGING

Price 12s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, REGENT STREET, W.

"The remarkable qualities of this book are the author's freedom from conventional trammels, the strong sense of his opinions, and the novelty yet evident soundness of his precepts; his work has consequently come into general use as a manual of vocal instruction."—Daily News.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE,

For invigorating and enriching the voice, and removing affections of the throat.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE is universally acknowledged to be the most valuable remedy for sore throat, hoarseness and relaxed throat. It should always be taken before singing or reciting, as it strengthens the vocal organs. It is most extensively prescribed by the faculty for the throat and voice. Dr Lewis of Basingstoke says he finds them most efficacious, and in Dr Copland's Dictionary of Practical Medicine (Longman & Co.), they are strongly recommended at pages 872 and 1492. They are used by all the greatest vocalists and orators in Europe, and have been established over a quarter of a century. Testimonials from Patti, Grisi, Lablache, Santley, &c. Sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d. by all Chemists throughout the United Kingdom and the Colonies.

NEW COMPOSITIONS BY WILHELM SCHULTHES.

"COR JESU, SALUS IN TE SPERANTIUM." Dedicated to His Holiness Pope Pius the Ninth, Motett for Three Equal Voices (Soli and Chorus), with Organ Accompaniment (and Harp ad lib.)—5s. The same arranged for a Choir of Mixed Voices (S.A.T.B.), with Organ Accompaniment—4s. Also in an Abridged Arrangement for Congregational Use, with Organ Accompaniment—3d. net.

"VENI DOMINE," Motett for Four Equal Voices (Soli and Chorus), with Organ Accompaniment (and Harp ad lib.); and "ELEVATION," Solo for Organ and Harp—4s. A Vocal Arrangement of the Motett for a Choir of Mixed Voices (S.A.T.B.)—1s.

"GUIRLANDES DE MAI." Hymns to B.V.M. (French and English Words), with Organ Accompaniment, Three Parts—3s. each; post free, 19 stamps.

"TWELVE LATIN HYMNS," for Vespers, Complin, &c., with Organ Accompaniment—2s. net. NOVELLO, EWER & Co., 1, Berners Street.

MDLLE ZARE THALBERG.

LE CARNEVAL DE VENISE, with Variations, by Sir JULIUS BENEDICT, as sung by MDLLE ZARE THALBERG, at the FLORAL HALL CONCERTS, is published—price 4s.—by DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

"A DREAM WISH."

GIPSY SONG.

The Poetry by M. A. BAINES.

The Music by MICHAEL BERGSON.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

VOCAL EXERCISES.

Composed by FRANK MORI.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

N.B.—These Vocal Exercises, as taught by FRANK MORI, are invaluable both to Students and Professors.

Published This Day.

"THE FAIREST FLOWER WILL PERISH."

SONG.

The Words by Mrs HYPPOLITE VAN LANDEGHEM.

The Music by HYPPOLITE VAN LANDEGHEM.

Price 3s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

WILFORD MORGAN'S SONGS.

HER I LOVE .. .. 4s.

COULD I BUT CALL HER MINE.. .. .. 4s.

MY SWEETHEART WHEN A BOY .. .. 4s.

SWEET EVENING AIR .. .. 4s.
(N.B.—The above Songs have been sung with distinguished success by Mr WILFORD MORGAN.)

LITTLE BIRDIE, SING TO ME .. .. 4s.
(Sung by Miss EDITH WYNNE.)

ANTHEM.

IF THOU WILT FORGET ME (THE 13TH PSALM) .. .. .. 4s.
(For Tenor or Soprano Solo, with Chorus ad. lib., as sung at the Temple Church. Composed by WILFORD MORGAN.)

London; DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street.

Digitized by Google

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

PRODUCTION OF WAGNER'S 'LOHENGRIN.'

The Books of Airs (in Two Books), arranged for Pianoforte, with ad. lib. accompaniments for Flute, Violin, and Violoncello, by

W. HUTCHINS CALLCOTT

PRICE.

Solos	...	...	5*s. each.*
Duets	...	...	6*s.* ,,
Accompaniments	...	...	1*s.* ,,

LONDON:

HUTCHINGS & ROMER,

9, Conduit Street, Regent Street, W.

ARTHUR SULLIVAN'S NEW SONG,

"THOU ART WEARY."

WORDS BY ADELAIDE PROCTOR.

MUSIC BY ARTHUR SULLIVAN.

SUNG BY

MISS ANTOINETTE STERLING

AT THE

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

"The singer was Miss Antoinette Sterling, who, always heartily admired in those German ballads, for which she exhibits so marked a sympathy, introduced in a group fou of Schumann's most graceful contributions to the Lieder repertory, and, later in the evening, a new song by Mr Arthur Sullivan, 'Thou art weary' (set to words by Adelaide Proctor)—one of the most charming recent emanations from the pen of our gifted compatriot."—The Times, Nov. 10.

"Miss Sterling was the vocalist, and sang, in addition to selections from Schumann, a new song by Arthur Sullivan, entitled, 'Thou art weary,' which is one of the most beautiful and thoughtful effusions of the composer's graceful music."—Daily Telegraph, Nov 12.

"Miss Antoinette Sterling was the vocalist. In the second part she introduced a new song by Mr Sullivan, an admirable setting for a contralto voice of some very touching lines by the late Miss Adelaide Proctor, addressed by a poor mother to her starving child, the burden being—

'Sleep, my darling, thou art weary;
God is good, but life is dreary.'

The song exactly suited Miss Sterling's voice and style, and it will assuredly become as great a favourite as 'Will he come,' to which it is a worthy pendant, and the words of which are also by Miss Proctor."—Standard, Nov. 12.

"Miss Antoinette Sterling repeated Mr Sullivan's new song, 'Thou art weary,' a second hearing of which has confirmed our good opinion of it."—Standard, Nov. 16.

"At the concert on Monday, Miss Sterling had introduced a series of charming Lieder by Schumann, and a new song by Mr Arthur Sullivan, 'Sleep, my darling, thou art weary,' an admirable setting of Miss Proctor's poem, 'Hush, I cannot bear to see thee,' which, like everything Miss Proctor wrote, was well adapted for, and, in fact, seemed to invite musical treatment. Her verses have inspired Mr Sullivan with a genuine melody, of which the refrain is particularly remarkable; and the song, both at Monday's and Saturday's concert, pleased so much that Miss Sterling was called upon to repeat it."—Pall Mall Gazette, Nov. 17.

"Miss Sterling sang discreetly and sympathetically four of Schumann's 'Dichterliebe' (Nos. 1, 2, 7, and 8); but came off still better in a new song by Mr A. Sullivan, who has set words by Adelaide Proctor, 'Thou art weary,' the dying consolation of a starved mother to her child, the refrain of which is—

'Sleep, my darling, thou art weary;
God is good, but life is dreary.'

It is a painful theme; but the composer has treated it with such pathos that the air tells powerfully."—Athenæum, Nov. 14.

"The vocalist was Miss Sterling, who sang four songs by Schumann (Nos. 1, 2, 7, and 8 of the 'Dichterliebe'), and a new song, entitled 'Thou art weary,' written by Miss Adelaide Proctor. The words are good, and have been fitted to charming and expressive music by Mr Arthur Sullivan, who has added a pianoforte accompaniment worthy his high reputation, and worth listening to for its own sake."—Observer, Nov. 15.

Published in the keys of D minor and F minor, Price 4s.

ARTHUR SULLIVAN'S NEW SONG,

"TENDER AND TRUE,"

SUNG BY

MISS EDITH WYNNE

AT THE

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS, ST JAMES'S HALL.

"The vocalist was Miss Edith Wynne, who sang a new song, 'Tender and True,' by Arthur Sullivan, the beauty of which, aided by a most tasteful rendering, elicited an encore."—Daily Telegraph, January 13.

"Mr Sullivan's graceful song—a novelty—was rendered by Miss Edith Wynne with much refined expression; and the applause which followed necessitated its entire repetition."—Daily News, January 13.

"A very expressive new song, by Mr A. Sullivan, 'Tender and True,' was sung with such effect by Miss Edith Wynne that it had to be repeated."—Illustrated London News, January 16.

"Miss Edith Wynne, who gave, in her own genuine and expressive manner, a graceful new song, 'Tender and True,' by Mr Arthur Sullivan, which was encored, and repeated."—Graphic, January 16.

Published in the keys of E flat and F, Price 4s.

CHAPPELL & CO., 50 NEW BOND ST.

Digitized by Google

In 74 Numbers, price One Penny, or in One Volume, cloth, gilt edges, price 7s. 6d.

MOTETS FOR THE YEAR.

A COLLECTION OF OFFERTORIES,

WITH APPROPRIATE WORDS FOR EVERY SUNDAY AND DAY OF OBLIGATION DURING THE YEAR.

Edited and Dedicated (by permission) to the Right Rev. J. DANELL, D.D., Lord Bishop of Southwark, by

W. M. LUTZ,

ORGANIST OF ST. GEORGE'S CATHEDRAL, SOUTHWARK.

CONTENTS.

1	1st Sunday in Advent	Ad te levavi	Bs. Solo or Qrtt.	Webbe
2	2nd Sunday in Advent	Deus tu convertens	Qrtt. or Chorus	Henry Smart
3	3rd Sunday in Advent	Juste et pie vivamus	Duet or Chorus	Webbe
4	4th Sunday in Advent	Ave Maria	Solo or Chorus	W. M. Lutz
5	Any Sunday during Advent	Rorate	Chorus & Solo	Webbe
6	Christmas Day	Adeste Fideles	Solo & Chorus	Webbe
7	Sunday within Octave of Christmas	Attolite	Solo & Chorus	Webbe
8	Circumcision	Tui sunt coeli	Ten. So. & Chor.	A. Sullivan
9	Epiphany	Reges Tharsis	Chorus	W. M. Lutz
10	Sunday within Octave	Jubilate	Chorus	W. M. Lutz
11	Holy Name	Jesu dulcis	Qrtt. & Chorus	Beethoven
12	3rd Sunday after Epiphany	Dextera Domini	Chorus	Schumann
13	Septuagesima Sunday	Bonum est	Solo & Chorus	Benedict
14	Sexagesima Sunday	Perfice	Solo or Chorus	Webbe
15	Quinquagesima Sunday	Super flumina	Soli & Chorus	W. M. Lutz
16	1st Sunday in Lent	Ecce nunc tempus	Duet or Chorus	Webbe
17	2nd Sunday in Lent	Preces populi	Chorus	Webbe
18	3rd Sunday in Lent	Justitiæ	Chorus or Qrtt.	Mendelssohn
1	4th Sunday in Lent	Ad te levavi	Bs. Solo or Qrtt.	Webbe
19	Passion Sunday	Stabat Mater	Chorus	Webbe
20	Palm Sunday	Improperium	Chorus	André
21	Easter Sunday (Gradual)	Hæc dies	Chorus or Trio, T.T. & B.	Webbe
22	,, ,, (Offertory)	Victimæ	Chorus	Webbe
23	Low Sunday	Angelus Domini	Chorus	André
24	2nd Sunday after Easter	Deus misereatur	Chorus & Soli	Webbe
25	3rd Sunday after Easter	Landa anima	Solo or Chorus	Webbe
10	4th Sunday after Easter	Jubilate	Chorus	W. M. Lutz
26	5th Sunday after Easter	Benedicimus	Duet or Chorus	Webbe
27	Ascension Day	Ascendit Deus	Duet or Chorus	Webbe
28	Sunday within Octave of Ascension Day	Rex Gloriæ	Duet or Chorus	Webbe
29	Whit Sunday (Gradual)	Emittte / Veni sancte spiritus	Trio or Chorus / Duet or Chorus	Webbe
30	,, ,, (Offertory)	Confirma hoc Deus	Soli or Chorus	W. M. Lutz
31	Trinity Sunday	Benedictus est	Chorus	W. M. Lutz
32	1st Sunday after Pentecost	Intende voci	Chorus	André
33	Corpus Christi (Gradual)	Lauda Sion	Duet or Chorus	Webbe
34	,, (Offertory)	O sacrum convivium	Solo	Webbe
35	2nd Sunday after Pentecost	Domine convertere	Soli & Chorus	W. M. Lutz
36	3rd Sunday after Pentecost	Protector	Duet	Webbe
37	4th Sunday after Pentecost	Illumina	Solo or Chorus	W. M. Lutz
38	St Peter and St Paul	Roma felix	Duet or Chorus	Webbe
39	5th Sunday after Pentecost	Audi hymnum	Solo & Chorus	Webbe
14	6th Sunday after Pentecost	Perfice	Solo or Chorus	Webbe
40	7th Sunday after Pentecost	Sicut in holocaustis	Qrtt. or Chorus	Mozart
41	8th Sunday after Pentecost	Tu es gloria	Bass Solo	Webbe
18	9th Sunday after Pentecost	Justitiæ	Chorus or Qrtt.	Mendelssohn
1	10th Sunday after Pentecost	Ad te levavi	Solo or Quartett	Webbe
42	11th Sunday after Pentecost	Exurgat Deus	Chorus	Webbe
43	Assumption	Assumpta est	Chorus	Neukom
44	12th Sunday after Pentecost	Benedicam	Chorus	Eybler
45	13th Sunday after Pentecost	In te speravi	T. So. (& Chor. ad lib.)	W. M. Lutz
36	14th Sunday after Pentecost	Protector	Duet	Webbe
13	15th Sunday after Pentecost	Bonum est	Solo or Chorus	Benedict
46	16th Sunday after Pentecost	Domine in auxilium	Soli & Chorus	W. M. Lutz
47	17th Sunday after Pentecost	Oravi	Soli & Chorus	Dr Crookal
48	18th Sunday after Pentecost	Timebunt	Chorus	W. M. Lutz
49	19th Sunday after Pentecost	Si ambulavere	Bs. Solo (Chor. ad lib.)	W. M. Lutz
15	20th Sunday after Pentecost	Super flumina	Chorus	Webbe
50	21st Sunday after Pentecost	Vir erat hus	Chorus	W. M. Lutz
51	22nd Sunday after Pentecost	Recordare	Solo & Chorus	Führer
52	All Saints (Gradual)	Tibi omnes angeli	Chorus	Webbe
53	,, (Offertory)	Justorum	Solo	Webbe
54	23rd Sunday after Pentecost	Hæc dicit Dominus	Soli & Chorus	Webbe
55	Nativity	Beata	Chorus	W. M. Lutz
56	Holy Name	Ave Maria	Solo	Cherubini
57	Seven Dolors	Stabat Mater	Chorus	Gregorian
4	Rosary	Ave Maria	Solo or Chorus	W. M. Lutz
55	Maternity	Beata	Chorus	W. M. Lutz
58	Purity	Succurre miseris	Duet & Chorus	Webbe
4	Patronage	Ave Maria	Solo or Chorus	W. M. Lutz
59	Confessor	Ecce sacerdos	Duet	Webbe
60	Martyrs	Qui seminant	Duet & Chorus	Webbe
61	One Martyr	Justus ut palma	Qrtt. or Chorus	W. M. Lutz
62	Apostles	Gloria et honore	Qrtt. or Chorus	W. M. Lutz
63	Virgins and Holy Women	Diffusa	Qrtt. or Chorus	W. M. Lutz
64		Asperges	Chorus	Gregorian
65	In Paschal time	Vidi aquam	Duet or Chorus	Webbe
66	Prayer for the Queen	Domine salvum fac	Chorus	Martini

APPENDIX.

67	Magnificat	Soli & Chor.	Webbe
68	Alma (from 1st Sunday in Advent till the Purification)	Solo & Chor.	Webbe
69	Ave Regina (from the Purification till Maunday Thursday)	Soli & Chor.	Webbe
70	Regina Coeli (from Holy Saturday till Trinity Eve)	Soli & Chor.	Webbe
71	Salve Regina (from Trinity Eve till Advent)	Soli & Chor.	Webbe
72	O Salutaris	Chorus	Webbe
73	O sacrum convivium	Dt. or Chor.	Webbe
74	Tantum ergo	Chorus	Webbe

Also, Just Published,

SHORT MASSES FOR SMALL CHOIRS.

EDITED BY SIR J. BENEDICT.

A COLLECTION OF MASSES, FOR ONE, TWO, THREE, AND FOUR VOICES,

WITH ORGAN ACCOMPANIMENTS.

Price Sixpence each, or in One Volume, cloth, price 5s.

CONTENTS.

1	Webbe's Mass	(3 voices)	in A.
2	,, ,,	,,	in D.
3	,, ,,	,,	in B flat.
4	,, ,,	,,	in F.
5	,, ,,	,,	in C.
6	,, ,,	,,	in D minor.
7	Webbe's Mass	(4 voices)	in G.
8	Missa de Angelis	(Unison)	in D.
9	Dumont's Mass	,,	in D minor.
10	Missa in Dominicis diebus per annum	,,	in D minor.
11	Missa pro defunctis	,,	in F.
12	Wesley's Gregorian Mass	(4 voices)	in G.

These Masses are published in a cheap form, in order to meet a growing demand for simple, melodious, harmonized music. In the cases where the register has been found too high for boys' voices, supplementary notes have been inserted.

They are thus adapted as well for Chancel Choirs, as for those in which the Soprano parts are taken by female voices.

LONDON: BOOSEY & CO., 295, REGENT STREET, W.

Printed by HENDERSON, RAIT, AND FENTON, at No. 69, Marylebone Lane, Oxford Street, in the Parish of Marylebone, in the County of Middlesex.
Published by WILLIAM DUNCAN DAVISON, at the Office, 244, Regent Street, Saturday, May 22, 1875.

Digitized by Google

The Musical World.

(REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.)

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST, 20s. PER ANNUM,
Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to DUNCAN DAVISON & CO., 244, Regent Street, London, W.

VOL. 53—No. 22. SATURDAY, MAY 29, 1875. PRICE { 4d. Unstamped. 5d. Stamped.

HER MAJESTY'S OPERA, THEATRE ROYAL, DRURY LANE.

Mdme Christine Nilsson.

THIS EVENING (SATURDAY), May 29th, will be performed GOUNOD'S Opera, "FAUST." Faust, M. Capoul; Mephistophiles, Signor Rota; Valentino, Signor de Reschi; Siebel, Mdme Trebelli-Bettini; Marta, Mdme Demerie-Lablache; and Margherita, Mdme Christine Nilsson (her eighth appearance this season). Director of the Music and Conductor—Sir Michael Costa.

Extra Night.

MONDAY next, May 31, DONIZETTI'S Opera, "LUCIA DI LAMMERMOOR." Edgardo, Signor Fancelli; Enrico Aston, Signor Galassi; Bidebent, Herr Behrens; and Lucia, Mdlle Elena Varesi.

Mdlle Tietjens.

On TUESDAY next, June 1, MEYERBEER'S grand Opera, "LES HUGUENOTS." Raoul di Nangis, Signor Fancelli; Marcello, Signor Castelmary; Urbano, Mdme Trebelli-Bettini; and Valentina, Mdlle Tietjens.

Madame Christine Nilsson.

On THURSDAY next, June 3 (Subscription Night, being the fifth of the six Subscription Thursdays announced in the prospectus), BALFE'S grand Opera, "IL TALISMANO." Sir Kenneth, Signor Campanini; Richard Cœur de Lion, Signor Galassi; Queen Berengaria, Mdme Marie Roze (her first appearance this season); and Edith Plantagenet, Mdme Christine Nilsson.

Mdlle Tietjens—Mdme Trebelli-Bettini.

On SATURDAY, June 5 (first time this season), ROSSINI'S Opera, "SEMIRAMIDE." Arsace, Mdme Trebelli-Bettini; Assur, Signor Rota; Oroe, Herr Behrens; and Semiramide, Mdlle Tietjens.

Doors open at Eight o'clock. Commence at Half-past Eight. Amphitheatre stalls, 7s. and 5s.; amphitheatre, 2s. Box-office open daily from Ten till Five, under the direction of Mr Balfe.

LAST SIX NIGHTS OF "GIROFLE-GIROFLA."

CRITERION THEATRE, Regent Circus. — Sole Proprietors and Responsible Managers, SPIERS & POND. — "GIROFLE-GIROFLA," new Comic Opera in English, by CHARLES LECOCQ. Produced under the direction of Mrs W. H. LISTON. Conductor—Mr F. STANISLAUS. The Opera commences at Eight, and is over by Eleven o'clock. Mesdames Julia Matthews, Emily Thorne, Rose Keene, and Alice Hamilton; Messrs A. Brennir, Perrini, Loredan. Private boxes from £1 1s. to £3 3s.; stalls, 7s. 6d.; dress circle, 5s.; boxes (bonnets allowed), 5s.; pit, 2s.; amphitheatre, 1s. To be obtained at the Box Office of the Criterion.

MDLLE MARIE KREBS' SECOND and LAST PIANOFORTE RECITAL, in ST JAMES'S HALL, on WEDNESDAY Afternoon next, June 2, to commence at Half-past Three o'clock precisely. Programme: Fantasia in F minor, Op. 49 (Chopin); Sonata, Pastorale, in D major, Op. 28 (Beethoven); Fugue from Fourth Suite, Fifth Suite (Handel); Air, "The Harmonious Blacksmith," with variations; Three Impromptus (Bennett); Kindermärchen, Der Tanz (Moscheles); Variations on a theme by Handel (Reinecke). Sofa stalls, 7s. 6d.; balcony, 3s.; admission, One Shilling. Tickets may be obtained at Chappell & Co.'s, 50, New Bond Street; and at Austin's Ticket Office, 28, Piccadilly.

MONS. PAQUE has the honour to announce that his ANNUAL MORNING CONCERT will take place on THURSDAY, June 3rd, at 27, Harley Street, Cavendish Square, to commence at Three o'clock precisely. M. Paque will be assisted by the following Artists: Vocalists—Miss Edith Wynne, Miss Josephine Sherrington, Miss Julia Elton, Signor Conti, Mr William Shakespeare (the new tenor). Instrumentalists: Pianoforte—Mr W. G. Cusins. Violin—Herr Ludwig Straus. Violoncello—Mons. Paque. Conductors—Messrs H. PARKER and W. GANZ. Tickets, Half-a-Guinea; to be had of Mons. PAQUE, 120, Great Portland Street, Portland Place.

WESTMINSTER HOSPITAL.

Mdme CHRISTINE NILSSON
HAS THE HONOUR TO ANNOUNCE THAT SHE WILL GIVE

A GRAND MORNING CONCERT,

IN AID OF THE FUNDS OF THE

WESTMINSTER TRAINING SCHOOL & HOME FOR NURSES,

ON

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 23RD, AT ST. JAMES'S HALL.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA, COVENT GARDEN.

THIS EVENING (SATURDAY), May 29th, will be performed, "FRA DIAVOLO." Mdlle Zaré Thalberg, Mdlle Scalchi; Signori Ciampi, Sabater, Tagliafico, Capponi, and Naudin. Conductor—Signor Bevignani.

On MONDAY next, May 31, "FAUST E MARGHERITA." Margherita, Mdlle Albani, Mdlle Scalchi; M. Faure, M. Maurel, Signori Tagliafico and Nicolini.

On TUESDAY next, June 1, "LES DIAMANTS DE LA COURONNE." Mdme Adelina Patti, Mdlle Smeroschi; Signori Ciampi, Capponi, Sabater, and Naudin.

On WEDNESDAY next, June 2, "DER FREISCHUTZ." Mdlle d'Angeri, Mdlle Smeroschi, Mdlle Cottino; M. Faure, Signor Tagliafico, Signor Capponi, and Signor Marini.

On THURSDAY next, June 3, "IL BARBIERE DI SIVIGLIA." Mdme Adelina Patti; Signori Cotogni, Ciampi, Bagagiolo, and Piazza.

On FRIDAY next, June 4, "L'AFRICAINE." (On this occasion the Opera will commence at Eight o'clock, instead of Half-past.) Mdlle D'Angeri, Mdlle Bianchi; Signori Graziani, Bagagiolo, Capponi, Sabater, Tagliafico, and Naudin.

On SATURDAY, June 5, fifth performance of RICHARD WAGNER'S Romantic Opera, "LOHENGRIN."

Floral Hall Concerts.

The FOURTH FLORAL HALL CONCERT will take place on SATURDAY, June 5. The Opera commences at Half-past Eight.

The Box Office, under the portico of the Theatre, is open from Ten to Five. Pit tickets, 7s.; amphitheatre stalls, 10s. 6d. and 5s.; amphitheatre, 2s. 6d.

MISS LILLIE ALBRECHT has the honour to announce that her SECOND MATINÉE MUSICALE will (by kind permission) take place at 59, Lowndes Square, Belgravia, on MONDAY, June 7th, at 3·30, on which occasion she will play works by the following Masters: Ballade in G minor, Op. 23, and Tarentelle in A flat, Op. 43 (Chopin); Fugue Allegro con fuoco in F minor, No. 5 (Mendelssohn); Etude, "Si oiseau j'étais" (Henselt); Andante in D flat, Op. 32, and Fantasia (Manuscrits) (Thalberg); Grand Octave Galop de Concert (Ketterer). Miss Lillie Albrecht will be assisted by Mdlles J. Sherrington and Enriquez, and Signor Monari-Rocca. Conductor—Mr CHARLES E. STEPHENS. Tickets, Half-a-Guinea; family tickets (to admit three), One Guinea; to be had at Messrs Cramer, 201, and Duncan Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street; or of Miss LILLIE ALBRECHT, 38, Oakley Square, N.W.

BRITISH ORCHESTRAL SOCIETY, ST JAMES'S HALL (under the special patronage and honoured by the presence of their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of EDINBURGH). The LAST CONCERT of the Series, on TUESDAY Afternoon next, June 1, at Three. Vocalists—Miss Augusta Roche and Mr Sims Reeves. Violin—Mr Carrodus. Band of 75. Conductor—Mr GEO. MOUNT. Tickets, at usual places and St James's Hall, 7s., 5s., 3s., 1s.

SCHUBERT SOCIETY, BEETHOVEN ROOMS, 27, Harley Street. President—Sir JULIUS BENEDICT. Founder and Director—Herr SCHUBERTH. NINTH SEASON, 1875. The FOURTH CONCERT (48th since foundation of the Society) will take place on WEDNESDAY, the 2nd June. The first part of the Programme devoted to Sir Julius Benedict's Vocal and Instrumental Compositions, including (for the first time) his String Quartet. The Concerts of the Society afford an excellent opportunity for young rising Artists to be introduced in public, and for young Composers to have their new works performed. Full particulars on application to H. G. HOPPER, Hon. Sec.

MISS PURDY'S MATINÉE MUSICALE will take place (by kind permission) at 70, Queen's Gate, South Kensington, on MONDAY, June 7th, commencing at Three o'clock. Artists—Mdlle Bartkowska, Mdlle Carnielli, Miss Purdy, Mr Bentham, Mr Trelawny Cobham, Signor Federici, Mr Maybrick. Pianoforte—Signor Tito Mattei. Violin—Mdlle Castellan. Conductors—Signor Vera, Signor Unia, and Signor Pinsuti. Tickets, Half-a-Guinea each; to be had of Miss PURDY, 35, Victoria Road, Kensington, W.

SIGNOR ARDITI

BEGS TO ANNOUNCE THAT HIS

ANNUAL GRAND MORNING CONCERT

WILL TAKE PLACE AT

ST. GEORGE'S HALL, LANGHAM PLACE,

ON

MONDAY MORNING, JUNE 14th.

Full particulars will shortly be announced.

Digitized by Google

WELSH CHORAL UNION.—FIFTH SEASON. Patron—H.R.H. the Prince of WALES. Conductor—MR JOHN THOMAS (Harpist to Her Majesty the Queen). SECOND CONCERT, ST JAMES'S HALL, MONDAY Evening, May 31st, at Eight o'clock, when MENDELSSOHN'S Cantata, "ATHALIE," and Psalm, "JUDGE ME, O GOD," will be performed. The Choir will (by permission) be assisted by the Students of the Royal Academy of Music, and will also sing several Welsh Melodies, accompanied by a Band of Harps. Vocalists—Miss Mary Davis (Welsh Choral Union Scholar), Miss Marian Williams, Miss Marie Duval, Miss Lydia Elsmore, and Miss Purdy. Harp—Mr John Thomas and Mr T. H. Wright. At the pianoforte—Mr Puddicombe and Mr W. H. Thomas. Mr Charles Fry will recite the lyrics in Athalie. Subscription for the season—Sofa stalls, 21s.; balcony, 10s. 6d. Single ticket—Sofa stalls, 6s.; Balcony, 3s.; admission, 1s. To be had of the principal musicsellers; at St James's Hall; and of Mr CARTWRIGHT, Hon. Sec., Mansion House Chambers, 12, Queen Victoria Street, E.C., to whom candidates for the Choir should apply.

MR HENRY STIEHL'S CONCERT will take place on WEDNESDAY, June 2, 1875, at the BEETHOVEN ROOMS, 27, Harley Street, W., to commence at Three o'clock. Programme: Sonata for violoncello and pianoforte, which obtained the first prize at the Mannheim Tonhalle (H. Stiehl)—Mr De Swert (solo violoncellist to the Emperor of Germany) and Mr H. Stiehl; Song, "Voi che sapete" (Mozart); (a) Impromptu (Chopin), (b) Arabesques (Schumann), (c) Si oiseau j'étais (Henselt)—Mr H. Stiehl; Song, "Es blinkt der Thau" and "Waldhexe" (Rubinstein)—Miss Helene Arnim; Duetto for pianoforte (Mendelssohn and Moscheles)—Miss Foley and Mr H. Stiehl; Song, "Sleep, O sleep" (H. Stiehl); Andante (Handel), Gavotte and Musette for violoncello (Bach)—Mr De Swert; Song, "Through the greenwood" (H. Stiehl)—Miss Helene Arnim; (a) Barcarolle (b) Ungarisch (c) Sunny Waves, (d) 3me Valse Brillante (H. Stiehl)—Mr H. Stiehl. Tickets, 10s. 6d. each; to be had of Messrs Goddard & Co., 4, Argyll Place; Messrs Stanley Lucas, Weber & Co., 84, New Bond Street; and at Mr STIEHL'S private residence, 19, Arundel Street, Piccadilly.

MDLLE DELPHINE LE BRUN'S MATINÉE MUSICALE, at DUDLEY House, Park Lane (by kind permission of the Earl and Countess of Dudley), THURSDAY, June 3rd, at Three o'clock. Mdlle Josephine Sherrington, the Misses Allitsen, Mr Bentham, Signor Caravoglia. Violin—Herr Wilhelmj. 2nd Violin—Herr Franke. Violoncello—Herr Daubert. Viola—Herr Kummer. Pianoforte—Mr Otto Goldschmidt and Mdlle Delphine Le Brun. Tickets, One Guinea each; of Stanley Lucas, Weber & Co., 84, New Bond Street.

MISS GRACE and Miss JOSÉPHINE SHERRINGTON beg to announce that their ANNUAL MATINEE will take place on WEDNESDAY, June 16th, by kind permission of Mr and Mrs Cayalet, at their residence, 70, Westbourne Terrace, Hyde Park. Tickets, One Guinea; to be had from the Misses SHERRINGTON, 40, York Street, Portman Square.

MR SYDNEY SMITH'S PIANOFORTE RECITAL (Fourth Season), at ST GEORGE'S HALL, Langham Place, on June 2nd (Afternoon). Vocalists—Mdme Patey and Mr Vernon Rigby.—No. 45, Blandford Square, N.W.

"VIENI LA BARCA E PRONTA."

THE MISSES ALLITSEN will sing GOLDBERG'S admired Duet, "VIENI LA BARCA," at Mdlle Le Brun's Concert, at Dudley House, on June 3rd.

"O CARE TENEBRE."

THE MISSES ALLITSEN will sing GOLDBERG'S new Duet, "O CARE TENEBRE," on the 29th June, at Mdme Sievers' Concert.

"I WOULD BE A BOY AGAIN."

MR ARTHUR THOMAS will sing WILFORD MORGAN'S new Song, "I WOULD BE A BOY AGAIN," at Woolwich, May 21st; and Westbourne Hall, June 1st.

"HOW LONG WILT THOU FORGET ME?"

MR ARTHUR THOMAS will sing "HOW LONG WILT THOU FORGET ME?" (Sacred Song), by WILFORD MORGAN, on June 1st, at Westbourne Hall.

WANTED, some FIRST CLASS CONCERT PARTIES, for beginning of December next, on Provincial Tour. Full particulars to be addressed, "Entrepreneur," care of DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

A LADY, having quitted the Operatic Stage, will be happy to give Accompanying LESSONS to Artists. Apply, by letter, addressed "Accompanist," care of DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

THE GUITAR.—MDME SIDNEY PRATTEN, Teacher of this elegant Instrument, is in Town for the Season. For LESSONS and Private CONCERTS, address to her residence, 22A, Dorset Street, Portman Square, W.

MR RICCARDI (the new Bass), who made so successful a debut at St James's Hall, March 12th, begs to announce his Return to London for the Season. All applications for ENGAGEMENTS to be addressed, Care of DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

BRIGHTON CONCERT AGENTS,
PIANOFORTE AND MUSICSELLERS,
LYON & HALL,
WARWICK MANSION.

MONSIEUR DIAZ DE SORIA begs to announce his arrival in London for the Season, and that he can accept ENGAGEMENTS for Concerts, Soirées, &c. Address, 42, Great Portland Street, W.

DEAR ENGLAND.—"Messrs R. Cocks & Co. have published a piece by Charles Mackay and Louis Diehl, which the Brighton Times describes as 'a really grand song.' It is entitled 'Dear England,' and has been sung with rapturous eclat by Signor Foli at the Crystal Palace, Manchester, Liverpool, Southport, the Albert Hall, and the Alexandra Palace. As the sonorous notes were poured forth, says the critic, the effect was thrilling. The words are heart-stirring and fervently patriotic."—From the Stamford Mercury. 3s.; post free, 18 stamps.

WAITING FOR THE SWALLOWS. New Song. Written by REA. Music by CIRO PINSUTI. "A bright, joyous little chanson, suitable for a tenor or soprano. Compass from D below the line to E."—Vide Irish Times. 3s.; post free, 18 stamps. London: ROBERT COCKS & Co., New Burlington-street.

NEW COMPOSITIONS BY WILHELM SCHULTHES.

"COR JESU, SALUS IN TE SPERANTIUM." Dedicated to His Holiness Pope Pius the Ninth, Motett for Three Equal Voices (Soli and Chorus), with Organ Accompaniment (and Harp ad lib.)—5s. The same arranged for a Choir of Mixed Voices (S.A.T.B.), with Organ Accompaniment—4s. Also in an Abridged Arrangement for Congregational Use, with Organ Accompaniment—3d. net.

"VENI DOMINE," Motett for Four Equal Voices (Soli and Chorus), with Organ Accompaniment (and Harp ad lib.); and "ELEVATION," Solo for Organ and Harp—4s. A Vocal Arrangement of the Motett for a Choir of Mixed Voices (S.A.T.B.)—1s.

"GUIRLANDES DE MAI." Hymns to B.V.M. (French and English Words), with Organ Accompaniment, Three Parts—3s. each; post free, 19 stamps.

"TWELVE LATIN HYMNS," for Vespers, Complin, &c., with Organ Accompaniment—2s. net. NOVELLO, EWER & Co., 1, Berners Street.

"SHALL I WEAR A WHITE ROSE?"
BALLAD.
Words by H. SAVILLE CLARKE.
Music by EMILY BARDSLEY FARMER.
Nett, 2s.
JOSEPH WILLIAMS, Berners Street, and Cheapside, E.C.

FIFTH EDITION.
HORTON C. ALLISON'S "TARANTELLA."
Played by the Composer at his Concerts in London, Manchester, Liverpool, &c.
Price 4s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.
"A DREAM WISH."
GIPSY SONG.
The Poetry by M. A. BAINES.
The Music by MICHAEL BERGSON.
Price 4s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

VOCAL EXERCISES.
Composed by FRANK MORI.
Price 4s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.
N.B.—These Vocal Exercises, as taught by FRANK MORI, are invaluable both to Students and Professors.

Just Published.
"THE FAIREST FLOWER WILL PERISH."
SONG.
The Words by Mrs HYPPOLITE VAN LANDEGHEM.
The Music by HYPPOLITE VAN LANDEGHEM.
Price 3s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

WILFORD MORGAN'S SONGS.

HER I LOVE	4s.
COULD I BUT CALL HER MINE	4s.
MY SWEETHEART WHEN A BOY	4s.
SWEET EVENING AIR	4s.

(N.B.—The above Songs have been sung with distinguished success by Mr WILFORD MORGAN.)

LITTLE BIRDIE, SING TO ME	4s.

(Sung by Miss EDITH WYNNE.)

ANTHEM.

IF THOU WILT FORGET ME (THE 137TH PSALM)	4s.

(For Tenor or Soprano Solo, with Chorus ad. lib., as sung at the Temple Church. Composed by WILFORD MORGAN.)

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Digitized by Google

PROFESSOR MACFARREN'S INAUGURAL LECTURE.

On Tuesday afternoon Dr G. A. Macfarren, the recently-appointed Professor of Music in the University of Cambridge, delivered his inaugural lecture in the Senate House, before a very large audience of ladies and gentlemen. Dr Garrett, and the University choir, the senior members of which consisted of Messrs Booth, Beale, Robson, Holliday, Pleasance, Poole, Duffell, and Lister, were present, and illustrated Professor Macfarren's remarks by singing several pieces of music, from composers whose names are given in the subjoined report.

Professor Macfarren, who was received with applause, began by remarking that he wished to own publicly his sense of the importance of the office which gave him the privilege of addressing that audience that afternoon, an importance which was greatly exalted by the artistic abilities of his distinguished predecessor, whose genius was as a star which shines upon the art he cultivated, the country he honoured, and the offices he administered. He wished to offer the tribute of respect to Sir Sterndale Bennett of one who was his schoolfellow and fellow-labourer, however humble, in the work which filled and glorified his life. Bennett, while yet a student, working the exercises set him by his teachers, attained an excellence in pianoforte playing peculiarly his own, and produced some of those compositions for which he would always be best esteemed. The University of Cambridge had a right to expect very much from all functionaries attached to it, but he feared the expectations would be especially great from the successor of this great musician. He (Dr Macfarren) was not unmindful of Professor Walmisley, who was distinguished for scholastic abilities as well as his musical attainments; nor of Morris Greene, whose contributions to ecclesiastical music were among the greatest treasures of the Church of England, and whose instrumental pieces, though less known, were of a very high order as works of art; Staggins, Whitfield, Hague, or Randell. They were men who did good honest work, and he would be fortunate who could walk in their footsteps, and gather flowers by the wayside. In the dawn of time, truth and beauty were inseparably wedded, "Spirit of one spirit, and flesh of one flesh," and, as years rolled on, they had three daughters—music, poetry, and painting. These were the arts. The art of form and the art of letters had many able expositors. The art of tone was less generally comprehended, but he looked forward with hope to the time when he might be instrumental in some degree in furthur extending it. The classic Greeks, who were the filter through which the draughts of Egyptian science have reached our lips, taught that music purified the heart by refining the intellect, and exalted the feelings by reflecting them in ideal forms. What Plato and Aristotle enunciated, Cicero endorsed. In another age Confucius insisted that the practice of music would be of the highest moral and intellectual advantage; and, to come to our own race, Luther held that the study of music was next in importance after theology. These ancients, however, among whom he included Luther, could have had but a prophetic gleam of music, as we know it. To them it was an exalted declamation; to us it is an embodiment of feeling for which words can find no utterance, means of expression which no language can compass. It was a vulgar fashion—all fashions are vulgar which step aside from nature—that decried the capacity of English people for music. He had not then time to refute this fallacy. He must ask them to accept his statement until opportunity for proof offered itself. In early days England stood well forward among European nations in respect to her musical abilities. In the beginning of the 11th century, she was in advance of the whole of the South of Europe; and was noted by foreigners, who themselves boasted a love of music, for her attainments in the art; and, from that time downwards, many of the greatest lights that shone in English history in the departments of art had been directed to the illumination of the subject of music. There was no time now to trace the course of the musical history of this country; but he felt so strongly that the future would come out of what had been in the past, that he believed it would be an encouragement to everybody who strove for the advancement of musical art to know, that whatever might be done in the future would be but a revival, a restoration of the old state of things in England. He would ask his audience first to consider the effect which the Reformation had upon music. Many exiles who returned to this country from Geneva and other places brought with them the love of hymn-singing, which had marked religious reforms in all times, and the practice was diffused so generally and quickly among the people that it became necessary to incorporate it in the Church Service. In an injunction by Queen Elizabeth issued in 1559, there was a provision for the singing of hymns. After a short time the hymn was extended into anthems in institutions where the music was performed by other means than the voice of the people. The anthems were set to metrical words. Thus, an injunction of Elizabeth speaks of the anthem or little hymn in metre; and several specimens are extant of early Church music in this form. He should offer, as a sample of the kind of composition he referred to, an anthem, "All people that on earth do dwell," by Thos. Tallis (died in 1585), who in the successive reigns of Henry VIII., Edward, Mary, and Elizabeth, held an important post in the Chapel Royal. The words were quaint and forcible, and the composition admirably fitted the metrical nature of the words.—[The choir then sang the anthem named.]—A fellow labourer of Tallis, William Byrd, produced a large collection of music of various character, adapted to the diverse moods of human nature; and in the same year in which this collection was brought forth (1588) Nicholas Young printed a collection of Italian songs, which were held in best account by those who understood the language. For the time had not arrived when people prefer to sing words they cannot pronounce, and utter a language they do not understand. In Young's collection, the word madrigal was first introduced as a musical term. The question had been often raised as to what was the meaning of the term, and it would be often raised again without receiving a satisfactory solution. The lecturer quoted Morley's definition of the term,—and to show that the English music held its place about the time referred to, alongside the Italian, he asked the choir to sing a madrigal by a composer of each country. First he asked them to give Luca Marenzio's "Lady, see on every side," and next John Benet's "Come, Shepherd, follow me," first pointing out their rhythmical peculiarities. Up to Benet's time (1599) bar lines had not been invented to divide music into proper measures. Still, it was necessary that the performers should know whether they were to sing with an accentuation of two or three; and thus the accentuation became distinguished by "perfect time" and "imperfect time." "Imperfect time" was when the long notes were divided into two, and "perfect time" was when they were divided into three. They justified the term "perfect time" on the ground that the Trinity was three and perfect. It was the practice in those days to introduce more frequently than was now done an intermixture of "perfect" and "imperfect time," and his audience would notice the happy effect which Benet produced by a change from "imperfect" into "perfect time," which gave to certain words the particular character they seemed to express. Beautiful as was Marenzio's madrigal, Benet's would bear to stand before it. Skipping over one hundred years, he came to the period of the Commonwealth, which, though in one sense it may have put some check on music, yet in another sense it did much to promote its study, by stimulating the endeavours of those who loved the art, and believed it would conduce to the good of mankind. He would proceed to consider the life of Henry Purcell, who stood pre-eminently forward in the history of music. He was born in 1658, lived from the time of the Restoration, through the reign of James II., up to William, and died in 1695. There was a prodigious advance in the power of expression of his music from the time of Benet. Besides the æsthetic beauty of his music, its technical merit was very important in the history of art, for in his music were anticipated all the most extreme chromatic combinations that signalized the music of the present time. Many of the contrapuntal forms, which have now gone out of use, were practised by him with wonderful success. One anthem of his composition was set to some words of the Litany, and the treatment of these words gave every expression its fullest meaning. It commenced with a most humble deprecation, "Remember not, Lord, our offences;" it gathered strength when it said, "Nor the offences of our forefathers;" and then, as if in despair, there was the cry, "Neither take Thou vengeance of our sins." The whole was tempered with the seeming hope of mercy, "Spare us, good Lord;" then, with most touching tenderness, we have, "Spare Thy people, whom Thou hast redeemed with Thy most precious blood;" and, again, "Be not angry with us for ever." [The choir here sang the anthem referred to.] It was a remarkable fact that, with the accession of sovereigns in England who could not speak our language, and, therefore, could not take an interest in its expression, music went into disesteem, and painting rose into favour. While the art of painting could show the names of Hogarth, Reynolds, Gainsborough, &c., there was a corresponding blank in the chronicles of the sister art. It would be among the glories of the times of Queen Victoria, that, under her administration, the old musical feeling of former centuries had been revived. It was, indeed, with immense interest that he compared the present with the past condition of music in this country. In the Plantagenet days people sang canons and catches, and delighted one another by such efforts. In the time of Elizabeth, the competency of farm labourers and artisans for service was made dependent on their musical qualification. In the time of Charles II. domestic servants were refused employment because they could not sing their parts in domestic music. In these days, it was not domestic servants, artisans, labourers, or the uncultivated people, but the students of a great University who devoted thought and time to the cultivation of music. The organ recital which he had heard in Trinity Chapel, and the concert of last week, were performances such as few artists, even in his young days, could have accomplished. It was quite evident that music here was not a piece of school work, but a work of love among the persons who attained to such merit. Their merit had its influence, their example had its force, but this influence and example would not stay in Cambridge. Every one who learned to love music in Cambridge would carry that love into his own home, which would be as a centre, diffusing its warmth and light on all its surroundings; and when once the love of the art, which in former days prevailed among the untutored common people, shone down upon them from above, with the extra radiation which must spring from the culture and refinement of the mind, he could not but believe that the musical character of England would be greatly exalted. He looked forward with fervent hope to the future of music in this country, when the stigmas which we ourselves had taught foreigners to cast upon us for our lack of musical culture would be wiped out, and we could show them we could do something more for music than paying for its performance. He particularly wished to urge upon those who had the musical art at heart to carry their pursuit of it into its technical merits. Music was of countless value, but it was of still greater value when the principles upon which it was constructed were apprehended. To hear or practise music, without a knowledge of the principles upon which it was formed, was very much like going to the performance of a play in an unknown language, when one could admire the gesticulation of the actor, but, not knowing the meaning of the words, could do but scant justice to the theme. He was glad that the technical principles of music were studied here; but wished they were studied more; and he was even vain enough to wish that, as a knowledge of music was advancing among us, the authorities of the University might in time consider it to be desirable to make it one of the subjects of special examination. The monuments of the past were as a beacon to the future, but the doings of the present would come still more warmly home to their hearts, by showing the position of the art as practised among themselves, and he would, therefore, close his remarks by offering an extract from the cantata of the May Queen, by his dear and honoured friend, the greatest English musician of the present period, Sir William Sterndale Bennett, a cantata which, produced at the Leeds Festival, in 1858, was characteristic of the season, the country, and the composer. May his memory be as green and balmy as his song. Turning to Dr Garrett and the choir, Dr Macfarren thanked them for their services, and, after paying a similar compliment to the audience for listening to his address, he added, "And now I will leave to my coadjutors the peroration of my speech." [The choir thereupon sang "With a laugh as we go round," from the May Queen, Master Bailey taking the soprano solo.]

Digitized by Google

The proceedings then closed, and Prof. Macfarren was warmly congratulated by numerous friends.

Posen.—Two performances of Herr Johannes Brahms's Deutsches Requiem came off a few days since, the singers being the members of Hennig's Vocal Association.—The members of the Vocal Association for Classical Music, also, have given perhaps the best performance ever heard here of Haydn's Creation.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL.

The Requiem for Manzoni has incontestably made its mark. The performance on Saturday afternoon was as warmly applauded as either of its precursors. The presence of Signor Verdi was enough to impart life and spirit to the whole; and rarely have we seen an audience more thoroughly pleased than that which, for the third time, crowded Albert Hall. That the gifted dramatic composer is also a conductor of exceptional ability is the unanimous opinion abroad; and the rare instances which have enabled us to test him here in this capacity suffice to justify the opinion. The Requiem of Verdi is not merely an enthusiastic, but a worthy tribute to the author of I Promessi Sposi, the memorable ode on the death of Napoleon I. (Il cinque Maggio), with other things that have endeared him to his compatriots and won him immortal honour. The work is not moulded in the shape of certain recognized masterpieces unnecessary to name; but this establishes the fact that Verdi has an original way of looking at such themes, and treats them in a manner individual to himself. The genius of the famous Bussetese musician is dramatic and elegiac by turns. Severe scholastic forms possess for him but little attraction. He is, therefore, commendably frank in rejecting them, wherever he can employ other means to convey and enforce his ideas. Some zealous advocates of the composer insist that the Requiem for Alessandro Manzoni is simply an elegy dramatically conceived and adapted to the text of the Servisio dei Morti; but this wholly untenable asseveration must be taken cum grano. The Mass is as strictly in the form of a Requiem as the Requiem of Mozart itself, with the addition of the "Libera me, Domine, de morte æterna," which Mozart did not set to music, though his predecessors—Durante, Jomelli, &c.—did. The only difference is in the mode of expression, which is Verdi's, not Mozart's, and as purely Italian as the other is purely German. Why the two should not co-exist, and, from different points of view, be equally acceptable, we cannot understand.

Regard it from what point we may, however, the beauties of the new Requiem speak eloquently for themselves, and the intense feeling for which many passages are distinguished cannot but impress all hearers attentively alive to what the composer has to say, and willing to accept it in the belief that he is speaking out his mind with earnest sincerity. Thus considered, the latest emanation from the pen of one to whom we are indebted for so much that is intrinsically beautiful can scarcely be regarded otherwise than as a model in its style, worthy to rank side by side with the Stabat Mater of Rossini. Signor Verdi has every reason to feel satisfied with the quartet of singers to whom the leading vocal parts are assigned. The ladies more especially—Mdmes Stoltz and Waldmann, soprano and mezzo-soprano—are in every respect admirable. To hear them only in the melodious and expressive duet to which the passage "Recordare Jesu pie" is wedded, is enough to stamp them as singers of the first class; and this is further established by their delivery of the opening phrases in the still more remarkable "Agnus Dei," announced by the solo voices in octaves, followed by the chorus, with orchestral accompaniment—a movement the solemn impressiveness of which is enhanced by the simplicity of its construction. These ladies, who are German—one from Bohemia, the other from some part of Austria proper—both possess the rare art of singing effectively without apparent effort. The tenor and bass, too—Signors Masini and Medini—are thoroughly good, which is shown both in the concerted music and that which, in a vocal sense, depends upon them exclusively. As instances of this may be noted the tenor solo, "Qui Mariam absolvisti," and the bass solo (to which it immediately leads), "Confutatis maledictis." Signor Masini was a stranger to this country; but Signor Medini will be remembered as having appeared at Her Majesty's Opera, when, two years since, he made his début as Alphonso, in Lucrezia Borgia. Both are genuine artists. About the chorus and orchestra we have already spoken; and it will suffice to add that this third performance of the Manzoni Requiem afforded general satisfaction; that two pieces (the "Recordare" and "Agnus Dei") were encored and repeated, and that all honours were paid to the justly-renowned composer and conductor. The fourth and last performance (also to be directed by Signor Verdi) is announced for to-day.

QUERY.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

Can any of your correspondents inform me if it has long been the custom (whether by chance or otherwise) for the Principal of the Royal Academy of Music to hold, also, at same time, the Professorship of Cambridge University?

VIOLA.

Digitized by Google

LOHENGRIN.

(From the "Daily Telegraph.")

(Concluded from page 345.)

The curtain rises for the second time upon the Palace and Minster of Antwerp. It is night, and we can just discern the figures of Frederic and Ortrud clad in sombre garments and seated on the steps of the church. A long orchestral introduction is supposed to describe their feelings, and certainly manages to be lugubrious with facility; after which comes an extended duet. Here we find Wagner's theory of the absolute subordination of music carried out to the bitter end, and productive of nothing but "a continuous surging of shapeless, and, as it were, fluid sounds." One result is, however, that we are forced back upon the story, to discover that the husband and wife, after calling each other hard names, agree not to abandon hope. Ortrud, a sorceress and a Pagan, undertakes the work of revenge upon Elsa and Lohengrin, and fortune aids her by sending the Royal maiden to breathe the early morning air on the balcony of the Palace. In a charming strain—one of those gems of melody which show that Wagner might have worn the mantle of Weber as head of the romantic school—Elsa expresses her joy, and then Ortrud, who has sent Frederic away, appeals to her compassion. Another long duet ensues, but it does not weary us like the first, because Elsa is present, and around her Wagner preserves an atmosphere of tenderness and beauty sometimes inexpressibly grateful to the senses. The music, moreover, ably suggests the contrast between the two characters, and so sustains its interest to the end. Though the plot is far advanced by all this, the seeds of mischief are sown when Ortrud cautions Elsa against her lover's deceit, and urges the fatal step of discovering his name and lineage. Elsa rejects the counsel with mingled pride and pity, but her enemy is confident enough to end the scene with a burst of triumph. Mdlle D'Angeri plays her part efficiently here, and again Mdlle Albani surprises us by the excellence of her singing and her truthful, engaging conception of the character. She has done nothing so well before. The duets over, we enter upon another scene of pomp and splendour. Day breaks to the noise of multiplied trumpets, and its business begins with a vigorous double chorus, which is interrupted by our old friend the Herald and his attendant wind instruments, who come to place Frederic under ban, and proclaim Lohengrin, Guardian of Brabant. The multitude of knights and soldiers acquiesce in both proceedings, after which the Herald announces the immediate marriage of Lohengrin and Elsa, to be followed by the departure of all to the wars. Here is occasion for another vigorous chorus, while four knights hold aloof and grumble among themselves at the favour shown to a stranger. With these Frederic makes common cause, promising to unmask his conqueror, for whose crowning fortune preparations are now visible. The wedding procession music of Lohengrin has been so often heard in concert-rooms lately that we permit its familiar beauty to pass almost unnoticed as our eyes rest upon one of the most splendid scenes ever shown within the walls of the "Garden." Each of the dresses of the ladies is a study in its way, and the coup d'œil presented by the glowing masses of colour and the sheen of burnished armour cannot readily be forgotten. Among those who stand aside to let Elsa precede them into the church is Ortrud, but the trial to her pride is more than she can bear. Fiercely she confronts Elsa at the door of the Minster, and hurls at her bitter scorn, contemptuously demanding, amid the exclamations of the on-lookers, who the bridegroom is and whence he comes. The scene is prolonged without lack of vigour, till the King and Lohengrin enter. Reassured by their presence and their reproof of Ortrud, another attempt is made to enter the church. But now Frederic confronts the procession, and once more altercation begins, this time being carried on throughout a lengthy and turbulent ensemble which, however it may aid the dramatic effect, cannot boast of great musical value. As it goes on, Frederic finds opportunity to instil more doubt into the mind of Elsa, and, with a perturbed spirit, the Royal bride for the third time ascends the steps of the Minster, pursued by Ortrud's vengeful looks. At this point the curtain falls, and gallery and amphitheatre thunder a second approval, louder, if possible, than the first. The principal artists again acknowledge the applause, to which some of them at least have a good right. First among these is Mdlle Albani—a true Elsa under all circumstances—and after her come Mdlle d'Angeri, M. Maurel, and Signor Nicolini, who, as far as looks go, is a Lohengrin sans reproche. We are now within half-an-hour of midnight, and numerous departures from boxes and stalls take place. But the enthusiasts up above hold out, and, in scarcely diminished numbers, address themselves to what yet remains of the work.

Every amateur knows the very bright and effective introduction to the third act, and will, therefore, not be surprised to hear that it was encored, in spite of the lateness of the hour. The pretty chorus sung by the attendants of the wedded pair as they conduct them to their chamber is not well rendered, and makes no effect, scarcely any applause following the retiring footsteps of the singers. Elsa and Lohengrin are now alone for the first time, and we have a love duet, marked here and there with passages of such exquisite beauty, that the veriest stickler for accepted form might pardon its absence on their account. In the course of this duet, Elsa puts the fatal question as to her husband's name, and insists, notwithstanding his entreaties, upon an answer. At this moment Frederic and his four knights burst into the room, but Lohengrin passes his sword through the leader, dismisses the followers with contempt, summons Elsa's ladies to conduct her to her own apartments, and declares his intention of revealing who he is and whence he came at the place, and under the circumstances which witnessed his arrival. The rush of these events is great after the calm of the long love duet, and the music, albeit full of characteristic passages, has a nervous force impossible to overlook. A change of scene takes us again to the banks of the Scheldt, and once more Wagner revels in trumpets. The strident instruments are heard everywhere, clashing against each other, and stirring the pulses of the listeners, as knight after knight, all mounted, and attended by squires and men-at-arms, arrive upon the scene. Finally, the King enters, and German chivalry is ready to march against the enemies of Fatherland. Nay, not quite ready. Lohengrin, the chosen leader, has not come, and great is the wonder at his tarrying. Elsa next appears sad and weeping, and then Lohengrin. In a few words, the knight declines to proceed with the campaign, announcing that Elsa has been false to her allegiance. He then, in a long and trying solo, declares himself a servant of the Holy Grail, sent on the mission he had performed, but now bound to return because his name and character had been revealed. Amid the wondering exclamations of the crowd and Elsa's remorseful entreaties, the swan meanwhile appearing, Lohengrin prepares to bid farewell, bequeathing to Elsa's brother, should that missing youth return, his sword, horn, and ring. As he steps towards the shore, Ortrud pursues him with reproaches, boasting that she, by sorcery, had transformed the young heir of Brabant into the swan, and that had Lohengrin tarried the spell would have been undone. But her triumph is shortlived. The dove of the Holy Grail descends, and hovers over the head of Lohengrin, who loosens the chain from the swan's neck. Immediately the bird disappears, and in its place we see the missing lad, now restored to Elsa's arms. Lohengrin looks sadly upon their joy, and, harnessing the dove to his boat, is drawn away, while the music of the prelude drowns the death-shriek of Ortrud, as the curtain descends for the last time. It is now nearly one o'clock, and the house has thinned, but there are enough enthusiasts left to keep up a stentorian roar of approval, to cheer Mdlle Albani, Signor Nicolini, and Signor Vianesi as they deserve, and to put a final stamp of success upon the evening's work. Success in many respects has, no doubt, been richly deserved. The splendour of the mise-en-scène, the admirable stage management of M. Desplaces, the remarkable attraction of Albani's Elsa, the earnest efforts of the other principals, and the comparative excellence of the orchestra, are features well worthy of approval. On the other hand, the chorus often sang distressingly out of tune, and there were frequent contretemps of a nature to call for precautions against repetition.

And now the question arises. Will Lohengrin commend itself to the taste of English opera-goers, and establish Wagner amongst us? Of its present success we have no doubt. It will be the feature of the season. But how as to future seasons—how as to the theories it illustrates? Can our amateurs transfer their allegiance to music without form; to music as the slave of poetry; to music which is melodious only by snatches, and is charming only in the degree in which it is a violation of Wagner's advanced opinions. They may do so, and it is even possible that Beethoven, Mozart, Rossini, Weber, and the rest may vanish from our lyric stage in favour of an entertainment which dazzles and excites without satisfying the higher faculties of mind and intellect. But success of such a nature could only be temporary. Music is not an affair of declamation, tremolos, trumpets, chromatics, and general swimming about in the vast ocean of tone. Music is tune, form, key-relationship, and adherence to those contrapuntal laws which can never be violated with impunity because they spring from a natural necessity. Wagner may triumph awhile, but the masters will return to their old place, and, after all, temporary good fortune means little. "Success," writes the German critic already quoted, "certainly does prove something for Wagner; it proves that we have to do with no insignificant person, but with one distinguished by varied intelligence and endowed with energetic mental powers, for without these such success and such works would be impossible. But a man may be still richer in gifts of this description, and yet knock in vain for admittance at the gate within which eternal art resides."

Digitized by Google

MOZART.

From a Physical and a Moral Point of View.

We are acquainted with six authentic portraits of Mozart, which represent him after he had attained the age of manhood. The first, painted by Della Croce, forms part of the family picture, now in the Mozarteum, Salzburg; a lithograph of the second is to be found in Nissen's book; the third by Lange, Mozart's brother-in-law, was never finished. The fourth is by Doris Stock, sister-in-law of Kœrner, the poet; two other likenesses, in our opinion, more characteristic than any of the others, are a medallion carved by Posch, in which the head is taken in profile, and a picture printed by Tischbein, in London, in October, 1790; the last in date is probably the best. At any rate, Posch's medallion and Tischbein's picture mutually supplement each other, and enable us to reconstruct the composer's physiognomy, such as we find it in the testimony of his contemporaries. At first sight, it possesses nothing to impress the spectator; nothing to reveal the man of genius. The lines are correct, but somewhat effeminate; the nose alone, abnormally prominent, breaks their monotony. The curve of the eyebrows is elegant and graceful. The eyes large and fine, but the look, uncertain and absent. Mozart, short and thin, had that pale tint which, in an artist, or a writer, frequently betrays the fatigue of midnight efforts and the tempests of thought. His limbs were well shaped and harmoniously proportioned; his head, however, broad and big, was not in keeping with his slender and delicate figure. He was rather vain of the small size of his foot, and of his plump little hands.

He was lively and restless, continually striking chords and executing scales upon an imaginary instrument, but his fingers, so marvellously skilful on the harpsichord, were singularly ill-suited for anything else. At table, for instance, he could not cut up his food without the risk of wounding himself, and it was absolutely necessary for his wife to wait upon him as though upon a child. He was exceedingly particular about his person, and fond of dressing with great care, and displaying the jewels due to the liberality of Princes. His father used to laugh at him for his coquetry in this respect, and Clementi, who did not know him, when they met for the first time at the Imperial Court, took him for a major-domo of the palace, so elegantly was he attired. His imagination never rested. For this reason, he preferred bodily exercises which do not require the assistance of the intelligence, and which do not interrupt the train of ideas. He was fond of riding on horseback, and of a morning took long equestrian excursions, which his absence of mind rendered dangerous, if his steed was shy or badly trained. At Prague, while writing his Don Giovanni, he was fond of playing at skittles in his friend Dussek's garden. Seated at a rustic table, he rose when his turn came round, flung the ball, not unskilfully, and sat down again to his work, following the game with one eye, and keeping the other fixed on his music.

He had, however, a marked predilection for billiards, and was a first-rate player. There was a table in his own lodgings, and, in the absence of an opponent, he used to practise on it alone. Hummel, who was a pupil of his, tells us how he would sometimes interrupt the lesson he had begun giving to propose a game. It was an excellent expedient for him, when suddenly attacked by a musical idea. The game enabled him to give the reins to his imagination and to elaborate motives. We all know that it was in this manner he composed the delicious quintet in Die Zauberflöte.

He was passionately fond of dancing, which he studied very successfully. He is said to have executed the minuet in an incomparable style. He boasted, moreover, of being a pupil of Vestris, and asserted most gravely that he was a better dancer than composer; hence he never lost an opportunity of exhibiting his talent. He was an enthusiastic frequenter of balls, and always reserved for himself an important part, preferring that of Arlequin in preference to any other, in the ballets performed at parties in Vienna; he frequently traced out the plot and composed the music for them.

These, it must be allowed, were very innocent amusements, and Mozart had no others. If we examine his generous nature—if we dive into his simple and honest soul—and no one ever lived more openly than he—we shall not find a vice or a serious defect to tarnish its purity. The public has a strange mania for identifying great men with their heroes; it never imagines that the life of a poet, or that of a composer is dualistic. While the artist soars into the lofty regions of fancy, the man is often struggling in the mire of existence. It is, perhaps, because he composed Don Giovanni, that people have attributed to Mozart the tastes and adventures of the chief character in the opera. Nothing could be more opposed to the facts, just as it is false that he sometimes left his senses at the bottom of the bottle. He liked wine, and entertained a certain tenderness for a glass of punch; the latter was indisputably a salutary cordial, which supported him in his heavy labours and refreshed his ideas.

At Vienna he resided for a long time close to a friend, the Councillor Martin Lorbl, from whom he was separated only by a thin partition. This honest German, a great lover of wine, possessed a fine cellar, and was fond of doing the honours of it with a liberality not free from vanity. The instant he heard Mozart's harpsichord, he went down into his cellar, selected one of the oldest bottles there, and, coming up again, silently placed it upon his neighbour's table. Grateful for this mark of attention, Mozart would express his thanks by a nod, pour out a little Tokay, and then resume his work, without troubling himself any more about the precious liquor, which was escaping in vapour from its crystal prison. During his journey to Paris, under the care of his mother, the latter wrote to her husband: "Do not feel anxious about any excesses at table; you know as well as I do that Wolfgang can restrain himself." Indeed, Mozart says in his own letter: "At my meals I drink nothing but water, and only take a glass of wine with the fruit, to combat its crudity."

These are decidedly not the habits of an intemperate person, and his contemptuous words when blaming, on more than one occasion, the inebriety of his comrades, would alone have sufficed to make us suspect so stupid and perfidious an accusation.

Shall we now speak of the qualities of his heart? Never was there a more respectful son, while his affection for his sister was not less ardent and constant. He never failed to claim his share in her sorrows, little and great, and, even when the burden of life weighed heaviest on his own shoulders, he offered to receive Marianne in his own house, till her betrothed was in a position to marry her as he desired.

He was no less devoted to his friends and comrades, and, more than once, was the victim of his own generosity. Anton Stradler, the clarinettist, for whom Mozart wrote his admirable quintet, was not ashamed to take unfair advantage of that generosity. One day, knowing that Mozart had received 50 ducats from the Emperor, Stradler, with tears in his eyes, came and begged the composer to lend him that sum. Mozart, hard pressed himself, could not do without it, but, not liking to refuse, lent Stradler two large repeaters, on which a pawnbroker advanced the cash. At the expiration of the time for which the watches were pledged, Stradler was, of course, unprepared, and Mozart was obliged to find the 50 ducats himself. Unfortunately, he was imprudent enough to entrust the money to his debtor, who unscrupulously put it in his pocket, and left his too confiding friend to get out of the dilemma in the best way he could.

Lessons like this did not render him more circumspect. He could not resist the impulses of his heart, and frequently endured privation himself that he might give to others who were not so badly off. He was naturally generous. One day at Leipsic, where he had given a concert, he remembered, just as he was about starting, that he had not paid his tuner.

"How much do I owe you?" he asked.

"May it please your Imperial Majesty," replied the old man, overwhelmed with confusion by the presence of the Chapelmaster of his Majesty the Emperor, "I do not know—I have come very often—I should be satisfied with a thaler——"

"A thaler!" exclaimed Mozart, "No, No! it shall never be said that an honest fellow like you put himself out of the way for such a trifle as that," and with these words he handed him two ducats.

Mozart was not liberal with his money only, but with his genius as well. As regards the latter, he always gave without counting, and was never tired of pouring forth the treasures of his imagination to accommodate singers, or satisfy their caprices.

Victor Wilder.

Digitized by Google

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

If anything could redeem the Traviata from certain stigmas which have always and must always be urged in its disfavour, it would be such an impersonation of the character of Violetta as that to which Madame Adelina Patti has from time to time, at rare intervals, accustomed us. About her perfect execution of the music it is unnecessary to speak again; and it will suffice to add that this was never more strikingly exemplified than now. From "Ah! forse è lui," with its sequel, "Sempre libera," the one as plaintive as the other is animated, to the dying scene of the unfortunate heroine, preceded by the famous duet with Alfredo (Signor Naudin) it was a series of artistic successes, the effect of which upon the audience may readily be imagined. The gifted lady was never more entirely herself, never more skilfully toned down the earlier scenes to make them acceptable, never displayed more impassioned feeling in the alternate interviews with the elder Germont (Signor Graziani) and his exemplary son Alfredo (Act II.), or pourtrayed the emotions incident to the final catastrophe with more pure and exquisite art. It is now nearly twenty years since the public were first introduced (by Mdlle Piccolomini) to the Traviata; and yet the opera appears to be looked forward to as an indispensable feature in every season's programme. Though an "extra night" on the occasion of its first performance, the house was crammed, so continuous is the attraction of Verdi's music and so abiding the charm of Madame Patti's Violetta.

On Saturday night Faust e Margherita was given for the first time this season, with an unfamiliar Margaret, in the person of Mdlle Emma Albani. During the course of the last twelve years we have seen so many Margarets, excellent, good, and mediocre (to say no more), that it is a task of some difficulty to adjudicate on the merits of a new one. We may say, at once, however, that the impression created by Mdlle Albani was in all respects favourable. Her embodiment of the character is marked by that gentleness which in every one of her previous attempts has exercised a charm more or less attractive. She has evidently studied the part with the utmost care, and an artistic ambition to excel in its delineation. To this may in a great measure be attributed the success she achieved. Her performance was interesting from beginning to end—not merely because of the quiet unobtrusiveness to which we have referred, but on account of qualities holding out still higher promise. Mdlle Albani has made herself completely mistress of the music belonging to every situation; and that alone is saying no little; but beyond this she throws herself dramatically heart and soul into the character—which is saying more. We shall have further opportunities of critically examining this fresh effort of the zealous and rising young singer, and meanwhile rest satisfied with the conviction that she has made another and important step in her career. The re-appearance of that great artist, M. Faure, gave special interest to the first performance of Gounod's universally admired opera. The incomparable Mephistopheles was in his happiest mood, and, stimulated by a cordial, nay, enthusiastic, reception, sang and acted his very best—which means, in his particular sphere, best of the best. We need not describe for the twentieth time a performance so familiar. Enough that M. Faure has returned to us in the full possession of his admirable powers, and that the entire audience, as was clearly shown by the warmth of their greeting, were delighted to see and hear him once again. He was encored in both his songs—the ballad, "Dio dell' or," in the scene of the Kermesse (Act II.), and the serenade mockingly addressed to Margaret at her window, in that preceding the duel between Faust and Valentine, the last verse in each of which he consented to repeat. These, and other encores—the chorus of old men, the romance of Siebel (Mdlle Scalchi), in the Garden scene, the last movement of the "Jewel Song" (Mdlle Albani), and the chorus of soldiers, prolonged the performance to an unusually late hour; and it would be wise on the part of Signor Vianesi, on Saturday nights especially, to disregard all such unreasonable demands. The "encore" system, indeed, is becoming more and more of a nuisance at the opera no less than in the concert-room. The other chief characters on Saturday were represented by Signor Nicolini, who gave the air "Salve dimora" (with the highly finished violin obbligato accompaniment of Mr Carrodus) in the expressive manner to which he has accustomed the public, and was in other respects the Faust with whom we are so well acquainted, and M. Maurel, who, as Valentine, since Mr Santley's retirement from the operatic stage, has no rival. With Signor Tagliafico as Wagner, and Mdlle Anese as Martha, the cast was altogether efficient; the general performance being what we are used to at Covent Garden. Repetitions of Fra Diavolo, Lohengrin, the Barbiere, and the Huguenots complete the record of last week.

On Monday night Dinorah was repeated; and on Tuesday we had the second performance of Faust. The Trovatore, with Mad. Adelina Patti as Leonora, was given on Thursday; and last night the public were allowed a fourth opportunity of estimating the beauties of Wagner's Lohengrin. The opera announced for this evening is Fra Diavolo.

—o—

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

Repetitions have been exclusively the order of proceeding at this theatre, since our last. The Nozze di Figaro was played, with a new Cherubino, in the attractive shape of Mdlle Anna de Belocca. What a charming Cherubino she made, those who have seen her in other characters will readily understand. At present we have only space to add that she was applauded in both her airs, and encored in the second "Voi che sapete," which she repeated with increased effect. Mdlle Belocca's acting was lively, natural, and engaging throughout. The other characters were sustained as before, the new light soprano, Mdlle Pernini, playing Susanna, and Mdlle Tietjens giving "Porgi amor" and "Dove sono" in a style as near perfection as lies within the province of art the most consummate to attain.

—o—

THE NEW OPERA HOUSE.

The promoters of the scheme for the erection of the new Opera House on the Thames Embankment, having provisionally selected (out of a number sent in competition) the designs of two architects—Mr C. J. Phipps, F.S.A., and Mr F. H. Fowler—as being the best, have now agreed to accept the plans of Mr Fowler. On Wednesday Mr Webster, who has undertaken the contract, entered upon the plot which adjoins the St Stephen's Club, and the exact site upon which the structure will be erected was staked out. The land which Mr Mapleson has secured has a frontage to the Embankment of 200ft., and extends 300ft. in depth to the northern boundary at Cannon Row. The site for the building and approaches thus covers a ground area of 60,000 superficial feet, or nearly an acre and a half in extent. There will be a space in front of the principal elevation to the Embankment of about 30ft. in depth, which will not only have the effect of displaying the façade to advantage, but will also serve as an approach and carriage drive. In addition to the main Embankment frontage there will also be two other striking elevations—one on the south-west side and the other on the north-east side—with a street and carriage way, extending from the Embankment to Cannon Row, upwards of 30ft. in width. The carriage drive on the south-west side will open out direct communication with the Embankment from Parliament Street, along the street facing the Whitehall Club and intersecting Cannon Row, where, it is understood, will be the stage entrance. Preliminary to laying in the foundations the whole of the ground from the line of the Embankment frontage to a short distance from the rear of the intended building at Cannon Row, and in width about 140 feet, is to be excavated to a considerable depth from the Embankment level, in order to form a spacious basement; and this portion of the work was begun on Thursday. A numerous body of workmen are employed by the contractor in the excavation now in progress; and it is estimated that 20,000 cubic feet of earthwork will have to be removed before the work of putting in the foundations can be commenced. The basement will have a concrete floor several feet in thickness. The construction of the foundations will be carried on with the greatest activity, so as to admit of the superstructure being commenced as early as possible; and it is expected that the building will be completed and ready for opening by the commencement of the opera season next year.—Architect.

VIENNA.—In conformity with an agreement to which he has come with Herr Jauner, the new manager of the Imperial Operahouse, Sig. Verdi will conduct not only his Aida, but also his Requiem. The performance of the latter work is fixed for the 9th June. This will be immediately followed by two representations of Aida in Italian, the principal parts being sustained by Signore Stolz, Waldmann, Signori Maini, and Madini. For each performance Sig. Verdi will receive 1200 florins. This he divides among the four artists just mentioned, taking nothing himself.

Digitized by Google

ST JAMES'S HALL,

REGENT STREET AND PICCADILLY.

MR CHARLES HALLÉ'S

Pianoforte Recitals.

MR CHARLES HALLÉ has the honour to announce that his Fifteenth Series of PIANOFORTE RECITALS will take place on the following afternoons:—

FRIDAY, June 4, 1875. | FRIDAY, June 18, 1875.
FRIDAY, June 11, 1875. | FRIDAY, June 25, 1875.

FIFTH RECITAL,

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, JUNE 4, 1875.

To Commence at Three o'clock precisely.

Programme.

TRIO in B flat (first time), for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello—Mr CHARLES HALLÉ, Mdme NORMAN-NERUDA, and Herr FRANZ NERUDA .. .. Mozart.

SONATA in E flat, Op. 122, for pianoforte alone—Mr CHARLES HALLÉ .. .. Schubert.

SONATA in A minor, Op. 105, for pianoforte and violin—Mr CHARLES HALLÉ and Mdme NORMAN-NERUDA .. .. .. Schumann.

GRAND TRIO in D, Op. 70, No. 1, for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello—Mr CHARLES HALLÉ, Mdme NORMAN-NERUDA, and Herr FRANZ NERUDA .. .. Beethoven.

Sofa Stalls (numbered and reserved), 7s.; balcony, 3s.; area, One Shilling.

Tickets at Chappell & Co.'s, 50, New Bond Street; Mitchell's, 33, Old Bond Street; Ollivier's, 38, Old Bond Street; Keith, Prowse & Co.'s, 48, Cheapside; Hays's, 4, Royal Exchange Buildings; Austin's Ticket Office, 28, Piccadilly; and by Mr CHARLES HALLÉ, 11, Mansfield Street, Cavendish Square.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

ALI BABA.—The libretto of Halévy's Mousquetaires de la Rèine is by M. St. Georges—not by the late Scribe, as has been generally stated.

DR SEVERAL.—Our correspondent labours under the same error which we endeavoured last week to point out to his Gregorian confederate, Dr Every. Music without rise and fall is as a wave that neither advances nor recedes. In his estimate of Gluck, Dr Several is as much in the dark as was Dr Every in his estimate of Piccinni.

MARRIAGE.

On May 20th, at St Pancras Church, Miss MILLY OERTLING (late student at the Royal Academy of Music), to ALFRED RAWLES, Esq.

DEATH.

On May 16th, suddenly, THOMAS BENSUSAN, of 75, Old Broad Street, in his 72nd year.

NOTICE.

To ADVERTISERS.—The Office of the MUSICAL WORLD is at Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & Co.'s, 244, Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street (First Floor). It is requested that Advertisements may be sent not later than Thursday. Payment on delivery.

The Musical World,

LONDON, SATURDAY, MAY 29, 1875.

HOSPITAL NURSES.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

SIR,—You were good enough last year about this time to give insertion to a letter from me calling public attention to the establishment of a Training School and Home for Nurses in connection with the Westminster Hospital, and inviting support for so useful an institution. Madame Christine Nilsson had at that time generously volunteered to give a public concert in aid of the funds, from which the large sum of £900 was ultimately received by the School. Now again the same generous offer has been made by Madame Nilsson, with a view to assist the committee in obtaining a permanent site for the School in the close vicinity of the Hospital, with adequate accommodation to enable the committee to carry out their original plan of not only supplying a staff of trained nurses for the Hospital, but also for the training of probationers to meet, to some extent, the great want of superior nurses for cases of serious sickness in private families.

While the work of the school in nursing is proceeding most satisfactorily at the Hospital, it is highly desirable that the field afforded for training should be fully occupied to meet the demand for skilled nurses outside the wards, and at the same time help to provide funds for the maintenance of the School and Home, and to render it as far as possible self-supporting. This can only be done by increasing the number of probationers, and providing a permanent Home to which they can return at intervals when unemployed.

It is in aid of efforts to accomplish this object, and so extend the usefulness of the Training School, that Madame Nilsson has once more kindly and generously come forward to give a concert on the 23rd of June, at St James's Hall, and I venture to request you will give insertion to this letter, in furtherance of the philanthropic object of these efforts, and that the interest of the public may be more effectually enlisted in its support. I am, Sir, WESTMINSTER.

May 21st, 1875.

THE following paper, written to fill up some corner in a fashionable Parisian magazine, is from the pen of M. Henri Blaze de Bury. Very many of us know of what stuff M. de Bury is made; while Rossini's music speaks for itself, trumpet-tongued:—

Rossini was to the last a man of the old parties in politics. He might laugh and rail superficially, but, at bottom, he belonged to the Past and thought en codino. He believed in sovereigns, looked seriously on the grand cordons of diplomatists, and even accepted snuff-boxes. Why should we not frankly state the fact, since the blame belongs to the period which gave it birth? He was somewhat deficient in dignity. The character of one who amuses others caused him no embarrassment. Among the negotiators of the Congress of Vienna, as in the saloons of the English aristocracy, he paid court to influential personages, and exerted himself to make money by the petty qualities of his nature, sometimes manufacturing cantatas for special occasions, at the order of a Metternich, who patronizingly called him the "God of Harmony," and sometimes consenting to play in London the part of accompanist. "It was the fashion, the rage, to have my face at a party. My wife sang, and I accompanied. For this we received fifty pounds an evening, which mounted up to something considerable, when it is recollected that this source of profit was continued uninterruptedly for three months." These lines are extracted from a highly interesting collection of conversations with Rossini, published in Germany by Dr Ferdinand Hiller. During the summer of 1856, the learned Director of the Cologne Conservatory, happening to be at Trouville, met the composer of Guillaume Tell, who had gone thither in the hopes of restoring the equilibrium of his nervous system, already greatly shaken. A man cannot spend twenty-five years of his life writing operas, and forty-five in being adored by the whole world, without experiencing a certain amount of lassitude. Rossini still possessed, at the above period, all his mental vivacity; he liked to speak of men and things, and Dr Ferdinand Hiller, who by the way had long been acquainted with him, esteemed his being able every day to give the cue to such an interlocutor a singular piece of good fortune. Rossini lives and breathes in these desultory conversations, begun as we light a cigar, and cut short by a game at dominos.

These dialogues have a charm of their own; to those who associated with Rossini only in his works, they may be recommended as an excellent photograph of him, while those who knew him personally will recognize in them the amiable and witty mind, the familiar physiognomy, so fatherly, with a slight touch of irony, and the honest and jovial inhabitant of Passy, who would have been none the worse if a little less free and easy.

Louis XIV. never showed himself without his wig. He had one wig in which he took medicine, and another in which he received ambassadors. Rossini's fault was that he too frequently took off his, and made his royalty too cheap, even though he did not like to see others fail to recognize it. It is not for nothing that a man belongs to the land of Bologna sausages and presciuto. The eternal Parmesan style of cookery flavours the shortest note in Rossini's correspondence, and is too frequently perceptible even in his music. The style is the man. There is an entire macaronic branch of it which ought to be put in the waste-paper basket. Self-respect is the first law of the world, and in an artist this virtue might become the most skilful of speculations. It is by respecting himself that a composer writes the Symphony in C major and all Beethoven's other works—that he writes the trio in Guillaume Tell. Now look at the just remuneration of things; see how every good sentiment turns to profit; the genius, too often wanting in conviction, for whom love was merely a kind of impassioned gallantry, found his true pathos in the sublime trio in Guillaume Tell, that profound expression of the sole sentiment which ever profoundly moved him. "He loved his father very much;" and this was, perhaps, why he wrote the trio in Guillaume Tell. Can there then be really something good about filial piety, and is it, after so much ridicule, to be taken seriously? That which a man does with self-respect has a chance of surviving; all the rest is condemned beforehand. The rest passes away; it is the rococo of the Future; a Future of twenty, or thirty years at most. Rossini is one of those men of genius whom Time has spared the least; before he quitted the world three fourths of his works had perished. Which of Beethoven's are wanting? Where is the old rubbish; where are the antiquated ritornellos? How astounding is the force of principle! Everything remains, and the reason of this prodigy lies in the character itself of the great artist, who was never influenced by aught save inspiration. Haydn and Mozart composed to order; Beethoven never did; puritan that he was, he would sooner have allowed the universe to collapse than write a note beyond the limits of his own impulse. Hence the permanent integrity of his works. We say of Mozart: "This or that has become antiquated." We do not say so of Beethoven. He will grow old less than any one else, because he had more self-respect than any one else. Rossini, who laughed at everything and everybody, beginning with himself, would not have accepted glory if purchased by stoicism. "Papataci de' mangiar, papataci de' dormir!" Let us remember the old trio which pourtrays the sybarite as he really was, just as the four words: "ad majorem Dei gloriam" paint old Bach.

Digitized by Google

At Bologna, Rossini was fond of rising early and going to market. Terra antica, gentil madre e matrice. A rich and fertile mother, indeed, was this land, with the abundance and varieties of its products, a regular country of Cocagne, for Kings of Yvetot, out on their villegiatura. One morning, while bargaining for some fish, Rossini perceived a gentleman quietly occupied in contemplating, from the middle of the market-place, the picturesque side of the scene; it was the Duke of Devonshire. "They told me I was certain to meet you here," said the Duke, addressing Rossini in the most aristocratically phlegmatic manner, and as though they had separated from each other only the evening previous. The two friends, however, had really not seen each other for twenty years. They chatted a moment, and then the composer went back with the noble son of England to his hotel. His Grace returned the musician's visit in the course of the day, and, just as he was leaving, said: "I still owe you a memento for the charming evening you once made me pass at Milan, and for the entrancing airs you sang me." With these words, he handed him a handsome snuff-box, and Rossini, the Rossini of Mosè and of Guillaume Tell, quietly put it in his pocket without more ado! "Those confounded French can only make compliments; I never meet one who does not ask me which opera of mine I prefer! A fine question truly; what a hurry I shall be in to answer it! The French are exceedingly grateful, to be sure, especially in words." Rossini was not mistaken; the English speak less; but their silence is golden, especially when they enclose it in a snuff-box.* He accepted a snuff-box from a lord, and had the boldness to refuse a cigar-end offered by an august hand. Ferdinand VII., King of Spain, was an inveterate smoker, and naturally had a cigar in his mouth, when Rossini, on his passage through Madrid, was introduced by M. Aguado. After a few words of conversation, Ferdinand, wishing to be exceedingly gracious, took from his lips the half-consumed puro, and offered it to the great composer. The latter declined with a bow the gift, under the pretext that he never smoked. "You are wrong to refuse," whispered Marie Christine to him, in Neapolitan; "the King was doing you an honour that does not fall to the lot of every one." Another very unexpected honour awaited him at the house of the Infanta, Don Francisco, the King's brother, and a passionate Rossinian. But let the musician himself speak: "I found him with his wife, tinkering on the piano. We began by talking about one of my operas, the score of which was lying open on the instrument. The Prince, interrupting me, then said he had a favour to ask, immediately adding, 'Allow me to give you Assur's air, but dramatically, and as if on the stage.' A fresh surprise and fresh embarrassment. I sat down to the piano, and preluded, come what might, when I saw the Prince, at the other end of the room, strike the most wonderful attitudes, and begin the air, with the gestures and accents of an enraged tragedian." What a happy man was Rossini! After Pasta, Rubini, Malibran, and Lablache, to see his productions performed by a descendant of Louis XIV.!

BLAZE DE BURY.

* What the French want in snuff-boxes they not unfrequently make up, at any rate, in chatterboxes. What a pity some of their writers do not, now and then, imitate the silence at which they sneer in their English neighbours. —TRANSLATOR.

One of our most frequent and valued contributors having taken the pains to translate the foregoing, we—à rebrousse poil—have allowed it to be squeezed into the leading columns of the Musical World, thus more emphatically exposing it to universal objurgation.

OTTO BEARD.

MDLLE TIETJENS has, we are informed, undertaken a tour in the United States of America, under the auspices of the enterprising brothers, Max and Maurice Strakosch. About the brilliant success of the renowned Teutonic prima donna there cannot exist the shadow of a doubt.

DR MACFARREN, who succeeded the late Sir Sterndale Bennett in the Professorship of Music in the University of Cambridge, delivered his inaugural lecture in the Senate House, Cambridge, on Tuesday afternoon. He traced the history of music, and urged its cultivation at the University, observing that he hoped the authorities would consider it desirable to make music a special subject of examination. This remark was received with loud applause.

GAIETY THEATRE.

We must speak of Mr Hollingshead's series of comic operatic performances at this theatre in our next, premising that they are excellent of their kind.

OCCASIONAL NOTES.

THE music of Sir Sterndale Bennett is becoming more and more in request. Mr Charles Hallé played his "Chamber Trio" in A, at his fourth recital; and Mdlle Krebs will introduce his Three Impromptus at her second recital (next Wednesday). Mdlle Krebs has already played the third Impromptu, at her concerts in Dresden and elsewhere abroad. The feature of interest at the last Saturday concert given in the Alexandra Palace, under the direction of Mr Weist Hill, was the performance, by Mdlle Marie Krebs, of Sterndale Bennett's Concerto in F minor, which was enthusiastically applauded.

THE work of clearing the site of the Opera in the Rue Le Peletier, is being pushed forward with activity. All kinds of rumours are afloat respecting the use to which the vacant space will be devoted. According to M. François Oswald, of Le Gaulois, it has been secured by M. Strakosch, as representative of a limited liability company, with a capital of several million francs, for the purpose of constructing a theatre in the style of the London Alhambra.

Digitized by Google

CONCERTS VARIOUS.

Mrs J. Holman Andrews gave a very agreeable soirée musicale d'invitation at the Beethoven Rooms on the 12th inst. The pupils of her vocal class (ladies and gentlemen amateurs) rendered Mozart's Mass, No. 2, as well as some secular part music, with taste and precision. Miss Edith and Miss Gertrude Holman Andrews (the latter better known as Miss Gertrude Ashton) sang Mendelssohn's duet "I waited for the Lord," and other duets and songs, in a way that left nothing to be desired. Miss Emma Barnett played a solo on the pianoforte in her usual finished style; and among other things worthy of special notice was Mr Stedman's singing of "Tom Bowling," and the clever anthem "Lord, to Thee," the composition of Miss Gertrude Ashton. Mrs Holman Andrews and Mr Westley Richards accompanied the vocal music, and Mr Rutt conducted.

Mdme Greiffenhagen gave an evening concert on Tuesday last, at her residence, Upper Bedford Place, which attracted a large number of her friends. Mdme Greiffenhagen's pupils sang in a correct and effective manner several part-songs and choruses by Meyerbeer, Messrs F. Cowen, and Gordon, all of which were favourably received. Mdme Lemmens and Miss Emily Muir gave two songs charmingly; and Miss C. Shury made a highly favourable impression in Schira's romance, "Sognai." Mr A. H. Cattermole, in a song from Dinorah; Mr Stanley Smith and Mr Brincher, in songs by Kücken and Halévy; Signor Tito Mattei, in his fourth Valse and in one of his graceful Nocturnes; and M. Jules de Swert (a Continental violoncellist of repute)—won deserved applause from an attentive and appreciative audience. Mdme Greiffenhagen and Mr Gordon were the accompanists of the vocal music.

Messrs Ludwig and Daubert gave the second of their announced series of Classical Chamber Concerts on Wednesday evening, at the New Langham Hall, Great Portland Street. The concert opened with Beethoven's Trio in B flat (Op. 97), the pianoforte part being taken by Mr Franklin Taylor; Lieder by Brahms and Liszt, sung by Mdlle Helene Arnim, followed, and the first part concluded with J. S. Bach's Sonata in A major, for violin and pianoforte, which received every justice from Herr Ludwig and Mr F. Taylor, who were much applauded after each movement. The second part began with Boccherini's Sonata in A major, for the violoncello (with a pianoforte accompaniment arranged by Signor Piatti), excellently played by Herr Daubert. This was followed by M. Coenen's "Spring Song," sung by Mdlle Arnim, and the concert concluded with Haydn's Quartet in G minor (Op. 74), capitally played by Messrs Josef Ludwig, Carl Jung, Zerbini, and Daubert. Mr J. Zerbini accompanied the vocal music with his usual excellence. The next of these agreeable entertainments is announced to take place on June the 9th.

Madame Lena Hayes' grand evening concert (in aid of a destitute infant orphan) took place at the Beethoven Rooms on the 20th inst., and was attended by a select audience. The artists were Mdme Poole, who sang "Nobil Signor," from The Huguenots, and was encored in Hatton's "The Maiden's Rose"; Mdme Elstoff (pupil of Sig. Torretti), whose fine voice was heard to advantage in Gluck's "Che faro," and Cowen's "It was a dream." Mdme L. Hayes produced great effect in Bishop's "Should he upbraid," as also in songs by Molloy and Bevignani; Mr Wilbye Cooper gave two songs with his accustomed taste; Sig. Torretti, Mozart's "Non più andrai," and "Qui sdegno"; and Sig. Nappi, Balfe's "Si tu savais," and Rossini's "La Danza." The instrumental portion of the concert consisted of Hummel's Nocturne, Op. 99 (pianoforte duet), and Ravina's grand Duo on airs from Euryanthe, capitally played by the youthful and talented Mdlles Molyneux, who by their solo performances also obtained universal approbation. Mdlle Violet Molyneux played Sir J. Benedict's "Scotland," and Mdlle Agnes, Thalberg's "We're a' noddin'." A particular feature of the concert was Mr Oberthür's brilliant harp playing. His two solos, fantasie on "The Last Rose of Summer," and "Clouds and sunshine," being received with immense applause. Herr Lehmeyer accompanied the vocal pieces with taste and judgment.

Signor Torretti gave a concert, on Monday evening, at the Beethoven Rooms, assisted by two of his pupils, Mesdames Gerrard and Elstoff, with Miss Palmer, Mr Gerard Coventry, Signor Rocca, and the bénéficiaire as vocalists; Mr Henry Holmes, violinist, and Miss Julie Augarde, pianist. The concert opened with the well-known trio from Lucrezia Borgia, "Guai se ti sfugge," sung by Madame Gerrard, Mr Coventry and Signor Torretti. Madame Gerrard and Madame Elstoff also gave songs by Donizetti, Millard, Sullivan, and Schumann, with more or less success. Miss Palmer created much effect in Gluck's "Che faro." Signor Torretti sang "O te Palermo" (Verdi), and Mozart's "Qui sdegno." Mr Gerard Coventry, who possesses a very agreeable tenor voice, made his first appearance since his return from Milan, where he has been studying to advantage. He gave Sir Julius Benedict's elegant romance, "Nulla da te bel angelo," and Ascher's popular "Alice, where art thou?" He was most warmly applauded, and sang extremely well, obtaining a loud and unanimous "encore" for Ascher's admired romance. Mr Coventry will be an acquisition to the concert-room. Signor Monari Rocca gave one or two vocal pieces in his best manner; and Miss Julie Augarde played, in excellent style, solos by Gade, Chopin, and Schumann, and, with Mr Henry Holmes, Beethoven's Sonata in G (Op. 30), for violin and pianoforte. Mr Holmes' also gave in perfection a violin solo by Kufferath. Signor Romelli was the conductor.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

The fifth of the Philharmonic Meetings took place on Monday evening at St James's Hall. The programme contained several interesting features. Besides the overtures, the Rosamunde of Schubert, and the Ruy Blas of Mendelssohn, and the Pastoral Symphony of Beethoven, all of which were played with care and finish by the band, Brahm's "Variations on a Theme by Haydn" were introduced, for the first time at these concerts, and were listened to with enjoyment. This work was originally produced at Vienna in 1873, and subsequently found its way into this country, when it was heard at the Crystal Palace in March, 1874. Borrowed from an unpublished collection of divertimentos for brass instruments by the old master, Dr G. A. Macfarren truly remarks, in his analytical notes, that the theme in question "is essentially Haydnish in character," having a strong resemblance in certain instances to the well-known Hymn for the Emperor. Upon this slight and unpretending subject Brahms has built his round of "variations," all of which are characterized by the "ingenuity" with which they have been properly credited. They are, in fact, a series of scholastic exercises—"a succession," according to Dr Macfarren, "of contrapuntal studies of the highest interest, showing to an extraordinary extent the plastic nature of the simplest musical elements under the workmanship of a skilful artist." The delivery of this clever work was all that could be wished, for Mr Cusins took every pains to reveal its frequent originalities of design and construction, and so awaken the public desire to make further acquaintance with it. It was loudly applauded at the close, and has, doubtless, found a place among the stock pieces of the Philharmonic repertoire. Vieuxtemps's Adagio, and Rondo, from his Concerto in E, were the movements chosen by Signor Papini for his violin display in the first part of the concert. In these selections the Italian artist found excellent opportunity for the disclosure of his undoubtedly fine qualities of tone and executancy. As regards the former, nothing could be more inviting to the ear, because of its silvery richness; while, in all the arts of bravura-playing, he was at once clear and articulate—in every respect, in short, a facile and emphatic exponent of the airy music to which Vieuxtemps's Concerto belongs. The late Mendelssohn Scholar, Mr William Shakespeare, and Mdlle Sophie Löwe were the vocalists. Mr Shakespeare, who made his first public appearance in London, comes with the reputation of possessing many varied musical accomplishments and an exceptionally fine tenor voice, and clothed, also, with the best honours of the distinguished Academy in which he has graduated. His method of singing betrays, as it ought to do, very superior preparation, his style being broad and dramatic, and his enunciation perfect. A not unnatural nervousness, however, disturbed his self-possession on Monday evening; and though he sang Rossini's "Ecco ridente," and Sterndale Bennett's charming setting of Barry Cornwall's touching words, "Dawn, gentle flower," with grace and expression, it was obvious he would do himself completer justice upon future occasions. His best effort was Mendelssohn's song, "Through the air a breath is stealing," in which, from the restless nature of the music, his voice was necessarily steadier and firmer. Mdlle Löwe is a concert-room singer of ability. Her version of Mozart's "Deh vieni" on the present occasion was fittingly tender and sentimental. She also sang a pair of lieder by Mendelssohn and Brahms. D. H. H.

Genoa.—At a meeting held the other evening by the Archæological Section of the Società Ligure di Storia Patria, a most elaborate and erudite paper was read by the president, Sig. P. C. Remondini. The subject of it was Fra Giovanni da Genova, a musician of the XIVth century, some precious manuscripts of whom are still preserved in the Palatine Library at Modena. The reading of the paper was supplemented by a specimen of Fra Giovanni's music, written according to the modern system of notation by Sig. Remondini. To this were added, for the sake of comparison, a Canzone for Three Voices by the celebrated Francesco Landino da Firenze, called Francesco degli Organi, the Rossini of his time (1360), and a Canzone for Two Voices by an anonymous composer of the XIVth century. The original manuscript of the last named piece is preserved in the library at Chambray. Though composed five hundred years ago, this old music was listened to with great satisfaction. It was admirably sung by Signori Barabino, Romanelli and Giorgi, under the direction of Sig. Valle.

Digitized by Google

MUSIC IN ROME.

(From a Correspondent.)

Happening to be in the Eternal City, we paid a visit to the provisional locale of the Royal Academy of St Cecilia, where sundry schools of music are collected under one roof, to be, as we were informed, ultimately converted into a musical Lyceum, an institution so much needed in Rome. We were surprised, not to say, astounded, at the small extent of the musical library existing in the said Academy, which was founded by Palestrina in 1584! We thought we should see, nay, more, we will say we were justified in expecting to find, there the most precious treasures; for the most illustrious musicians down from the time of Palestrina to our own belonged to this Academy. With the exception of La Storia della Musica by Father Martini, there is not a single theoretical work worth mentioning. Among the music, we may mention a copy of Spontini's Olimpia, presented by the composer, and adorned with his autograph. We saw, also, several gifts from Pius IX., but, among the music of modern composers which they comprised, we remarked only the name of Liszt. The Abbate's offering to his Holiness consists of the score of a Missa Solemnis, 55 centimetres high, the largest we ever beheld. It is printed with movable type of extraordinary beauty. Such is the accuracy with which the different parts are joined that each page more resembles a copperplate engraving than a typographic production. It is superfluous to speak of the binding of red velvet with raised gold ornaments, this being a matter of course in a gift made to so eminent a personage. We must mention, also, the most precious and interesting object in the Academy. We allude to the album containing the names of all the members from the establishment of the institution. Thus we saw, among others, the names of Bernardo Pasquini, Scarlatti, Father Martini, Anerio, Nanini, Bontempi, Gasparini, Gervasoni, Mancini, Tartini, Vallotti, etc. It appears to us incomprehensible, however, that, in an institution of such antiquity, we should be unable to find the compositions of at least some of the great men who belonged to it. BOCCHERINI.

—o—

MUSIC AT BERLIN.

(From our Correspondent.)

For some time past the stage of the Royal Operahouse has been trodden by various "Gäste," or "Guests." Though aiming at permanent engagements, they "come as shadows, so depart," and are speedily forgotten. Among recent specimens may be mentioned Herr Beck, from the Graz Theatre, a son of the well-known barytone of the Imperial Operahouse, Vienna. He has appeared in Guillaume Tell and L'Africaine, and was much liked in both operas. Mdlle Keller, another "Gast," was an inadequate Selica, while a third, Mdlle Hasselbeck (Ines), did not give so much satisfaction as, not many days previously, in Der Freischütz. Herr Ernst, as Vasco de Gama, did his best. Still another "Gast" was Mdlle Reinmann, from the Ducal Theatre, Dessau. This young lady selected for her début the part of Cherubino in Le Nozze, an unfortunate selection, because, the music does not suit her voice, and she had to contend with the recollection of Mad. Lucca.

A few weeks ago, Herr von Hülsen commenced, with the sanction of the Emperor, a series of cheap performances of standard dramas at the Theatre Royal. Encouraged by success, Herr von Hülsen determined to extend the principle to the Royal Operahouse. Consequently, from the present date till about the middle of June, the national establishment will be open to the public at reduced prices. The course taken by the Intendant-General has met with general approbation. The first opera was Oberon. The audience applauded everyone and everything. This was fortunate for Mdlle Hasselbeck, whose personification of Rezia would, under ordinary circumstances, have failed to command such marks of approbation.

The first novelty of the winter season is to be Herr Goldmark's Biblical opera, Die Königin von Saba, with Miss Minnie Hauck as Salamith.

During the late visit of the Emperor of Russia, both Emperors attended a performance of the ballet of Satanella. Admirers of Wagner will be pleased to learn that the "Waffen-Tanz," from Rienzi, was substituted for the music from Auber's Fils Prodigue. At the Grand Court Concert, in honour of his Russian Majesty, however, not a note by the Prophet of Bayreuth was included in the programme. The Emperor Alexander is the musical antipodes of his Royal Brother of Bavaria.

A feature in the programme of the last concert of the Sinfoniecapelle, under the direction of Herr von Brenner, was the overture bearing the motto: "Hinaus in die Welt," with which Herr Otto Dorn won the Meyerbeer Exhibition. The composer conducted his own work. Herr Liebling played Grieg's Pianoforte Concerto in A minor.

Herr W. Müller, a musical publisher, who has sung solos at the Concerts of the Singacademie and Royal High School of Music, is engaged, from the 1st October, as tenor at the Operahouse.

Herr Heinrich Fürstenow, Capellmeister at Pawlawsk, near St Petersburgh, was presented with a diamond ring during the Czar's recent stay, for an "Imperial March" dedicated to the august visitor.

—o—

THE YORKSHIRE EXHIBITION.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

Sir,—The only announcements that appeared in print—to the effect that Dr Spark would inaugurate the organ—were the paragraph in your journal for May 1st, and an advertisement in the local papers for May 8th. The paragraph in the Musical World was probably sent to you by the indefatigable Doctor. The local advertisement was somewhat strange. After announcing Mr Best as organist on the day of the opening of the exhibition, there was a note that Dr Spark would inaugurate the organ on the day after the opening. Perhaps the Doctor had something to do with this matter also. In the next official advertisement (copy enclosed) there is no mention at all of Dr Spark's proposed performances; and, in the papers for May 11th, appears the following letter, which effectually disposes of the anomalous second inauguration of the organ:—

YORKSHIRE EXHIBITION OF ARTS AND MANUFACTURES.

To the Editors of the "Leeds Mercury."

Gentlemen,—I notice, in your impression of Saturday last, two errors in the musical programme for the inaugural ceremony.

1. Mr R. Best, organist, Liverpool, should be Mr W. T. Best.

2. You state the organ will be inaugurated by Dr Spark, which is an anomaly, as it will really be inaugurated by Mr W. T. Best, at the opening ceremony.

I am, Gentlemen, yours obediently, S. WALLEY,
Chairman of the Musical Arrangements Committee.

Leeds, 10th May, 1875.

I believe nothing has been said in the Musical World about the opening of the Exhibition, so it may interest some of your readers to know that the musical performances consisted of various suitable numbers, executed by a fine band and chorus, conducted by Mr R. S. Burton; Mr W. T. West was at the organ, and the large audiences were delighted with his exquisite style of playing. The music on the second day was provided by the excellent band of the Queen's Bays, conducted by Mr W. C. Smith, and the organ performances of Dr Spark, whose programmes could not be completed, on account of insufficient water-pressure to keep up the supply of wind. The same machinery has several times since proved itself to be altogether unreliable. Nearly every organ recital has resulted in a partial fiasco. Besides the defective wind, the organ is in very indifferent order. It is to be regretted that the committee does not have the defects remedied, or shut the organ up.

I was not the author of the paragraph referring to the non-payment of artists engaged for Dr Spark's concert, on March 18th, nor did I know anything about the paragraph until it was in print. I can say this much, however, the artists had to return to London without their fees; and Dr Spark, I think, will not deny that several applications had to be made to him before settlement was made. It is a fact that a very peculiar method was adopted in making payment for this concert. The performance resulted in a very large loss, which, however, did not affect the promoter of the concert, inasmuch as a sufficient sum to cover the loss was guaranteed by the public. By the way, sir, is it not something new for a private individual to obtain subscriptions from the public to save his own pocket from the probable losses in his speculations? Kindly oblige me by inserting this in you next impression. Yours obediently, VERITAS.

[The author of the above has inclosed his name and address.—EDITOR.]

ERFURT.—A most satisfactory performance of Mendelssohn's Elijah was lately given by Soller's Musical Union, under the direction of Herr Adolf Golde.

KÖNIGSBERG.—Rossini's opera of Mosè was recently performed here for the first time. The performance was bi-lingual. Señor Padilla, Mad. Désirée Artôt, and M. de Carrion, King Pharaoh, Anai, and Amenophis, respectively, sang in Italian, while the other performers sang in German.

Digitized by Google

RICHARD WAGNER, AND HIS RING OF THE NIBLUNG.

(From the "New Quarterly Magazine.")

(Continued from page 349.)

To pacify the ire which these remarks, if misunderstood, might rouse in certain quarters, I will add parenthetically that, to my mind, the treatment of historical subjects by Shakspere, in its bold disregard of temporal and local details, verges on the liberty of mythical, or, which is essentially the same, purely human typification. My remarks apply more to the musical than to the spoken drama. For music, by its power and weakness, is debarred from the rendering of accidental details; its ethereal being shuns the fetters of clumsy reality—from momentary facts it ascends to eternal motives.

It would exceed the limits of my purpose to show at length how Wagner's progress from the historical to the mythical implied the relinquishing on his part of coarse spectacular for purely artistic effects, or, to say the same in other words, how the librettist developed into a poet. Only a few words ought to be added as to the manner in which this change reacted on his musical style. It is well known that Wagner abolished the traditional forms of absolute music, such as aria, duet, and finale, supplanting them by a mode of utterance entirely founded on the requirements of the dramatic situation. This reformatory act, a Wagneromastix would boldly assert, was an act of premeditation founded on speculative theories, and therefore devoid of artistic spontaneity. The groundlessness of such an accusation might easily be proved by intrinsic reasons. Nevertheless, it may not seem undesirable to hear the master's own testimony on a question which, besides bearing on our immediate subject, is of vital importance for the history of musical progress.

"The plastic unity and simplicity," Wagner says, "of the mythical subject-matter allowed of the concentration of the action on certain important and decisive points, and thus enabled me to rest on those fewer scenes with a perseverance sufficient to expound the motive down to its ultimate dramatic consequences. The nature of the subject, therefore, could not induce me, in sketching my scenes, to consider in advance their adaptability to any particular musical form, the particular kind of musical treatment being necessitated by these scenes themselves. It could not enter my mind to ingraft on this my musical form, growing as it did out of the nature of the scenes, the traditional forms of operatic music, which could only have marred and interrupted its organic development. I therefore never thought of contemplating on principle, and as a deliberate reformer, the destruction of the aria, duet, and other operatic forms; but the dropping of these forms followed consistently from the nature of my subjects."

The ultimate result of a reform begun in this spontaneous manner was the great cycle of tragedies which forms the subject of this essay. But, before we enter upon this, we must cast a passing glance on the intervening links of a chain of development, extending from an all but blindfold groping for a new mode of utterance in the Flying Dutchman, to the fullest light of artistic purpose in the Niblungen.

In the first-mentioned opera, Wagner, as we mentioned before, left the domain of pseudo-historic realism for that of mythical truth; but a change of purpose does not always, and did not in this case, imply a fully proportionate change of means. It is, therefore, no matter of suprise to see some of the hereditary evils of the old opera reappear in this early attempt at purer dramatic expression. The diction and versification, although by far superior to the ordinary libretto, show here and there traces of that slip-shod disregard of rhyme and reason which the imperturbable patience of an operatic audience is wont to tolerate. Some of the characters, moreover, as particularly the disappointed lover and tenor of the piece, are fashioned after operatic patterns. The music also occasionally suffers from what may be described as want of grasp and consistency. The old forms of absolute music are for the greater part abandoned; but what remains of them is sufficient to mar that absolute congruity between poetical intention and musical expression so characteristic of Wagner's later style. I need not add that these remarks are not made with an intention to disparage the beauties of an opera which in many respects remains unsurpassed by its own or any other composer's works. The weirdness of the northern seas, with the doomed hero tossed on their pitiless waves, is depicted musically in the boldest touches. Readers who have witnessed the performance of the Flying Dutchman at Drury Lane (the only performance of a work by Wagner that ever took place at an English theatre), may judge of the deep impression produced even by that cold and uncongenial rendering.

["Cold and uncongenial rendering" is good. Wagner himself never listened to a warmer and more genial rendering of this, his very best opera.—O. BEARD.]

(To be continued.)

MUSIC PAST AND PRESENT IN IRELAND.

(Continued from page 341.)

The Anacreontic Society was founded in 1740. It originally consisted of amateurs who cultivated instrumental music specially. But at the suppers which succeeded each meeting glee singing was much relished, and solos sung by the most competent vocalists then residing in Dublin. This society before and after the Union included most of the nobility and gentry among its members. During the latter part of the last century, and the beginning of this, the Anacreontic aided many charities by its concerts, and kept alive a love of the orchestral works of the most eminent composers. Castrucci, the pupil of Corelli, was invited to Dublin by the members, and conducted the concerts of the society to the time of his death in 1752. He is buried in St Mary's graveyard. For many years the Duke of Leinster, whom we have so recently lost, was president, and continued to preside and take his place in the orchestra, when he played the double bass up to the last meetings of the society. It died out for want of patronage, and also from its members falling away, about a quarter of a century ago. The vice-presidents were the Earl of Arran, Earl of Donoughmore, and Lord Clonbrock, who each played some instrument at the performances. Its meetings took place in the Rotundo ever since that building was erected, and its concerts contributed to the charity for which these rooms were originally designed, at various times, considerable sums of money. The collapse of this society is not only to be lamented as a loss to the charity it at one time so munificently supported, but with it ceased that school of amateur instrumentalists which kept up a taste for the orchestral and chamber music of the great masters. Then, the violins, violas, violoncellos, double-basses, and flutes, were generally played by amateurs, to be found among the nobility and gentry of the land. Now, it would be difficult to get up a quartet of stringed instruments solely played by amateurs. Then, the symphonies of Haydn, Mozart, and Beethoven, and the overtures of Weber, Rossini, and other composers, were practised weekly by non-professional performers. Now, the only society—the Philharmonic—which presents this noble species of the art is neither supported sufficiently by the public at large, nor are its efforts to keep up a school of instrumental music in the country appreciated. The aid given to charity here by music in the past is something wondrous. It is said that the Hospital for Incurables "rose as if it were by the power of music," in 1753. It was about this time that the musical glasses were invented by Richard Pokritch, who made such use of their charming tones, that he once so gained the hearts of two bailiffs, who came to arrest him, that they departed without laying their hands upon him. There were some remarkable men in and from Ireland amongst the musical celebrities of this period. Michael Kelly was born in Dublin 1762, and became the first tenor in Italy, and, curious to say, this Irishman is said to have been the first male singer from these islands who sang in that country. He afterwards performed at most of the Italian theatres. He travelled through Germany, and in Vienna became the intimate friend of Mozart. He also became intimate with Haydn. Mozart was so pleased with an aria by Kelly, "Grazie agl' ingani tuori," that he did its composer the honour of writing some charming variations upon it. On his revisiting Dublin, in consequence of his mother's illness, the Emperor gave him a year's leave of absence and continued his salary. Kelly did not return to Germany, but settled in London, where he made his first appearance in Lionel and Clarissa at Drury Lane. He was attached to that theatre as director of the music and first tenor till his retirement from the stage. He composed the music for many pieces—The Castle Spectre, Blue Beard, The Peasant Boy, The

Digitized by Google

Royal Oak; and he composed Gustavus Vasa for Covent Garden in 1811. He again visited Dublin, in company with the celebrated Madame Catalani, in 1808, and, after fulfilling engagements in Cork and Limerick, returned to London in the autumn. Drury Lane Theatre was unhappily burnt down on February the 4th, in the following year, and all Kelly's scores were lost in the conflagration. His music, from the little we have seen of it, seems to possess symmetry of form and melody. It is much to be regretted that more of it has not been preserved. He took his farewell of the stage in the city of his birth in September, 1811. He first appeared in Dublin in 1778. He died at Margate at the age of 64 on the 15th of October, 1826. He published, during the latter part of his life, two very amusing volumes of "Reminiscences." Thomas Carter, who set Dr Percy's (the author of "Reliques of Antient English Poetry") charming ballad "O Nanny wilt thou gang with me" to music, was likewise a native of Ireland. It appears that Carter was born in Dublin in 1735. He was organist of St Werburgh's Church from 1751 to 1769. Lord Inchiquin furnished him with the means to go and finish his musical education in Italy. He stayed in Naples some time, and was received in the best society. On his return he started for Calcutta, where he was at the head of musical affairs. But the climate compelled him to leave, and he returned to England for his health. He appears to have been a wild, improvident man. O'Keefe, the dramatist, tells many amusing anecdotes of him, among the rest the following:—"He asked me (says O'Keefe) to bring him in to hear one of the rehearsals of the 'Castle of Andalusia.'" To this O'Keefe objected—it being contrary to the rules of the theatre. But he was persuaded to do so on the promise of Carter to keep himself perfectly quiet. As the rehearsal progressed, O'Keefe was surprised to get a tap on the shoulder from Tom, who exclaimed, "Why don't you introduce me to Harris"—then proprietor of Covent Garden. After this he walked up and down the stage directing the band in the most absurd manner, to the horror of his friend. Dr Arnold, who was the composer of the music of the drama, finding his place as conductor usurped by the impertinent stranger, left the house in disgust. And O'Keefe said he would never again bring in any composer or dis-composer behind the scenes. One Gilbert Mahon made O'Keefe a present of an air which the former sang, and the latter wrote words to, and sold it to Longman, the music publisher, in the Haymarket. Carter called upon the dramatist a few days afterwards in a rage, told O'Keefe "that Mahon had no right to sing the melody, let alone to give it away, that it was his composition," &c.; and so he raged until O'Keefe commenced singing, "O Nanny," and thus appeased the enraged musician. "Never," says O'Keefe, "was the soothing power of music more apparent." Carter wrote music for some dramatic pieces, and, curious to tell, it was in one of these, entitled The Birth Day, that Master John Braham, afterwards the celebrated tenor, made his first appearance at the age of ten, in the year 1787. He was the composer of many popular songs of that time—"Stand to your guns, my hearts of oak," may be named as one of them. But it appears that poor Tom Carter was improvident and unmanageable, and, that although he had the talent to gain friends, he had not the conduct to keep them. He was in Dublin from 1803 to 1809 to a certainty. Afterwards he seems to be totally unheard of. Had this composer only left the one song, "O, Nanny," behind him, it would be sufficient to hand down his name in musical annals as a most gifted melodist. It is tender, tuneful, and full of that grace which touches the heart.

To be continued.

PAVIA.—Signor Isidoro Rossi's Isabella Orsini has proved successful at the Teatro Fraschini. The composer was called on nineteen times the first night.

ODESSA.—Le Théâtre-Russe nous a offert une des meilleures productions du répertoire-Russe, la nouvelle comédie d'Antropoff. Cette pièce sera jouée de nouveau dimanche prochain et nous recommandons à tout amateur de nouveauté dramatique d'assister à cette représentation, non point parce que cette œuvre est bien écrite, mais aussi parce que l'exécution en est fort bonne. Mlles Lukachevitch et Brianskaja, ainsi que MM. Kisselevsky, Forcati, Agramoff, Gorev et Strugkin ont été très-bien dans cette représentation. Le bénéficiaire, M. Forcati, a été salué par des bravos à son apparition sur la scène. Le Théâtre-Russe fait toujours recette, particulièrement pour les bénéfices.—H. C.

LUIGI ARDITI.

(Communicated.)

Sig. Arditi has been lately sojourning in Venice, where he is a great favourite. The local press always allude to him in the most flattering terms. One paper says:—

"De Ferrari's gay opera, Il Menestrelle was most favourably received. The first honours fell to Signora Cristino, a sympathetic, sprightly artist, full of life and soul, and possessing a true silvery soprano such as is rarely heard. It is superfluous to add that she was overwhelmed with applause, especially in Arditi's waltz 'Estasi,' in which she worked the audience up to a state of enthusiasm, and was recalled several times."

Another journal writes as follows:—

"Yesterday evening, at the Teatro Malibran, between the second and third acts of Pedrotti's Tutti in Maschera, that sympathetic artist, Signora Cristino, sang with her accustomed excellence Sig. Arditi's 'Estasi.' The public applauded her enthusiastically, and also called on the composer, who happened to be in the house."

A third writes thus:—

"Prominent among the artists was Signora Ida Cristino, a pleasing young lady, and a sure and correct artist. She possesses a beautiful, fresh, and extensive voice, which she manages with skill. She was constantly applauded, especially in Arditi's waltz: 'Estasi,' which she introduced and sang with real mastery at the end of the opera."

A fourth remarks:—

"Justly and most warmly applauded was the prima donna, Signora Cristino, who, between the second and third acts, sang the 'Estasi' waltz by the Commendatore Arditi, the famous author of that other most popular melody:—'Sulle labbra, se potessi, dolce un bacio ti darei.'"

"Arditi, who happened to be in the theatre, was obliged to appear upon the stage, in obedience to loud and repeated calls."

More might be quoted; but enough has been said to show that others, besides ourselves, are able to appreciate genuine merit.

A. T. L.

—o—

"Good Words."

Music will some day become a powerful and acknowledged therapeutic. And it is one especially appropriate to this excited age. Half our diseases, some physicians say all our diseases, come from disorder of the nerves. How many ills of the mind precede the ills of the body! Boredom makes more patients than fever, want of interest and excitement, stagnation of the emotional life, or the fatigue of over-wrought emotion lies at the root of half the ill health of our young men and women. Can we doubt the power of music to break up that stagnation? Or, again can we doubt its power to soothe? to recreate an overstrained emotional life, by bending the bow the other way? There are moods of exhausted feeling in which certain kinds of music would act like poison, just as whip and spur which encourage the racer at first, tire him to death at last. There are other kinds of music which soothe, and, if I may use the word, lubricate the worn ways of the nervous centres. You will ask what music is good for that? We reply, judgment and common sense, and, above all, sympathy, affectional and musical sympathy, will partly be your guide, but experience must decide. Let some friend well versed in the divine art sit at the piano, and let the tired one lie on a couch and prescribe for herself or for himself, and then—and—then what comes, must be left to the tact and quick sympathy of the musician. I have known cases where an hour of this treatment did more good than bottlesful of bark or pailsful of globules; but I do not wish to overstate the case. I merely plead for an unrecognized truth, and I point to a new vocation—the vocation of the Musical Healer. How many a girl might turn her at present uncared-for and generally useless musical abilities to this gentle and tender human use! Let her try. At the end of the séance, let her and her patient note the abatement of the headache brought about directly by the counter excitement of a nerve current set up by music. Let her friend admit that she has suffered less during that hour, the mind having been completely called off from the contemplation of a special pain, and the pain meanwhile having passed or abated. There are cases chiefly connected with disorders of the spine, cases of apathy, where music is almost the only thing which seems to stir the torpid nerves and set up a commotion, quickening the heart and flushing the cheek. Then, I say, let music open the shut gate, and let health come in that way, "cœlestis janitor aulæ!"

Musical Doctor.

HANOVER.—Dr Gunz has been appointed an Imperial Chamber Singer.

Digitized by Google

WAIFS.

The new tenor, M. Tournié, who will make his first appearance in England in the French operas at the Gaiety, in the second week in June, is causing considerable excitement at the present moment in France, owing to his exceptional success at the Operahouse of Marseilles. Papers like the Moniteur, Figaro, and Opinion Nationale, speak with their usual freedom about the splendid offers made to him by M. Halanzier, for the Grand Opera at Paris. It is quite true that he has been offered terms equal to any tenor in Europe, but his engagement with M. Coulon is not to be set aside. During June and July he will appear at the Gaiety in Zampa, Fra Diavolo, Haydee, Lara, Le pré aux Clercs, Les Mousquetaires de la Rèine, and other French national operas. —(Communicated.)

In the autumn, Mdme Christine Nilsson has made arrangements for a tour in the Provinces.

M. Capoul returns to the Opéra-Comique.

Julius Stern, of Berlin, is travelling in Italy.

M. Lecocq's new work is entitled Le Pompon.

Signor Salvini's next part at Drury Lane is to be Hamlet.

Miss Enriquez is engaged for the ensuing Norwich Festival.

Mad. Sass has returned to Paris, after her engagement at Lisbon.

M. Ernest Boulanger's new work, Don Macarade, has proved a success.

At Caen, two grand concérts of "Classical Music" are announced, by M. Pasdeloup.

M. Strakosch is about to construct, in Paris, a magnificent building in the style of the Alhambra Palace.

His Majesty the Emperor of Russia has conferred upon M. Wieniawski the cross and the order of St Anne.

The late M. Kreusler will be succeeded as head of the Bureau des Théâtres, at the Prefecture of Police, by M. Naudin.

Among recent arrivals is that of Signor Giuseppe Martucci, a young Italian pianist of repute, and M. Diaz de Soria, the vocalist.

At the Folies Dramatiques, Paris, a new work is underlined, entitled, Le Pompon, libretto by MM. Chivot and Duru, music by Charles Lecocq.

The Arcadian says that the New York Philharmonic Society has degenerated into a sort of school for débutantes, and the sole aim of its directors appears to be to spend as little money as possible.

The chorus singers of the Paris Theatres, determined to found a benefit society for members of the profession, held a meeting on the 21st inst., to settle the rules. The chair was taken by a chorister.

Mdlle Rita being, in consequence of severe indisposition, compelled to rest for some weeks from her professional labours, has been replaced in the character of Girofié-Girofla, at the Criterion Theatre, by Miss Julia Matthews, "creator" of the part in the English version.

M. Lecocq has been condemned to pay 4000 francs damages (£160) to M. Jules Moineaux (his collaborateur in a three-act opera, entitled Don Juan XIV.), and to return the MS., in consequence of his refusal to finish the music, of which he had composed two acts. M. Lecocq is also restrained from using the airs for any other libretto.

Mr Horton C. Allison recently played, at the concert of the St John's College Musical Society, at Cambridge, a selection from the pianoforte works of Handel, G. A. Macfarren, Sterndale Bennett and Chopin, with a canon and fugue from his "Cambridge Concert Studies." Miss Amy M. Aylward sang Bennett's "Dawn, gentle flower," and "Gentle Zephyr."

Miss Emily B. Farmer's new song, "Shall I wear a White Rose?" was sung by Miss Waters, at a recent amateur concert in Nottingham. The Guardian says:—"The new song, 'Shall I wear a White Rose?' by Miss Emily B. Farmer, was listened to with great interest. The melody, very pretty, at once chambers itself in the memory, and we have no doubt will become a favourite in Nottingham and elsewhere. Miss Waters sang it excellently, and must share with the composer the honours of the applause with which it was greeted."

Two accidents happened last week at the Grand Opera, Paris. The first was caused by the breaking of glass representing the water over which Madlle Sangelli glides, as she returns to her enchanted grotto in La Source. Thanks to her aerial feet, she escaped unhurt, and danced more marvellously than ever, the only sufferer being M. Halanzier, who will have to pay 500 or 1000 francs to repair the damage. The second accident was of a graver description. As Madlle de Reszké, M. Halanzier's new Ophelia, was returning from the races, the horses of her carriage took fright. Thanks to her brother's presence of mind, Madlle Reszké escaped with only a few contusions. Marshal MacMahon, who happened to be driving past at the moment, ordered his coachman to stop, and enquired whether the young lady had sustained any hurt. In the evening, he sent an orderly officer to ask how she was going on, and congratulate her on having got off so easily.

Breslau.—The members of the Singacademie, under the direction of Herr Julius Schäffer, recently celebrated the fifteenth anniversary of that institution. After Count von Arnim had presented the above-named gentleman, in the name of the Emperor, with the Order of the Red Eagle, fourth class, after Herr Becker had offered him a magnificent silver plateau for the table as a mark of respect and esteem from the members of the institution generally, and after the ladies had added an extra tribute of their own in the shape of a gold pocket chronometer, with chain, and some cunningly worked tapestry, the proceedings commenced in the grand hall of the University with the chorale: "Lobet den Herrn, den mächtigen König." This was followed by a long and interesting lecture by Dr Häser, on the development of vocal music, and then came Mendelssohn's motet: "Zauchset dem Herrn." In the evening there was a fine performance of Handel's oratorio of Samson, the principal vocalists being Mad. Joachim and Herr Henschel. The chorus included 350 voices. On the following day, there was a grand musical Soirée in the new exchange.

Advertisements.

THE VOICE & SINGING
BY
ADOLFO FERRARI.
THE FORMATION AND CULTIVATION OF THE VOICE FOR SINGING
Price 12s.

London: Duncan Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"The remarkable qualities of this book are the author's freedom from conventional trammels, the strong sense of his opinions, and the novelty yet evident soundness of his precepts; his work has consequently come into general use as a manual of vocal instruction."—Daily News.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE,
For invigorating and enriching the voice, and removing affections of the throat.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE is universally acknowledged to be the most valuable remedy for sore throat, hoarseness and relaxed throat. It should always be taken before singing or reciting, as it strengthens the vocal organs. It is most extensively prescribed by the faculty for the throat and voice. Dr Lewis of Basingstoke says he finds them most efficacious, and in Dr Copland's Dictionary of Practical Medicine (Longman & Co.), they are strongly recommended at pages 872 and 1492. They are used by all the greatest vocalists and orators in Europe, and have been established over a quarter of a century. Testimonials from Patti, Grisi, Lablache, Santley, &c. Sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d. by all Chemists throughout the United Kingdom and the Colonies.

MDLLE ZARE THALBERG.

LE CARNEVAL DE VENISE, with Variations, by Sir Julius Benedict, as sung by Mdlle Zare Thalberg, at the Floral Hall Concerts, is published—price 4s.—by Duncan Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

GRAND MARCH (Bridal or Processional), for the Pianoforte or Organ. Composed by W. F. Taylor. Price 3s. London: Duncan Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

THE LARK'S SONG. The Poetry by Frederick Enoch. The Music by Henry Smart. Price 3s. London: Duncan Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

O CARE TENEBRE. Duetto. Composed by J. P. Goldberg. Price 4s. London: Duncan Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

GUGLIELMO'S LAST BALLAD.

"WERT THOU WITH ME."

The Words by GEORGE LINLEY.

The Music by P. D. GUGLIELMO.

Price 4s.

London: Duncan Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"CUPID'S APPEAL,"

BALLAD,

And the Sequel,

"MARRIAGE BELLS,"

SONG.

Price 3s. each.

London: Duncan Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Digitized by Google

ARTHUR SULLIVAN'S CELEBRATED SONGS.

"LITTLE MAID OF ARCADEE."
Price FOUR SHILLINGS.

"GUINEVERE."
Price FOUR SHILLINGS.

"THE SAILOR'S GRAVE."
Price FOUR SHILLINGS.

"O FAIR DOVE, O FOND DOVE."
Price FOUR SHILLINGS.

"WHAT DOES LITTLE BIRDIE SAY?"
Price FOUR SHILLINGS.

"AH! COUNTY GUY."
Price FOUR SHILLINGS.

LONDON:
ASHDOWN & PARRY,
HANOVER SQUARE.

Digitized by Google

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

PRODUCTION OF WAGNER'S 'LOHENGRIN.'

The Books of Airs (in Two Books), arranged for Pianoforte, with ad. lib. accompaniments for Flute, Violin, and Violoncello, by

W. HUTCHINS CALLCOTT

PRICE.

Solos	...	...	5*s. each.*
Duets	...	...	6*s.* ,,
Accompaniments	...	...	1*s.* ,,

LONDON:
HUTCHINGS & ROMER,
9, Conduit Street, Regent Street, W.

ARTHUR SULLIVAN'S NEW SONG,

"THOU ART WEARY."

WORDS BY ADELAIDE PROCTOR.

MUSIC BY ARTHUR SULLIVAN.

SUNG BY

Miss ANTOINETTE STERLING

AT THE

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

"The singer was Miss Antoinette Sterling, who, always heartily admired in those German ballads, for which she exhibits so marked a sympathy, introduced in a group four of Schumann's most graceful contributions to the Lieder repertory, and, later in the evening, a new song by Mr Arthur Sullivan, 'Thou art weary' (set to words by Adelaide Proctor)—one of the most charming recent emanations from the pen of our gifted compatriot."—The Times, Nov. 10.

"Miss Sterling was the vocalist, and sang, in addition to selections from Schumann, a new song by Arthur Sullivan, entitled, 'Thou art weary,' which is one of the most beautiful and thoughtful effusions of the composer's graceful music."—Daily Telegraph, Nov. 12.

"Miss Antoinette Sterling was the vocalist. In the second part she introduced a new song by Mr Sullivan, an admirable setting for a contralto voice of some very touching lines by the late Miss Adelaide Proctor, addressed by a poor mother to her starving child, the burden being—

'Sleep, my darling, thou art weary;
God is good, but life is dreary.'

The song exactly suited Miss Sterling's voice and style, and it will assuredly become as great a favourite as 'Will he come,' to which it is a worthy pendant, and the words of which are also by Miss Proctor."—Standard, Nov. 12.

"Miss Antoinette Sterling repeated Mr Sullivan's new song, 'Thou art weary, a second hearing of which has confirmed our good opinion of it."—Standard, Nov. 16.

"At the concert on Monday, Miss Sterling had introduced a series of charming Lieder by Schumann, and a new song by Mr Arthur Sullivan, 'Sleep, my darling, thou art weary,' an admirable setting of Miss Proctor's poem, 'Hush, I cannot bear to see thee,' which, like everything Miss Proctor wrote, was well adapted for, and, in fact, seemed to invite musical treatment. Her verses have inspired Mr Sullivan with a genuine melody, of which the refrain is particularly remarkable; and the song, both at Monday's and Saturday's concert, pleased so much that Miss Sterling was called upon to repeat it."—Pall Mall Gazette, Nov. 17.

"Miss Sterling sang discreetly and sympathetically four of Schumann's 'Dichterliebe' (Nos. 1, 2, 7, and 8); but came off still better in a new song by Mr A. Sullivan, who has set words by Adelaide Proctor, 'Thou art weary,' the dying consolation of a starved mother to her child, the refrain of which is—

'Sleep, my darling, thou art weary;
God is good, but life is dreary.'

It is a painful theme; but the composer has treated it with such pathos that the air tells powerfully."—Athenæum, Nov. 14.

"The vocalist was Miss Sterling, who sang four songs by Schumann (Nos. 1, 2, 7, and 8 of the 'Dichterliebe'), and a new song, entitled 'Thou art weary,' written by Miss Adelaide Proctor. The words are good, and have been fitted to charming and expressive music by Mr Arthur Sullivan, who has added a pianoforte accompaniment worthy his high reputation, and worth listening to for its own sake."—Observer, Nov. 15.

Published in the keys of D minor and F minor, Price 4s.

ARTHUR SULLIVAN'S NEW SONG,

"TENDER AND TRUE,"

SUNG BY

MISS EDITH WYNNE

AT THE

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS, ST JAMES'S HALL.

"The vocalist was Miss Edith Wynne, who sang a new song, 'Tender and True,' by Arthur Sullivan, the beauty of which, aided by a most tasteful rendering, elicited an encore."—Daily Telegraph, January 13.

"Mr Sullivan's graceful song—a novelty—was rendered by Miss Edith Wynne with much refined expression; and the applause which followed necessitated its entire repetition."—Daily News, January 13.

"A very expressive new song, by Mr A. Sullivan, 'Tender and True,' was sung with such effect by Miss Edith Wynne that it had to be repeated."—Illustrated London News, January 16.

"Miss Edith Wynne, who gave, in her own genuine and expressive manner, a graceful new song, 'Tender and True,' by Mr Arthur Sullivan, which was encored, and repeated."—Graphic, January 16.

Published in the keys of E flat and F, Price 4s.

CHAPPELL & CO., 50 NEW BOND ST.

Digitized by Google

Printed by HENDERSON, RAIT, AND FENTON, at No. 69, Marylebone Lane, Oxford Street, in the Parish of Marylebone, in the County of Middlesex.
Published by WILLIAM DUNCAN DAVISON, at the Office, 244, Regent Street, Saturday, May 29, 1875.

The Musical World.

(REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.)

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST, 20s. PER ANNUM,
Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to DUNCAN DAVISON & CO., 244, Regent Street, London, W.

VOL. 53—No. 23. SATURDAY, JUNE 5, 1875. PRICE { 4d. Unstamped. 5d. Stamped.

HER MAJESTY'S OPERA, THEATRE ROYAL, DRURY LANE.

Mdlle Tietjens—Mdme Trebelli-Bettini.

THIS EVENING (SATURDAY), June 5th, will be performed (for the first time this season) ROSSINI'S Opera, "SEMIRAMIDE." Arsace, Mdme Trebelli-Bettini; Assur, Signor Rota; Oroe, Herr Behrens; Idreno, Signor Rinaldini; L'Ombra, Signor Costa; and Semiramide, Mdlle Tietjens. Director of the Music and Conductor—Sir Michael Costa.

Mdme Christine Nilsson.—Extra Night.

MONDAY next, June 7, "FAUST." Faust, M. Capoul; Mephistophiles, Signor Rota; Valentino, Signor de Reschi; Siebel, Mdme Trebelli-Bettini; Marta, Mdme Demeric-Lablache; and Margherita, Mdme Christine Nilsson.

Mdlle Elena Varesi.

TUESDAY next, June 8, "LA SONNAMBULA." Elvino, Signor Fancelli; Il Conte Rodolfo, Signor Castelmary; and Amina, Mdlle Elena Varesi.

Mdlle Tietjens.—Extra Night.

THURSDAY next, June 10, "SEMIRAMIDE."
SATURDAY, June 12, production of "LOHENGRIN."
Doors open at Eight o'clock. Commence at Half-past Eight. Amphitheatre stalls, 7s. and 5s.; amphitheatre, 2s. Box-office open daily from Ten till Five, under the direction of Mr Bailey.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—SUMMER CONCERT.—This Day (SATURDAY). The Programme will include: Overture, A Midsummer Night's Dream (Mendelssohn); Concerto for Violin, 1st Movement (Beethoven); Symphony in E flat (Mozart); Paraphrase de Concert, arranged for violin by A. Wilhelmj (Chopin); Overture, Semiramide (Rossini). Vocalists—Madame Sinico-Campobello, Madame Patey, Signor Campobello, and Mr Sims Reeves. Violin—Herr Wilhelmj. Conductor—Mr MANNS. Numbered Stalls, Half-a-Crown.

ALEXANDRA PALACE.

Arrangements have been made for a Series of GRAND ITALIAN CONCERTS,
In which the principal Artists of the
ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA
and
HER MAJESTY'S OPERA
will take part.
The CONCERTS will take place on
SATURDAY, JUNE 12TH, HER MAJESTY'S OPERA.
SATURDAY, JUNE 19TH, ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.
SATURDAY, JUNE 26TH, HER MAJESTY'S OPERA.
THURSDAY, JULY 8TH, ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.
The GUINEA SEASON TICKET will admit to the Palace on the above days. It includes Membership of the ALEXANDRA PALACE ART UNION, and can be had of all Agents.

THE "TALISMAN" CHORUSES.

(IN BALFE'S GRAND OPERA.)

No. 1. Chorus of Arabs.
„ 2. Salve Regina (Trio and Chorus).
„ 3. Draw Your Swords (Concerted Morceau).
„ 4. Hours and Hours Roll Slowly on (Chorus of Ladies).
„ 5. Thy Kinswoman Edith (Concerted Morceau).
„ 6. Farewell, my Beloved Edith (Finale to Act 2nd).
„ 7. A Song to Merrie England.
(Part Song—Soprano, Tenor, Alto, and Bass.)
„ 8. Glorious England (Finale).

No collection of Choruses equal in merit to the above has been published for years. The great success with which the "TALISMAN" has been received is sufficient evidence of the beauty of the entire Opera, in which the Choruses form, of course, one of the most effective features.

London: DUFF & STEWART, 147, Oxford Street.

"IL TALISMANO."

MDME CHRISTINE NILSSON will sing the admired Duet, "KEEP THE RING" ("Quest' annel"), from BALFE'S Grand Opera, "IL TALISMANO" (with Signor CAMPANINI), at the Italian Opera Concert, at the Royal Albert Hall, This Day.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA, COVENT GARDEN.

THIS EVENING (SATURDAY), June 5th, will be performed "LOHENGRIN." Principal characters by Mdlles Albani and D'Angeri; MM. Maurel, Capponi, Seidemann, Nicolini, &c.
FOURTH FLORAL HALL CONCERT, This Day (SATURDAY).
MONDAY next, June 7, "LA TRAVIATA." Principal characters by Mdme Adelina Patti; MM. Graziani, De Sanctis, &c.
TUESDAY next, June 8, "LE NOZZE DI FIGARO." Principal characters by Mdlles Albani, Thalberg, and Bianchi; MM. Graziani, Ciampi, Pavani, Faure, &c.
WEDNESDAY next, June 9, "LA FIGLIA DEL REGGIMENTO." Principal characters by Mdlle Marimon; MM. Ciampi, Piazza, &c.
THURSDAY next, June 10, "LOHENGRIN." Principal characters by Mdlles Albani and D'Angeri; MM. Maurel, Capponi, Seidemann, Nicolini, &c.
FRIDAY next, June 11, "IL FLAUTO MAGICO" (last time this season). Principal characters by Mdlles Marimon, D'Angeri, and Smeroschi; MM. Maurel, Bagagiolo, Pavani, &c.
Conductors—Signori Vianesi and Bevignani.
The Opera commences at Half-past Eight.
The Box Office, under the portico of the Theatre, is open from Ten to Five. Boxes from £2 12s. 6d. to £6s. 6s.; stalls, £1 1s.; pit tickets, 7s.; amphitheatre stalls, 10s. 6d. and 5s.; amphitheatre, 2s. 6d.

"LE CARNAVAL DE VENISE."

MDLLE MARIMON will sing BENEDICT'S Variations on "LE CARNAVAL DE VENISE," at the Floral Hall Concert, This Day.

MONDAY NEXT.

MISS LILLIE ALBRECHT has the honour to announce that her SECOND MATINEE MUSICALE will (by kind permission) take place at 59, Lowndes Square, Belgravia, on MONDAY, June 7th, at 3·30, on which occasion she will play works by the following Masters: Ballade in G minor, Op. 23, and Tarentelle in A flat, Op. 43 (Chopin); Fugue Allegro con fuoco in F minor, No. 5 (Mendelssohn); Etude, "Si oiseau j'étais" (Henselt); Andante in D flat, Op. 32, and Fantasia (Masaniello) (Thalberg); Grand Octave Galop de Concert (Ketterer). Miss Lillie Albrecht will be assisted by Mdlles J. Sherrington and Enriques, and Signor Monari-Rocca. Conductor—Mr CHARLES E. STEPHENS. Tickets, Half-a-Guinea; family tickets (to admit three), One Guinea; to be had at Messrs Cramer, 201, and Duncan Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street; or of Miss LILLIE ALBRECHT, 38, Oakley Square, N.W.

SIGNOR ARDITI

BEGS TO ANNOUNCE THAT HIS

ANNUAL GRAND MORNING CONCERT

WILL TAKE PLACE AT

ST. GEORGE'S HALL, LANGHAM PLACE,

ON

MONDAY MORNING, JUNE 14th.

Full particulars will shortly be announced.

WESTMINSTER HOSPITAL.

Mdme CHRISTINE NILSSON

HAS THE HONOUR TO ANNOUNCE

A GRAND MORNING CONCERT,

UNDER THE IMMEDIATE PATRONAGE OF

HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE QUEEN,
THEIR ROYAL HIGHNESSES THE DUKE AND DUCHESS OF EDINBURGH,
H.R.H. PRINCESS CHRISTIAN OF SCHLESWIG-HOLSTEIN,
H.R.H. PRINCESS LOUISE (MARCHIONESS OF LORNE),
H.R.H. THE DUCHESS OF TECK.

IN AID OF THE FUNDS REQUIRED TO OBTAIN A

PERMANENT SITE

FOR THE

WESTMINSTER TRAINING SCHOOL & HOME FOR NURSES,

ON

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 23RD, AT ST. JAMES'S HALL.

Digitized by Google

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY. Conductor—Mr W. G. CUSINS. SIXTH CONCERT, at ST JAMES'S HALL, MONDAY, June 7th, Eight o'clock. Festival Overture (Benedict); Concerto for pianoforte, Op. 185 (Raff). Pianoforte—Mr Alfred Jaell (his first appearance this season). Part II.: Eroica Symphony, No. 3 (Beethoven): Overture, Der Freischutz (Weber). Vocalists—Mdlle Thekla Friedländer and Mr Santley. Stalls, sofa or balcony, 10s. 6d.; balcony, reserved, 7s. Tickets, 5s. and 2s. 6d. Stanley Lucas, Weber & Co., 84, New Bond Street, W.; usual Agents; Austin's Ticket Office, St James's Hall.

MR KUHE'S GRAND ANNUAL MORNING CONCERT, at the FLORAL HALL, MONDAY, June 14. Mdme Adelina Patti and Mdlle Albani; Mdlles Zaré Thalberg, Marimon, Scalchi, and Smeroschi; MM. Nicolini, Pavani, Graziani, Maurel, Bagagiolo, and Capponi. Violin—Herr Wilhelmj. Violoncello—M. Paque. Pianoforte—Mr Kuhe. Conductors—MM. Vianesi, Bevignani, W. Ganz, and Sir Julius Benedict. Stalls, One Guinea; reserved seats, 10s. 6d.; balcony reserved seats, 7s. 6d. and 5s.; gallery, 2s. 6d. Mr KUHE'S address—6, Upper Westbourne Terrace, W.

MDME SAINTON-DOLBY'S VOCAL ACADEMY.—The FIRST CONCERT will take place at WILLIS'S ROOMS, St James's, on TUESDAY, June 22nd, at Three o'clock, when the following Students will appear: Misses Wigan, Vernon, Courtney, Cunningham, Wallace, and Meenan; assisted by Miss Eva Leslie (former pupil), Mr Valentine Fabrini, Signor Federici, Mrs Beesley (pianoforte), M. Sainton (violin), Mr Thouless and Signor Visetti (accompanists). Particulars of the Concert and of the Vocal Academy can be obtained of Mdme Sainton-Dolby, personally, on Tuesdays, between 3 and 4 o'clock, at her residence, 71, Gloucester Place, Hyde Park. Reserved seats, 7s.; unreserved seats, 5s.; may be obtained of Messrs Stanley Lucas, Weber & Co., 84, New Bond Street; of Messrs Chappell, 50, Old Bond Street; and of Mdme SAINTON-DOLBY, as above.

MESSRS J. LUDWIG and H. DAUBERT'S CLASSICAL CHAMBER CONCERTS, LANGHAM HALL, 43, Great Portland Street. The TWO LAST CONCERTS, June 9th and 23rd, at Half-past Eight. Programme for June the 9th: Sonata in A minor for pianoforte and violin (Schumann); Lieder (Schubert and Reinecke); Solo, violoncello, "Abenlied" (Schumann); Soli, pianoforte (a) Prelude and Fugue (Bach), (b) Gavotte in E minor (Agnes Zimmermann); Lieder (Clara Schumann and Brahms); String Quartet in C major, Op. 59. Executants—Miss Agnes Zimmermann; Messrs Josef Ludwig, Carl Jung, J. Zerbini, and Hugo Daubert. Vocalist—Mdlle Thekla Friedländer. Conductor—Mr J. ZERBINI. Stalls, 7s.; balcony, front seats, 3s.; admission, One Shilling; to be had of Chappell & Co.; Lucas, Weber & Co.; C. E. Flavell, 26, North Audley Street; and Siegle, 110, Leadenhall Street, City.

MR HENRY LESLIE'S CHOIR, June 11.—LAST SUBSCRIPTION CONCERT, FRIDAY Evening next, June 11, ST JAMES'S HALL, Eight o'clock. Soloists—Mr Sims Reeves and Mr Santley. Tickets, 6s., 3s., 2s., 1s.; at Austin's office; and all Music Publishers.

MR HENRY LESLIE'S CHOIR, FRIDAY next, June 11. In addition to the programme already announced, Mr SIMS REEVES will sing a Duet with Miss EVA LESLIE.

MISS PURDY'S MATINÉE MUSICALE will take place (by kind permission) at 70, Queen's Gate, South Kensington, on MONDAY, June 7th, commencing at Three o'clock. Artists—Mdlle Bartkowska, Mdlle Carnielli, Miss Purdy, Mr Bentham, Mr Trelawny Cobham, Signor Federici, Mr Maybrick. Pianoforte—Signor Tito Mattei. Violin—Mdlle Castellan. Conductors—Signor Vera, Signor Unia, and Signor Pinsuti. Tickets, Half-a-Guinea each; to be had of Miss PURDY, 35, Victoria Road, Kensington, W.

"O CARE TENEBRE."

THE MISSES ALLITSEN will sing GOLDBERG'S new Duet, "O CARE TENEBRE," on the 29th June, at Mdme Sievers' Concert.

WANTED, an ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER, for Renshaw Street Chapel. To begin duties on the first Sunday in August. Salary, £50 per annum. Address, stating qualifications, and giving Testimonials—Mr CHARLES W. JONES, 6, Childwall Road, Wavertree.

REMOVAL.

MONSIEUR ALEXANDRE BILLET begs to announce his REMOVAL from Keppel Street to No. 50, Albany Street, Regent's Park.

MISS HELEN RICE (Pupil of LANSDOWNE COTTELL) will make her First Appearance this Season at Mr Sidney Waymouth's Concert, June 5th, at Eight, at Store Street Hall, Bedford Square.

Just Published, Eighth Edition, 12mo, cloth (316 pages), price 2s. 6d., postage 3d.

MUSIC, A RUDIMENTARY AND PRACTICAL TREATISE ON. With numerous Examples. By CHARLES CHILD SPENCER.

 Also, by the same Author, New Edition, just published, 12mo, cloth (144 pages), price 1s. 6d., postage 2d.

THE PIANOFORTE, THE RUDIMENTS OF THE ART OF PLAYING. Written and selected from the best Masters. London: LOCKWOOD & Co., 7, Stationers' Hall Court, E.C.

BRIGHTON CONCERT AGENTS,
PIANOFORTE AND MUSICSELLERS,
LYON & HALL,
WARWICK MANSION.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Under the immediate Patronage of
Her Most Gracious Majesty the QUEEN.
His Royal Highness the Prince of WALES.
Her Royal Highness the Princess of WALES.
His Royal Highness the Duke of EDINBURGH.
Her Royal Highness the Princess CHRISTIAN.
His Royal Highness the Duke of CAMBRIDGE.
Her Royal Highness the Duchess of TECK.
His Serene Highness the Duke of TECK.
and
His Royal Highness the Prince CHRISTIAN.

President—The Right Hon. The Earl of DUDLEY.

Principal—Professor MACFARREN, Mus. D. Cantab.

The next PUBLIC REHEARSAL, open to Subscribers, Members, and Associates, will take place at ST JAMES'S HALL, on THURSDAY Morning, the 10th inst., commencing at Two.

The Programme will include ARTHUR SULLIVAN'S Sacred Cantata, "THE PRODIGAL SON," G. A. MACFARREN'S "FESTIVAL" OVERTURE, and other works of interest. Conductor—Mr WALTER MACFARREN.

Admission, One Shilling. Tickets, 2s. 6d. and 5s.; to be obtained at the Institution; and at St James's Hall.

By Order, JOHN GILL, Secretary.

Royal Academy of Music,
4, Tenterden Street, Hanover Square.

THE GUITAR.—MDME SIDNEY PRATTEN, Teacher of this elegant Instrument, is in Town for the Season. For LESSONS and Private CONCERTS, address to her residence, 22A, Dorset Street, Portman Square, W.

MR RICCARDI (the new Bass), who made so successful a debut at St James's Hall, March 12th, begs to announce his Return to London for the Season. All applications for ENGAGEMENTS to be addressed, Care of DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

MONSIEUR DIAZ DE SORIA begs to announce his arrival in London for the Season, and that he can accept ENGAGEMENTS for Concerts, Soirées, &c. Address, 42, Great Portland Street, W.

NEW COMPOSITIONS BY WILHELM SCHULTHES.

"COR JESU, SALUS IN TE SPERANTIUM." Dedicated to His Holiness Pope Pius the Ninth, Motett for Three Equal Voices (Soli and Chorus), with Organ Accompaniment (and Harp ad lib.)—5s. The same arranged for a Choir of Mixed Voices (S.A.T.B.), with Organ Accompaniment—4s. Also in an Abridged Arrangement for Congregational Use, with Organ Accompaniment—3d. net.

"VENI DOMINE," Motett for Four Equal Voices (Soli and Chorus), with Organ Accompaniment (and Harp ad lib.); and "ELEVATION," Solo for Organ and Harp—4s. A Vocal Arrangement of the Motett for a Choir of Mixed Voices (S.A.T.B.)—1s.

"GUIRLANDES DE MAI." Hymns to B.V.M. (French and English Words), with Organ Accompaniment, Three Parts—3s. each; post free, 19 stamps.

"TWELVE LATIN HYMNS," for Vespers, Complin, &c., with Organ Accompaniment—2s. net. NOVELLO, EWER & Co., 1, Berners Street.

LOUIS DIEHL'S NEW SONGS.

"Dear England." Sung by Signor Foli. 3s.
"True Hearts." Written by the Rev. E. D. JACKSON. 3s.
"Mother, the Tots and Me." Words by REA. 3s.

HENRY SMART'S NEW SONGS.

"Victoria." In G and B. 3s. each.
"The Old Flag of England." In C and E. 3s. each.
"Bells." Words by Miss BURNSIDE. 3s.
"The Face at the Window." 3s.
"The Primrose Dell." 3s.

All post free at half-price in stamps.

"Victoria," as a Part Song, post free, four stamps.

London: Sole Publishers, ROBERT COCKS & Co., New Burlington Street; and of all Musicsellers.

"SHALL I WEAR A WHITE ROSE?"

BALLAD.

Words by H. SAVILLE CLARKE.

Music by EMILY BARDSLEY FARMER.

Nett, 2s.

JOSEPH WILLIAMS, Berners Street, and Cheapside, E.C.

Just Published.

"THE FAIREST FLOWER WILL PERISH."

SONG.

The Words by Mrs HYPPOLITE VAN LANDEGHEM.

The Music by HYPPOLITE VAN LANDEGHEM.

Price 3s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Digitized by Google

MUSIC PAST AND PRESENT IN IRELAND.

(Continued from page 367.)

We now come to the musician who adorned the art by his genius during the latter portion of the past century and the first quarter of the present—John Andrew Stevenson. This man was born with such happy musical instincts that he could just as much suppress them as the lark could his song in the lovely springtime. Stevenson did not seem to require study. The talent he possessed so abundantly did not appear to require cultivation. Music appeared to flow spontaneously from him—he could not tell why or wherefore; and the only labour he had was setting it down with his pen. Hence he has been dubbed by many learned—but not inspired—in the art, a feeble and uninformed musician. True, Stevenson was not a great contrapuntist, though some of his works—instance "Buds of Roses"—might be held up as examples for the student. He did not glory in fugues, neither did he delight in those continuous modulations nor extraneous harmonies which young Germany at the present worships. The theory of sounds thus learnt will make a man of intelligence write suitable pieces for harp or horn, voices or band, wherein the notes will be put against each other, and the phrasing will be correct and according to grammatical construction. But the mens divinior will be wanting, and all be a "sounding brass and tinkling cymbal." A man cannot be made a poet by a knowledge of words, neither will the art of distinguishing various shades of colour make him a painter; but, above all, the study of sounds, and the capacities of voices and instruments, will not make a man a musician—a musician in the right sense of the word, one entrusted by the Creator with the magic language of feeling—utterances which appear to have had their origin in heaven, and are wafted back to the footstool of the Creator in tones of penitence or harmonious praise. We have always deemed Stevenson's Church compositions his best and most perfect efforts. In these the peculiar tenderness and devotional feeling of the melody, the appropriate setting of the sacred text, whether prayerful or jubilant, cannot be over estimated, while the whole has a spontaneity of expression which gives them an air of inspiration. What can be more touchingly lovely than the solo, "I laid me down and slept, and rose up again, for the Lord sustaineth me," or more prayerful than the splendid solo, "The snares of death." The latter will bear comparison with the best bass or baritone soli of Handel, Haydn, Mozart, or Mendelssohn. The "Rejoice in the Lord" is full of tempered brilliancy, and "O Lord our Governor" unsurpassed for skill of design and beauty of construction. The recitative, "Lord, what is man that Thou art mindful of him," and the solo following, "Thou mad'st him lower than the angels," are noble utterances; while the closing chorus, with its delicious harmonies and antiphonal responses, is one of the most fervent specimens of ecclesiastical compositions extant. He also wrote several Church services, two in C, and others in D, E natural, F, and G. There were selections from an oratorio of his called the "Thanksgiving," given at the Festival held here in 1831. These were distinguished by their tuneful brightness; but the oratorio, as a whole, we believe, has never been performed. The first meeting of Stevenson and Moore was in Marsh's Library, where the poet used to read. They were introduced to each other by the assistant librarian, the Rev. Dr Cradock. It was about this time that Moore had completed his "Anacreon." The latter met Stevenson one day coming out of Mr Ferns' (afterwards Sir John Ferns) house at the corner of Mitre Alley. Ferns was then verger of St Patrick's. He told him he wished to read to him some of the translations before publication. "With all my heart, my dear boy," said Stevenson, "but it must be after dinner. So if you and Ferns will dine with me, you shall spout your verses." The invitation was accepted. The young poet—then only eighteen—recited his poems, to the delight of his hearers. Ferns asked Moore's permission to show the translation to the Speaker of the Irish House of Commons, Mr Leslie Foster, who was an accomplished scholar. Stevenson afterwards said—"Mr Foster, sir, pronounced my friend's work to be one of the most brilliant compositions he ever read, and, with such an opinion on its merits, it is scarcely to be wondered at that I never lost sight of Moore, in the hope of getting him to write poetry for some of my music." There is one anecdote of the musician that manifests the precociousness of his genius, which we shall relate ere we speak further of his intimacy with the poet. The Amateur Music Club having offered a prize for the best composition of a new glee, many were sent in under feigned signatures. There were fourteen selected from the mass as possessing various degrees of merit. But what was the surprise of the judges, on opening the envelopes containing the names of the composers, to find they were all written by one young man—John Andrew Stevenson. When very young, Trinity College conferred the degree of Music Doctor, March 1791, upon him. He was afterwards knighted by the Earl of Hardwicke, the then Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, at the Irish Harmonic Club, May, 1803, on the occasion of the first performance of his splendid trio and chorus "Give me the harp of epic song," to Moore's words from "Anacreon." This honourable distinction being conferred upon him caused a boiling over of envy in some bosoms. One viper spat his venom in a lampoon of several verses from which we will only quote the first two lines—

> "We all of us know there's a knight of the shire,
> But who ever heard of a knight of the choir."

Soon after this Sir John Stevenson found Moore reading in Marsh's Library, and said to him, "We were talking of your translation of "Anacreon" the other night, and So-and-so said 'The harp of epic song' was nonsense! How am I to answer him, Moore?" The poet bounded from his chair, paced up and down the room, exclaiming with much energy, "Tell him he's a fool, tell him he's a fool." Ere we enter upon the period of the arrangement of the famous "Melodies," we shall just state that Moore, who was little of a musician, although he could accompany himself with much accuracy when singing his own songs, must have derived great benefit from the assistance of Stevenson in the arrangements of his first and best compositions. These songs must have aided the poet greatly in the beginning of his career, and it is almost certain that he was assisted in the accompaniments and form by the musician. Moore's sister Kate, afterwards Mrs Scully, was a pupil of Stevenson's. "Come tell me, says Rosa," "Mary I believed thee true," "Will you come to the bower," "When time, who steals our years away," and the pretty simply trio, "Oh, lady fair," bear marks of a more mature hand than that of the young poet. Then there is not a shadow of doubt that the Irish Melodies originated in Stevenson proposing to Moore the task of adapting words to these beautiful tunes. Well it is for the artistic world that the poet acted upon the suggestion. To it we owe our possession of the most beautiful lyrics which ever sprang from the soul of inspiration. Tender, glad, loving, jocund, or sad, such a series of songs was never given to the world before. It was a difficult task to fit such a variety of tunes in such various rhythms to words; but to fit them with such words—where each song is a polished poem, set to the original air in its purity—borders upon the marvellous. Though Sir John's symphonies and accompaniments to these melodies frequently leave themselves open to adverse criticism, yet, since the copyright expired of the first seven numbers, though fresh arrangements have been essayed by musicians learned in the art, strange to say, none have suited the peculiar structure of the airs and aided the singer so much in the recital of the lovely words as the originals of Sir John Stevenson. Stevenson's learning as a musician was scanty. He knew very little of what others had done. With the exception of writers for the Cathedrals, and a slight acquaintance with some of the compositions of Handel and Haydn, he knew but little. Rossini he did not seem to understand, for he hated him and preferred Auber. In our next we shall give a sketch of the life of this gifted Irishman, together with some anecdotes showing forth his eccentricities. We shall also have to remark further upon the melodies and secular works of the composer.

(To be continued.)

VENICE.—The great attraction at the Fenice during the summer season will be Aida. It is said that Mdlle D'Angeri will impersonate the heroine, while Mdlle Sanz will probably appear as Amneris. M. Marin will be the tenor; and Sig. Cotogni, or M. Maurel, the baritone.

FLORENCE.—Sig. Caiani's new four act-opera, Velléda, has been well received at the Teatro Alfieri.—The Teatro Principe Humberto narrowly escaped being destroyed by fire a short time since. Thanks, however, to an equestrian company performing there, who worked an engine till the firemen arrived, the flames were got under without great damage.—The Orchestral Society of this City have elected the Cavalieri Bassini and Faccio honorary members, presenting each with a silver medal, in recognition of efforts in the cause of art.

Digitized by Google

CRYSTAL PALACE SUMMER CONCERTS.

(From an Occasional Contributor.)

Whoever originated the supplanting of the former summer butterfly-fare called Opera Concerts, by a continuation of those artistic banquets, known almost to the world of amateurs, as the "Crystal Palace Saturday Concerts," conferred a benefit upon musical London deserving of hearty recognition. Why the advent of summer, when our more joyous externals elicit an expansion of spirit so favourable to the enjoyment of art-life, should have been the signal for the suppression of great instrumental and vocal works, and the introduction of mutilated morsels of stage music that are mere platforms for the gymnastics of fashionable singers, is a mystery. Why the patient and devoted amateur, who has braved the autumn rain, the winter snow, the spring east wind, to obtain his weekly meal of symphony, concerto, and overture, should be ignored for the blasé fashionable, too shrivelled by surfeit to nourish even a sensation of good honest bore, was a matter for inquiry. The solution of the problem having been rendered in the best possible way, by an extension of the usual winter programmes, no one has any further right to complain. Whether the conclusion has been arrived at out of deference to the demands of the faithful followers of Art who support the winter concerts, or from an idea that there is an improvement in the taste of the loungers who belong solely to the "season," signifies not, so long as the result is obtained, and Beethoven, with his satellites, instead of being, as formerly, dethroned each summer to give place to operatic anarchy, reigns monarch for all time.

That the ninth, or Choral Symphony (commented upon with such learned eloquence by "G." in the concert-pamphlet) should have been chosen as the chief attraction of the second summer programme may be accepted as a token of the steady increase of the popular taste for legitimate art. Although blossoming over with melodic fragments simple enough to gratify the least educated ear almost to the diversion of the attention from the roots and branches of the massive construction beneath, it is perhaps the most loftily ponderous of the wonderful nine. Even cursorily to scan its marvellous beauties, from first to last, requires a firm and constant effort of the mind, and it may be acknowledged impossible at each hearing to give due appreciation to each successive movement. Therefore the necessity of the frequent production of this Symphony by those societies who have assumed the great work of the education of national taste. The first few hearings can but make the listener feel as a pigmy trying to estimate the proportions of a giant. A despair will creep upon him that his little mental eyes bid fair never to view them as they really are. But familiarity bridges over the gulf which divides our capacities from this most extraordinary creation. When the attention need no longer be on the alert to comprehend the value of the materials, it is freer to follow their usage by the master's science, and by degrees one may arrive at the happy condition when listening is an enjoyment rather than an intense strain of every mental faculty.

To render even ordinary justice to the Choral Symphony is a responsible task for conductor, no less than for singers, orchestra, and chorus; but, we are inclined to think, the responsibility is scarcely so much felt by those who undertake it as it might be. Although the orchestra, so ably marshalled by Mr Manns, may hold its own against any, at home or abroad, for precision, wherever there is scope for the elaboration of delicate passages, there is an absence of fire and a heavy deliberation about its broader effects that in such a work as this becomes a serious defect. After the dreamily-poetical pianissimo passages that gradually widen, like a dimly-green-lit vista, into the full disclosure of the principal subject, this lack of vehemence and passion was particularly noticable. Some of Beethoven's thoughts should flash lightning-like through the exponents to the auditor, and it is not the characteristic of lightning to creep lazily from heaven to earth. Some of the forte passages are intended to be hurled violently into the midst of the undercurrent that is quietly proceeding to its development, not to be calmly played off by the instrumentalists without expression or even sense, as it would be only allowable to do at a first rehearsal. We do not intend to cast the faintest shadow of censure upon Mr Manns, who has already done wonders as regards uniformity. Individually, we are aware it is almost hopeless to expect spirit from orchestral players, who, as a rule, have a tendency to regard music merely in the light of daily bread; but not alone do we believe it possible for a conductor, possessing fire and passion in his own soul, to communicate it to the body of men he leads by the very force of his strong will, but we have daily oral evidence that it is so. Therefore, we call upon Mr Manns to go and do likewise, to prove himself what he aspires to be.

The soprano was Mdlle Levier, who was not heard to such advantage in the Symphony as in her aria from Jean de Paris, later in the programme. Mdme Antoinette Sterling's rich tones were distinctly traceable throughout. Mr Santley's voice never fails to "carry;" but the tenor of Mr Henry Guy was overwhelmed by the accompaniment. It is almost unfair to young aspirants to place them in such trying positions. A voice that might charm, when heard and judged alone, will often shrink into nothing when blended with others more powerful and experienced. We do not doubt that Mdlle Levier and Mr Guy strained their powers to the utmost; that they proved unequal to grapple successfully with what was required of them is scarcely their fault.

To the Symphony succeeded the song, "Ah du mein holder Abendstern," from Wagner's Tannhäuser, a characteristic specimen of that tone-sensuality, which in Wagner takes the place of the rhythmic melody, until now accepted as the only true musical beauty. Wagner's mystical processions of dreamy harmonies have a certain fascination; they lull the senses into a forgetfulness of their right and wrong; and, when conveyed by medium of a voice like Mr Santley's, the fascination is intensified. That Mr Santley extracts the entire possibilities from these vague shadows of an alarming futurity, all who remember his remarkable personification of the Flying Dutchman at Her Majesty's Opera, some years ago, will be aware. Mr Santley's phrasing is always above criticism; on this occasion it enabled him to make the Wagnerian effusion not alone agreeable, but so delightful to the audience, that they were roused to an enthusiasm which found vent in a perfect ovation at its close. Twice vehemently resummoned to the platform, Mr Santley was at last compelled to repeat the song. Mdme Sterling's ballad (Hullah's "Three Fishers") coming immediately after, had a severe test to endure; but, as Mdme Sterling seems to reserve all her forces for the rendering of this class of music, she sang it so well that she was honoured with a recall.

Spohr's Concerto (Scena Cantante) was played by Madame Norman-Néruda with all that deft skill and exquisite finish for which she is so justly famous, and the Concerto was received with the favour that is always to be found by the fair violinist. After Balfe's Serenade, sung by Mr Henry Guy, the second summer concert came to a successful termination with the overture to Masaniello. All praise to the Crystal Palace Concerts, and long may they live! Z.

Saturday, May 22nd, 1875.

VIENNA.

(From our Correspondent.)

Wagner has returned and given another concert for the benefit of his Grand-National-Festival-Stage-Play-Theatre at Bayreuth. The programme differed from that of his last concert by the omission of the "Kaisermarsch," and the introduction of "Hagen's Wacht" ("Hagen's Watch"), a fragment from the first act of the Götterdämmerung, previously unknown. This new specimen of what is to be expected from the long deferred Nibelungen-Trilogie produced generally a favourable impression. On the Wagnerite portion of the audience it acted, of course, as the red cloak acts on the bull in the Spanish Bull-Ring. It simply drove them frantic. By the way, a prominent Wagnerite, Herr Hans Richter, who has succeeded Herr Dessoff at the Imperial Operahouse as Capellmeister, bids fair to become a favourite. His conducting Beethoven's Fidelio has pleased the Viennese, even those who do not belong to the School of the Future.

NAPLES.—Among the earliest works performed at the Teatro d'Estate, now in course of construction at the Villa Nazionale, will be Gianni di Calais and I Pazzi per Progetto, by Donizetti, and Il Diavolo Color di Rosa, by Petrella.

Digitized by Google

RICHARD WAGNER, AND HIS RING OF THE NIBLUNG.

(From the "New Quarterly Magazine.")

(Continued from page 366.)

Wagner's next work, the opera of Tannhäuser, marks a further step in advance. The hero of the drama is a mediæval knight and singer, who, enthralled by the voluptuous charms of Venus, tarries in the mountain of the goddess, but is ultimately saved by the self-surrendering love of a pure woman. There is a certain parallelism between the subjects of this and the last-mentioned opera. Both Senta and Elizabeth free their lovers from the doom hovering over them; both die in their noble endeavours. This idea of the redeeming power of woman's love is characteristic of Wagner's art; its ultimate completion we shall find in the last scene of his opus magnum, our Niblungen drama. Into the musical and poetical beauties of Tannhäuser we can enter no further. Suffice it to say that, compared with the Flying Dutchman, its music is richer in melodious and harmonious combinations, its poetry more passionate, and, therefore, more expressive of that essence of human pathos which is at the bottom of all legendary lore. Style and verse are, moreover, greatly improved, and the diction is much above the average even of the spoken drama. The music also evinces Wagner's further progress towards greater force and conciseness; still, the victory of the purely dramatic over the operatic is not yet quite decisive—not as decisive, for instance, as is Lohengrin, the master's next work, which was finished in March, 1848, nearly three years after the completion of Tannhäuser.

In Lohengrin, the positions of hero and heroine appear reversed. The Knight of the Swan leaves his celestial abode to become the champion of a maiden falsely accused of the murder of her brother. As the price of her liberty, he demands Elsa's promise never to ask him who he is or whence he came to her rescue; but she, following that innate desire of human affection to wholly comprehend and be one with the beloved object, asks the fatal question, which seals her own doom. In the carrying out of this idea, Wagner for the first time displays the full power of his dramatic gift. Lohengrin, the representative of divine power, is surrounded with a halo of mystic splendour to which the tender loveliness of Elsa's nature forms the charming counterpart. The action of the piece is full of interest, and the minor characters are boldly designed and artistically grouped round the centre figures. The music also attains a freedom and intensity of expression hitherto unknown. The flow of melody is no more led into the artificial channels of arias, finales, etc., but seems to spring immediately from the urgencies of the dramatic situation. Everything shows that we are nearing a climax of new artistic development.

The first performance of Lohengrin is connected with one of the brightest episodes of Wagner's chequered career, his friendship with Liszt. It will be remembered that the completion of Lohengrin fell into one of the stormiest years of Continental history, when the revolutionary rising in Paris seemed to threaten destruction to the thrones of the neighbouring countries. Wagner lived at that time in Dresden as conductor of the Royal Opera. He was in a state of morbid disappointment caused by the unfavourable reception of his works at the large theatres, and still more by the thoroughly inartistic cliquism by which most of these institutions were governed. A change at any price seemed desirable under such circumstances. He, therefore, although little interested in politics, took an active part in the revolutionary movement, and when this was crushed he had to fly the country. He first went to Weimar, where Liszt at that time was conducting a small but excellent opera. "The very day"—Wagner writes in 1851—"when my personal danger became a certainty, I saw Liszt conducting a rehearsal of my Tannhäuser, and was astonished at recognizing my second self in his achievement. What I had felt in inventing this music he felt in performing it; what I wanted to express in writing it down, he said in making it sound. Strange to say, through the love of this rarest friend, I gained at the moment of becoming homeless, a real home for my art, which I had longed for, and sought for always in the wrong place. . . . At the end of my last stay in Paris" (in 1850), "when, ill, miserable, and despairing, I sat brooding over my fate, my eye fell on the score of my Lohengrin, totally forgotten by me. Suddenly I felt something like compassion, that this music should never sound from off the death-pale paper. Two words I wrote to Liszt; his answer was the news that preparations were made for the performance on the largest scale the limited means of Weimar would permit. Everything that men and circumstances could do was done in order to make the work understood. . . . Success was his reward, and with this success he now approaches me saying, 'Behold, we have come so far; now create us a new work that we may go still further.'"

(To be continued.)

MDLLE MARIE KREBS.

(From a Correspondent.)

Some score or so of years ago a tendency arose to exalt instrumental musical art and artists. The public were attracted by the name of some instrumentalist of note, which was even sufficient of itself to "draw" a little crowd of listeners. To this succeeded somewhat of a reaction, an interregnum, when the popular taste leaned so extravagantly to Nature's organ, the human voice, in its various phases, that the offspring of art alone were considerably thrown into the shade. Now, instrumentalists are to the fore again, and it is becoming a usual occurrence for acknowledged artists, whose fingers exhibit their mind, to attract hundreds by force of their own merits alone.

It is to be regretted that Mdlle Marie Krebs, whose performances in this country have been a succession of triumphs, should have decided to give but two recitals, for she is an artist worthy of study, and can hardly be rightly appreciated and judged after a few hearings only. On the occasion of her second and last recital at St James's Hall on Wednesday afternoon, the programme was chosen from the works of Beethoven, Handel, Chopin, Bennett, Moscheles, and Reinecke, commencing with the Fantasia in F minor of Chopin (Op. 49), one of the lesser sentimentalities of the romantic Polish composer. The second on the list was, perhaps, the most interesting performance of the whole. Beethoven's Sonata Pastorale is one dear to the amateur heart as a specimen of the great master in one of his most playful and winning moods. The grand Beethoven seems here to descend to the level of our capacities, as a father might unbend to trifle with his children; and yet, genial and pleasant as the trifling is, the most sportive humour can no more veil the greatness of the conceptions than a passing summer cloud can obscure the light of the sun. Demanding much from the interpreter—its very simplicity rendering its right apprehension a work for an artist of the highest order—the Sonata met with all justice at the hands of Mdlle Krebs, whose eminent gift of balance places her in the foremost rank of exponents of classical music. The fair pianist not only has all mechanical means ready to hand, but possesses the rare faculty of rightly using them. Many artists sway whole armies of these means, but, for want of brain-generalship, lavish them at random; but Mdlle Krebs arrays and marshals her forces with such order and compactness that one hardly realizes their vastness. The executant gives place to the artist, and the artist is the humble follower of the composer. When hearing Mdlle Krebs our attention is at once rivetted by the thoughts of the composer, so lucidly made manifest; and in our enjoyment we half forget to admire the exponent. This is how it should be.

In Handel's Fugue, Prelude, Allemande Courante, and well-known "Harmonious Blacksmith," Mdlle Krebs gave no less satisfaction to her audience than in the Sonata. Her tone is full and round, her phrasing majestic and true. If the runs in the concluding variations of the "Blacksmith" did not recall the pearly tones of Mdme Arabella Goddard, we must remember that such a specialty can hardly repeat itself in a generation. Bennett's three charming Impromptus are a test of poetical feeling, and were given with a plaintive and unaffected charm not easily to be forgotten. Reinecke's Variations on a Theme by Handel and Moscheles' "Kindermärchen" and "Der Tanz," were calculated to display the frame of elaborately-developed technique which clothes Mdlle Krebe's musical soul, but might easily have been replaced by other selections more acceptable to her listeners. There is a simple purity about all the fair artist's conceptions—a childlike innocence of expression—which should not be wasted upon mere finger-embroidery. She ought to play Mozart as Mozart would have wished to be played. Beethoven is evidently an open book to her. Then let us hope that at the next "Recital," whenever it may be, the programme may be, as a whole, worthier those enviable powers which so delighted Mdlle Krebe's hearers on Wednesday last. Z.

[Did our very intelligent correspondent hear the last of Bennett's Impromptus—that marvellous presto in F sharp minor? Here, indeed, Arabella Goddard was once more conjured up, mentally and physically, before us.—D. P.]

Digitized by Google

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

Epsom week has seldom been productive of novelty at our Italian Opera Houses, and the week ending on Saturday formed no exception to the rule. Thursday's performance of Il Trovatore derived importance from the fact that the part of Leonora was undertaken by Madame Adelina Patti, who, when years ago she first essayed the character before an English audience, was associated with Mario (as Manrico), and has since played it with tenors more or less distinguished. That Madame Patti showed herself from the beginning equal to its requirements, musical and dramatic, is within the memory of most opera-goers; and, as she is not one of those artists who are content to rest upon their laurels, it will easily be understood that she has brought her impersonation to a still higher degree of perfection, and that it is more than ever cordially appreciated. Her Leonora, indeed, may pair off with her Violetta, to the detriment of neither—which, bearing in mind what sort of Violettas and Leonoras we have seen, is saying no little. She must not, however, bring forth Manrico (Signor Marini) from his prison in the tower to share the applause, however well merited, bestowed upon the twice sung "Miserere," and never more reasonably bestowed than on the present occasion. It is enough to add that Signor Marini's "Di quella pira," delivered with stentorian vigour, leads to a double call; that Signor Graziani's "Il balen" is, as usual, encored; that Mdlle Scalchi is the Azucena, and Signor Tagliafico the Ferrando with whom we have been long acquainted. Repetitions of Dinorah, Faust e Margherita, and Lohengrin complete the record of the week.

Faust e Margherita, Les Diamans de la Couronne (with Madame Patti as Catarina) Der Freischütz, Il Barbiere, and L'Africaine have all been given this week. Lohengrin is announced for to-night. Meanwhile, M. Gounod's Romeo e Giulietta is close at hand. Mdlle Zaré Thalberg's next part is to be Cherubino in Le Nozze.

HER MAJESTY'S OPERA.

Owing to the preparations for Wagner's Lohengrin, which Sir Michael Costa is understood to be superintending with the carefulness and zeal for which he has so long been noted, to devote much time to the rehearsal of any novelty, or even of any revival, would be just now barely possible. Thus, Mr Mapleson, since our last reference to the doings at his establishment, has been compelled to fall back upon such operas in his repertory as are the most popular, and, during the present season, have already done excellent service. Among them may be named Faust, the Sonnambula, Il Talismano, Lucrezia Borgia, Le Nozze di Figaro, and Il Trovatore. In the last-named, Madame Christine Nilsson, who has but recently displayed an ambition to excel in the higher walks of the lyric drama, fully vindicates her privilege—the privilege of every artist conscientiously desirous of exhibiting the variety of her endowments so as to enlarge the sphere of her attraction. That Madame Nilsson has studied the part of Leonora con amore is evidenced by the result. The music of Verdi, trying as it is in certain passages, offers no difficulties that she cannot surmount with ease, and her performance from beginning to end affords unqualified satisfaction to connoisseurs. To impart characteristic individuality to the Leonora of Il Trovatore, as characteristic individuality may be imparted to Margaret, Lucia, Ophelia, or Mignon, is out of the question; for the poet, Salvatore Cammarano, presented Verdi with a mere abstraction. In revenge, however, Madame Nilsson, like her gifted contemporary, Madame Patti, clothes the part with her own individuality, which is enough to make it generally acceptable. No one knows precisely who or what Leonora may be; and so long as she is thus represented no one cares. Mdlle Varesi, by her performance of Amina (La Sonnambula), has advanced another step in public opinion, and persuaded amateurs of her entire proficiency as a vocalist in the genuine Italian school. She has again played in the Sonnambula with increased and well-merited success. The repetition of Le Nozze di Figaro was marked by a solitary change in the cast of the dramatis personæ, Mdlle Anna de Belocca appearing as Cherubino, in lieu of Madame Trebelli, who has long claimed, and with good cause, a prescriptive right to the character at Her Majesty's Opera. We are not going to make comparisons between the pourtrayal of the youthful débutante and that of her experienced predecessor. Mdlle de Belocca must stand upon her own merits, and they suffice to carry her through the ordeal. Her acting is thoroughly natural, while devoid of much of the conventional flippancy which too often offends the sober judgment of those to whom playful comedy need not be obtrusive. Mdlle de Belocca sings her two airs with the appropriate feeling, and we think, would sing them still better if she did not transpose them. For "Voi che sapete," charmingly sung, she obtained the accustomed encore, and repeated it accordingly.

Lucia, the Huguenots and Il Talismano have been performed this week. Semiramide, with Mdlle Tietjens as Semiramide, and Madame Trebelli as Arsace, welcome to all amateurs, is advertised for to night. Lohengrin will, we understand, be positively produced on Saturday, the 12th of June.

STAGE POMP.

(From "Le Ménestrel")

La Juive has reappeared in the bills of the Grand Opera with its new Rachael, Madlle Krauss, and its magnificent procession, the most splendid, perhaps, of modern theatrical art. In France, the mise-en-scène always possessed a great charm for the public, and we ask if, in this respect, even the Grand Opera has progressed. People still remember the famous cavalry charges commanded by Franconi in Spontini's Fernand Cortez. Well, these were nothing to what had been done previously. We learn from a Gazette of 1773, discovered by M. de Forges, that, on the 12th December in that year, the tragedy-opera entitled Ernelinde, of MM. Poinsinet and Philidor, was played at Versailles, where it obtained the greatest success. There was, adds the paper, a scene in it representing on the stage an action between 400 mounted grenadiers. We can easily imagine what an effect such a novelty would produce.

It is certain that, if the chronicler has not exaggerated somewhat, this regiment of cavalry, manœuvring behind the footlights, leaves far behind it the few horses forming part of the procession which we now so much admire in La Juive. Only we should like to know on what stage at Versailles 400 mounted grenadiers could manœuvre. The only place with which we are acquainted suitable for such a display of military force is the Grand Court of Honour.

M. De Forges informs us also that: "while attracting the crowd to the Gaîté by the magnificence of his mythological opera of Orphée, M. Offenbach, the clever impresario, has simply followed in the footsteps of Nicolet, the founder of this theatre, who, likewise, turned the Gods of Olympus to good account in a travesty. In the Mémoires secrets, under the date of the 7th November, 1773, we read: 'Nicolet, towards whom the public have exhibited coolness for some time, has again brought them back to his theatre by a burlesque heroic pantomime entitled L'Enlèvement d'Europe. It is inconceivable to what a pitch of industry this player has attained. His theatre is now the rival of the lyric theatre, surpassing the latter by its machinery, which is admirably combined and works with great accuracy; by the magnificence of the scenery; by the good taste of the dresses; by spectacular pomp; by the number of actors, and, lastly, by admirably perfect execution. Jealous of the success of this pantomime, the Opera endeavoured to obtain an injunction against it, but the wise magistrate at the head of the police considered himself bound in equity to defend Nicolet against unjust solicitations.'"

THE YORKSHIRE EXHIBITION ORGAN OPENING.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

DEAR SIR,—Your correspondent "Veritas" perseveres in his attacks upon me. Being now well acquainted with his identity, I am not at all surprised that he should address to you a string of misrepresentations, direct falsehoods, and insinuated untruths. He is somewhat famous for this sort of thing in Leeds, and was especially successful at the time of the Eli performance. I decline to bandy words with such a man; but will, when I visit town in a short time, show you the correspondence with the Exhibition committee, in which you will see that I was specially retained, at my own fee, for the purpose of "inaugurating the organ." Mr Best has seen this letter; and it is evident that "Veritas" has no concern whatever with this, or the Eli business, excepting to exhibit an unworthy, unenviable, and undeserved ill-feeling towards yours, faithfully,

WM. SPARK.

Leeds, June 3, 1875.

Digitized by Google

BERLIN.

(From a Correspondent.)

At the Royal Operahouse, Herr Beck concluded his "Gastspiel," i.e., temporary, or starring, engagement, by appearing as Conte di Luna in Trovatore. He has reason to be satisfied with his visit to the Prussian capital, seeing that Hülsen has engaged him for three years. The Manrico was Herr Peschier, from the Ducal Theatre, Coburg, who possesses a fine voice, which bad training has already greatly injured, and will eventually ruin, unless he retires for a while to study under a good master.

Die Zauberflöte was the second opera given at the reduced prices. The crowded state of the house proved that Hülsen acted wisely as well as liberally when he determined on enabling musical amateurs with limited means to hear works by the great masters of the lyric stage adequately represented. The class in question properly appreciate the boon.—Q.

—o—

THE WELSH CHORAL UNION.

At the second concert of the Welsh Choral Union, which took place on Monday night at St James's Hall, the members attempted a performance of Mendelssohn's Athalie, and with very fair success, considering the innate and exacting difficulties of the work in question. The singers were, however, reinforced by some of the students of the Royal Academy of Music, and a strong choir, in the matter of numbers, was consequently got together. The cantata was given in the prescribed form, that is, the intervening paraphrases of so much of Racine's tragedy as is necessary to explain the purport of the music, were read by Mr Charles Fry with sufficient elocutionary effect, though the absence of the original text in the book of words was an inconvenience naturally felt, inasmuch as the reading of long measures of blank verse could not well be made intelligible beyond the immediate vicinity of the speaker. The recital of these, however, has now become a recognized necessity. It was once thought they could be done without, and the cantata was publicly tried in this fashion; but the close sequence of movements without tonal relationship or preparation occasioned an obvious impropriety, and of late years the "Lyrics" have never been given without the aid of the descriptive narratives of the interlocutor. The rendering of the choral passages on Monday night was, upon the whole, creditable to the ambitious tastes of the members of the Welsh Union, notwithstanding the uncertainties and coarsenesses necessarily inseparable from the efforts of a body of singers for the most part unprofessional; added to which the orchestral foundations of the cantata were absent, and the accompaniments confined simply to duet playing on the pianoforte, and a septet of harps, which, to a certain extent, enfeebled the quality of the delivery, and unduly exposed the shortcomings of the choristers. The cantata, nevertheless, was boldly sung, and the music told its own suggestive story without any let or hindrance to speak of. The solo vocalists consisted of Miss Mary Davies, of the Royal Academy of Music, and Miss Lydia Elsmore, who undertook the duties of first and second sopranos; and the contralto part fell into the hands of Miss Purdy, who is rising in reputation as a steady and unaffected singer, and—when a certain air of reserve is got rid of—one of probable future value as an exponent of the worthier forms of concert-room music. Encores were accorded to the beautiful chorus, "Hearts feel that love thee," and the War March of the Priests, the martial rhythm of the latter exercising its usual spell upon the audience, notwithstanding the meagreness of the instrumental basis, and the consequent loss of all sonority. The cantata was conducted by Mr John Thomas. The second part of the programme was devoted to miscellaneous matters. To the Welsh adaptations of Mr John Thomas prominence was given, and not without reward, for the choral settings by that gentleman of the well-known Welsh tunes which were done were received with triumphant pleasure, and, in one instance ("The rising of the sun"), encored. The music of the Principality was further illustrated by the performance of Mr Thomas's capital duet for two harps, "Scenes of childhood," which, played by the arranger, and the equally skilled Mr T. H. Wright, pleased universally, and was, as universally, redemanded. Mr Brinley Richards, another bard "of credit and renown," was also heard in his pretty part-song, "Up! quit thy bower;" and separate songs were sung by Miss Lydia Elsmore and Miss Purdy. Weber's great Freischütz scena was likewise on the list, to the singing of which Miss Marian Williams addressed herself with unquestionable spirit, and won an enthusiastic recall. Mendelssohn's magnificent setting of the forty-third Psalm, "Judge me, O God," which has taken so firm a hold of the choirs of the metropolis, was among the best events of the second part of the concert, and was sung with suitable breadth. Mrs J. Balsir Chatterton, Mrs Wright, Mr Frost, Miss V. Trust, Miss Edith Brand, Mr Taliesin James, and Mr T. H. Wright constituted the band of harps which afforded such characteristic service during the evening; and Mr Puddicombe and Mr W. W. Bamfylde officiated, duet-wise, at the pianoforte. D. H. H.

—o—

MR BRINLEY RICHARDS' LECTURE ON NATIONAL MUSIC.

Mr B. Richards gave an interesting lecture on National Music, with illustrations, at St George's Hall, on Thursday evening the 27th ult. Lord Clarence Paget acted as president, and delivered a short preliminary address on the success of Welsh music, and Welsh music in England and elsewhere, more especially as exemplified in the case of Mr Richards. Lord Clarence Paget was warmly cheered at the conclusion. Mr Richards then came forward with the illustrators of his lecture—Miss Marian Williams, Miss Mary Davies, and Miss Lizzie Evans, all Welsh vocalists. We think, in a lecture on National music, Mr Richards might have found an English, Irish, and Scotch vocalist to illustrate the songs of their own countries; not, however, that we mean to insinuate that the three Welsh ladies above-named were incapable of singing the songs of other lands; only that Mr Richards might have had some regard for the patriotic feelings of the Irish and Scotch who were, in all likelihood, present to listen to their national music. The first part of the lecture consisted of copious information gleaned from Mr William Chappell's well-known book on ancient English music, and some illustrations of Welsh, English, and Scotch melodies, finishing with an excellent song by Mr Richards, called "The Harper's Grave." It was encored, and deservedly so. Miss Mary Davies sang it to perfection, but it bears no resemblance to Welsh music. The second part opened with Welsh songs, all of which were duly eulogized by the lecturer. A few remarks were then made on Scotch music, and "John Anderson, my Jo," and "Auld Lang Syne," were given as specimens. Irish music was then alluded to by Mr Richards, whom, however, we must inform that the melody of "The Last Rose of Summer" is not old, but of comparatively modern date, viz., 1793. It was composed by a gentleman named Joseph Miliken, of Cork, the original words being the well-known "Groves of Blarney." And again, "The harp that once through Tara's hall," are not the original words of the melody to which they are set. The melody was composed and the words were written by the Hon. George Ogle, of Banna, Co. Wexford, under the title of "The Banks," or "Gramachree Molly." Some other errors we may allude to, such as "Robin Adair" being called a Scotch melody. It has long been acknowledged as Irish, notwithstanding the claim of the Scotch to that and other Irish melodies, such as "Lochaber no more," &c. Mr Brinley Richards played, on the pianoforte, illustrations of Hungarian music. An arrangement by the Abbé Liszt of the celebrated revolutionary "Rakotzy" March we are not bound to receive as a pure example of national music. Liszt has so ill-treated the melody by his exaggeration, that no gipsy fiddler in all Transylvania would be able to recognize it. The same remark will apply to Chopin's arrangements, which are but an imitation of the beautiful old Polish music, cooked up in the modern style. However, the audience were pleased, and went away satisfied with what they had heard. Mr Richards delivered his discourse with energy and fluency. The Welsh portion of the audience applauded their countryman most vehemently, especially when he alluded to the greatness of the music of Wales.—W. G.

MANNHEIM.—"First movement of the 'Jupiter Symphony,' W. A. Mozart. To be followed by a Festspiel. The whole to conclude with Die Zauberflöte, Grand Opera in two Parts. Music by Mozart." Such was the bill of the performance given to celebrate the first production in this "city of strait streets" of the Zauberflöte (29th March, 1794).

Digitized by Google

ST JAMES'S HALL,

REGENT STREET AND PICCADILLY.

MR CHARLES HALLÉ'S

Pianoforte Recitals.

MR CHARLES HALLÉ has the honour to announce that his Fifteenth Series of PIANOFORTE RECITALS will take place on the following afternoons:—

FRIDAY, June 11, 1875. | FRIDAY, June 25, 1875.
FRIDAY, June 18, 1875.

SIXTH RECITAL,

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, JUNE 11, 1875.

To Commence at Three o'clock precisely.

Programme.

QUARTET in E flat, for pianoforte, violin, viola, and violoncello—Mr CHARLES HALLE, Madame NORMAN-NERUDA, Herr STRAUS, and Herr FRANZ NERUDA .. .. Mozart.
SONATA in E minor, Op. 90, for pianoforte—Mr CHARLES HALLE Beethoven.
"DEUTSCHE REIGEN," 2nd Book, for pianoforte and violin (first time)—Mr CHARLES HALLE and Mdme NORMAN-NERUDA F. Kiel.
QUARTET in A, for pianoforte, violin, viola, and violoncello—Mr CHARLES HALLE, Mdme NORMAN-NERUDA, Herr STRAUS, and Herr FRANZ NERUDA .. .. Brahms.

Sofa Stalls, 7s.; balcony, 3s.; area, One Shilling.

Tickets at Chappell & Co.'s, 50, New Bond Street; Mitchell's, 33, Old Bond Street; Ollivier's, 38, Old Bond Street; Keith, Prowse & Co.'s, 48, Cheapside; Hays's, 4, Royal Exchange Buildings; and at Austin's Ticket Office, 28, Piccadilly.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

AMATEUR.—A translation of the book of Herr R. Wagner's opera, Lohengrin, appeared in the Musical World during the month of April, 1855.

DEATHS.

On May 22nd, at Windsor, Mr G. A. GRIESBACH, aged 74.
On June 1st, at 9 St George's Square, S.W., ROBERT BARNBY, Esq., aged 54.

NOTICE.

To ADVERTISERS.—The Office of the MUSICAL WORLD is at Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & CO.'S, 244, Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street (First Floor). It is requested that Advertisements may be sent not later than Thursday. Payment on delivery.

The Musical World,

LONDON, SATURDAY, JUNE 5, 1875.

Markmarkmarkomarx.

IN the actual period theories abound. We have, therefore, no hesitation in calling the attention of our readers to ce qui suit—with a firm hope that they may ponder it carefully. We are not mystic; nor do we believe that there is a mystic even on our free list. But it will not be forgotten that we are hanging listlessly on the tail of the Nineteenth Century—and who can predict (Wagner excepted) anything about the Twentieth? A German does German into English—Dutch-wise—as follows:—

The question you propose to me in your impression of yesterday is of such an attractive character, that, although I am over-whelmed with professional duties, too much so to enter now fully into it, yet I cannot resist sending you briefly my opinion on the subject.

The question—"Are Skakspere's dramas, and in particular his Macbeth, appropriate for operatic texts?"—has certainly been raised through Herr Taubert's "setting" of the latter work; but its significance reaches far beyond this individual case. In no exercise of any art has it been more strikingly and portentously manifested, how important the choice of material is for the fate of the artist and his work, than in the opera. Hundreds of operas, by really talented and clever composers, have been shipwrecked on this point alone—have been destined to this fate before the penning of a single note, simply because such composers have wasted their art in impossible and insurmountable labours, instead of first making clear to themselves, by study and reflection, what their art, and their personal inclinations and powers, have been capable of. But this insatiable desire for rushing into print! So soon as a few sounding sentimentalities, and a dozen or so modulations, new for the hundredth time, have been strung together, no respite is granted, and the affair is driven irresistibly along, till the last atom of strength has been consumed! And where could a broader field be found for it than in the opera, with its succession of airs, and recitatives, choruses and ballets; with its trombone pathos, and its storm piccolo-flutes; with its tremulant quartetts, significant of the presence of wandering spirits and somnambulists; with its well-drilled quintetts and sestetts? All this—and how much more—the composer feels prickling and raging in his veins. Only quick with a text! and see that it be a grateful one! where the usual effects can be produced, and in which the composer can find opportunity for the due display of his particular forte. About the rest he is perfectly indifferent, and cares not whether the web of his text is of gossamer or of the coarsest thread.

Of what concern is it to our operatic composers that the greatest dramatist amongst musicians, Gluck, and the great Parisian school, have gone about their work in quite another manner? That in their art, Shakspere, Raphael, and in former times the Greeks, never attempting impossibilities, have always chosen a sure foundation upon which they have erected imperishable works? In one respect alone have affairs assumed another aspect. In the good old days of the Zauberflöte, Seraglio, and Fidelio, people were less concerned about the poetic worth of the diction and of the plot. Mozart, Cherubini, Weigl, and Winter, were content to associate their precious song with the productions of a Shickaneder—or however else the libretto fabricators were called—which seldom advanced beyond mediocrity. Now—perhaps, since Weber—a literary taste has spread itself among musicians. Be this, however, as it may, the old material appears consumed, and what more remains to be done than to place a pistol at the breast of the great poets, with a thundering Facia a terra!—to knock them down, and plunder them of their inestimable treasures? What has not already fallen a victim to the savage hunger of the opera-raving composer? The Nibelungen have twice been made prisoners. Schiller has seen his Maria Stuart, William Tell, and his Maid of Orleans entrapped. Faust, even in his second existence, has not been spared. Shakspere—whose "I gave you everything!" is become a truism—has not only been robbed of his Romeo and Juliet, but of his Merry Wives too; his Othello and Lear must rage and sigh in recitative and aria; Mendelssohn has laid rude hands on the translucid, fragile forms of his "Storm;" Chelard and Taubert and Verdi on the benighted grandeur of Macbeth. Why should not Hamlet philosophize musically on "To be, or not to be?"* But has not the advance in education, which has put Shakspere into the hands of our composers, put at the same time into their hearts some reverence for his immortal creations, which, in their ambition to compose, they "arrange" and disarrange to their own tastes? And if they cannot resist this ambition themselves, does a warning voice never sound in their ears, that the rest of us see not these God-like creations mutilated and defaced without chagrin and pain?

Granting that the Italians—who do not comprehend Shakspere, and in their political weakness and inactivity cannot have a drama of their own—have profaned Othello and Romeo and Juliet, and flooded our stage with their contemptible works. Yet in the German artist such thoughtlessness and irrespect are in no ways fitting; and he must not premise in us Italian shallowness and superficiality, however misled we Germans may be in our conception of the ideal, and of

* Ask Ambroise Thomas.

Digitized by Google

our destination. Yes, so deeply rooted is our fundamental conscientiousness, that we allow such wares to be offered us much more readily by such stranger hands as Bellini and Verdi, than by our own countrymen's, from whom we with right expect something worthy of the German nation.

This veneration for the original creations most certainly lives in Herr Taubert, and in all German "tone-poets;" it is easy to be conceived what pain every rent and every cut into the original must have caused them, and how they must have been haunted step by step by the recollection of that which fell a prey to their scissors. That is the first punishment, and it is indeed no favourable position for an artist desirous of creating in his art. Nevertheless, when it concerns the existence, or non-existence of his opera, what sacrifices were too great for him? Let us forget Shakspere for the sake of the opera! Yet he lives, and will outlive all operas, as the marble temple of antiquity the nests which the twittering swallow attached to its roof.

If something good could only emanate from the opera! Let it be perfectly understood that I am not now speaking at all of Herr Taubert's opera. I do not know a note of it, and love too well Taubert's charming naïve songs for children (and what has he not written besides!) to hurt his feelings by any hasty word of mine. The question must be considered apart from personality; it must be considered in its general significance, as it stands at the head of this epistle. Do Shakspere's dramas, and in particular his Macbeth, appropriate themselves for operatic texts? If you wish to be clear on the point, first of all ask what the opera is capable of, and, nextly, what do Shakspere's dramas contain, and what demands do they advance.

The idiom of the true opera is music; the mixed opera, (alternately singing and speaking) is only half a thing, is in fact an unprincipled chimera. With that begins the domination of the fatality which has prevailed over opera from the beginning, often blamed, often disputed, but yet ever returning.

The singers are to represent men; the song—so often alas, rendered perfectly unintelligible by the clamour of the instruments—is to replace speech. The bodily entrance of the executant on the stage for dramatic activity, precisely converts the language he sings into a fable, into an unreal play of phantasy. That which we never believed, never attempted to talk away nor to shun; all that is fabulous, adventurously impossible, every storm of unjustifiable and exaggerated passion, every intoxication of the senses, here it is supposed we are justified in doing. And again, these words to the music, the music itself, that enigmatical language of the hidden world, this is to be suitable, and mobile enough for the harsh and hasty progress of excitatory action, where very often even the easy flowing word of the poet seems too massive. The drama urges forward with restless decision; the music must tarry till her sounds have resolved themselves into time, and placed us in accordance with the same. How are these two opposite principles to be united? Necessarily that dramatic decisiveness must be sacrificed, the plot must be simplified, not complicated,—a procedure which the dramatist has always esteemed most highly,—but must be represented in a few united monumental moments, in which the music can extend itself, and in which our attention can become absorbed. And in order that this may be possible, the poet must retire from the bustling arena of life to those numerous events and characters, in which the inward life of the heart is significant enough and otherwise appropriate to make us forget the profundity of the soul beyond the reach of music, and our life ever being impelled onwards "from without." This natural antagonism in the dramatical and musical characters (if at any rate I have comprehended the matter rightly) decides our question. The drama demands action, our impelling forwards; the music will impress itself on our minds, and requires for that operation time; the drama forms characters and develops them. Music expresses sensations, and requires "situations." Don Juan, Fidelio, all the master works in the opera, offer such situations; the highest to which character-development has been brought on the lyric stage, are the pictures which Gluck has created from Clytemnestra and Orestes—and from them alone. And yet how limited are these developments by the pre-eminently dramatic tone-poet to delineations of character by even a moderate dramatic poet!

And now, Shakspere, with whom there is no semi-conscious dreaminess, but all is positive; every word a thought, every thought an action; no being or thing exists there as it previously had existed, but everything progresses, develops itself, increasing or diminishing in accordance with the everlasting laws of Nature. Shakspere, with whom the gentlest touch becomes a necessary feature in each admirable characteristic, and with whom the wildest outburst of unbridled passion is a necessary, though often overlooked, consequence in the course of the character true to life. Shakspere, with his army of characters in each drama, every individual one of which develops itself freely and independently, according to the inward law of his nature, the servant as well as his lord, the courtier "who chafes" Hamlet, just as well as Hamlet himself. Ye fabricators of opera may tear up Shakspere, as one might tear up a dead lion, but you cannot inspire the corpse again with life—the majesty of the lion will not suffer that. What sacrifices will ye not make to humiliate the lion, and yet find him ungrateful for your musical designs?

Is it necessary to say more of Macbeth for instance? What is there attainable to the music? Surely not he who murders sleep, and from his gloomy taciturnity rushes forth to murder and to witchcraft, and is still so great, and in his greatness and fury so worthy of pity! Surely not she? Or do you, perhaps, venture with your used-up tremoli, or with whatever else may be running in your head concerning that dreadful night when all the cosmetics of Arabia fail to purify that little blood-stained hand? Do not deceive yourselves, there you have no somnambulating puppet of Bellini: no, it is a "giant wife," gigantic in self-confidence and ambitious desires, urging forward to the bourne, with all her fire and passion, alike without consideration and reflection; blending into one the thought and deed, both restless, unwearied, the never-silent alarm-bell, which wakes him from a dream to living desires, till he has "done the deed," and the whole succession of their deeds nourished in the womb of unchangeable fate.

These remarks, I repeat it, are not made against Herr Taubert, nor could they be, as I do not know his Macbeth. They do not apply to any individual musician, but to all. They are not directed against any musician, but for all, in order to protect them (the justice of the remarks being acknowledged) from error and regrets, and to maintain for the people as high a cultivation—as far as concerns music—as it and the times will receive and bear. Woe to us if that universal process of decomposition in all that is ideal, which makes itself apparent enough, took its further course unheeded and unchecked!

What may be drawn from the foregoing, except to dramaturgists of extreme penetration and unfathomable sagacity, it is difficult to imagine. That Taubert is not a proper intensifier of Shakspere—who, as Wagner has it, slams the door, when it suits him, in the face of History—we are willing to admit; but that David percutiebat cytharum manu suâ, is a truth nevertheless; and, as Thaddeus Egg would add, "refoccilabatur Saul." The question, however, whether even Wagner himself could defossilize Shakspere is still an open one.

Otto Beard.

—o—

THE following is a list of the managers of the Grand Opera, Paris, from its foundation down to the present day:—

1659, the Abbé Perrin, introducer of Ambassadors to Gaston d'Orléans. He had as a partner, Cambert, organist of the church of St Honoré.—1671, Lulli, composer.—1687, Francine, Lulli's son-in-law, and several partners.—1700, Belleville and Pecourt, a dancer.—1701, Francine, for the second time.—1704, Guyenet, capitalist.—1712, Francine, for the third time, with Dumont as a partner; then as liquidator in Guyenet's bankruptcy; and lastly with the Duc d'Antin.—1728, Destouches, composer.—1730, Gruer, under the superintendence of the Prince de Carignan.—1731, Lecomte, in partnership with President Lebœuf.—1733, Eugène de Thuret, officer in the Regiment of Picardy.—1744, Berger, financial receiver of Dauphiny, in partnership with the Chevalier de Mailly.—1748, Tréfontaine.—1749, the City of Paris, represented by the Marquis d'Argenson.—1753, Rebel and Francœur, composers, in the name of the City of Paris.—1754, Royer, chamber-composer to the King.—1755, Bontemps and Levasseur.—1757, Rebel and Francœur, for the second time, but this time on their own responsibility.—1767, Berton and Trial, composers.—1769, Berton and Trial, acting for the City of Paris, with Joliveau and Dauvergne, as partners.—1777, Buffault and Berton, the latter for the third time.—1778, De Vismes du Valgay, for the City of Paris.—1780, Berton, fourth time, acting for the King.—1780, Dauvergne, second time, in partnership with Gossec, a composer.—1792, Francœur and Cellerier.—1793, an administrative committee, consisting of Lays, a singer, Ray, conductor of the orchestra, Lasuzé, Rochefort, Parry, etc.—1799, De Vismes, for the second time, and Bonnet de Treiches—1801, Cellerier, second time.—1802, Morel, librettist.—1807, Picard, dramatic author.—1816, Papillon de la Forté.—1817, Persuis, composer.—1819, Viotti, composer and violinist.—1821, Habeneck, violinist, and afterwards conductor of the orchestra.—1824, Duplantys.—1827, Lubbert.—1831, Dr Véron.—1835, Duponchel, architect.—1839, Duponchel and Edouard Monnaie, a literary man.—1841, Léon Pillet.—1847, Duponchel, second time, and Nestor Roqueplan, a journalist.—1849, M. Roqueplan.—1854, Crosnier, member of the Corps Législatif.—1856, M. Alphonse Royer, dramatic author.—M. Emile Perrin, painter.—M. Halanzier.

Digitized by Google

Why does not some enthusiastic bibliopholist undertake and present us with a similar chronological list of those who from the beginning have directed—say Drury Lane, Covent Garden, Her Majesty's ("The King's") Theatre, and "the little theatre in the Haymarket"? This, with a running historical and critical commentary, would form a most interesting volume—if "G. G." would write it.

M. ADOLPHE JULLIEN, musical critic of Le Français, has discovered something curious in a supplementary volume of Grimm's Correspondence. As far back as 1766, Grimm had hit upon the leading idea in the libretto of Les Huguenots:—

"The only reason why the ballets are so agreeable and so much liked at the Opera is because the book is insipid, cold, and wearisome; but, in a really interesting piece, I defy the most skilful author, however great the art he may possess, to introduce a ballet without stopping the action, and, consequently, without each time destroying the effect of the whole performance. I may observe that the dances in a piece may be historical just as well as the singing. Give me a sublime genius, and I will show you Catharine di Medici making her preparations for the carnage of St Bartholomew amid the marriage festivities and dances of the King of Navarre. The contrast of apparent tranquillity, a tranquillity to be followed by such frightful crimes—this mixture of libertinism and cruelty—would, if I know aught of the art of moving the passions, freeze the very marrow of one's bones; but I am not afraid of your ever seeing anything of the kind at the Opera, nor that anyone whose business it is can even conceive the effect which might be thus produced. They give us in our theatres things fitted only for children, because they know they are not playing before men, and that, even in our amusements, we dread a certain dignity and a certain energy."

When we recollect that, in the original sketch of the opera, Catharine di Medici herself figured on the stage, and was not replaced till subsequently by the imaginary Saint Bris, we perceive that, without, perhaps, knowing it, Scribe completely carried out the idea of the German critic.

SIGNOR MARIO has come from Rome to England on a short visit. The great artist was present at Sig. Salvini's magnificent performance of Hamlet, on Monday, at Drury Lane Theatre.

LISBON.—Mad. Sass is re-engaged for the San Carlo of this city.

FERRARA.—Verdi's Aida, with Signore Pozzoni, Singer, Signori Patierno, Aldighieri, and Nannetti, has proved a great success here.

GENOA.—The spring season at the Politeama has proved successful with Saffo, Lucia, Norma, La Sonnambula and Il Giuramento. A young English lady produced a favourable impression as Lucia. She plays under the name of Signora Anna Renzi, and is a pupil of Sig. Graffigna's.

MILAN.—Madame l'Archiduc has been produced at the Teatro Manzoni; Lucrezia Borgia, at the Teatro dal Verme, despite the hot weather, is to be followed by Dolores, a new opera of Sig. Auteri; Auber's Cheval de Bronze, will soon make way, at the Teatro Santa Radegonda, for the Vinciguerra, of Bottesini, while Le Precauzioni occupies the place of Il Duca di Tapigliano at the Teatro Castelli.

OCCASIONAL NOTES.

THE following are the receipts of the Paris theatres for 1874-5:—

Grand Opera, 1,849,312 fr., 77 cent.; Gaité, 1,754,985 fr., 95 cent.; Porte-St-Martin, 1,679,947 fr.; Théâtre-Français, 1,474,927 fr., 38 cent.; Opéra-Comique, 1,067,226 fr., 50 cent.; Palais-Royal, 991,658 fr.; Variétés, 919,417 fr., 50 cent.; Châtelet, 763,762 fr.; Bouffes-Parisiens, 666,996 fr., 50 cent.; Renaissance, 592,497 fr., 50 cent.; Gymnase, 585,867 fr., 50 cent.; Odéon, 503,384 fr., 20 cent.; Folies-Dramatiques, 480,015 fr., 40 cent.; Ambigu, 330,264 fr., 45 cent.; Vaudeville, 330,963 fr., 50 cent.; Château-d'Eau, 282,196 fr., 85 cent.; Lyrique-Dramatique, 251,322 fr., 50 cent.; Déjazet, 172,473 fr., 5 cent.; Cluny, 174,883 fr., 25 cent.; Théâtre-des-Arts, 141,821 fr., 75 cent.; Beaumarchais, 111,301 fr., 65 cent.; Folies-Marigny, 73,449 fr., 90 cent.; Grand-Théâtre-Parisien, 31,667 fr., 70 cent.; Théâtre-Scribe, 3,398 fr., 50 cent.

The most to be envied by ordinate spirits is the Scribe Theatre; the most to be envied by inordinate spirits is the Grand Opera. We, neither ordinate nor inordinate, would feel inclined to envy the Variétés. Be chesm!

THE authors' rights in the theatres of France for 1874, amounted to 2,309,516 francs 20 centimes.

ACCORDING to the Journal Officiel, there are 26 theatres in Paris, and 367 in the French provinces, making a grand total of 392. The towns having more than one theatre each are Amiens, which has 3; Bordeaux, 6; Brest, 3; Elbeuf, 4; Le Havre, 5; Lyons, 6; Marseilles, 5; Nantes, 4; Nimes, 5; Rochefort, 4; Rouen, 4; Versailles, 3; Saint-Etienne, Saint-Quentin, Toulouse, Cette, Dieppe, Rheims, Tours, Aix, Angers, Lille, Montpelier, and Poitiers, 2 each.

THE month of May just passed is noted for many events interesting to musicians; such, for instance, as the death of the Abbé Vogler (the master of Weber and Meyerbeer), which took place on the 6th, at Darmstadt, in 1812; and that of Nicolai, which happened on the 11th, 1849, at Berlin. On the 25th May, 1808, Balfe was born at Limerick; on the 20th, 1871, Louis Maillart died, at Moulins; and on the 22nd May, 1813, Richard Wagner first saw the light at Leipsic.

Two historical pianos have been placed in the Naples Conservatory. One of them is the instrument presented by Catherine II., to Cimarosa. Bought, after his death, by Mad. Bersché, it was given by her to her daughter, the wife of Sig. Cefali, of Calabria. Yielding to the entreaties of Sig. Florimo, the Cefali family have given the interesting relic to the Conservatory. The other instrument is a piano with three key-boards, one furnished with quills and two with hammers. It was offered by the Emperor Joseph II. of Austria, as a momento of his admiration of the concerts he had attended of the Conservatory Della Pietà dei Turchini.

CONCERTS VARIOUS.

MR T. H. WRIGHT delivered a lecture before the Society for the Encouragement of the Fine Arts, on Thursday evening, May 27th, on "The History of Bardism, the National Songs of Wales, and the Music of the Harp." The lecturer treated the subject in a most exhaustive manner, demonstrating the intimate connection between music and freedom in the early periods of Welsh nationality. The bards were invariably patriots; and, by their continuous endeavours, were successful in imbuing the people with similar sentiments, hence the antipathy felt by the English towards them, and their subsequent massacre. The distinctive traits of Welsh music had, however, been preserved in as complete a manner as their language. Several pieces chosen by the lecturer to illustrate his text were loudly applauded, as were also some songs, given with taste and expression, by Mdme Harriette Lee.—H. L.

SIGNOR CARAVOGLIA'S eighth annual morning concert, on Tuesday, the 1st inst., in St George's Hall, was fashionably attended. The programme gave unanimous satisfaction to numerous friends. The length of the concert precludes the possibility of our going into details; we therefore confine ourselves to mentioning that Signor Caravoglia was assisted by Mdlle Enequist, Mdlle Josephine Sherrington, Mdlle Risarelli, Miss Purdy, Mdme Lia Rohan, Mdlle Carnielli; Signori Uric, Rizzelli, Romani, Bignardi, Campobello, Federici, and Mr Trelawny Cobham, all of whom acquitted themselves most satisfactorily, and received well-deserved applause. Signor Caravoglia was in fine voice, and proved himself a genuine artist. The instrumental part of the entertainment was in the hands of Mdlle Castellan (violin), Signors Tito Mattei and Li Calsi (pianoforte), and Mr Oberthür (harp). The conductors were Signor Mazzoni, Mr Lindsay Sloper, Mr Parker, and Herr Lehmeyer.

Digitized by Google

The Misses Agnes and Violet Molyneux (two youthful and intelligent pianists), gave a concert on Monday, the 27th of May, at the Beethoven Rooms, which were filled by an appreciative audience. The young ladies gave an effective performance of Mozart's Andante and Allegro (in D), for two pianofortes; Mr G. A. Osborne's duet, for two pianofortes, on airs from Gounod's Faust; Sir Julius Benedict's duet on airs from Der Freischütz; Schulhoff's "Grand Valse Brillante," and the same composer's "Galop di Bravura." In all these pieces their talent was duly appreciated. The duet playing of the Misses Molyneux is exceptionally good. Miss Violet Molyneux gave, as her solo performances, Beethoven's "Moonlight" sonata, and Moscheles' "Recollections of Ireland;" Miss Agnes Molyneux, Thalberg's "We're a noddin'," and Sir Julius Benedict's "Flowers of Ireland." All these were greatly applauded. Mdme Poole agreeably varied the programme with some popular songs, and Mr Lindsay Sloper accompanied her on the pianoforte with musicianly skill.

Mr Henry Stiehl, a professor and conductor at Belfast, gave a concert at the Beethoven Rooms on Wednesday morning. Mr Stiehl is a clever pianist, and a composer of decided merit. Several of his works, both vocal and instrumental, were given on the occasion under notice. A sonata concertante, for the violoncello and pianoforte, deserves more than ordinary praise, both for the originality of the subjects and the musicianly way in which they are worked out. It was capitally played by M. De Swert and the composer. Mr Stiehl proved his efficiency as a solo pianist by his excellent performance of pieces by Chopin, Schumann, and Henselt, exhibiting a brilliant touch and perfect command over the instrument. He also played "a bouquet" of four of his own compositions, which were much and deservedly applauded; and, with Miss Folley, Moscheles' and Mendelssohn's brilliant variations on the march in Preciosa. M. De Swert, on the violoncello, and M. Claude Jaquinot, on the violin, each played solos. Miss Jose Owen, in "Voi che sapete," and a new song, "Sleep, O sleep," by Mr Stiehl, and Miss Helen Arnim, in "Through the green wood," and a song by Rubinstein, gave general satisfaction.

Miss Alice Roselli's concert took place on Thursday evening, June 3rd, at St George's Hall, when she was assisted by Mdme Patey, Mdlle Levier, Messrs Cummings, Pyatt, Thurley Beale, Federici, and Mr Santley; the instrumentalists being Mr Charles Fletcher and Herr Stoeger. Miss Roselli sang "Qui la voce" (Puritani), "Nella dolce trepidanza" (Talismano), and a new song, "Ronald and I," by Louisa Gray, being warmly applauded in each. Mr W. H. Cummings was heard to advantage in Blumenthal's "Yes" and Roeckel's "Only for thee." Madame Patey's fine voice and delivery delighted the audience; her contributions to the programme being Mr F. H. Cowen's ballad, "Almost," and Mr Barnby's "Thou whom my heart adoreth" (encored). Mr Pyatt has a sonorous voice, and uses it judiciously. He sang "Regret" (Zoeller), and "Under the lime" (Cowen). Mr Santley's realization of Byron's "Maid of Athens," set by Gounod, is too well-known to call for comment. Poet, composer, and artist are in this so perfectly three in one, that the result is an exceptional art-display to which no audience can remain insensible. Mr Santley was compelled to yield to the general enthusiasm; and, returning to the platform, gave Hatton's "To Anthea." In Louis Diehl's new song, "Absent, yet present,"—a song of considerable breadth and passion—he was no less successful, and it was vociferously re-demanded. Sir Julius Benedict, Signori Arditi, Visetti, Campana, and Mr Lindsay Sloper were the conductors.—Z.

M. Paque's annual Matinée Musicale is invariably looked forward to with pleasure by amateurs of the violoncello, as they are sure to be delighted with the performance of the concert giver, on the instrument of their predilection, and of the general programme of the music provided for them. On Thursday morning the Beethoven Rooms were well filled, and M. Paque's friends and admirers welcomed him with becoming fervour on his entry, accompanied by his coadjutors, Mr Cusins and Herr Straus. Schubert's Trio in B flat, for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello, with which the concert commenced, received ample justice from the executants, and M. Paque's solo, which followed shortly afterwards (two movements of a Sonata in G, by Boccherini), elicited universal approbation. M. Paque's concluding performance was a "Caprice Hongrois," by Dunkler, in which the command over his instrument which M. Paque is known to possess, was fully brought out. Herr Straus, besides his share in the performance of Schubert's Trio, played in first-rate style an "Introduzione e fuga," by Corelli; and Mr Cusins contributed a "Nachtstück," by Schumann, and one of the "Soirées de Vienne" (No. 6), by Liest. The vocalists were Miss Edith Wynne, Miss Josephine Sherrington, Miss Julia Elton, Signor Conti, and Mr W. Shakespeare; Miss Wynne charming every one with Sullivan's "Living Poems;" Miss Sherrington exhibiting the flexibility of her voice in the "Shadow Song" (Dinorah); Miss Elton delighting all with Signor Randegger's admired "Cradle Song;" Signor Conti giving an aria from Donizetti's Marie de Rudenz; and Mr Shakespeare showing his artistic qualifications in "Spirito Gentil" (La Favorita), and, with Miss Wynne, Lucantoni's duet, "Una notte a Venezia." Mr H. Parker and Herr Ganz were announced as the accompanists, on the pianoforte, of the vocal music.

PROVINCIAL.

Newton Abbot.—A local journal writes that it has not words sufficient to congratulate Mr James Chapple upon the success which crowned his efforts in providing two of the best concerts ever given in this town. Mesdames Patey and Nouver, Messrs Fowler and Löhr, with the band of the Royal Marines, under the bâton of Mr Froehnheit, "assisted." It would need a more eloquent pen than that of the writer to sufficiently eulogise the performances of our Queen of Song, Madame Patey. Our great hall, although probably never intended for a concert-hall, proved itself to be a first-rate medium for sound. Madame Patey's sweet, rich, melodious notes reverberated through the building clearly and distinctly. Her songs were "Always alone" (Henriette); "Thou whom my heart adoreth" (Barnby); "Caro mio ben," and "Hunting-tower," the last encored. Mr Fowler's performances on the steel grand pianoforte, supplied for the occasion by Messrs Kirkman, were extremely pleasing. We must not omit to mention the conductor and pianist, Mr Fred. N. Löhr, of Plymouth, who was thoroughly up to his work; Mr Chapple being lucky in securing the offices of so able an accompanist. The performances of the Marine Band were excellent, their selections from Faust, Il Talismano, and La Fille de Madame Angot being admirably rendered. Madame Nouver deserved all the applause with which she was welcomed. This lady is comparatively new to us, but the natural beauty of her voice, combined with the careful training it has evidently received, will soon make her a favourite. Her chief success was in Bishop's "Bid me discourse." Thanks are due to Mr Chapple for providing such a musical treat.

MUSICAL SCHOLARSHIPS.

We understand that the Prince of Wales has written to the Lord Mayor of London to invite his lordship to join a conference to be held at Marlborough House on the 15th June, for the purpose of establishing free scholarships of metropolitan students in the National Training School of Music, the building of which now approaches completion through the liberality of Mr C. J. Freake. The following is the letter which was read at the Court of Common Council:—

"Marlborough House, May 25.

"My Lord,—Your lordship is doubtless well aware that efforts have been made for some time past by the Society of Arts to establish a National School of Music. A suitable building for a school has been erected by the liberality of Mr C. J. Freake, close to the Royal Albert Hall, Kensington, which is nearly finished. The admission to the school will be by means of free scholarships obtained by public competitions, held in various centres of the United Kingdom. The best instruction will thus be given to young persons of musical talent. Your lordship will see from the accompanying statement that valuable and extensive support has been promised for the foundation of those free scholarships by the great towns in the country, and the organization has proceeded so far that I have thought that the work of establishing scholarships for the City of London and the metropolitan district might now be entered upon. I propose, therefore, as President of the Society of Arts, to hold a conference at Marlborough House, on Tuesday, the 15th of June, and to invite gentlemen representing the Corporation, the great City Companies, and the merchants and bankers of London, to take part in it. I address myself virtually in the first instance to your lordship to request you to afford me your valuable assistance and experience, so that the Conference may have successful results, and may contribute towards giving to musical talent a free musical school worthy of the country, and equal to those which are established in so many parts of the Continent. This was an object in which my father took a great interest, and it is my great desire to help to carry it into effect.—I am, my lord, your obedient servant,

"Albert Edward, President of the Society of Arts."

The court resolved, upon the motion of Mr Lawley, that the necessary arrangements be made for holding the conference as suggested by His Royal Highness.

Digitized by Google

DORN (!) ACROSS MENDELSSOHN.

I was a young man of three-and-twenty, prosecuting my legal studies in Berlin, when I first knew Felix Mendelssohn, then a lad of twelve years old. One winter's experience showed me, that though I could get through my college terms, I should never be able to pass all the necessary law examinations, as I had so much musical business on my hands. At evening-parties I was in constant request, being found very useful, as I was at once a pianoforte-player, an accompanist, and a solo-singer—a rare combination in one individual, of which I can recall no other instances than Gustav Reichardt and Reissiger. Musical parties in Berlin at that time were at the height of their glory, and attended only by ladies and gentlemen who really loved music and cultivated it as an art, and who were able upon emergency to perform whole operas or oratorios. Tea was handed round before the musical business of the evening began, and we wound up with cold refreshments and quartet-singing.

One Friday, at the "at home" evening of my old countryman, Abraham Friedländer, as I was in the midst of the well-known duet of Spohr's between Faust and Röschen, with a talented young singer, a commotion arose in the anteroom, which was most unusual, for a profound silence always prevailed when anything was going on. During the pathetic air, ("Fort von hier auf schönere Auen,") my partner whispered to me, "Felix is come;" and, when the duet was finished, I made the acquaintance of Felix Mendelssohn, then a lad of twelve years old, residing with his parents on the Neue Promenade, only a few steps from Friedländer's house. He apologised for having interrupted our song by his entrance, and offered to play the accompaniments for me; "or shall we play them alternately?" he said—a regular Mendelssohn way of putting the question, which, even twenty years later, he made use of to a stranger in a similar position. At that time it would have been difficult to picture a more prepossessing exterior than that of Felix Mendelssohn. Though every one made use of the familiar "Du" in addressing him, it was very evident that even his most intimate acquaintances set a great value on his presence amongst them. He was rarely allowed to go to such large parties; but when he did so, the music, and the con amore spirit with which it was carried on, seemed to afford him real pleasure, and he, in his turn, contributed largely to the enjoyment. People made a great deal of him, and Johanna Zimmermann, Friedländer's niece, who had lost her husband while bathing in the Tyrol, regularly persecuted the young fellow, so that he could scarcely escape from her attentions. Young as he was, he even then accompanied singing in a manner only to be met with amongst the older and more thorough musicians who possess that especial gift. At Königsberg the orchestral management of the piano was an unknown thing, and even in Berlin I had as yet had no opportunity of admiring this skill and facility in any one. That man was considered a very respectable musician who played from the printed copy con amore, and thus helped the singer now and then; but he who was able to enrich the slender pianoforte accompaniment with octave basses and full chords, of course stood in a much higher position. Such a gifted being was Felix, even at that time; and in the duet between Florestan and Leonora, which he accompanied, he astonished me in the passage, "Du weider nun in meinen Armen, o Gott!" by the way in which he represented the violoncello and contra-basso parts on the piano, playing them two octaves apart. I afterwards asked him why he had chosen this striking way of rendering the passage, and he explained all to me in the kindest manner. How many times since has that duet been sung in Berlin to the pianoforte, but how rarely has it been accompanied in such a manner! In the winter of 1824-25 I was quite at home in the Mendelssohns' house—that is to say, I made my appearance there every Sunday morning at the musical entertainments, and was always invited to their evening parties, as a singer to be reckoned upon, and as one always ready to take a part in the dance. At the matinées, I became by degrees personally acquainted with all the musicians of importance in Berlin. Men, such as Lanska, who had instructed both Felix and his sister Fanny (Fanny Mendelssohn, at this time playing more brilliantly than her brother Felix), Wollank (councillor of justice, and the composer of many well-known songs), and Karl Friedrich Zelter, almost alone marked that heavy period of Berlin's musical history, during which time no creative talent of any importance appeared. Simultaneously, however, with the recall of Spontini from Paris, three stars arose, and the whole attention of the musical world was directed to the native genius of Berlin, in the persons of Ludwig Berger, Bernhard Klein, and Felix Mendelssohn, all in different ages of life.

(To be continued.)

PARIS.

(From an old Correspondent.)

At a gala performance got up at the Grand Opera, on the 30th May, for the benefit of the Pupilles de la Guerre, M. Gounod was to have conducted two scenes from his own opera of Faust. But the members of the orchestra, basing their opposition on an antiquated custom in the theatre, refused to acknowledge any but their usual conductor; so M. Gounod retired, and M. Deldevez occupied his accustomed place before the foot-lights. The following letter addressed to the last-named gentleman will, perhaps, be read with interest:—

"My dear Deldevez,—I have been informed that the gentlemen of the orchestra, desirous of preserving intact a principle which has hitherto governed the performance of all the works produced at the Opera, would be pained to see an exception which might, at some future time, be invoked as a precedent. I hasten, therefore, to leave in your hands the conducting-stick which you so kindly offered me for a part of the programme of the gala performance on the 30th inst. Cordially yours,

"C. Gounod.

"P.S.—I have thought it my duty to acquaint the organizers of the Soirée with a determination which permits me to remain in a position that my own wish would never have prompted me to leave.

"Paris, May, 1875."

It appears that the Opéra-Comique will not be closed this summer, and that the revival of Le Val d'Andorre will take place at once, instead of being deferred, as was at first proposed, till the autumn.—There is a probability that opera will be given at the Théâtre du Chatelet, and that a French operatic company will occupy the Ventadour.—A three-act vaudeville operetta, music by M. Serpette, has been brought out at the Variétés. It is entitled Le Manoir de Pictordu.

La Liberté writes as follows:—

"Spontini's Vestale has just achieved a very great success at Rome. It was not performed in a theatre; the score alone was executed at a concert given by the Musical Society. Two performances have not exhausted the success of this experiment, and a third is announced to come off shortly. Could we not imitate, in Paris, this example? There are a great many works which cannot be placed upon the stage on account of the expense, but which could easily be got up as regards the music alone. If they were so prepared, the public would be able to complete their musical education, and become acquainted with a number of masterpieces now consigned to unmerited oblivion. The system might be applied to works never published. It would thus afford modern composers an opportunity of producing creations which the difficulty of getting brought out at a theatre now obliges them to keep in their portfolio."

I reprint this suggestion for what it is worth. What will English, Irish, Scotch, American, Dutch, Australian and Italian composers say to it? Remember the bundle of sticks. I can guess how the late Mr Montague Shoot, so long the able correspondent of the Musical World, would have discussed the question.

Distinctions with some Differences.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

Sir,—It is difficult to understand why an artist possessed of the qualities indispensable to excel in parts like Donizetti's Lucia and Gounod's Margaret should be abashed by the vocal and histrionic requirements of Verdi's Leonora. There is nothing especially heroic in Leonora, who is simply a love-struck and devoted woman, as ready to make sacrifice for the man to whom her affections are wedded, as either Margaret or Lucia. Nor is the music of Verdi, except here and there, much more exacting for the voice than that of Donizetti and Gounod. True, Lucia, Gretchen, Ophelia, Mignon, and the rest, are bona fidé creations, resembling each other only in the fact that they are women; whereas the Leonora of Verdi's libretto is what Wagner would designate as "spectral bones and ribs." Adieu, Croker Rooves.

[Avaunt, old Double!—we had hoped thee dead; or, at least translated, with thy master.—Otto Bearb.]

Digitized by Google

ACORNS, SLOES, AND BLACKBERRIES.

By Gibbs Gibb Gibbs, Esq.

No. 1.

Antomy Brumel, a composer of sacred music about the year 1500, is considered as the founder of the French School of Music.

Giovani Maria Buononcini, one of the first masters of the Lombard School and pupil of Carissimi, published, in 1763, a work entitled Il Musico Prattico, dedicated to the Emperor Leopold. At page eighteen of this work he speaks of a cannon, in his opera of Terza, for 1,592 voices, or 648 choirs; which, on account of the difficulty of finding such a number of singers assembled together, he has reduced to twenty-two.

Giulio Caccini composed, in conjunction with Jacop Peri, the opera called Euridice, which was produced on the occasion of the marriage of Henry IV. of France to Mary de Medicis, and acted at Florence in 1600. Dr Burney considers Euridice to have been the first opera ever performed in public, though primary attempts at dramatic music were probably made at an earlier period.

Emilio del Cavaliere, a celebrated Roman nobleman and amateur composer, set to music the first known oratorio, which was performed at Rome, in the year 1600. It is called Rappresentatione di Anima, e di Corpo, and was represented in action on a stage in the church of La Vallicella, with scenes, decorations, and chorus, à l'antique, and analogous dances. The instruments of accompaniment (which were placed behind the scenes) in the first oratorio were the following:—Una lira doppia (a double lyre, perhaps a viol da gamba); Un clavicembalo (a harpsichord); Un chitarone (a large double guitar); Due flauti, o vero due Tibri all'antica (two common flutes). No violin is mentioned. In the instructions for the performance are the directions for the dances, and it is recommended for the actors to have instruments in their hands, as the playing, or appearing to play upon them, would assist illusion more than a visible orchestra.

Francesco Cavalli, chapel-master at Venice, and composer of thirty-five operas, between the years 1637 and 1667. Dr Burney says that the "grave recitative began first to be interrupted with that ornamented sort of stanza called aria, in the opera Giasone, set by Cavalli in 1649."

Richard Clark, born at Datchet, near new Windsor, in 1786, set himself about finding the real author of "God save the King," and after more than eight years' research (in which time he appears to have been most indefatigable), by a strong chain of circumstantial evidence, proves that the National Anthem was written by Ben Jonson, the music by Dr Bull, and that it was first sung at Merchant Tailors' Hall, on July 7th, 1607, by the gentlemen and children of His Majesty's Chapel Royal, when King James I. was present, at a dinner given by that company on his escape from the powder plot. This curious account was published in 1821 with forty-three plates, among which are portraits of Jonson, Bull, King James, &c. The work appears, by the list of subscribers, to have been very highly patronized. There are, indeed, some curious facts in it which had previously not appeared in print. After the work was published, Clark produced three tunes from very rare collections, which he had spoken of, but, from their scarcity, could not meet with in time to print for his subscribers. By these it is further proved that the same air of "God save the King" existed in the reign of King Charles, and was composed by Dr Bull.

A WARNING TO YOUNG ARTISTS.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

Sir,—As a warning to young artists, may I request that you will give publicity to the following letter, with a few words of explanation from myself, to whom it was sent:—

"65, Holland Road, Loughboro' Junction,
"27th May, 1875.

"Madame,—I should like to have an interview with you on the subject of an engagement. Will you call at the above address on Saturday morning, at eleven o'clock, and, as I have many visitors, be good enough to send this note up, and you will see me immediately. I am, Madame, yours obediently,

"Miss ——." "E. C. English.

Not being wholly unknown in the musical profession, it is usual for me to receive communications from parties quite strangers to me. I kept the appointment, accompanied by a relative. On quitting the station, we soon reached the road and house indicated—the latter, a neat, respectable-looking villa. An old person, with the dress and—at first glance—the appearance of a gentlewoman, opened the door to my summons, showing me a well-furnished hall. My relative paused at the end of the little garden. On perceiving her, the woman I addressed answered me, in an undertone, "Mr English is at home; he would admit you if you were alone; but he cannot do so with your mamma, as it might get you into trouble." Highly incensed, beckoning to my companion, I asked—demanded—an explanation. Denying, now, that the gentleman was at home, we received contradictory and impertinent answers to our enquiries, and even threats, from this (so she informed us) naval officer's daughter. Several attempts were made by the woman to get possession of the letter mentioned above, which I held in my hand. Insulted, shocked, and greatly annoyed, we turned away, losing no more (happily) than our railway fares, our time, and our tempers. But what—as any young, unsuspecting artist might have done—had I gone to that house alone? I enclose my name and address.

Your obedient servant, A Young Pianiste.

OPERA-GOERS IN THE ETERNAL CITY.

I have often read that the Italian public listen only carelessly to music, and never fail to indulge in tolerably noisy conversation between two cavatinas. This may, perhaps, have been true in the time of Cimarosa and Paisiello, but things are very much changed to-day. Let us take, for instance, a performance of Aida at the Teatro Apollo, Rome. It begins at eight o'clock precisely. Five minutes before the rising of the curtain the house is crammed, and, at the first stroke of the bow, a religious silence reigns around. During the first act enthusiasm is kept down and does not overstep reasonable limits. In the second, the public gradually warm up, some of them venturing to hum with the prima donna the favourite phrases, while the more reserved among the audience endeavour to reduce them to silence. In the third act, people get excited, and the feverishness becomes more general. During the duet between Aida and Amonasro, exclamations are heard from all parts of the house, and when, at length, Radames appears and avows his treachery: "Son disonorata; io tradii la patria," all the spectators burst forth, like so many volcanoes, and every voice sings in unison with that of the artist. Hands are clapped and feet are stamped with frantic enthusiasm; the ladies' handkerchiefs float like oriflammes all round the various tiers; there is an infernal hubbub, a fearful noise in which everyone takes part; the pit, the boxes, the musicians in the orchestra, and even foreigners, are carried away by this inundation of enthusiasm. Verdi's soul has passed into the souls of two thousand spectators, who dispersed, trembling with emotion, along the lobbies and in the crush-room, where all sorts of exclamations are heard crossing each other like rockets. The fourth act proceeds amid less lively transports and the burning atmosphere is a little cooler. But, at the end of the performance, about midnight, the musical fever breaks out more violently than ever. Everywhere—on the staircases of the theatre, in the vestibule, in the streets—Verdi's melodies are again audible, and are carried into every part of the city, till the hour for repose at length comes to calm down the agitation, and silence the echoes of the enthusiastic vocalists.—Neue freie Presse.

The London representative of the International Mozart Institution (Mr Sigmund Menkes) has arranged a concert for the benefit of the society, at the Alexandra Palace, on Tuesday, June 29th. The concert is to be conducted by Sir Julius Benedict, Mr Edward Dannreuther, and Mr Weist Hill. Several distinguished vocal and instrumental artists have promised their support.

Digitized by Google

REVIEWS.

METZLER AND CO.

She and I. Song. Words by COURTENAY BOYLE. Music by LOUISA GRAY. LOUISA GRAY, known at all times as a clever ballad writer, has seldom been happier in her inspiration than in the present instance. She has been fortunate enough to obtain in Mr Boyle's lyrics a little poem worthy of a rich musical setting, and she has succeeded in illustrating it perfectly. For amateur vocalists, as well as for the public concert-room, "She and I" will doubtless prove attractive. It is written in the key of B flat for tenor, and is also published a third lower for average voices.

J. B. CRAMER AND CO.

After so long. Song. Words by HELEN MARION BURNSIDE. Music by LOUISA GRAY.

A song simple in theme, but exquisitely tender in sentiment, both in the words and music. Miss Burnside's muse is certainly sympathetic, if a trifle vague, and Louisa Gray's music is melodious and expressive, without being either ambitious or straining after effect. The voice part is skilfully written, and the song is available for all qualities of voice. It is printed both in G and E. The accompaniment is showy, though presenting no difficulties in the way of an average performer.

STANLEY LUCAS, WEBER AND CO.

Fancy's Dream. Vocal Waltz. Written by FRANK W. GREEN. Composed by AMY WEDDLE.

Miss AMY WEDDLE perseveres steadily in the path she has struck out for herself as a composer of light vocal music. The present effort is tuneful, rhythmical, and eminently singable—qualities which are sufficient of themselves to recommend it to consideration. Mr Green's words are above the average; and altogether "Fancy's Dreams" is a production of which the young composer may feel proud. Key D major, highest note G.

LINES WRITTEN ON THE FIRST PAGE OF A LADY'S ALBUM.*

These fair, unsullied pages aptly seem
To me an image of an infant life,
Ere yet from off its soul the angel-gleam
Has passed away before the clouds of strife.

And as each cycle of old Time bereaves
Or adds a joy unto our miser store—
Leaving the while upon the heart's red leaves
A touch to sere or charm for evermore;

So shall thy book, dear friend, ere long become
A reflex of the living world around;
A shrine whereat, though tongue and lips be dumb,
The heart will speak—its hopes and fears resound.

Here pale-browed Grief, arrayed in sable guise,
Will sadly brood o'er longings unfulfilled;
While her twin-sister, Joy, with laughing eyes,
Will sweetly sing of things attained as willed.

Here Love, the April-eyed, will often rest
His wayward wing, and, stringing Poesy's lute,
Give echo to the burning thoughts that vest
The soul with bliss—keeping the dear lips mute.

Here Hope and Faith—the timid and the bold—
Will hie, with Fancy from her astral throne;
And gentle Art her radiant gifts unfold—
All hither won by Friendship's magic tone.

Thus, dearest friend, thou'lt find in after days
Herein a semblance of the mighty heart
Which stirs our being in its every phase;
God grant that Joy may be the major part.

HUGH CAMERON.

* Copyright.

RAILWAY FETE AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE.—On Wednesday, June 16th, there is to be a novel entertainment at the Crystal Palace, which will deserve extensive public support, if only it were to benefit the funds of the Railway Benevolent Institution. This is one object, and to draw together for the day a great many of the staff and their friends is another. Moreover, in addition to a most popular programme of special attractions, we may mention that there is to be a grand concert by the united musical societies of some of the larger companies, and a dramatic performance by amateurs of the Railway Clearing House. The exhibition of models, pictures, and scientific inventions, to illustrate railway history and progress cannot fail to be highly interesting. Excursion trains at cheap fares will run for this occasion from all parts of the country, both day and five day trips.

THE VOICE & SINGING

BY

ADOLFO FERRARI.

THE FORMATION AND CULTIVATION OF THE VOICE FOR SINGING.

Price 12s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, REGENT STREET, W.

"The remarkable qualities of this book are the author's freedom from conventional trammels, the strong sense of his opinions, and the novelty yet evident soundness of his precepts; his work has consequently come into general use as a manual of vocal instruction."—Daily News.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE,

For invigorating and enriching the voice, and removing affections of the throat.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE is universally acknowledged to be the most valuable remedy for sore throat, hoarseness and relaxed throat. It should always be taken before singing or reciting, as it strengthens the vocal organs. It is most extensively prescribed by the faculty for the throat and voice. Dr Lewis of Basingstoke says he finds them most efficacious, and in Dr Copland's Dictionary of Practical Medicine (Longman & Co.), they are strongly recommended at pages 672 and 1492. They are used by all the greatest vocalists and orators in Europe, and have been established over a quarter of a century. Testimonials from Patti, Grisi, Lablache, Santley, &c. Sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d. by all Chemists throughout the United Kingdom and the Colonies.

Just Published.

"A DREAM WISH."

GIPSY SONG.

The Poetry by M. A. BAINES.

The Music by MICHAEL BERGSON.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

VOCAL EXERCISES.

Composed by FRANK MORI.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

N.B.—These Vocal Exercises, as taught by FRANK MORI, are invaluable both to Students and Professors.

WILFORD MORGAN'S SONGS.

HER I LOVE .. .. 4s.

COULD I BUT CALL HER MINE.. .. .. 4s.

MY SWEETHEART WHEN A BOY .. .. 4s.

SWEET EVENING AIR .. .. 4s.

(N.B.—The above Songs have been sung with distinguished success by Mr WILFORD MORGAN.)

LITTLE BIRDIE, SING TO ME .. .. 4s.

(Sung by Miss EDITH WYNNE.)

ANTHEM.

IF THOU WILT FORGET ME (THE 13TH PSALM) .. .. .. 4s.

(For Tenor or Soprano Solo, with Chorus ad. lib., as sung at the Temple Church. Composed by WILFORD MORGAN.)

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

MDLLE ZARE THALBERG.

LE CARNAVAL DE VENISE, with Variations, by Sir JULIUS BENEDICT, as sung by MDLLE ZARE THALBERG, MDLLE MARIMON, &c., at the FLORAL HALL CONCERTS, is published—price 4s.—by DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

GRAND MARCH (BRIDAL or PROCESSIONAL), for the Pianoforte or Organ. Composed by W. F. TAYLOR. Price 3s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

THE LARK'S SONG. The Poetry by FREDERICK ENOCH. The Music by HENRY SMART. Price 3s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W,

O CARE TENEBRE. Duetto. Composed by J. P. GOLDBERG. Price 4s. London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

GUGLIELMO'S LAST BALLAD.

"WERT THOU WITH ME."

The Words by GEORGE LINLEY.

The Music by P. D. GUGLIELMO.

Price 4s.

London; DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Digitized by Google

In 74 Numbers, price One Penny, or in One Volume, cloth, gilt edges, price 7s. 6d.

MOTETS FOR THE YEAR.

A COLLECTION OF OFFERTORIES,

WITH APPROPRIATE WORDS FOR EVERY SUNDAY AND DAY OF OBLIGATION DURING THE YEAR.

Edited and Dedicated (by permission) to the Right Rev. J. DANELL, D.D., Lord Bishop of Southwark, by

W. M. LUTZ,

ORGANIST OF ST. GEORGE'S CATHEDRAL, SOUTHWARK.

CONTENTS.

1	1st Sunday in Advent	Ad te levavi	Bs. Solo or Qrtt.	Webbe
2	2nd Sunday in Advent	Deus tu convertens	Qrtt. or Chorus	Henry Smart
3	3rd Sunday in Advent	Juste et pie vivamus	Duet or Chorus	Webbe
4	4th Sunday in Advent	Ave Maria	Solo or Chorus	W. M. Lutz
5	Any Sunday during Advent	Rorate	Chorus & Solo	Webbe
6	Christmas Day	Adeste Fideles	Solo & Chorus	Webbe
7	Sunday within Octave of Christmas	Attollite	Solo & Chorus	Webbe
8	Circumcision	Tui sunt coeli	Ten. So. & Chor.	A. Sullivan
9	Epiphany	Reges Tharsis	Chorus	W. M. Lutz
10	Sunday within Octave	Jubilate	Chorus	W. M. Lutz
11	Holy Name	Jesu dulcis	Qrtt. & Chorus	Beethoven
12	3rd Sunday after Epiphany	Dextera Domini	Chorus	Schumann
13	Septuagesima Sunday	Bonum est	Solo & Chorus	Benedict
14	Sexagesima Sunday	Perfice	Solo or Chorus	Webbe
15	Quinquagesima Sunday	Super flumina	Soli & Chorus	Webbe
16	1st Sunday in Lent	Ecce nunc tempus	Duet or Chorus	Webbe
17	2nd Sunday in Lent	Preces populi	Chorus	Webbe
18	3rd Sunday in Lent	Justitiæ	Chorus or Qrtt.	Mendelssohn
1	4th Sunday in Lent	Ad te levavi	Bs. Solo or Qrtt.	Webbe
19	Passion Sunday	Stabat Mater	Chorus	Webbe
20	Palm Sunday	Improperium	Chorus	André
21	Easter Sunday (Gradual)	Hæc dies	Chorus or Trio. T.T. & B.	Webbe
22	,, ,, (Offertory)	Victimæ	Chorus	Webbe
23	Low Sunday	Angelus Domini	Chorus	André
24	2nd Sunday after Easter	Deus misereatur	Chorus & Soli	Webbe
25	3rd Sunday after Easter	Lauda anima	Solo or Chorus	Webbe
10	4th Sunday after Easter	Jubilate	Chorus	W. M. Lutz
26	5th Sunday after Easter	Benedicimus	Duet or Chorus	Webbe
27	Ascension Day	Ascendit Deus	Duet or Chorus	Webbe
28	Sunday within Octave of Ascension Day	Rex Gloriæ	Duet or Chorus	Webbe
29	Whit Sunday (Gradual)	Emitte / Veni sancte spiritus	Trio or Chorus / Duet or Chorus	Webbe
30	,, ,, (Offertory)	Confirma hoc Deus	Soli or Chorus	W. M. Lutz
31	Trinity Sunday	Benedictus est	Chorus	W. M. Lutz
32	1st Sunday after Pentecost	Intende voci	Chorus	André
33	Corpus Christi (Gradual)	Lauda Sion	Duet or Chorus	Webbe
34	,, ,, (Offertory)	O sacrum convivium	Solo	Webbe
35	2nd Sunday after Pentecost	Domine convertere	Soli & Chorus	W. M. Lutz
36	3rd Sunday after Pentecost	Protector	Duet	Webbe
37	4th Sunday after Pentecost	Illumina	Solo or Chorus	W. M. Lutz
38	St Peter and St Paul	Roma felix	Duet or Chorus	Webbe
39	5th Sunday after Pentecost	Audi hymnum	Solo & Chorus	Webbe
14	6th Sunday after Pentecost	Perfice	Solo or Chorus	Webbe
40	7th Sunday after Pentecost	Sicut in holocaustis	Qrtt. or Chorus	Mozart
41	8th Sunday after Pentecost	Tu es gloria	Bass Solo	Webbe
18	9th Sunday after Pentecost	Justitiæ	Chorus or Qrtt.	Mendelssohn
1	10th Sunday after Pentecost	Ad te levavi	Solo or Quartett	Webbe
42	11th Sunday after Pentecost	Exurgat Deus	Chorus	Webbe
43	Assumption	Assumpta est	Chorus	Neukom
44	12th Sunday after Pentecost	Benedicam	Chorus	Eybler
45	13th Sunday after Pentecost	In te speravi	T. So. (& Chor. ad lib.)	W. M. Lutz
36	14th Sunday after Pentecost	Protector	Duet	Webbe
13	15th Sunday after Pentecost	Bonum est	Solo or Chorus	Benedict
46	16th Sunday after Pentecost	Domine in auxilium	Soli & Chorus	W. M. Lutz
47	17th Sunday after Pentecost	Oravi	Soli & Chorus	Dr Crookal
48	18th Sunday after Pentecost	Timebunt	Chorus	W. M. Lutz
49	19th Sunday after Pentecost	Si ambulavere	Bs. Solo (Chor. ad lib.)	W. M. Lutz
15	20th Sunday after Pentecost	Super flumina	Chorus	Webbe
50	21st Sunday after Pentecost	Vir erat hus	Chorus	W. M. Lutz
51	22nd Sunday after Pentecost	Recordare	Solo & Chorus	Führer
52	All Saints (Gradual)	Tibi omnes angeli	Chorus	Webbe
53	,, (Offertory)	Justorum	Solo	Webbe
54	23rd Sunday after Pentecost	Hæc dicit Dominus	Soli & Chorus	Webbe
55	Nativity	Beata	Chorus	W. M. Lutz
56	Holy Name	Ave Maria	Solo	Cherubini
57	Seven Dolors	Stabat Mater	Chorus	Gregorian
4	Rosary	Ave Maria	Solo or Chorus	W. M. Lutz
55	Maternity	Beata	Chorus	W. M. Lutz
58	Purity	Succurre miseris	Duet & Chorus	Webbe
4	Patronage	Ave Maria	Solo or Chorus	W. M. Lutz
59	Confessor	Ecce sacerdos	Duet	Webbe
60	Martyrs	Qui seminant	Duet & Chorus	Webbe
61	One Martyr	Justus ut palma	Qrtt. or Chorus	W. M. Lutz
62	Apostles	Gloria et honore	Qrtt. or Chorus	W. M. Lutz
63	Virgins and Holy Women	Diffusa	Qrtt. or Chorus	W. M. Lutz
64		Asperges	Chorus	Gregorian
65	In Paschal time	Vidi aquam	Duet or Chorus	Webbe
66	Prayer for the Queen	Domine salvum fac	Chorus	Martini

APPENDIX.

67	Magnificat	Soli & Chor.	Webbe
68	Alma (from 1st Sunday in Advent till the Purification)	Solo & Chor.	Webbe
69	Ave Regina (from the Purification till Maunday Thursday)	Soli & Chor.	Webbe
70	Regina Coeli (from Holy Saturday till Trinity Eve)	Soli & Chor.	Webbe
71	Salve Regina (from Trinity Eve till Advent)	Soli & Chor.	Webbe
72	O Salutaris	Chorus	Webbe
73	O sacrum convivium	Dt. or Chor.	Webbe
74	Tantum ergo	Chorus	Webbe

Also, Just Published,

SHORT MASSES FOR SMALL CHOIRS.

EDITED BY SIR J. BENEDICT.

A COLLECTION OF MASSES, FOR ONE, TWO, THREE, AND FOUR VOICES,

WITH ORGAN ACCOMPANIMENTS.

Price Sixpence each, or in One Volume, cloth, price 5s.

CONTENTS.

1	Webbe's Mass	(3 voices)	in A.
2	,, ,,	,,	in D.
3	,, ,,	,,	in B flat.
4	,, ,,	,,	in F.
5	,, ,,	,,	in C.
6	,, ,,	,,	in D minor.
7	Webbe's Mass	(4 voices)	in G.
8	Missa de Angelis	(Unison)	in D.
9	Dumont's Mass	,,	in D minor.
10	Missa in Dominicis diebus per annum	,,	in D minor.
11	Missa pro defunctis	,,	in F.
12	Wesley's Gregorian Mass	(4 voices)	in G.

These Masses are published in a cheap form, in order to meet a growing demand for simple, melodious, harmonized music. In the cases where the register has been found too high for boys' voices, supplementary notes have been inserted.

They are thus adapted as well for Chancel Choirs, as for those in which the Soprano parts are taken by female voices.

LONDON: BOOSEY & CO., 295, REGENT STREET, W.

Digitized by Google

NEW SONGS.

THE LAST FAREWELL.

New Song by J. L. HATTON.

Sung by Mdlle ALBANI, at the Floral Hall Concerts, with the greatest possible success. In C and E. Price 4s.

NEW SONGS
BY ARTHUR SULLIVAN.

SWEETHEARTS. In A♭ and B♭. Sung by E. LLOYD 4s
THE JUDGE'S SONG. From Trial by Jury. Sung by Mr. FRED SULLIVAN 4s
TENDER AND TRUE. In E♭ and F. Sung by EDITH WYNNE 4s
THE DISTANT SHORE. In E♭, F, and G 4s
THOU ART WEARY. In D minor and F minor ... 4s
THOU'RT PASSING HENCE... ... ... 4s

NEW SONGS
BY VIRGINIA GABRIEL.

CLOVELLY. Words from "Songs for Sailors." Dedicated to H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh... ... 4s
SOWING AND REAPING. Sacred Song 3s
SHE CAME LIKE A DREAM. Sung by Madame ENRIQUEZ 3s
THE WHITE DOVE 2s 6d

NEW SONGS
BY FAVOURITE COMPOSERS.

YES AND NO ... ... LOUISA GRAY 3s
MY LADYE ... ... AMY COMPTON 3s
IN THE TWILIGHT HOURS „ 3s
ELSIE'S DREAM ... JOSEPH L. ROECKEL 3s
BESIDE THE SEA ... „ „ 3s
SUMMER WINDS ... „ „ 3s
SO LONG AGO... ... GEORGE BARKER 3s
NINETTE ... ... „ „ 3s
THE ENTREATY The Lady CLARENCE PAGET 3s
GLAMOUR ... „ „ 3s
SWEET LISETTE ... ... J. L. ROECKEL 3s
THE CHILDREN IN THE WOOD „ 3s

CHAPPELL & CO.,
50, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON.

ROYAL
ITALIAN OPERA.

PRODUCTION OF WAGNER'S
'LOHENGRIN.'

The Books of Airs (in Two Books), arranged for Pianoforte, with ad. lib. accompaniments for Flute, Violin, and Violoncello, by

W. HUTCHINS CALLCOTT

PRICE.

Solos ... ... 5s. each.
Duets ... ... 6s. „
Accompaniments ... ... 1s. „

LONDON:
HUTCHINGS & ROMER,
9, Conduit Street, Regent Street, W.

Digitized by Google

Printed by HENDERSON, RAIT, AND FENTON, at No. 69, Marylebone Lane, Oxford Street, in the Parish of Marylebone, in the County of Middlesex.
Published by WILLIAM DUNCAN DAVISON, at the Office, 244, Regent Street, Saturday, June 5, 1875.

The Musical World.

(REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.)

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST, 20s. PER ANNUM,
Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to DUNCAN DAVISON & CO., 244, Regent Street, London, W.

VOL. 53—No. 24. SATURDAY, JUNE 12, 1875. PRICE { 4d. Unstamped. 5d. Stamped.

HER MAJESTY'S OPERA, THEATRE ROYAL, DRURY LANE.

Production of "Lohengrin."

THIS EVENING (SATURDAY), June 12th, will be produced a Grand Romantic Opera in Four Acts, entitled, "LOHENGRIN." The Music and original Text by RICHARD WAGNER. The new Scenery by Mr William Beverly. The mise-en-scene by Mr Edward Stirling. Elsa di Brabante, Mdme Christine Nilsson; Lohengrin, Signor Campanini; Federico di Telramondo, Signor Galassi; Enrico, Herr Behrens; Araldo, Signor Costa; and Ortruda, Mdlle Tietjens. Director of the Music and Conductor—Sir Michael Costa.

Special Notice.—On the occasion of the production of "LOHENGRIN," This Evening, the Opera will commence at Eight o'clock precisely.

Mdme Christine Nilsson.—Extra Night.

MONDAY next, June 14 (by desire), "FAUST." Faust, M. Capoul; Mephistopheles, Signor Rota; Valentino, Signor de Reschi; Wagner, Signor Costa; Siebel, Mdme Trebelli-Bettini; Marta, Mdme Demeric-Lablache; and Margherita, Mdme Christine Nilsson.

Tietjens as Norma.

TUESDAY next, June 15, will be performed (for the first time this season) BELLINI'S tragic Opera of "NORMA." Pollione, Signor Campanini (his first appearance in that character in London); Oroveso, Herr Behrens; Flavio, Signor Rinaldini; Adalgisa, Mdlle Bauermeister; and Norma, Mdlle Tietjens.

Extra Night.—"Lohengrin."

THURSDAY next, June 17 (for the second time), WAGNER'S Opera, "LOHENGRIN." (Characters as above.)

Mdlle Tietjens.

SATURDAY, June 19, ROSSINI'S Opera, "SEMIRAMIDE." Arsace, Mdme Trebelli-Bettini; Assur, Signor Rota; Oroe, Herr Behrens; Idreno, Signor Rinaldini; L'Ombra, Signor Costa; and Semiramide, Mdlle Tietjens.

Doors open at Eight o'clock. Commence at Half-past Eight. Except to-night (Saturday), on which occasion the opera will commence at Eight o'clock precisely, the doors opening half an hour previously. Amphitheatre stalls, 7s. and 5s.; amphitheatre, 2s. Box-office open daily from Ten till Five, under the direction of Mr Bailey.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA, COVENT GARDEN.

THIS EVENING (SATURDAY), June 12th, will be performed "DINORAH." Mesdames Adelina Patti and Scalchi; MM. Marini, Capponi, Sabater, and Graziani.

MONDAY next, June 14, "DON GIOVANNI." Mesdames Adelina Patti, Vilda, and D'Angeri; MM. Faure, Ciampi, Marini, &c.

TUESDAY next, June 15, "UN BALLO IN MASCHERA." Mdlles D'Angeri, Scalchi, and Bianchi; MM. Graziani, Capponi, Tagliafico, Pavani, &c.

THURSDAY next, June 17, "LOHENGRIN." Elsa, Mdlle Albani; Federico, M. Maurel; Lohengrin, Signor Carpi (his first appearance in England).

FRIDAY next, June 18, "ROMEO E GIULIETTA" (first time these seven years). Mesdmes Adelina Patti and Bianchi; MM. Graziani, Cotogni, Begagiolo, Nicolini, &c.

SATURDAY, June 19, "SEMIRAMIDE." Mdmes Vilda and Scalchi; MM. Pavani, Capponi, Faure, &c.

The Opera commences at Half-past Eight.

The Box Office, under the portico of the Theatre, is open from Ten to Five. Boxes from £2 12s. 6d. to £6 6s.; stalls, £1 1s.; pit tickets, 7s.; amphitheatre stalls, 10s. 6d. and 5s.; amphitheatre, 2s. 6d.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—SUMMER CONCERT.—This Day (SATURDAY). The Programme will include: Overture, Zampa (Herold); Polonaise for pianoforte and orchestra (Chopin); Hymn, "Hear my prayer" (Mendelssohn); Symphony, "Pastorale" (Beethoven); Rhapsodie Hongroise for pianoforte (Liszt); Overture, "Di Ballo" (Sullivan). Vocalists—Mdme Blanche Cole and Mr Edward Lloyd. Crystal Palace Choir. Enlarged Orchestra. Pianoforte—Mdlle Marie Krebs. Conductor—Mr AUGUSTE MANNS. Numbered Stalls, Half-a-Crown. Admission to Palace, Half-a-Crown, or by Guinea Season Ticket.

ALEXANDRA PALACE.—The INTERNATIONAL MOZART INSTITUTION'S GRAND CONCERT will be held in the Great Central Hall, on TUESDAY, 29th June. Orchestra and Choir of 1,000 performers. Full particulars will be shortly announced. Reserved Seats can be secured of all the Company's Agents,

WESTMINSTER HOSPITAL.

Mdme CHRISTINE NILSSON'S

GRAND MORNING CONCERT,

UNDER THE IMMEDIATE PATRONAGE OF

HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE QUEEN,
THEIR ROYAL HIGHNESSES THE DUKE AND DUCHESS OF EDINBURGH,
H.R.H. PRINCESS CHRISTIAN OF SCHLESWIG-HOLSTEIN,
H.R.H. PRINCESS LOUISE (MARCHIONESS OF LORNE),
H.R.H. THE DUCHESS OF TECK,

IN AID OF THE FUNDS REQUIRED TO OBTAIN A

PERMANENT SITE

FOR THE

WESTMINSTER TRAINING SCHOOL & HOME FOR NURSES,

ON

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 23RD, AT ST. JAMES'S HALL.

To Commence about Three o'clock and Terminate about Five.

Mdme CHRISTINE NILSSON has the gratification to announce that she will be assisted by the following distinguished Artists:—

MDLLE TIETJENS. MDLLE DE BELOCCA. MDME TREBELLI-BETTINI.
MR SIMS REEVES and M. CAPOUL.
M. DE SORIA and SIGNOR FOLI.

Violin—MDME NORMAN-NERUDA.

CONDUCTOR .. .. .. MR ARTHUR SULLIVAN.

Sofa stalls, One Guinea; stalls, Half-a-Guinea; balcony stalls, 10s. 6d.; balcony, 5s.; gallery, area, and orchestra seats, 2s. 6d. Tickets may be obtained at Mitchell's Library, 33, Old Bond Street; Chappell & Co.'s, 50, New Bond Street; Ollivier's, 38, Old Bond Street; Cramer & Co.'s, 201, Regent Street; Stanley Lucas, Weber & Co.'s, 84, New Bond Street; Lacon & Ollier's, 168, New Bond Street; Keith, Prowse & Co.'s, 48, Cheapside; A. Hayes', 4, Royal Exchange Buildings; and at Austin's Ticket Office, St James's Hall, No. 28, Piccadilly.

ST GEORGE'S HALL.

SIGNOR ARDITI'S ANNUAL GRAND MORNING CONCERT

MONDAY MORNING, JUNE 14th.

To Commence at Half-past Two o'clock precisely.

Artists.

Mdme SINICO-CAMPOBELLO. *Mdlle PERNINI.
Mdlle JOSE SHERRINGTON.
Signorina MARIA CARNIELI. *Mdlle LOUISE SINGELLI.
*Mdme TREBELLI-BETTINI.
Mdlle VICTORIA BUNSEN. Miss ALICE FAIRMAN.
*M. CAPOUL. Signor UBIO. Signor BRIGNOLI.
M. DE SORIA.
Signor CAMPOBELLO. Mr SANTLEY.

Pianist—Signor MARTUCCI. Violin—Signor PAPINI. Violoncello—M. PAQUE.

At the Piano—
Signor ALBERTO VISETTI. Mr. F. COWEN.
Herr GANZ. Signor TITO MATTEI.

CONDUCTOR .. .. Signor ARDITI.
ACTING MANAGER .. Mr. W. B. HEALEY.

Box seats and sofa stalls, One Guinea; stalls, Half-a-Guinea; balcony, 5s.; area, 5s. Tickets may be had at Signor ARDITI'S Residence, 41, Albany Street, Regent's Park.

* By kind permission of J. H. MAPLESON, Esq.

Google

Under the Immediate Patronage of
His Royal Highness the Prince of WALES,
Her Royal Highness the Princess of WALES,
His Royal Highness the Duke of EDINBURGH,
Her Royal and Imperial Highness the Duchess of EDINBURGH,
His Royal Highness Prince CHRISTIAN,
Her Royal Highness Princess CHRISTIAN,
Her Royal Highness the Grand Duchess of MECKLENBURGH-STRELITZ,
His Royal Highness the Duke of TECK,
and
Her Royal Highness Princess Mary, Duchess of TECK.

SIR JULIUS BENEDICT'S ANNUAL GRAND MORNING CONCERT, at the FLORAL HALL, Covent Garden, on MONDAY, June 21, commencing at Two o'clock, when Mdme Adelina Patti, Mdlle Albani, Mdlle Zaré Thalberg, Mdlle Bianchi, Mdlle Marimon; Signori Nicolini, Piazza, Graziani, Cotogni, Bagagiolo, &c., will appear. Stalls, 21s.; reserved seats, 10s. 6d.; reserved balcony seats, 7s. 6d. and 5s.; to be had at the Box Office of the Royal Italian Opera; Mr Austin's, 28, Piccadilly; the Principal Musicsellers and Librarians; and of Sir JULIUS BENEDICT.

MR JOHN THOMAS (Harpist to Her Majesty the Queen) begs to announce that his GRAND HARP CONCERT will take place at ST JAMES'S HALL, on THURSDAY Morning, June 24, assisted by the most eminent Artists. Harp Solos, Songs with Harp accompaniment, Duets for two Harps, and several compositions for Band of Harps. Further particulars will be duly announced. Sofa stalls, 21s.; reserved seats, 10s. 6d.; balcony, 5s.; admission, 2s. 6d.; to be had of Stanley Lucas, Weber, and Co., 84, New Bond Street; the principal Musicsellers and Librarians; at Austin's Ticket Office, St James's Hall; and of Mr JOHN THOMAS, 53, Welbeck Street, W.

MR OBERTHUR'S MATINÉE MUSICALE, WEDNESDAY, the 30th of June, at his Residence, 14, Talbot Road, Westbourne Park. Vocalists—Miss Sophie Ferrari, Signor Urio, Signor Caravoglia. Instrumentalists—Miss Beard, Miss Dyne, Herr J. Ludwig, Signor Alfert, and Mr Oberthur. Conductors—Signor Mazzoni, Herr Lahmeyer, and Herr Lehmeyer. Tickets, 10s. 6d. each; at the principal Music Shops, and of Mr OBERTHUR.

SIGNOR and MDME GUSTAVE GARCIA'S SECOND ANNUAL MORNING CONCERT, ST GEORGE'S HALL, June 16. Vocalists—Mesdmes A. Fairman, Th. Freidländer, Garcia, Misses Thorndike and Waters (pupils of Sig. Garcia); Messrs Santley, Foli, Werrenrath, Thorndike (first appearance in England), and Garcia. Instrumentalists—Messrs Aptommas, De Swert, Dannreuther. Choir of Ladies. Conductors—Messrs Ganz, Randegger, Visetti, and Garcia. Tickets at the principal Musicsellers, Bond Street.

MR ARTHUR WILFORD'S EVENING CONCERT, BEETHOVEN ROOMS, 27, Harley Street, Cavendish Square, THURSDAY, June 17th, at Eight o'clock. Mdlle Thekla Friedländer, Mdme Augusta Roche, Herr Franke (violin), and Herr Schuberth (violoncello). Tickets, 7s. each; of Stanley Lucas, Weber & Co., 84, New Bond Street; usual Agents; and of Mr A. WILFORD, at his Residence, 10, Netherwood Street, Kilburn.

MASTER HENRY WALKER begs to announce that his FIRST PIANOFORTE RECITAL (under distinguished Patronage) will take place on MONDAY Morning, the 28th inst., at ST JAMES'S HALL, commencing at Three o'clock. Master Walker will be assisted by Mdme Norman-Néruda and Mr Charles Hallé. Stalls, 5s.; balcony, 3s. Tickets, 2s. and 1s.; at the usual Libraries, and the Hall.

MISS FLORENCE SANDERS (Pupil of Mr W. H. HOLMES) has the honour to announce that her EVENING CONCERT will take place (under distinguished Patronage) at ST GEORGE'S HALL, on SATURDAY, the 19th June, 1875, when she will be assisted by the following Artists: Vocalists—Miss Florence Ashton, Miss M. J. Williams, Mr Wadmore, Mr Frank Holmes, Mr Marre, and Mr Stedman. Instrumentalists—Herr Schuberth and Miss Florence Sanders. Conductor—Mr ALFRED GILBERT. Tickets, 10s. 6d., 5s., 3s., and 2s.; at the Hall, and at all the principal Musicsellers.

MRS ELIZABETH BEESLEY'S MATINÉE MUSICALE, at 18, Queensberry Place, Cromwell Road, S.W. (by kind permission of George B. C. Leverson, Esq.), on WEDNESDAY, June 16th, at Half-past Three o'clock. Miss Linda Kaiser. Violin — Mons. Sainton. Violoncello — Mons. Lasserre. Pianoforte—Mrs Elizabeth Beesley. Accompanist—Mr Henry Parker. Tickets, One Guinea each; of Stanley Lucas, Weber & Co., 84, New Bond Street; usual Agents; and of Mrs ELIZABETH BEESLEY, 19, Bentinck Street, W.

THE MUSICAL ARTISTS' SOCIETY.—The FIRST CONCERT will take place on FRIDAY Evening, June 25th, at the BEETHOVEN ROOMS, 27, Harley Street. To commence at Eight o'clock precisely. Family tickets (to admit Three), 10s. 6d.; single tickets, 5s. each; may be had of the principal Musicsellers.—ARTHUR O'LEARY, Hon. Sec., 84, New Bond Street.

MISS EDWARDS' ANNUAL MATINÉE MUSICALE, at the BEETHOVEN ROOMS, 27, Harley Street, SATURDAY, June 26th, at Three o'clock. Eminent Artists will assist. Tickets and Programmes at Messrs Duncan Davison, 244, Regent Street; Messrs Mitchell, 33, Old Bond Street; and at her Residence, 100, Ebury Street, Eaton Square.

THE LONDON ACADEMY of MUSIC.—Instituted 1861. Principal—Professor WYLDE, Mus. Doc. Cantab. The next CONCERT, by the Professional Students of the London Academy of Music studying in the classes of the following Professors, will take place in ST GEORGE'S HALL, in the third week in June:—Signori Garcia, Schira, Messrs J. F. Barnett and C. K. Salaman, Herren Ganz, Henseler, Beavan, Marlois, Lehmeyer, Manns, and Barth, Signori Lablache, Traventi, and Tartaglione, Herren Pollitzer, Ludwig, Signor Scuderi and M. Paque. Tickets, 5s., 2s. 6d.

The Half Term for Amateur and Professional Students commenced last Tuesday, June 8. Fee, £2 12s. 6d. Prospectuses at the Office, St George's Hall, Langham Place, Regent Street.

G. R. WILKINSON, Sec.

MR KUHE'S GRAND ANNUAL MORNING CONCERT, at the FLORAL HALL, MONDAY, June 14. Mdme Adelina Patti and Mdlle Albani; Mdlles Zaré Thalberg, Marimon, Scalchi, and Smeroschi; MM. Nicolini, Pavani, Graziani, Maurel, Bagagiolo, and Capponi. Violin—Herr Wilhelmj. Violoncello—M. Paque. Pianoforte—Mr Kuhe. Conductors—MM. Vianesi, Bevignani, W. Ganz, and Sir Julius Benedict. Stalls, One Guinea; reserved seats, 10s. 6d.; balcony reserved seats, 7s. 6d. and 5s.; gallery, 2s. 6d. Mr KUHE'S address—6, Upper Westbourne Terrace, W.

MDME SAINTON-DOLBY'S VOCAL ACADEMY.—The FIRST CONCERT will take place at WILLIS'S ROOMS, St James's, on TUESDAY, June 22nd, at Three o'clock, when the following Students will appear: Misses Wigan, Vernon, Courtney, Cunningham, Wallace, and Meenan; assisted by Miss Eva Leslie (former pupil). Mr Valentine Fabrini, Signor Federici, Mrs Beesley (pianoforte), M. Sainton (violin), Mr Thouless and Signor Visetti (accompanists). Particulars of the Concert and of the Vocal Academy can be obtained of Mdme Sainton-Dolby, personally, on Tuesdays, between 3 and 4 o'clock, at her residence, 71, Gloucester Place, Hyde Park. Reserved seats, 7s.; unreserved seats, 5s.; may be obtained of Messrs Stanley Lucas, Weber & Co., 84, New Bond Street; of Messrs Chappell, 50, Old Bond Street; and of Mdme SAINTON-DOLBY, as above.

"O CARE TENEBRE."

THE MISSES ALLITSEN will sing GOLDBERG'S new Duet, "O CARE TENEBRE," on the 29th June, at Mdme Sievers' Concert.

REMOVAL.

MONSIEUR ALEXANDRE BILLET begs to announce his REMOVAL from Keppel Street to No. 50, Albany Street, Regent's Park.

THE GUITAR.—MDME SIDNEY PRATTEN, Teacher of this elegant Instrument, is in Town for the Season. For LESSONS and Private CONCERTS, address to her residence, 224, Dorset Street, Portman Square, W.

MR RICCARDI (the new Bass), who made so successful a debut at St James's Hall, March 12th, begs to announce his Return to London for the Season. All applications for ENGAGEMENTS to be addressed, Care of DUNCAN DAVISON & CO., 244, Regent Street, W.

WANTED, Immediately, an ORGANIST, for St Saviour's Church, Bath. Salary, £30. Apply to the RECTOR, 10, Grosvenor Place, Bath.

MUSICAL PRACTICE.

TO be DISPOSED of, a good MUSICAL PRACTICE, in one of the most flourishing towns in the North of Ireland, and realizing, upon an average, £400 a year, which could be considerably augmented by a gentleman who is a good Organist and Teacher of Pianoforte and Singing. For terms, &c., address, Z. Y. X., Musical World Office, D. DAVISON & CO., 244, Regent Street, W.

21, OLD BOND STREET.—MUSIC, MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS, &c.

MESSRS SHARRATT & CREE'S SALE by AUCTION, at Messrs ROBINSON'S ROOMS, 21, Old Bond Street, on June 22nd and 23rd, will include a very handsome PIANOFORTE (by Imhof & Mukle) in walnut inlaid marqueterie, a valuable VIOLIN, CONCERTINAS (by Wheatstone), MUSICAL BOXES (by Nicole Frères); also about 100 Volumes Music (Rossini and Meyerbeer); Operas, the Quartet Society, &c. Catalogues of the Auctioneers, 6 and 7, Coleman Street, E.C.

PIANOFORTE BUSINESS, with the GOODWILL and STOCK in TRADE, situate in a Market Town in the Eastern Counties, to be DISPOSED of, by order of the Executrix. Established and carried on by the same person for upwards of 35 years. There is a good Hiring and Tuning Connection. For particulars, apply to A. F., care of Mr FREDERICK LUCAS, 26, Maddox Street, London, W.

THE "TALISMAN" CHORUSES.

(IN BALFE'S GRAND OPERA.)

No. 1. Chorus of Arabs.
" 2. Salve Regina (Trio and Chorus).
" 3. Draw Your Swords (Concerted Morceau).
" 4. Hours and Hours Roll Slowly on (Chorus of Ladies).
" 5. Thy Kinswoman Edith (Concerted Morceau).
" 6. Farewell, my Beloved Edith (Finale to Act 2nd).
" 7. A Song to Merrie England.
(Part Song—Soprano, Tenor, Alto, and Bass.)
" 8. Glorious England (Finale).

No collection of Choruses equal in merit to the above has been published for years. The great success with which the "TALISMAN" has been received is sufficient evidence of the beauty of the entire Opera, in which the Choruses form, of course, one of the most effective features.

London: DUFF & STEWART, 147, Oxford Street.

BRIGHTON CONCERT AGENTS,
PIANOFORTE AND MUSICSELLERS,
LYON & HALL,
WARWICK MANSION.

Digitized by Google

MUSIC PAST AND PRESENT IN IRELAND.

(Continued from page 373.)

In the last essay it was mentioned that Stevenson may be said to have originated the edition of the Irish Melodies which has come down to us, by suggesting to Moore the idea of writing words to those charming airs. Moore was anxious the work should be undertaken, and says, in a letter to Stevenson—"Our national music has never been properly collected, and, while the composers of the Continent have enriched their operas and sonatas with melodies borrowed from Ireland—very often without even the honesty of acknowledgment—we have left the treasures in a great degree unclaimed and fugitive. The task which you propose to me, of adapting words to the airs, is by no means easy. The poet who would follow the various sentiments they express must feel and understand that rapid fluctuation of spirits, that unaccountable mixture of gloom and levity which composes the character of my countrymen, and has deeply tinged their music. If Burns had been an Irishman (and I would willingly give up all our claims upon Ossian for him), his heart would have been proud of such music, and his genius would have made it immortal." Such are the modest words of the poet to his coadjutor in this arduous undertaking—one carried out with so much excellence by both; for, after all that has been said and done with the melodies, Stevenson's arrangements will stand the test, and claim superiority over all subsequently done—even those of Balfe, who was a thorough Irishman. Moore's criticism upon these arrangements we think the best and most lucid we have met with, and we give it in his own words. He says—"Through many of his (Stevenson's) own compositions we trace a vein of Irish sentiment, which points him out as peculiarly suited to catch the spirit of his country's music; and far from agreeing with those fastidious critics who think that the symphonies have nothing kindred with the airs they introduce, I would rather say that, on the contrary, they resemble in general those illuminated initials of old manuscripts, which are of the same character with the writing which follows, though more highly coloured and more curiously ornamented." Here we leave those unique lyrics, which are both musically and poetically immortal. In O'Keefe's "Recollections," speaking of his drama of Dead Alive, he says—"I had already written some of the songs and given them to a very young gentleman. He was not above fourteen years of age, of most promising talents; his name was Stevenson. He composed some of the airs and played and sung them to me at my house in Capel Street, and very beautiful they were. The youthful musical genius of that day (1779) is now the admired Sir John Stevenson, the successful composer of sacred and sublime melody." Stevenson wrote the music to several operas—The Bedouins, or the Arabs of the Desert, the Burning of Moscow, the Outpost, the Border Feuds, the Patriot, the Spanish Patriots—none of which have survived; therefore it may be concluded they were unsuccessful. The Burning of Moscow was damned on the first night of representation, to his great mortification. Subsequently he was fond of hearing a quartet from this opera—we believe all that has survived of it—"Sweetly sounds the trembling lyre." When concluded, he would say, "Think of them damning an opera with such music as that in it."* It was after dinner at Mr George Alley's that he wrote the beautiful song for the late Dr Spray, "Faithless Emma." Stevenson was praising Spray for his singing of the Anthem the previous Sunday, when the latter said, "Why don't you write something for me." "Agreed," said Stevenson. "Give me some music paper." Alley provided the words, and in a very short time the composer placed the music in the hands of Spray, who at once sung it. The original MS. of "Faithless Emma" was in the possession of the late Dr Todd, Fellow of Trinity College. Another composition he produced with similar facility. Dining with Dr Wallcott (Peter Pindar) in the neighbourhood of London, the host handed him a copy of verses before dinner, which he wished to have set to music. Stevenson retired to an adjoining apartment, from which he in a few minutes emerged with the copy in his hand. Charles Incledon, who had been also invited, had that moment arrived. The composer immediately turned the song into a duet, which they sung together that night to the great delight of the company. The beautiful song, "Oh! then, dearest Ellen," he composed on the counter in Power's music-shop, and the first person who sang it was Terence Magrath, of facetious memory. We well remember one summer evening, many years ago, dining with the late Dr Smith, who then lived opposite to Sir John. A street singer, seeing the front parlour window open, set to warbling "Oh! then, dearest Ellen." A shilling was sent out to her, with a direction to go to the opposite house and sing the same song as loudly as she could scream. The street vocalist accomplished her task most violently. Money was sent out, with a vociferous request that she would depart from the neighbourhood. Shortly after Sir John came over, not in the best temper, and swore lustily—for this was one of the knight's infirmities—"That he would rather not have composed a note than have his songs butchered by itinerant squawlers." Nevertheless we have heard him say, when his music has been praised, "Ah! by —, I would rather be the author of "Cherry Ripe," for it is sung at every street corner and played on every barrel-organ; that is fame, sir, that is fame." His glees are still the delight of the Hibernian Catch Club, and they are so numerous and varied as to suit all tastes. Indeed it would be hard to speak too highly of these compositions. They abound in melody, and are harmonized with so much grace, that there is tunefulness in every part. "Buds of roses," "Alone on the sea-beaten rock," "Raise the song," "Lovely roses," "Come sing with me," &c., may be mentioned. Then the dramatic setting of "Tell me where is fancy bred" amounts almost to inspiration. His interpolation of the word "Reply," which is printed between the verses, was a happy and original thought.

(To be continued.)

* The reader is requested to bear in mind that the operas named above were but dramas illustrated by music; and the causes of their failure might have arisen from their lack of interest in plot and dialogue, than from want of charm in the music.

ZARÉ THALBERG AS CHERUBINO.

As the amorous page, Cherubino, in Mozart's incomparable Nozze di Figaro, Mdlle Zaré Thalberg has added another to her successes, and thus firmly established her position at the Royal Italian Opera. The wonder is, not that she should sing the music well, for that was very generally anticipated; but that she should portray the character with so nice and correct an appreciation of its significance. Mdlle Thalberg's Cherubino is not the half-boy, half-girl, and whole nonentity, to which we have too often been accustomed. She presents us with the genuine unadulterated youth, just shooting into prime, longing for something, he knows not what, and for ever keeping on the theme. Her delineation is exempt from the tricks and gambols which not seldom make the character both irrelevant and obtrusive. Her reading of the two romances, "Non so più cosa son" and "Voi che sapete," is in strict keeping with her general conception; and the fervid, while, at the same time half retiring, manner in which she sings the last, and, perhaps, most engaging of the two, fully accounts for the impression it makes upon her hearers, and the hearty "encore" with which it is greeted.—Graphic.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

The public rehearsal of the Students, at St James's Hall, on Thursday morning, was more fully attended than any previous one during the present season. The audience, notwithstanding the heat of the weather, was very demonstrative, applauding the young students after each of their performances with more than usual vigour. We subjoin the programme:—

Festival Overture, in F—G. A. Macfarren; Romanza, "Selva opaca" (Guillaume Tell) (Miss Marietta)—Rossini; Concerto, in G (first movement), pianoforte (Miss Martin)—Beethoven; Sacred Cantata, The Prodigal Son (solos by Miss Beasley, Miss Bolingbroke, Parepa-Rosa Scholar, Mr Henry Guy, and Mr Wadmore)—Arthur Sullivan; Rondo Brillante, in B flat (on a Russian theme), pianoforte (Miss Hopkins)—Hummel; Recit. and Aria, "O luce di quest anima" (Linda di Chamouni) (Miss Beata Francis)—Donizetti; Concerto (two last movements) in A, pianoforte (Mr Deas—a clever pupil of Mr W. H. Holmes)—Grieg; Graduale, "Quod, quod in orbe"—Hummel.

Mr Walter Macfarren was the conductor, and Mr Fitton presided at the Organ during the performance of Mr Sullivan's Cantata.

The next Student's concert is announced to take place on Thursday evening, July 1st.

Digitized by Google

DORN (!) ACROSS MENDELSSOHN.

(Continued from page 382.)

I very seldom missed one of those interesting gatherings at the Neue Promenade, where, besides the greater compositions, which were henceforth studied under Berger's guidance, the newest works of the wonderful boy, Felix, were regularly played over—mostly sets of symphonies for stringed instruments with pianoforte accompaniment—by a small number selected from the Royal chamber-musicians. Professor Zelter, with whom Felix had studied counterpoint, was his most eager auditor, and at the same time severest censor. More than once after the performance, I myself have heard Zelter call out in a loud voice to his pupil that several alterations were necessary, whereupon, without saying a word, Felix would quietly fold up the score, and before the next Sunday he would go over it, and then play the composition with the desired corrections. In these rooms also, before the family removed to Leipziger Strasse, a three-act comic opera was performed, all the characters being apportioned and the dialogue read out at the piano. The libretto for The Uncle from Boston was written by a young physician, Dr Caspar, who afterwards became a famous man. Every one who came in contact with him had something to relate of his wit; and I remember, even now, Holtei telling me, when I was at Riga, of the sparkling witty farewell speech addressed by Caspar to the Councillor Nernst, on the removal of the latter as Postmaster-General from Berlin to Tilsit. He finished with "Depart, and the peace of Tilsit be with you!"

Although the music of this American Uncle pleased all connected with it, the subject was weak. Dévrient, and his fiancée, Therese Schlesinger, Johanna Zimmermann, the Doctors Andriessen and Dittmar, all took part—I also as chorus-singer. One circumstance this evening I can never forget. When the opera was finished, there were the regular bread-and-butter, anchovies, cold meat, cheese, &c. Edward Rietz and myself were enjoying our portion, when Felix, who was going round the room to thank the singers personally, stopped to ask how we were fairing. I showed him my share of the spoil.

"Which do you consider your dux?" (leading subject), he asked; "and which is your comes?" (secondary theme).

"Well, I consider my bread-and-butter my dux."

"Oh, no," said he, "a guest must regard his bread-and-butter as only comes."

Just then Zelter said loudly: "Felix, come here."

The old gentleman, standing, glass in hand, said: "Felix, you have only been an apprentice; to-day you are assistant, work on till you become master." Therewith a tap on the cheek, as if dubbing him a knight, the whole party pressing forward to congratulate the astonished parents, as well as Felix, who warmly shook his master's hand. This is one of those scenes that can never be effaced from one's memory. It made such a powerful impression on me that I wrote the following day to my guardian to ask if I might become a pupil of Zelter's, and by his help rise to the higher grades. This permission I certainly received, but how different anticipation is to reality! Zelter was a whimsical old fellow, to whom it was all the same whether his pupils were young or old, gifted or without talent, beginners or advanced. All were treated alike, except as in the case of Mendelssohn's private lessons, when he really did instruct. I bore it for half a year, then I could not put up with it any more, and so I went over to Bernhard Klein, and never had reason to repent doing so.

With the removal of the Mendelssohn family from the Neue Promenade to Leipziger Strasse, to the same house where our present Chamber of Deputies hold their sittings, the circle of their acquaintance was much extended, owing in a great measure to Felix's increasing fame. Among the more intimate acquaintances may be reckoned Rietz, Klingemann, Marx, Franck, and Dévrient. Rietz, elder brother of the Royal chapel-master at Dresden, was himself a member of the Royal orchestra, and Mendelssohn's instructor on the violin. I may safely say that of all Felix's friends no one loved him more enthusiastically than Rietz. He was a grave silent person, of a middle size and spare figure, endowed with a large share of nose between two fiery eyes, and always dressed in a tail-coat. When the two friends were together, the idea was always suggested to me of Faust and Mephistopheles, though there was certainly little enough of the diabolic in either of them. Robert and Bertram might perhaps have been more suitable, but such a connection had not then been proclaimed by Scribe and Meyerbeer. Rietz's artistic career was early cut short, the nerve of his third finger being injured during the performance of Spontini's Olympie. He died in 1832. Mendelssohn has dedicated his famous "Octett" to him.

(To be continued.)

GOOD WORDS.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

Sir,—Your correspondent, who signs himself "Musical Doctor," in last week's impression of the Musical World, can surely never have seen two letters on the musical treatment of disease which appeared in your columns during the first part of last year. The first was in the month of February, and criticised a book written by M. le Dr Chomet, of Paris, in which he advocated music as a cure for all sorts of diseases, ranging from sciatica to strimous diseases in children. The concluding words, if I remember rightly, were, "If I get an opportunity of trying the musical treatment, I will certainly avail myself of it, and let you know the result." The result of a very successful treatment of a young woman suffering from melancholia was reported in the second letter, in the month of June.

It may be interesting to know that the cure has been a radical one, the young woman never having had a tendency to melancholy or hysteria since the last time music was applied (May 6th, 1874). Change of scene and occupation have also had something to do with the successful treatment in this case.

X. T. R.

YORKSHIRE EXHIBITION.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

Sir,—Dr Spark has made a very rash guess regarding the identity of Veritas; he (Dr Spark) is altogether wrong. My letter, which appeared in the Musical World for May 29th, was not an attack on the doctor, but simply a truthful explanation of certain facts which he would prefer to keep secret. I most emphatically deny that my letter contained either misrepresentation, direct falsehood, or insinuated untruth. Doctor Spark is careful to give a very vague general reply to my letter (the usual course adopted by persons who make assertions which they are unable to substantiate); details would have been rather too much for him. If the engagement to inaugurate the organ—the day after it HAD been inaugurated—was a genuine official appointment, I cannot help thinking that Dr Spark (who, by the way, never misses the chance of a little publicity), would have been only too glad to have published it in the local papers—as an answer to the official letter which denied that he was engaged for the inauguration of the organ—and also to have sent it to you for publication in your last impression. This official engagement is evidently one of our borough organist's treasures, as he reserves it for the sacred inspection of Mr Best and the Editor of the Musical World; of course, when these two gentlemen have seen Dr Spark's precious document, all the world must be satisfied that it was a genuine appointment, duly signed by the chairman of the musical arrangements committee, and that the doctor quietly consented to be sat upon, and allowed the official denial to go forth to his friends and the public without a word from himself in explanation. Now, sir, this is not the way a zealous business-like man—as Dr Spark is—does things generally; I should say he is the last man in the musical profession who would quietly submit to be snubbed. Regarding the notice of Dr Spark's inauguration of the organ—so-called—which appeared in the Musical World of May 1st, Dr Spark does not deny that HE sent the notice to you, he probably thinks it would be difficult to do so, as you are in possession of the authorship of the notice. I have continually observed that the only musical performances given here that are referred to in the various musical papers are those at which Dr Spark assists. Will the doctor deny that he sends these notices? People who read the musical journals are liable to form a very erroneous idea as to music and musical art in Leeds, because Dr Spark rarely shines in public except at his organ performances, and occasional threepenny concerts, both of which are generally miserably attended. Of course these little notices are a cheap way of keeping Dr Spark's name before the public. The musical arrangements committee of the Exhibition continue to supply us with musical entertainment of very variable quality; we have heard some peculiar bands, and some amusing solos on the organ and other instruments. The band of the Queen's Bays (conducted by Mr W. C. Smith), has given the only really effective musical performance since the opening of the Exhibition. Kindly oblige me by inserting this in your issue for Saturday next. I am, Sir, yours obediently, Leeds, June 9th, 1875. VERITAS.

Digitized by Google

BERLIN.

(From our Correspondent.)

There has not been much doing worthy notice at the Royal Operahouse beyond the last appearance of Herr Landau and the first of Mdlle Hofmeister. Herr Landau took his farewell as Lionel, in Martha. He would do well, by the way, to get rid of the guttural and nasal sounds which mar the effect of his singing; but nothing can change his figure, which is not what we picture to ourselves in connection with a hero of the lyric drama. The concert room is better adapted for Herr Landau than is the stage. Mdlle Hofmeister, who comes from the Stadttheater, Frankfort-on-the-Maine, opened as Valentine, in Les Huguenots. Nature has endowed her, vocally and dramatically, with no mean powers; but she has much to learn before she can do justice to the heroine of Meyerbeer's grand work.

Great things are promised of Herr Kannberg, pupil of the Royal High School of Music, where he has studied under Dr Gustav Engel. He is said to possess a fine tenor voice, and will appear, after the holidays, as Manrico, Arnold, and Florestan, at the Royal Operahouse.

The opera for the gala performance in honour of the King and Queen of Sweden was, in obedience to the wish of their Majesties themselves, Tannhäuser, with Mad. Voggenhuber, Herren Niemann and Betz, in the principal parts.

Herr R. Wüerst's Faublas has been performed at the Friedrich-Wilhelmstädtisches Theater. It is to be followed by Lortzing's opera, Die beiden Schützen, and then by the revised version of Herr Johann Strauss's Indigo, oder die 40 Räuber, which, as La Reine Indigo, was so favourably received in Paris.

Kroll's Theater was to open for opera on the 1st inst., with a company including 5 ladies for dramatic parts, 4 for bravura, 3 for soubrette, 2 for contralto and mezzo-soprano, and 1 for old women; 4 tenors, 1 buffo tenor, 3 first baritones, 2 first basses, 1 bass buffo, and a second bass, make up the other departments. The orchestra is under the direction of Herr Preumeyer.

MUSIC AT BOULOGNE-SUR-MER.

(From a Correspondent.)

Your readers probably will have wondered why nothing has lately appeared in your columns from this music-loving town. Without further preface, the operatic season is finished, and the new one is to commence on the 24th of June. The season was brought to a close on Sunday last, and was "solemnized" by the performances of MM. Bresson and Ketten (tenors) and M. Ben Aben (baritone). The singing of the latter as Alphonse XII., in La Favorita, left nothing to desire. He was ably supported by M. Bresson as Fernand, Mdlle Noailles as Leonore, and Mdme Yerna Robert as Ines. "Terpsichorean displays" have also delighted the frequenters of the Salle Monsigny during the last month, Mdlles Ricci, Maggioni, Beau ("elle était pourtante belle"), and Cardot taking part in the same. A local journal states that the "artists" woke up several habitués of the stalls from the usual lethargic state in which they look upon "nos spectacles" (the gentlemen referred to are mostly decorated old garçons, ou veufs). The dancing of the quartet of ladies (who, by the bye, hail from Italy and Spain) pleased the audience, and evidently pleased themselves.

M. Troy has NOT the direction of the opera for the coming season, which is rather hard upon him, when it is taken into consideration that he undertook to provide operettas, vaudevilles, &c., and afterwards two months of grand opera, at the dullest season of the year; but where everything is under the municipal thumb, what can be said ———?

M. Lemaitre—late directeur du Théâtre de Versailles, and son of the well-known actor at the Théâtre Français, in Paris—undertakes the direction of the Salle Monsigny from June 24th, as well as of the daily concerts at the Etablissement des Bains. In addition to the daily concerts, there are to be some attractive ones, especially that fixed for August 9, in which Mdlle Carlotta Patti, Mdlle Sanz (contralto, from San Carlo, Naples), M. Alexandre Batta (violinist), and M. Theodore Ritter are to take part.

Our season, I expect, will be unusually brilliant; and, possibly, not less brilliant had it been left to those who generally contrive to attract a large number of visitors.

Among the attractions for the coming season is the formation of a skating rink on the croquet ground between the Etablissement and the Sands. It is taken on a lease of seven years by an English company, and is announced in the Saison, our local season journal (of which the first number appeared this morning), as a "STAKING rink" ("patinage a ROULETTES"). X. T. R.

June 2nd

RICHARD WAGNER, AND HIS RING OF THE NIBLUNG.

(From the "New Quarterly Magazine.")

(Continued from page 375.)

Wagner's response to this call was the drama of the Niblungen, originally intended for Weimar, although never performed there. The work was planned on a much smaller scale than that on which it was ultimately executed. At first Wagner treated the Death of Siegfried as a separate piece; but soon he found that the narrative portions necessary to explain the motives of the action would reach undue dimensions, and were moreover so eminently dramatic in themselves as absolutely to require the addition of a second, or rather first, i.e., introductory piece. This was to be called Siegfried's Youth. But here again Wagner found his former experience repeated, and twice again he was compelled to condense the old epical types into dramatic creations, till at last the trilogy of the Ring of the Niblung, with an introductory piece, the Rhinegold, was completed. The poetry, in its present form, was finished by the end of 1852, and, during the three following years, Wagner wrote the music to the Rhinegold and to the first part of the trilogy, the Valkyrie. About this time his great plan was interrupted by another work of no lesser excellence and grandeur. We are speaking of Tristan and Iseult, by many believed to be the highest effort of its composer's genius. Its subject may be considered as in a manner complementary to the Niblungen drama. For the Celtic Mabinogion and the Eddic Sagas are the two cycles of epics from which a truly national poetry of both Celtic and Germanic races must draw its mythical inspiration, an inspiration quite as necessary to our modern dramatists as the tales of Homer and Hesiod were to Sophocles and Æschylus.

The composition of the Niblungen was resumed in 1859, in which year Wagner began the music to the second part of the trilogy Siegfried. This occupied him, with many interruptions (one of which was the composition of a comic opera, The Mastersingers of Nurnberg), for nearly thirteen years. The musical execution of the final drama, The Götterdämmerung ("Dusk of the Gods"), has been finished only a short time ago. Its publication is anxiously expected by the admirers of the previous parts.

It may be easily perceived that in the present state of theatrical affairs on the Continent, a work of this scope, even if accepted for performance, would stand little chance for an appropriate rendering by mediocre singers, or of a congenial reception on the part of the blasé public of the German capitals. Wagner, indeed, never intended his work for the ordinary operatic stage, and has persistently refused to take an active interest in the performance of parts of his work attempted at Munich. His desire was to see the Niblungen performed at a theatre erected for the purpose and by a select company, in the manner of a national festival. For only in this manner would it be possible to remove both audience and artists from the atmosphere of ordinary theatrical shows.

A scheme of such vastness appeared at first Utopian, and was, indeed, treated with scorn and ridicule by an inimical press. But, in spite of these attacks, the previous works of Wagner began to take a firmer and firmer hold on the minds of the public; particularly the reawakening of patriotic feeling after the French war may have contributed to direct the attention of the best among the German nation to a work so eminently national both in its sources and manner of execution. When, therefore, a few years ago, the late celebrated pianist Tausig, in connection with a small number of artistic friends, decided upon appealing boldly to Wagner's admirers for the means necessary to carry out the master's original intention, this appeal was responded to with enthusiasm. Wagner societies for the purpose alluded to were founded not only in the important German cities, but also in Brussels, Milan, New York, London, etc., and the performance of the work under the master's own direction, at Baireuth, in 1876, is no more a matter of doubt.

(To be continued.)

Digitized by Google

PARIS SCRAPS.

(From our Parisian Scrapper.)

The gala performance at the Grand Opera, for the benefit of the "Pupilles de la Guerre," though by no means a failure, did not prove so successful as people generally expected it would. The receipts amounted to only 25,000 francs, by no means an out-of-the-way sum now-a-days, especially if the object of the performance be taken into consideration. Had M. Gounod been allowed by the gentlemen of the orchestra to conduct the scenes from Faust, the treasurer's returns, there can be no doubt, would have been much larger. With reference to the disagreeable incident recorded in the Musical World, between M. Gounod and the gentlemen aforesaid, the following additional facts may prove interesting. At the last rehearsal, M. Gounod attended in his capacity of composer. Directly he appeared on the stage he was warmly welcomed by—or, to adopt the modern phraseology obtaining in these latitudes, he was the object of a most hearty ovation on the part of—the band.

"You perceive, my dear Gounod"—said M. Halanzier—"by the way in which you have just been welcomed, that, in all that has occurred, there has been nothing which could be taken as directed against yourself personally, and that among the members of the band, as among all the other members of the establishment, you possess only admirers and friends."

Hereupon, M. Gounod, advancing to the front of the stage, spoke as follows:—

"I entertained no doubt, gentlemen, of your sympathy towards me. I have no reason to reproach myself with any attempt to disturb the customs of the institution. I was asked for my work and my personal co-operation; I was borne to the Opera as though on the top of a wave. You possess traditions which I will neither discuss nor judge. Now that you and I have met one another in our respective places, we will have a little music, and I trust that the trifling incident between us will not interfere with our feelings of mutual friendship."

When the speaker had done speaking, he was greeted with three rounds of applause, but the question of the principle involved still remains undecided, though an old regulation has been discovered authorizing composers to conduct their own works at the Grand Opera.

Owing to indisposition, Mdlle Krauss was unable to appear, as she was announced to do, in the gala performance. Her part was taken at a very short notice by Mdlle Jenny Howe. Her illness, however, is not serious.

Hamlet is being actively rehearsed for the début of the new Ophelia, Mdlle de Reské. M. Lassalle will sustain the character of the melancholy Prince. The management is, moreover, making every effort to complete the mise-en-scène of Faust.

A deep impression of regret has been produced in artistic circles by the death of M. Georges Bizet, composer of Carmen, Les Pêcheurs de Perles, and La Jolie Fille de Pesth, who died on the 2nd inst., at Bougival, of an abscess of the throat, according to some, or of suffocation arising from the clogging-up of an artery by a clot of blood, according to others. His widow is a daughter of Halévy. He was buried on Saturday, the 5th inst., in the cemetery of Montmartre, the corners of the pall being held by M. Camille Doucet, Chairman of the Dramatic Authors' Society, M. du Locle, manager of the Opéra-Comique, M. Ambroise Thomas, and M. Gounod. Speeches were made at the grave by MM. Jules Barbier (in the name of the Society of Dramatic Authors), Du Locle, and Gounod.

A committee has been formed with a view of raising a monument to Samson, the celebrated actor of the Théâtre-Français, who died during the reign of the Commune. The Théâtre-Français has subscribed a thousand, and the Minister of Fine Arts, five hundred francs.

The works at the Hippodrome in the Champs Elysées are being pushed forward with such vigour, that the opening will probably take place on the first of next month. The new edifice will be capable of containing 12,000 persons.

BRESLAU.—In consequence of the retirement of Hans Ravené, the management of the Stadttheater will, from the 1st September, pass into the hands of Herr Tescher (formerly director of the Grand Ducal Theatre, Darmstadt), and Auerbach, the once renowned tenor.

ACORNS, SLOES, AND BLACKBERRIES.

BY GIBBS GIBB GIBBS, ESQ.

No. 2.

Neville Butler Challoner, born in London in 1784. At nine years of age he performed a concerto on the violin; at thirteen he was found competent to assist in the orchestra of the oratorios at Covent Garden Theatre. Challoner opened the first music-shop in Regent Street.

Domenico Dragonetti, the celebrated performer on the double-bass, was born in Venice. It was at Vicenza, where he played at the Grand Opera, that he was so fortunate as to get possession of the celebrated double-bass manufactured by Gasparo di Salo, master of the famous Amati. This instrument had formerly belonged to the convent of St Pietro. Delighted with so precious a gift, Dragonetti hastened to get the instrument repaired with the utmost skill, on the completion of which he made a trial of it in the hall of his residence, at Vicenza. How great was his surprise when, after a few sounds, he observed the servants running from a distant kitchen in alarm, many of the brass vessels on the shelves having vibrated so powerfully to the tones of the double bass as to ring and shake as if they were all ready to fall. On quitting Vicenza, Dragonetti proceeded to Padua to pay his accustomed friendly visit to the inmates of the celebrated Convent of St Giustina. He took his newly-acquired instrument with him; and, in describing its excellences to Signor Turvini Bertoni, the celebrated chapel-master and organist of the Convent, ventured to express an opinion that the lower strings of it might be made to produce a more powerful effect than could be derived from the bass of the magnificent organ of the Convent. Turvini treated this proposition with ridicule, which so piqued Dragonetti that he resolved to have his little revenge; and, accordingly, furnished himself in private with some immensely thick bass strings, which at night he attached to his instrument. The weather was perfectly calm, and, when sleep reigned through the whole Convent, he quickly carried his double-bass into one of the spacious corridors, and there produced, from the thick strings, sounds so strange and characteristic, as precisely to counterfeit the rising of a horrid tempest. The imitation was so complete that nothing was talked of the next morning in the Convent but the storm of the preceding night. Great, indeed, was the surprise of the fraternity when they discovered from the neighbours that the weather had been unusually serene. On the following night Dragonetti, having remained unsuspected, was desirous again to conjure up the spirits of the air; but, unluckily, he so alarmed one of the monks, that, rushing precipitately from his cell, he tumbled over the double-bass, and the necromancer was thus discovered. After this anecdote, it may be well supposed that the organist allowed the double-bass to be more powerful than his own instrument. This happened to Dragonetti at the age of twenty-four. It is to be regretted that this valuable instrument has been lost to posterity. Dragonetti, by his will, ordered this instrument to be returned to the Convent of St Pietro, the abbess of which was so disgusted upon being obliged to pay a large sum of money for the transportation, that she ordered it to be placed in the vaults of the Convent. It is now supposed that it has entirely rotted away. Large sums of money were offered and refused for this instrument upon the death of Dragonetti.

Digitized by Google

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

Since we recorded the doings at this house there have been repetitions of Faust e Margherita, Der Freischütz (with M. Faure as Caspar), Il Barbiere, L'Africaine, and La Traviata. The one quasi-novelty was the reproduction of Les Diamans de la Couronne, chiefly welcome on account of Madame Adelina Patti's thoroughly individual and attractive impersonation of the adventurous Queen of Portugal, who, in order to lighten the taxation which so onerously oppresses her faithful subjects, sells the Crown jewels, and has them counterfeited by a band of coiners with whom she associates as leader, under the assumed name of Catarina. We need not enter again into details about this performance of Mr Gye's accomplished prima donna, or say more than that it created the accustomed impression, that all the well-known points told as before, and that the Bolero duet, in which the Diana of the evening (Mdlle Smeroschi) proved of essential service, and the famous air with variations was sung in the perfect style to which Madame Patti has accustomed us, and applauded with all the old enthusiasm. On the other hand, we cannot approve the innovation at the end of the opera, where the Queen, descending from her throne, executes a bravura air, which robs the intended climax of its significance, and the exquisitely finished music of its consistency. How preferable the last words of the Queen in the French original,—"Il n'y a que celà de faux"—quietly addressed to Henrique while pointing to the newly manufactured jewels on her brow! In fact, so much is done for the Diamans de la Couronne by way of additions, curtailments, &c., that genuine lovers of Auber's music cannot hear it with the same pleasure thus encumbered with extraneous matter. Why did not the adapter take Fra Diavolo as a guide? There everything added to the score is in character and in place. After all, perhaps, when the master himself is not at hand, or may be disinclined to remodel his work, it had better be left untouched. The other characters were in the sure keeping of Mdlle Smeroschi (Diana), and Signors Naudin, Sabater, Capponi, and Ciampi (Enrico, Sebastiano, Rebolledo and Campo-Mayer). The ever-graceful, symmetrical, and engaging strains of the gifted French composer, against which, and other things of the kind, Herr Wagner and his disciples have inveighed so persistently, to little or no purpose, still enjoy their primeval freshness. They charm as of old, and must always charm while the great truth, that rhythmical melody is the soul of music, continues to obtain general acceptance.

The operas this week have been:—Le Nozze di Figaro, with Mdlle Zaré Thalberg as Cherubino; La Figlia del Reggimento; and Il Flauto Magico. To night we are promised Dinorah. By the way, at the next performance of Lohengrin, advertised for Thursday in next week, a new tenor, Signor Carpi, is to take the place hitherto held by Signor Nicolini as representative of the "Knight of the Swan." Can it be that the clever French tenor, a little tired of incessant declamatory recitative, would like, just for a change, to sing a romance or a cavatina?

—o—

REVIEW.

ASHDOWN AND PARRY.

Gigue, by CORELLI; and Gavotte, by CORELLI. Transcribed for the pianoforte by JULES BRISSAC.

HERE we have the two most attractive movements of the famous duet familiarly known to our fathers as the "Golden Sonata," when Linley and Dragonetti used to play the top and under parts on their respective instruments, the English violoncellist always making a marked effect in the gigue, and the Italian contrabassist creating a sensation in the gavotte. Recently Herr Joachim, Mr Henry Holmes, and others have played the gigue as a violin solo; and now the quaint and tuneful phrases of Corelli, in which the votaries of stringed instruments have hitherto enjoyed a monopoly, are transferred to the pianoforte. So happily has M. Jules Brissac carried out the spirit of the old school in his two capital pieces that, in their new form, both gigue and gavotte will probably become more popular than ever.

STUTTGART.—Mdlle Marianne Brandt, from the Royal Operahouse, Berlin, has been singing in Le Prophète, Il Trovatore, and Aïda.

HOMBURG.—The Kursaal Theater will be opened for opera and ballet from the 15th of the present month, till the end of August. The company, from the Grand Ducal Theatre, Darmstadt, is under the management of Herr Albert Siems—Herr Josef Neswadba being conductor.

HER MAJESTY'S OPERA.

Last week was again for the most part given to repetitions, and among the rest, to Lucia di Lammermoor, the Huguenots, and Il Talismano. In Balfe's opera, which, thanks to Madame Christine Nilsson's Edith Plantagenet and its own intrinsic merits, has fairly made way and earned popularity, Madame Marie Roze was once more welcomed as Queen Berengaria, the character originally assigned to her last year when the opera was produced. The first performance for the season of Rossini's Semiramide, familiar as is the music of that most mysterious of lyric tragedies, must always be welcome with such a superb representative of the Assyrian Queen as Mdlle Tietjens, and an Arsace boasting the voice and facile delivery of Madame Trebelli-Bettini. Here we have a soprano and contralto who, though one is German and the other French, now, in the class of Italian lyric drama to which Semiramide—its composer's final triumph in his own country—essentially belongs, know few, if any, rivals. It is worth a visit to the Opera, if only for the sake of hearing these artists in the two duets between Semiramide and Arsace—"Serbami ognor si fido," and "Ebbene! a te ferisci!"—the last especially, which contains the andante, "Giorno d'orrore," and the always effective peroration, "Tu serena in tanto il ciglio." The cavatina of the Queen, "Bel raggio lusinghier," and the slow movement, "In si barbara sciagura," which forms the middle portion of Arsace's scene with Oroe, Chief of the Magi (Herr Behrens), are scarcely less attractive in such competent hands. The other parts in Semiramide are allotted to Signor Rota (Assur—excellent), Signor Rinaldini (Idreno), Signor Costa (Ghost of Ninus), and Herr Behrens (Oroe). About the chorus and orchestra, for which Rossini has written so much which is characteristic, striking, and admirable, reaching in the first finale, where the ghost of Ninus suddenly emerges from the monumental tomb of Assyrian Kings, an impressive and powerful climax, little need be said. In no opera does Sir Michael Costa show more earnest desire to attain perfection, and in no opera is he more uniformly successful, from the overture (encored as usual) to the end. It is something to obtain so fine a performance of Semiramide with the rehearsals of Lohengrin claiming unceasing attention day after day from all concerned.

The operas during the current week have been—Faust, La Sonnambula, and Semiramide. Lohengrin is to be given to-night—at last. This promised performance of Wagner's opera, with an entirely different cast of the dramatis personæ—Madame Nilsson, vice Mdlle Albani (Elsa), Mdlle Tietjens, vice Mdlle D'Angeri (Ortrud), Signor Campanini, vice Signor Nicolini (Lohengrin), Signor Galassi, vice M. Maurel (Telramund), Herr Behrens, vice Herr Seidemann (the King), together with another orchestra and chorus, and Sir Michael Costa, vice Signor Vianesi, as conductor—would alone excite curiosity; more especially as no fewer than five representations of the work will already have been given at the theatre close at hand. Herr Wagner is now fairly on his trial in London. Equally so is the London public, which must again perforce give serious attention before deciding whether Herr Wagner's new idea of the lyric drama shall supersede all that existed before he took a conspicuous part in art-controversy, and all that still exists, despite the continuous preaching of himself and his devoted adherents.

—o—

VIENNA.

(From a Correspondent.)

Weber's Euryanthe was recently performed at the Imperial Operahouse for the first time since the International Exhibition, Herr Hans Richter being the conductor. The principal characters were sustained by Mad. Friedrich-Materna, Mad. Dustmann, Herren Beck and Walter.—Some time since an order was issued by the Imperial Intendant prohibiting any artist under his authority from obeying recalls or even acknowledging applause during the progress of a piece. But the Imperial Intendant is now a being of the past, so far at least as the Imperial Operahouse is concerned. The management of that establishment was recently confided to private hands, and one of the first acts of the new manager has been partially to repeal the order in question. Henceforth, artists of the Imperial Operahouse will be at liberty to come forward and bow their thanks at the conclusion of every scene—if they happen to be recalled as often.

Digitized by Google

ST JAMES'S HALL,

REGENT STREET AND PICCADILLY.

MR CHARLES HALLÉ'S

Pianoforte Recitals.

MR CHARLES HALLÉ has the honour to announce that his Fifteenth Series of PIANOFORTE RECITALS will take place on the following afternoons:—

FRIDAY, June 18, 1875. | FRIDAY, June 25, 1875.

SEVENTH RECITAL,

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, JUNE 18, 1875.

To Commence at Three o'clock precisely.

Programme.

TRIO in E, No. 4, for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello—Mr CHARLES HALLE, Madame NORMAN-NERUDA, and Herr FRANZ NERUDA .. .. Haydn.

GRAND SONATA in B flat, Op. 106, for pianoforte alone—Mr CHARLES HALLE .. .. Beethoven.

SOLO, violin, { Adagio from Concerto in E minor / Barcarolle in G } .. .. Spohr.
Madame NORMAN-NERUDA.

QUARTET in E flat, for pianoforte, violin, viola, and violoncello—Mr CHARLES HALLE, Mdme NORMAN-NERUDA, Herr STRAUS, and Herr FRANZ NERUDA .. .. Gernsheim.

Sofa Stalls, 7s.; balcony, 3s.; area, One Shilling.

Tickets at Chappell & Co.'s, 50, New Bond Street; Mitchell's, 33, Old Bond Street; Ollivier's, 38, Old Bond Street; Keith, Prowse & Co.'s, 48, Cheapside; Hays's, 4, Royal Exchange Buildings; and at Austin's Ticket Office, 28, Piccadilly.

NOTICE.

To ADVERTISERS.—The Office of the MUSICAL WORLD is at Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & Co.'s, 244, Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street (First Floor). It is requested that Advertisements may be sent not later than Thursday. Payment on delivery.

The Musical World,

LONDON, SATURDAY, JUNE 12, 1875.

The Last Days of Auber.

"WHEN"—says the Berlin Echo—"just four years ago, on the 13th May, 1871, the telegraph, in a few common-place words, flashed through the world the news that the composer of La Muette de Portici was dead, the fact created no particular impression either in France or abroad, and it was only the class papers which thought of dedicating a more or less long obituary notice to the hero of the operatic stage. The eyes of the rest of the world were too intently fixed on the theatre of war, and every one was anxiously awaiting the latest accounts of the great campaign. What mattered then a single human life, when Death was mowing down his thousands, and when everyone was trembling lest some member of his own family had fallen beneath the destroyer's sharp and ever busy scythe?" Auber died under circumstances which placed him without the sphere of universal sorrow, and it was not until after some years that the world was destined to feel to its full extent the greatness of his loss. It was no young life, full of hopes, which had been cut prematurely short; he whose death was announced had already passed the limit assigned to human existence. His task on earth appeared nearly accomplished even when, venerable laureate as he was, he brought out at the age of 86, in 1868, amid the acclamations of his fellow-countrymen, who once more had occasion to admire and applaud him, his Premier Jour de Bonheur, the day on which he did so being the last day of happiness, perhaps, for him. In a state of things like that which supervened during the years 1870 and 1871, men's deeper feelings of sympathy are generally restricted to the narrow family circle, and family Auber had none. The conventional condolence, therefore, which those more distantly affected are accustomed to offer nearly-related survivors was not forthcoming. The journals, too, which above all others would have been called on to dilate in pompous articles on the master of French art, had, in the gloomy and terrible period of the siege of Paris, suspended their publication, which they did not resume until more peaceful times.

Thus it came to pass that, up to the present moment, we know next to nothing concerning the last days of Auber, and it was left to the imagination to paint them in as fearful colours as possible. This gap has now been filled up by Ed. Hanslick, who has been staying for some weeks past in the French capital, and we here subjoin the article which he has forwarded on the subject to the Vienna Neue Freie Presse:—

Hanslick on Auber.

"The stranger who, after a lapse of several years, revisits a city which he has grown to love, feels more acutely than a regular inhabitant the absence of prominent men once dear to him, but who have since died. On the spot, their death affects him, and him only, as a painful novelty. In the all engulphing whirlpool of Parisian life, who has now much to say of Auber, Rossini, or Berlioz, leaving out of consideration the many less celebrated but charming artists with whom we spent so glorious a time in the brilliant Exhibition Year of 1867?

'Dans ce pays-ci, quinze jours, je le sais,
Font d'une mort récente une vielle nouvelle.'

"Alfred de Musset speaks but too truly in these mournful lines. For myself, however, as I stood before the deserted residences of the three masters, it seemed as though I was standing before three freshly made graves; my intercourse with those three masters I gratefully reckon among the happiest incidents of my life.

"I instituted the most pressing enquiries about Auber's last days; we had, in Germany, received such scanty and uncertain information respecting them. Even as regards the day of his death, the papers did not agree. Auber died in the night of the 12th to the 13th May, 1871, half an hour after midnight. Amid the political thunder-claps of the time, his death excited scarcely any attention, almost as Donizetti's did in 1848. The news of Donizetti's death died away in Germany and France amid the joy-cries of new born freedom. Who, during the general intoxication of that spring-time for the nations, troubled himself about a solitary coffin as it was silently borne past him to the grave! Yet there lay in it one who, highly honoured and beloved, had, by his melodies, delighted thousands and thousands in every country thousands of times. Donizetti died at the wrong moment. So did Auber, only with this difference, that his last gasps were drowned not by the universal joy-cry of nations, but by the horrors of a terrific political catastrophe. 'Toute exaggération est une faute,' he said in his last illness. 'We must not be guilty of excess in anything, and a man must not, like me, live too long.' It is, by the way, a very general mistake to suppose that Auber died alone and deserted; Ambroise Thomas, his faithful friend and pupil, who, during the siege and the reign of the Commune, never left Paris an instant, was with him every day and closed his eyes.

"From the lips of Ambroise Thomas I learned the following particulars:—Auber's greatest source of expense was luxurious carriages and horses. Except his horses, he really cared for no living creature. When famine overtook the beleagured city, the Communards everywhere placed horses of all kinds under requisition, for the purpose of slaughtering them, giving in exchange a very insignificant amount. Of four valuable horses which Auber then had in his stables, they began by taking three. He was deeply grieved by this, but without complaining or raising the slightest objection. They now came to fetch away the last of the four, a black English horse of great value. Ambroise Thomas wanted to take measures for the purpose of inducing the authorities, out of respect for the celebrated and grey-headed master, to make an exception, and leave him his last and favourite horse. But Auber would hear of no such thing. 'C'est la loi,' he repeated with unshaken resolution, although his grief at the idea that the horse would be slaughtered nearly unmanned him. Ambroise Thomas hit upon a happy expedient. He begged and obtained permission from an influential official of the Commune to substitute another horse for Auber's. Thomas's intimate friend, Auguste Wolf, head of the celebrated pianoforte manufactory of Pleyel & Wolf, had been allowed, out of his ten or fifteen horses, to keep three for the most urgent work of his factory at St Denis. One of these was secretly taken to Auber's courtyard, while his own favourite horse, harnessed to a cart filled with planks, trotted off to the factory. Exactly the same as many a story of the preservation of human beings! Every day did Auber, tortured by constantly increasing agony, inquire whether his horse was alive and well tended. He did so the evening before his death. His mind, though he was nearly ninety, remained remarkably clear during his last and painful illness. He attempted to write a piece of chamber music, and sent for some quartets by Mozart and Beethoven from his library. 'A glance at these works,' he observed, smiling, 'will, it is to be hoped, induce me to burn what I have just written.' A life of such uninterrupted happiness as that of Auber falls to the lot of few mortals; still the day at length arrived for him to pay his debt of suffering. The fate of France caused him anxiety and grief; the sway of the Communards filled him with boundless disgust. No one could then offer him political consolation; for consolation of a religious nature he did not ask. Thus ended the composer of Fra Diavolo; ever young, even at a patriarchal age, tortured by bodily pain and oppressed with sorrow for his countrymen and anxiety for Paris, which he loved above aught else, and which, in summer or in winter, he never left. The Communards wanted to take advantage of his death for getting up a demagogical manifestation, proposing to convey the body to the grave with red flags and blaring military music. The demagogues hated Auber, whom they called 'le musicien aristocratique,' and would not have failed to seize on such an occasion for indulging in hostile demonstrations. Ambroise Thomas, to whom these people were quite as repugnant as to his deceased master, determined, at any price, to prevent a demonstration, and preserve the body till it could be borne to the grave in a more honourable manner in more peaceful times. He insisted that the funeral ought to be deferred till the composer's sole relatives, two nieces residing in the country, could come to Paris. On this pretext he succeeded in obtaining permission to remove the corpse secretly from Auber's house, in the Rue St Georges, to a vault of the Ste-Trinité Church. There it lay three months. It was not till after the entry of the French army into Paris, on the 15th July, 1871, that the body was solemnly transported to Père-Lachaise, when Ambroise Thomas, Alexandre Dumas, and others, uttered some glowing and ennobling words at the open grave. But the latter is simply temporary, and the composer's remains will not rest in it always. A short time since, his friends and colleagues purchased the freehold of another, and are now collecting subscriptions for a fitting memorial. Ambroise Thomas and the highly respected principal of the musical firm of Brandus, put themselves at the head of the movement, and made an appeal to the general public. Out of gratitude for the monuments which Auber raised in his works to the Nation, the latter is now called upon to erect a fitting monument in return. I saw the subscription list at M. Brandus's. It contains the names of nearly every celebrated composer. It struck me as a touching fact that the first persons to sign the paper, and for the largest amounts, were the widows of Auber's deceased friends (Mad. Scribe, Mad. Halévy, Mad. Meyerbeer, Mad. G. Kastner, etc.) A genuine instance of the sacred and reverential affection of woman!

Digitized by Google

"General astonishment was excited that the cost of the tomb should have to be defrayed by a public subscriptiou. 'What!' people exclaimed; 'has a grand gentleman, with an income like Auber's, who had no one to provide for, not left sufficient even for this?' The explanation given is that—firstly, Auber spent nearly all his income on himself and his various fancies; and, secondly, that his income was not so considerable as it was believed to be. At the period of his greatest theatrical successes, the pay and per-centage of composers had not reached the height to which they have since attained. In four or five years Auber has frequently not made so much as Offenbach has over and over again received in a month. On the approach of old age, too, Auber had commuted his author's rights for a moderate annuity. Thus he left only a modest sum, which went to two nieces—old devotees, who were never on particularly friendly terms with him, and who resided in the country. At no distant epoch, a monument in Père-Lachaise will mark the resting-place of the master whose brilliant talent was surpassed only by his indefatigable capacity for work. France, who knows how to honour her great men, both in life and death, has thus done her duty. Despite of this, however, we cannot avoid thinking that, during his last days and after his death, fate avenged the egotistical cold-heartedness of Auber as a man. Streams of admiring and admirable eloquence flowed by his grave—but no tears flowed with them. His indifference towards his fellow-men is paid back now he has gone, and his death appears to have left no void in Parisian hearts."

The last sentence of the foregoing shows that Hanslick, after all, had but a very superficial acquaintance with the illustrious French composer. Happily, there are some who knew him more intimately, and can vouch for antecedents evidently unknown to the justly-celebrated Viennese critic. The notion of "tears" for any departed one—no matter what his character, or however great his claims—after the most brutal series of heathen and demoniacal excesses even in the history of the French people, is enough to make ordinary people smile. Fishley Peters.

DONIZETTI'S MANUSCRIPTS.

THE members of the committee for the publication of Donizetti's MS. works met recently at Bergamo (his birthplace), in the office of Sig. Marco Pegurri, public accountant, who, in the presence of Sig. A. Campana, notary, and Sig. Limonta, advocate, opened a square tin box, in which Donizetti's manuscripts have lain sealed up for so many years. These MSS. include:—

1. Some manuscripts of unpublished romances and cantatas.
2. Forty-seven packets, also manuscript, of the score of the opera with ballet, Il Duca d'Alba. The words are in French.
3. The libretto of the above opera, manuscript and French, by Eugène Scribe.
4. Eight thick packets of music, all in the composer's own hand, and constituting the one-act operetta, Deux Hommes et une Femme.
5. The manuscript libretto, by M. Gustave Vaez, of the above opera.
6. A libretto, entirely in the composer's own hand, and in Italian verse. This is the farce, Il Campanello dello Speziale, the music and the words by Donizetti.

The almost illegible handwriting, and the manner in which Donizetti generally noted down his music, rendered it no easy task for Signors Nini, Bertuletti, and Zanetti to decipher the manuscripts; consequently, after a long examination, these experts have undertaken to study them carefully and minutely, before pronouncing an opinion as to the mode of presenting them to the world.

Coventry Fish.

FRENCH PLAYS AT THE OPÉRA-COMIQUE.

Dear Mr Editor,—Mr Pitron's comedy season terminated on Saturday week, with a performance of Les Jocrisses de l'Amour. In this comedy Mdme Wilhem again displayed the versatility of her talent, her Leontine Crochard being an admirable bit of low-comedy acting. Messrs James, Perrier, Lecourt, Noblet, and Monti, played with all their usual intelligence and verve. The performance was for the benefit of the courteous and obliging manager, Mr Currans, and I was glad to see the house well filled. Mr Pitron opened on Monday at the Criterion, for a few weeks, with M. Humbert's Opéra-Comique company, of La Fille de Mdme Angot celebrity. Yours faithfully,

Ignace Gibsone.

Digitized by Google

OCCASIONAL NOTES.

THE number of new operas by native composers produced in Italy during the year 1874 was 35; and it was, also, 35 in other parts of the continent, namely:—16 in Germany; 9 in France; 8 in Russia; and 2 in Hungary.

THE first Schleswig-Holstein Musical Festival will take place at Kiel, on the 27th and 28th inst., under the direction of Herr Joachim. Among the works performed will be Handel's Samson and Mendelssohn's Walpurgismacht. Bravo!—J. J.

LISZT has returned to Weimar from visiting the King of Holland at Loo. His Majesty conferred on the perturbed Abbate the Commander's Cross of the Order of the Iron Crown, and presented him with a writing-desk valued at 24,000 marks. The perturbed Abbate intends remaining at Weimar permanently. Be chesm!

THE post of Director of the Conservatory of Music is a guarantee of long life to those who hold it. Sarrette, the founder and first director of the institution, attained the age of ninety-two; Cherubini lived till he was eighty-two; and Auber did not die till he was in his ninetieth year. This is cheering for M. Ambroise Thomas, the present director.

THE departure of Hans Richter from the National-Theatre of Pesth has been followed by the expression of very diversified opinions on the part of the public and the press. The Hungarian papers are unanimous in asserting that, led away by his Wagner fanaticism, Herr Richter surfeited the public with works by the musician of Bayreuth, to the exclusion of masterpieces by the recognized great composers.

CONCERTS VARIOUS.

MDLLE VICTORIA BUNSEN'S evening concert on Wednesday, the 26th ult., given, by kind permission, at the mansion of Major Wallace Carpenter, was patronized by a large and fashionable audience, including the Swedish Ambassador, Mdme Jenny Lind, &c. Among the most successful events of the evening was Miss Edith Wynne's singing "It was a dream" (Cowen), which was deservedly encored; Signor Campobello's "Hai gia vinto la causa" (Mozart), also encored, and Herr Werrenrath's Danish National song (encored). The singing of the fair bénéficiairs, Mdlle Victoria Bunsen, was admirable. She possesses a contralto voice of excellent quality, and she sings like a thorough artist. Mdlle Bunsen was enthusiastically encored in Rossini's "N'acqui all'affano," with its brilliant pendant "Non più mesta," (Cenerentola), and in response sang the brindisi from Lucrezia Borgia, "Il segreto per esser felice" with characteristic expression. Meyerbeer's "Nobil signors, salute" (Les Huguenots) was given by the accomplished lady with due "emphasis and discretion"; and in some national Swedish melodies the fair artist completely won the hearts of her audience, who, with one accord, applauded her enthusiastically. Signori Urio and Caravoglia, and Mr Shakespeare, were the other vocalists who assisted Mdlle Bunsen. Each was in capital voice, and sang his best. Of the instrumentalists we can speak highly: the violin playing of Mdme Varley-Liebe was capital, especially in a menuetto by Mozart; and the pianoforte performances both of Mdlle Felicia Bunsen and Signor Tito Mattei must be recorded as excellent. The concert was altogether successful; and Mdlle Bunsen must be congratulated on the high and firm artistic position her talent and intelligence have obtained for her in this country.—A. W.

MISS LILLIE ALBRECHT'S second matinée musicale, which (by kind permission of G. Eyre, Esq.) took place in Lowndes Square, on Monday last, the 7th inst., was crowned with the success which this talented and rising young artist so well merits. The pieces chosen by her for performance brought out in a prominent degree her great execution and delicate taste, and proved her to be a finished pianist. The fair bénéficiaire commenced with Chopin's well-known Ballade in G minor, followed by the same master's Tarantelle in A flat, both of which she played admirably; Mendelssohn's Fugue in F minor (Allegro con fuoco) was sustained throughout with clearness and rapidity, and called forth warm and universal approbation. Next in order came Thalberg's Andante in D flat, and his Fantasia on Masaniello, which gained her a hearty recall. Henselt's charming étude, "Si oiseau j'étais" and Ketterer's grand Octave Galop de Concert brought out Miss Albrecht's remarkable executive powers, and concluded this delightful matinée. We must not omit to name a graceful little solo, "The New Forest Valse," specially composed (by desire) for the occasion by the young bénéficiaire, as also a song, "When all is hush'd," sung by Miss Enriquez, and accompanied by the composer, both of which met with loud applause. Miss Josephine Sherrington delighted the audience with Meyerbeer's "Shadow Song," and "Si vous n'avez rien à me dire." The voice of Miss Enriques was heard to advantage in "Duty done," by Mdme Sainton Dolby, and "Sad heart" (Evangeline), by Miss Gabriel. Signor Monari-Rocca was in excellent voice. He sang Mazzoni's "Sogni d'amore," and Mozart's "Non più andrai." The matinée was most ably conducted by Mr Charles E. Stephens, and the audience, which was very numerous and very fashionable, expressed their gratification at the excellence of the programme, and the able manner in which it was carried out. We heartily congratulate Miss Lillie Albrecht on her success. By the bye, it is worthy of note that the young artist played all her pieces without the aid of book.—A. B.

MISS PURDY, a young vocalist, who has already won a good position as a concert-room singer, gave a matinée musicale on Monday, at No. 70, Queen's Gate, South Kensington. Her réunion upon the present occasion was fashionably attended, and the programme good of its kind. Miss Purdy herself was naturally the chief attraction, and she sang several times in the course of the morning. Her selection consisted of a pretty romance called "Chant d'ondine," by a nameless composer, and Lover's ballad, "What would you do, love?"; taking part also in Rossini's duet, "La pesca," Pinsuti's quartet, "I canta storie," and Lucantoni's duet, "Una notte a Venezia." This selection was suitably chosen to exhibit her capabilities both as a solo and a part singer, and gave satisfactory evidence that she has of late largely profited by her public experiences. She was warmly applauded in her separate songs. Her coadjutors were Mdlle Carnielli, Mdlle Bartkowska, Mr Trelawny Cobham, and Mr Maybrick, whose vocal efforts, in a series of light and popular pieces, afforded more or less pleasure to the listeners. Instrumentalisms were, of course, not wanting. Mdlle Castellan played a fantasia on the violin with considerable cleverness, and Signor Tito Mattei two of his own pianoforte solos, in which power and brilliancy were, as usual, the prominent characteristics. Signor Vera, Signor Unia, and Signor Pinsuti were the conductors.—Q.

MDLLE DELPHINE LEBRUN.—By permission of Lord and Lady Dudley, this young and rising pianist gave her matinée musicale on Thursday afternoon, June 3rd, in the picture-gallery of Dudley House. The attendance was numerous and select, and the programme, vocal and instrumental, was of the best. Among the most attractive pieces were naturally those chosen by Mdlle Lebrun herself, in two of which she was associated with other artists of distinction. The first part of the concert began with the Quintet in E flat of Schumann, for pianoforte with stringed instruments—perhaps, excepting the quartet in the same key, the most popular "chamber-composition" of that master. About the work itself we need not speak; all amateurs know it. The performance, however, of Mdlle Lebrun and her companions, Messrs Wilhelmj, Franke, Kummer, and Daubert (violins, viola, and violoncello), may be praised without reserve. At the beginning of the second part Mdlle Lebrun played an Introduction and Allegro for two pianofortes, written by Mr Otto Goldschmidt, whose co-operation she had the advantage of enjoying. The duet fully bears out the spirit of its motto, "When spring unlocks the flowers to paint the laughing soil," being joyous and brilliant throughout, with an occasional hint at Mendelssohn by no means unacceptable. It was executed with a vigour and precision which left nothing to desire, and amid the paucity of existing available works, in which the joint resources of two pianofortes are employed, may be regarded as a boon to concert pianists. Mdlle Lebrun's capacity as solo player was exhibited in a "Ballade" by Chopin and Liszt's "Valse caprice d'après Schubert," in each of which she exhibited qualities, not only of manipulation, but of style, sufficient to justify the warm recognition of her hearers and to warrant the highest hopes as to her future career. Herr Wilhelmj selected for solo his own "Romance," followed by his "Paraphrase" for violin of the slow movement from one of Chopin's pianoforte concertos, which, as usual (accompanied by Mr Otto Goldschmidt), he played to absolute perfection; and Herr Daubert gave an expressive reading of Schumann's peaceful Abenlied ("Evening song"), arranged for the violoncello. A fair selection of vocal music varied the interest of the programme. Mdlle Josephine Sherrington chose the "Shadow Song" from Dinorah, Schumann's "Widmung," and an arrangement for the voice of one of Chopin's Mazurkas; Signor Caravoglia sang a ballad by Louisa Gray; and Mr Bertham gave two somewhat plaintive ditties, the one by Signor Luzzi, the other ("O that we were Maying") by Gounod. About these well-known vocalists it would be superfluous to say anything; but a compliment was justly earned by two young ladies, the Misses Allitsen, pupils of Herr Goldberg. In "Giorno d'orrore," from Semiramide, and the pretty barcarole, "Vieni la barca è pronta," the composition of their preceptor, who accompanied them on the pianoforte, the Misses Allitsen made a very favourable impression, their voices—soprano and mezzo-soprano respectively—being of agreeable quality, and their manner of singing easy and unaffected. Sir Julius Benedict also gave valuable aid in accompanying the vocal music.

Digitized by Google

Mr Sydney Smith's pianoforte recital on Wednesday afternoon, June 2nd, attracted a large number of his friends and patrons to St George's Hall. The composer of so many charming morceaux de salon did not, however, behave very liberally to his admirers, giving them but two novelties—a fantasia on airs from Don Giovanni, and a characteristic piece, entitled "Undine." Mr Smith's admirers, however, seemed determined to have as much as they could from him, and vehemently re-demanded "Undine," but without effect, for Mr Smith returned to the platform, "followed the fashion of the day," and played one of his best known and most admired pieces. The concert-giver, nevertheless, did not spare his exertions in another way to please his audience, for he played Liszt's arrangement of Mendelssohn's Wedding March and Fairy Revels from the Midsummer Night's Dream, Mendelssohn's Concerto in D minor (the orchestral parts arranged for a second piano) and cleverly played by Miss Minnie Simons—an amateur, a pupil, we imagine, of Mr Smith's; with the same lady, Weber's "Polacca brillante," Op. 72, arranged for two pianos; his own popular compositions, "Fairy Whispers" (Nocturne), "L'ange de foyer" (Mélodie), "L'Danse Napolitaine," and Chopin's Nocturne in D flat, and Valse in A flat. We think our readers will agree with the remark we made above, that Mr Sydney Smith did not spare his exertions to please his audience, and that he succeeded, we need hardly insist. The programme was varied by some vocal music entrusted to Madame Patey and Mr Vernon Rigby, two thoroughly accomplished vocalists, whose exertions were fully appreciated, and whose songs were ably accompanied on the pianoforte by Mr Zerbini.

Mdlle Antonia Zellner gave a matinée, by kind permission, at 87, Portland Place, W., assisted by Miss Josephine Sherrington, Herr Ludwig, and Herr Lehmeyer. The young lady, a pianist of decided merit, played with success pieces by Liszt, Rubinstein, Mendelssohn, and a serenade of her own composition with Herr Ludwig; the latter gentleman played two solos by Paganini and Ernst like a true artist, and the concert was highly appreciated by a numerous audience.

The Noblemen and Gentlemen's Catch Club, instituted A.D. 1761, held its fourth meeting for the season on Friday, 4th inst., at Willis's Rooms, presided over by the Duke of Beaufort, vice-chairman; G. Roots, E-q. The Earl of Wilton, the Earl of Wicklow, Jno. Leslie, Esq., M.P., R. B. Hale, Esq., Maxwell Close, Esq., M.P., C. Bruce, Esq., B. Young, Esq., and a large number of members attended. This time-honoured club is regaining much of its former prestige under the energetic management of the present secretary, Mr Land, who is supported con amore by the leading members of the profession.

Mr Ganz gave a matinée musicale at his new residence, Harley Street, on Monday, June 7, and provided a very agreeable entertainment for his numerous patrons. Mr Ganz played Mendelssohn's trio in D minor, for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello (in conjunction with Herr Wilhelmj and M. Paque); "Six variations for the pianoforte, on an original air" (Beethoven); "Mélodie in F" (Rubinstein); "Scherzino" and "Arabeske" (Schumann); Impromptu in A flat (Schubert); and his own popular galop de concert, "Qui Vive." It is hardly necessary to say that Mr Ganz's performances met with due appreciation from his numerous friends. The vocal and instrumental artists who assisted him were of the highest class. The conductors were Sir Julius Benedict and Mr Frederic Cowen. Mr Ganz announces a "soirée musicale," in the same locale, to take place on Tuesday, June 22.

Mr Sidney Waymouth gave a concert, under the direction of Mr Lansdowne Cottell, on Saturday last, at the Store Street Concert Hall, which attracted an overflowing audience. Mr Waymouth gave several humorous songs by the late Tom Hood, and, with Miss Fortescue, Mazzhinghi's well-known duet, "When a little farm we keep," in which both singers acted and sang well. George Macfarren's trio, "The Troubadour," was sung by the Misses Edith Shield and Rice, and Mr Wilbye; the latter sang Mr Brinley Richard's "Suliote war song." Mdlle Alguro was encored in the brindisi from Lucrezia Borgia, and, with Sig. ——, sang some Italian duets. Miss Emily Fortescue, a pupil of Mr Lansdowne Cottell, gave with much taste a new song, "Oh! buy my flowers," which she was called upon to repeat. Several other songs and duets, as well as solos on the pianoforte, were given by different young artists with more or less effect. Miss Blanche Roope, with Mr C. Linter and Mr Cottell, presided at the pianoforte.

The Aldermanbury Musical Society, which numbers upwards of 200 members, closed its first season with a soirée musicale on Monday, the 7th inst., in The Mart, Tokenhouse Yard, City. The numerous attendance, and the harmony (in both senses of the word) that prevailed, bespoke the success of the evening, and augurs well for the future of this young society. The vocal portion of a well-selected programme was effectively rendered by Miss Stiles, Miss Wood, and Messrs Salisbury, Markham, Reece, Harris, and East, and Herr Lehmeyer's able and artistic performance on the pianoforte added considerably to the enjoyment of the evening. The arrangements were ably carried out by Mr Edward Craig, the musical director and conductor of the society, assisted by the energetic secretary, Mr Arthur Markham; the former gentleman receiving such an ovation at the opening, as well as at the close of the proceedings, that at once showed his popularity and the confidence reposed in him both by the members and the committee.—A. B.

The fourth concert this season of the Schubert Society took place on Wednesday, the 2nd of June. The first part of the programme was devoted to the compositions of the President of the Society (Sir Julius Benedict), and included his string quartet (Op. 87). The following members of the society appeared, and rendered their several vocal and instrumental pieces in a highly creditable manner:—Messrs Walters and Douns, violins; Mr Deane, viola; Herr Schuberth, violoncello; Miss Lousie Diche and Mdlle L. de Lucie, pianoforte; Mr Odell, Mr G. Cleather, Miss Holcroft, Miss Buley, and Miss Palmer, vocalists. The second part of the programme was miscellaneous, Miss Palmer earning an encore for her ballad, "Far away from thee," also Mdlle Uhle for a song of Raboudi (violoncello obbligato, Herr Schuberth). The rooms were crowded. The fifth and last concert this season is announced to take place on the 30th inst., for the benefit of Herr Schuberth, who we have no doubt will be honoured with a "bumper."

Messrs J. Ludwig and H. Daubert's third "chamber concert" took place on Wednesday, at the Langham Hall, Great Portland Street, and was quite equal in interest to the preceding ones. Schumann's Sonata in D minor (Op. 121), for violin and pianoforte, was played in the most perfect manner by Miss Agnes Zimmermann and Herr Josef Ludwig, and was listened to with the most profound attention. Miss Agnes Zimmermann played, also, a prelude and fugue by Bach, and a work of her own, entitled "Sunshine," in which she appeared to advantage, both as executant and composer. Herr Daubert gave an elegant interpretation, on the violoncello, of Schumann's "Abschied," for which he was greatly applauded. Beethoven's string quartet in C (Op. 59), was done every justice to by Messrs Ludwig, Jung, Zerbini, and Daubert. The vocalist was Mdlle Thekla Friedländer, who sang several lieder by Schubert, Brahms, Reinecke, and an elegant little song by Madame Clara Schuman, "How can I woo her?" Mr Zerbini accompanied the songs on the pianoforte with his usual tact and judgment.—G.

Mdme Marie Angelo, a pianist of high reputation in patrician saloons, gave a pianoforte recital in St James's Hall on Wednesday afternoon, May 12, with the assistance, as vocalists, of Miss Edith Wynne and Mr Santley. The programme was selected from the works both of "classical" and modern composers. We subjoin the titles of the pieces played by the accomplished bénéficiaire:—"Le Reveil du Lion," caprice heroique, as played by the composer (De Kontski); Grand Sonata, in C major, Op. 53 (Beethoven); Rondo, from Concerto, Op. 32, and Grosse Polonaise, Op. 21 (Weber); and the following short but interesting works: Canzonetta (left hand only) (W. Taubert); Romance (left hand only) (A. H. Sponholtz); "Hunting Song," and "The Wheel" (Mendelssohn); and "Rêverie d'Amour" (Mdme Marie Angelo). We need hardly say that Mdme Angelo's performance was listened to with pleasure by her admirers, and that the applause she received was well merited. Mr Alfred Gilbert and Mr F. H. Cowen accompanied the vocal music on the pianoforte with their accustomed musicianly ability.

THE FORGET-ME-NOT.*

This lovely flower, by Nature wrought,
Will whisper thee "Forget-me not;"
In pleasure sweet, or pain severe,
Still think of me, my sister dear.

Think still of me, though far away
In other lands I chance to stray;
A wanderer's life may yet be mine:
Then let me breathe a prayer for thine.

May every earthly blessing be,
Until life's close, surrounding thee;
Domestic joys, and friendship's charms,
Crowned with that hope which death disarms.

Should fortune smile upon my aims,
I'll recognize a sister's claims;
And gladly aid to cheer thy lot,
And prove that thou art not forgot.

But, if to pain and grief I bow,
If happiness I may not know;
Let flowers like this reminders be,
And help thee—to remember me. J. R. R.

* Copyright.

Hamburg.—Herr Wachtel has been singing at the Stadttheater.

Digitized by Google

PROVINCIAL.

BOSTON.—On Wednesday, 2nd inst., Mr D. J. Wood's choral class gave an excellent performance of Sir W. S. Bennett's May Queen, in the Shodfriar's Hall, before a large audience. The principals were Madame Billinie Porter, Mrs Lee, Mr Wilford Morgan, and Mr Chaplin Henry; the accompanists were Miss H. Porter (organist of the Parish Church, Louth), harmonium; and Mr William Porter, of Bourn, pianoforte; Mr Wood, Mus. Bac. Oxon., conducted. The second part of the concert consisted of a miscellaneous selection. Madame B. Porter was encored in "Bid me discourse," and the other artists were similarly honoured in several morceaux.

NEW CROSS.—The fifth concert of "The Instrumental Music Society" of New Cross took place on Wednesday evening, the 2nd of June. The orchestra was effective, and rendered more so by being reinforced by some of our most efficient players from London, among whom were Messrs Lazarus, Rockstro, and Hughes. Beethoven's Symphony in C and his overture to Prometheus, with Mozart's Figaro and Boieldieu's La Dame Blanche, were capitally played and were deservedly applauded. M. Lazarus gave a clarionet solo, on airs from Der Freischütz, and Mr R. S. Rockstro his "Carnival of Venice," and joined M. Lazarus in a Duo Concertante, by Bochsa, for flute and clarionet, entitled "Dialogo brillante, which both artists played in first-rate style. Mr Hughes, in his famous ophicleide solo on Handel's "Oh, ruddier than the cherry," brought down loud applause. The vocalists were Mrs Harry Brett and Mr Edward Lloyd. The former gave a song by Beethoven and Henry Smart's "Lady of the Lea;" the latter a song by Schubert and Blumenthal's "The Message." Both singers did justice to themselves and to the songs entrusted to them. Mr N. Wedemeyer was the conductor of the orchestral music, and Mrs H. Brett and Miss Baillie accompanied the vocal music on the pianoforte.

LOUGHBOROUGH.—The Convalescent Home concert took place at the Town Hall, under the patronage of Mrs Perry Herrick, who was present. The reserved seats were well occupied, although the back part of the Hall was scantily attended. The concert had a double attraction and claim upon public favour, first, because of the benevolent object to be aided by it, and second, because The Land of Promise, a new oratorio by Mr Frances Howell, was performed for the first time in Loughborough. Thanks are due to Mr Deane, sen., Mr Frank White, and Mr George Adcock, for kindly initiating and conducting the concert; and praise is due to the Philharmonic Band, and to the chorus singers, for having prepared themselves in so short a time to render so efficiently this altogether new work. The solo parts were well sustained by Miss Gill (soprano), Mr Jno Adcock (tenor), and Mr Charles Lacey (basso). The instrumental parts were of the usual superior character to which we are happily accustomed in this town, and the oratorio is of such a new and varied style as to afford scope for the display of ability by both vocal and instrumental performers. We have no doubt it will grow in public favour, and take a very respectable rank in high class musical compositions. An encore was demanded and given of the beautiful trio, "There remaineth a rest," &c. The net proceeds of the concert, amounting to five pounds, has been handed over to "The Home."

RICHMOND (Surrey).—A grand concert was given here on Thursday evening, the 3rd inst., in aid of the fund for building the new Cemetery Chapel. The concert, which was under distinguished patronage, took place in the Star and Garter Hotel, and was fully attended by the élite of Richmond and its neighbourhood. The first part consisted of Sir Sterndale Bennett's cantata, The Woman of Samaria, performed by an efficient chorus of amateurs, from which body, also, the solo singers were selected. The cantata was skilfully conducted by Mr R. J. Hopper. The Rev. H. W. Miller (Mus. Bac. Oxon.) and Mr W. Burnham Horner played the accompaniments on the piano and harmonium with judgment. Great pains had evidently been taken in the preliminary rehearsals for this performance, and it is not, therefore, surprising that the result was highly satisfactory. The choruses went with spirit and precision, especially "Therefore with joy" and "Now we believe." Among the solos we may particularly notice the recitative and air, "Art thou greater than our father, Jacob?" (Miss Frances Courtenay); "O Lord, Thou hast searched me out" (Miss Prothero); "Whosoever drinketh of this water" (Mr T. L. Robinson); "His salvation is nigh them" (Sir G. Innes); and the beautiful quartet, "God is a spirit," in which the Rev. H. W. Miller took the tenor part. The second part of the concert was miscellaneous. Mdlle Bartkowska sang Rossini's "Bell raggio," receiving warm applause; Miss P. Courtenay, "Where the bee sucks" (encored); and Miss Prothero, "Kathleen Mavourneen." Mr Oberthür, who received quite an "ovation" on his entrée, played (with Mr Hopper) his brilliant duet for harp and piano, on airs from Lucrezia Borgia, and afterwards his effective solo, "Clouds and sunshine." Mr Cotsford Dick's recital of John Parry's "Mrs Roseleaf's evening party" gave universal pleasure; and two part-songs, "Blanche" (Kücken), and "Good-night" (Garrett), were highly effective. Between the parts the honorary secretary, Mr Alexander, to whose indefatigable exertions the ultimate success of the concert was mainly due, gave a statement of the results, which were received with expressions of general satisfaction.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL.

The first of the opera concerts of 1875, at the Albert Hall, given under the auspices of Mr Mapleson, took place on Saturday afternoon June 5, under the usual brilliant circumstances. The hall was full, the ladies' dresses gay, and the interest—if not, except in certain instances, strongly expressed—general. Nor could it be otherwise. The cream of Mr Mapleson's company was in attendance, the only artist of high rank not present being Mdlle Tietjens. But, then, there was Mdme Christine Nilsson, who will doubtless give place to her great contemporary at the next concert, which is promised early in July. The selection, like all selections of the kind, was not characterised by novelty, the singers deriving what they sang wholly from popular operas—gems, nevertheless, in their way, and always welcome. Mdme Nilsson was in her best voice, and sang the Jewel Song from Faust, and the scena from Lucia di Lammermoor, "Ardon gli incensi," in her own faultless and bewitching manner. Mdlle Elena Varesi met with a hardly less friendly acceptance—her delivery of Bellini's cavatina, "Qui la voce," was facility itself, and a specimen of executive art which unquestionably could not be surpassed. Another soprano of high attainment was also heard in Mdlle Louise Singelli, who gave Meyerbeer's Shadow Song with pleasing dexterity, and without fear of unfavourable comparison elsewhere. The new mezzo-soprano, Mdlle Anna de Belocca, was set down for "Di tanti palpiti" and "Il segreto," and acquitted herself satisfactorily, though without achieving for the latter the encore that ordinarily awaits it. Mdlle Pernini was also in commission. The gentlemen singers were headed by Sig. Campanini and M. Capoul. Nothing could exceed the tastefulness of the former's delivery of Donizetti's pretty romanza, "Deserto in terra," or the impassioned tenderness of M. Capoul in Gounod's "Salve dimora" (encored), to which the airy warbling, by the same artist, of "La donna è mobile" came subsequently in graceful contrast. The other tenors, Signori Gillandi and Fancelli, chose morceaux by Méhul and Donizetti, the last mentioned of these singers distinguishing himself conspicuously by his energetic reading of the aria from Maria di Rohan, "Alma soave." The basses were in equal force with the tenors, and consisted of Signor Galassi, Signor de Reschi, Herr Behrens, and Signor Castelmary. They, too, resorted to the well-worn, but not worn-out, tunes of the opera-house—the Traviata, Dinorah, Don Giovanni, and Ernani supplying them not only with familiar materials, but with excellent vehicles for the illustration of their several abilities. The concerted music did not, in quantity, amount to much. Donizetti's quartet, "Chi me frena," sung with excellent effect by Mdlle Varesi, Signor Fancelli, Signor Galassi, and Herr Behrens, closed the first part. In the second, "Crudel perchè" was sung in good average style by Mdlle Pernini and Signor de Reschi; and, by-and-bye, came Balfe's famous duet from Il Talismano, "Teco il serba," which, sung by Mdme Christine Nilsson and Sig. Campanini, awakened all the enthusiasm which commonly befals it upon the stage. The orchestra, a small one, was conducted by Mr W. G. Cusins, but its performance of the two overtures, Der Freischütz and La Gazza Ladra, was by no means among the best features of the entertainment.

D. H. H.

PRAGUE.—Anton Rubenstein's Macabäer will shortly be produced at the Royal German Landestheater.

PESTH.—Verdi's Aida, with Miss Minnie Hauck in the principal female part, has proved exceedingly attractive.

MUNICH.—Mad. Mallinger has appeared at the Theatre Royal as Norma, and as Frau Fluth in Die lustigen Weiber von Windsor.

HANOVER.—The concert in which Liszt took part, some time ago, for the benefit of the Bach Monument at Eisenach, brought 6,000 marks.

VIENNA.—Verdi has arrived here, where, besides introducing his Requiem, he will conduct several performances of his last dramatic work, Aïda, at the Imperial Opera.

Digitized by Google

MUSICIANS WHO HAVE DIED AWAY.*

By Joseph Seiler.

III.

JOHANNES BEER.

(Continued from page 195.)

Cap. XIX.

OF GERMAN, ITALIAN, AND FRENCH SINGERS AND INSTRUMENTISTS.

The whole world hath gradually come to be of the fixed opinion that there are no better singers than in Italy, and no better instrumentists than in France. In what, however, concerneth trumpets, trombones, zinkes,† the cornet muto, item flute, and such like, Germany might pari passu be included in the list. As regardeth the first, it must be known that no folk under the sun is naturally more given to music than the Italians, who are, therefore, musici naturales. Not to be disputed is it, however, that if the usus attained such a pitch among us we should modulate much more devoutly than the Italians. For their manners, that is to say: of the Italians, are so prone unto freedom, that of twenty bars they will scarcely go through one without *colloris*ing or indulging in the trillo. They are, likewise, naturally more disposed to singing than the Germans, because their language is full of vocals, while ours, on the contrary, is full of consonants, which cannot well be pronounced. In addition to this, all Italy swarmeth with Castrati, so that, from their earliest years, the youth naturally inclined toward music have good and splendid opportunity for being instructed, according to the proverb: A bove maiore discit arare minor. In Germany, on the contrary, from the want of such quanti costi questa pomeranza, things do proceed in a wearisome fashion, when a youth hath to be taught by an old man. For then do they sing the ut, re, mi, fa in tenor, which the boys have to repeat in discant. Sometimes they introduce a squeaking falset, as pleasant as a nest of young rats. Moreover, people in Germany expend little, or, at any rate, not as much as people do in Italy, on music, so they thus everywhere stick fast. For all this, I have heard German Castrati, who did much better than the most celebrated Italian ones of the same period. But it is favourable to the Italians that they are foreign in Germany, and, in conformity to the old proverb, asinus peregrinus is esteemed more highly than equus domesticus. I will not by this overlaud anyone, nor will I detract from him, and, as concerneth high voices, cum a potiori denominatio fiat, willingly leave them the rank of honour. With respect, however, to the Tenor and Bass, they are very poor potentates therein, and I shall always be of the mind that I prefer hearing a "Miserere" sung by Germans to hearing it sung by Italians, because the latter cannot possibly refrain from taking immoderate liberties, and executing one run after another, although the piece may be: Cor contritum et humiliatum, etc. Summa: There are many Italians who sing better than Germans, and there are, also, many Germans who sing better than Italians; consequently, the Italians are superior only in as much as they possess a greater natural predilection for music, and consequently more inventive power than the Germans.

The instrumentalists, however, both French and Italian (considered man for man) must strike their colours to the Germans, and, as regards the foundation of the composition, the Germans, apart from what concerns the full movement and the purity thereof, have ever taken the lead. Their productions, partly airs and partly theatrical compositions, are pleasant to hear, but, as respects church music, the Italians so bedizened it out, that, as may already be known to the gentle reader from his Advises, the late Pope, in order to mitigate the jingle jangle and to prevent it becoming too outrageous, had public letters patent affixed to all the church doors in Rome and elsewhere. For their music generally glides into dances, and they seldom compose a piece in which to a certain degree there are not the indications of a Saltarello. Barthali‡ alone hath unusual gravity in what he doth, and in this, as far as regardeth musical pomp, he is followed tolerably well by Berande* in Dresden, so that it appears it is not till they are in Germany that Italians become quite perfect and achieve exactly that which we Germans look for in them.

Occasione of this, I must here state something, also, of a Polack whom I saw at the Pauliner Collegio, Leipsic, play so fast and loose, cut about, hop and spring here and there, up and down, above and below, on his violin, that I kept thinking the fellow would jump with it through the window. But the German who fiddled with him would by no means be left behind. If the Polack led the way with a musical squib, the German followed with a half-a-pound rocket, so that one heard such a scraping and fiddling, such a quidel quadel, ropeldi popeldi, rumpidi, pumpidi, that no one knew what to call it, cutting or thrusting, sawing or beating, herbs or carrots, must or milk; in a word, they moved their heads so in these capers, that the peruke of one of them was like half-past eleven, and he could see his part with one eye only. I was indeed alarmed when I perceived their faces. For they bit through both lips, like the cross on a Coburg butter-cracknel, and glared out at their eyes like stake-makers, and if the bearer of his fiddle-stick had not started out of its place, I believe the Polack would not have finished even now, so bitterly incensed was the fellow with his fiddle. The end of it was that both were obliged to wipe the sweat from their foreheads, and sit puffing and blowing for half-a-quarter of an hour.

French music being of a peculiar kind, requireth peculiar tastes in those who like it. Their Suites sound bravely at table. Their muted shawms, too, together with the newly invented bassoon, are not bad, and whoever is fond of them may now enjoy much satisfaction from such compositions and instruments at many German hotels. With regard, however, to the violin in specie, I have up to this present datum never met a Frenchman who played one of Biber's solos.† Their singers, also, are of no great importance. Their greatest glory is derived from the Brandels.‡

(To be continued.)

—o—

WAIFS.

M. Stephen Heller has received from the King of Portugal the Cross of Chevalier of the Order of Christ.

Le Théâtre de Leeds (Ecosse) vient d'être complétement détruit par un incendie.—Revue et Gazette Musicale.

A monument is about to be erected, in Paris, to Samson, the late eminent comedian of the Théâtre Français.

It is reported that the eminent violinist, Wilhelmj, intends for the future to make London his home. So much the better for London.

Mdme Teresina Stolz, one of the four artists who have been singing in Verdi's Réquiem, is engaged, for next autumn, at the Italian Opera, St Petersburg.

The Royal Philharmonic Academy at Rome is preparing a grand concert, at which Mendelssohn's oratorio, St Paul, and his famous Motet, are to be the principal features.

Organ Appointment.—Mr Billinie Porter (late organist of Bromborough Parish Church, Cheshire) to be organist and choirmaster of St Andrew's Renshaw-street, Liverpool.

Mdlle Victoria Bunsen was presented, after her concert (given last week), with a magnificent fan, as a testimonial, by a lady of rank, for the pleasure the singing of the fair Swede had given the donor.

The sudden death of M. Georges Bizet, the young and promising composer, whose last work, Carmen, achieved so signal a success at the Opéra Comique, has caused an unusual sensation in Parisian artistic circles.

The Huguenots has recently been performed at Ravenna, for the first time, and with immense success, the Raoul being Signor Carpi, who is next week to take the place of Signor Nicolini, as Lohengrin, at the Royal Italian Opera.

* From the Neue Berliner Musikzeitung.

† A zinke was a kind of rustic cornet, now fallen into disuse.—J. V. B.

‡ Antonio Bertali, Imperial Chapelmaster at Vienna in 1680, and, in his day, highly esteemed as a composer. He published at Dillingen, in 1671: Thesaurus musicus trium Instrumentorum. Folio.

* This name is to be found neither in Walther nor in Gerber. Can it be meant for Chr. Bernhardi? The latter was Chapelmaster in Dresden, 1682-1692, though not an Italian, but a Pole.

† Franz Heinrich von Biber, 1650-1698, one of the greatest violin virtuosos and composers of his time, died as Chapelmaster of Salzburgh, after being on various occasions presented with golden chains of honour, and at length being created a baron of the Empire.

‡ Branle, an old French dance with singing. Quick movement and strongly marked rhythm.

Digitized by Google

Sir Michael Costa is said to be diligently perusing the score of Wagner's Tristan und Isolde.

M. Georges Pfeiffer, a composer and pianist of repute, and member of the well-known house of Pleyel, Wolff and Co., pianoforte manufacturers of Paris, has arrived in town.

Dr Grunt writes to us, from Ingpqtzmmg, that "the Akhoond of Swat is said to be dying." We are sorry. Dr Shipping and Dr Bool, accompanied by their interpreter, Mwtngg, have gone to Swat, to see if anything can be done. Luck go with them, if only for the sake of the Akhoond.

Mr Thomas Armstrong, who for many years has conducted the performances of the Societa Armonica, of Liverpool, has been presented with a handsome silver tankard. Mr W. Laidlaw, the President of the Society, gave the testimonial to Mr Armstrong, in presence of a large number of the members. Prior to doing so he alluded to the objects of the Association, and eulogised the conductor, holding up Mr Armstrong's punctuality and zeal as virtues to be imitated. Mr Armstrong, having acknowledged the gift, spoke of the work of the Society, and pointed to the fact that within a comparatively short period it had introduced to Liverpool for the first time nine symphonies, six or eight overtures, and a similar number of marches, all of a very high order. Its labours were unattended by any pecuniary gain, being solely for the furtherance of the cause of music.

BAIREUTH.—Wagner has begun a new opera, to be entitled Percival.

MAYENCE.—The business of the well-known musical publishing firm of B. Schott's Sons has been bequeathed by Mad. Betty Schott, who died a short time since, to her two nephews, Peter Schott and Franz von Landwehr, who are still minors, and Dr Ludwig Strecker. It will continue to be managed as usual by Herren Ph. Heim and A. L. Mezière, who have been connected with it for many years.

NEW MUSIC RECEIVED.

ASHDOWN & PARRY, 18, Hanover Square.—"Gigue," "Gavotte," composed by Corelli, transcribed for the pianoforte by Jules Brissac.

CHAPPELL & CO., 50, New Bond Street.—"Her Voice," ballad, composed by Archibald J. N. Macdonald.

ROBERT COCKS & CO., New Burlington Street.—"Dear England," song, by Louis Diehl.

J. B. CRAMER & CO., 201, Regent Street, W.—"Eight Characteristic Pieces," by Woldemar Bargiel—(1) Minuetto, (2) Præludium, (3) Air, (4) Album-Blatt, (5) Barcarolle, (6) Papillon, (7) Andante Serioso, (8) Capriccio; "Binding Sheaves," song, by Alice Mary Smith; "Good bye, dear love," song, and "Tisi," song, by Ciro Pinsuti; "The Mountain Church," vocal duet, by Franz Abt; "Fair, but fleeting," song, Francesco Berger; "Constancy," song, Charles Gounod.

ENOCH & SON, Holles Street.—"Frasgati," valse, by Henry Litolff; "Marche Circassienne," pour piano, par Renaud de Vilbac; "La malle des Indes," galop brillant, par Georges Lamothe; "Red as a rose is she," ballad, by Cotsford Dick; "Gentle sleep," song, by Arthur G. Thomas; "Then think of me," song, by Louisa Gray; "Les Prés St Gervais," by Kuhe; "Valse du printemps," valse chantée, pour piano, by Renaud de Vilbac; "Ballade," pour piano, par Ignace Gibsone; "Rococo," pour piano, par E. Silas; Haydn's "Celebrated Gipsy Rondo," arranged by Sir Julius Benedict; "Chaconne," for the pianoforte, by Cotsford Dick; "Crispin the Cobler," song, by H. B. Hunter; "Les Prés St Gervais," No. 5, Ch. Lecocq.

GODDARD & CO., Argyll Place, Regent Street.—"La Poste du village," galop brillant, by Lillie Albrecht.

W. GOODWIN, 15A, Leicester Place, Leicester Square.—"Daybreak," song, by Augustus L. Tamplin.

HUTCHINGS & ROMER, 9, Conduit Street.—"Fair Chloe," song, by Ignace Gibsone.

HOPWOOD & CREW, 42, New Bond Street.—"The Festival March," by J. C. Dunster.

LOCKWOOD & CO., 7, Stationers' Hall Court.—"A Rudimentary and Practical Treatise on Music," and "The Art of Playing the Pianoforte, with numerous Exercises and Lessons," by Charles Child Spencer.

LAMBORN COCK & CO., 63, New Bond Street.—"Northern," song, by C. A. Ranken.

R. MILL & SONS, 140, New Bond Street.—"Andantino Grazioso," for the organ, with pedal obbligato, by Catherine Penna.

METZLER & CO., Great Marlborough Street, W.—"She and I," song, by Louisa Gray; "The Yorkshire Exhibition March," for the organ, by William Sparks, Mus. Doc.

METHVEN, SIMPSON & CO., 122, Nethergate, Dundee.—"Homeward Bound," song, by W. N. Watson; "A Wreath for my Queen," and "Waiting," sacred song, by Maimie Dougal.

NOVELLO, EWER & CO., Berners Street, Oxford Street.—"The Congregational Psalmist: a Companion to all the New Hymn Books," edited by Henry Allen, D.D., and Henry John Gauntlett, Mus. Doc.; "Sonata," for the pianoforte, by Charlton T. Speer: "The Rainy Day," song, by Wm. Fossey Bradshaw.

F. PITMAN, 20, Paternoster Row.—"Holy, holy, holy," short anthem for Trinity Sunday, "If ye love one another," short anthem for Whit Sunday, composed by Jacob Bradford.

PATERSON & SONS, 152, Buchanan Street, Glasgow.—"The Children's Dance," polka facile à quatre mains, and "The bonnie Braes o' Airlie," song, by Alfred Stella; "The Transit," galop, and "The International Dances," quadrille, by William E. Frost.

PHILLIPPS, HART & CO., Church Street, Liverpool.—"Alcyone Waltzes," for the pianoforte, by George L. Miller.

SIMPSON & CO. (late WEIPPERT), 14, Argyll Street, Regent Street, W.—"Marche des Fantassins," pour le piano, par Guillaume H. Wall; "Moonrise" (A Dream by the Sea), for the pianoforte, by Richard F. Harvey; "The Rippling Stream," valse, by James Downey; "I saw thee weep," song, by John Cheshire; "Honour Bright," song, composed by J. L. Hatton; "The Lover and the Star," ballad, by Guglielmo.

J. SCRUTTON (from Cramer & Co.'s), Little Marlborough Street, Regent Street.—"The Peaceful King," bass song, by James F. Simpson.

SWAN & PENTLAND, 3, Great Marlborough Street, W.—"An Old Story," song, by L. Zavertal.

WEEKES & CO., 16, Hanover Street, Regent Street, W.—"Tarantelle," pour piano, par William Wasserzug.

JOSEPH WILLIAMS, 24, Berners Street.—"Transcriptions caracteristiques," by Ch. Newstedt—(1) Plainte moresque, (2) Pas à calle, (3) Retraite espagnole; "Nuit etoilée," rêverie pour piano, par Auguste Durand; "The Children's Voices," duettino, and "From Distant Lands," composed by Fabio Campana; "Shall I wear a White Rose?" song, by Emily Bardsley Farmer; "To the North-East Wind," song, J. L. Hatton; "Summer time with me," ballad, by J. G. Callcott.

Advertisements.

THE VOICE & SINGING
BY
ADOLFO FERRARI.
THE FORMATION AND CULTIVATION OF THE VOICE FOR SINGING.
Price 12s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, REGENT STREET, W.

"The remarkable qualities of this book are the author's freedom from conventional trammels, the strong sense of his opinions, and the novelty yet evident soundness of his precepts; his work has consequently come into general use as a manual of vocal instruction."—Daily News.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE,
For invigorating and enriching the voice, and removing affections of the throat.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE is universally acknowledged to be the most valuable remedy for sore throat, hoarseness and relaxed throat. It should always be taken before singing or reciting, as it strengthens the vocal organs. It is most extensively prescribed by the faculty for the throat and voice. Dr Lewis of Basingstoke says he finds them most efficacious, and in Dr Copland's Dictionary of Practical Medicine (Longman & Co.), they are strongly recommended at pages 872 and 1492. They are used by all the greatest vocalists and orators in Europe, and have been established over a quarter of a century. Testimonials from Patti, Grisi, Lablache, Santley, &c. Sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d. by all Chemists throughout the United Kingdom and the Colonies.

MDLLE ZARE THALBERG.

LE CARNAVAL DE VENISE, with Variations, by Sir JULIUS BENEDICT, as sung by MDLLE ZARE THALBERG, MDLLE MARIMON, &c., at the FLORAL HALL CONCERTS, is published—price 4s.—by DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

NORAH'S MESSAGE.

SUNG BY

MADME ADELINA PATTI

WITH DISTINGUISHED SUCCESS AT

THE FLORAL HALL.

THE POETRY BY

THE LADY JOHN MANNERS.

THE MUSIC BY

SIR JULIUS BENEDICT.

Price 4s.

LONDON:
DUNCAN DAVISON & CO., 244, REGENT STREET.

Digitized by Google

NEW SONGS.

THE LAST FAREWELL.

New Song by J. L. HATTON.

Sung by Mdlle ALBANI, at the Floral Hall Concerts, with the greatest possible success. In C and E. Price 4s.

NEW SONGS
BY ARTHUR SULLIVAN.

SWEETHEARTS. In A♭ and B♭. Sung by E. LLOYD 4s
THE JUDGE'S SONG. From Trial by Jury. Sung by Mr. FRED SULLIVAN 4s
TENDER AND TRUE. In E♭ and F. Sung by EDITH WYNNE 4s
THE DISTANT SHORE. In E♭, F, and G 4s
THOU ART WEARY. In D minor and F minor ... 4s
THOU'RT PASSING HENCE... ... ... 4s

NEW SONGS
BY VIRGINIA GABRIEL.

CLOVELLY. Words from "Songs for Sailors." Dedicated to H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh... ... 4s
SOWING AND REAPING. Sacred Song 3s
SHE CAME LIKE A DREAM. Sung by Madame ENRIQUEZ 3s
THE WHITE DOVE 2s 6d

NEW SONGS
BY FAVOURITE COMPOSERS.

YES AND NO ... ... LOUISA GRAY 3s
MY LADYE ... ... AMY COMPTON 3s
IN THE TWILIGHT HOURS „ 3s
ELSIE'S DREAM ... JOSEPH L. ROECKEL 3s
BESIDE THE SEA ... „ „ 3s
SUMMER WINDS ... „ „ 3s
SO LONG AGO... ... GEORGE BARKER 3s
NINETTE ... ... „ „ 3s
THE ENTREATY The Lady CLARENCE PAGET 3s
GLAMOUR ... „ „ 3s
SWEET LISETTE ... ... J. L. ROECKEL 3s
THE CHILDREN IN THE WOOD „ 3s

CHAPPELL & CO.,
50, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON.

ROYAL
ITALIAN OPERA.

PRODUCTION OF WAGNER'S
'LOHENGRIN.'

The Books of Airs (in Two Books), arranged for Pianoforte, with ad. lib. accompaniments for Flute, Violin, and Violoncello, by

W. HUTCHINS CALLCOTT

PRICE.

Solos ... ... 5*s. each.*
Duets ... ... 6*s.* „
Accompaniments ... ... 1*s.* „

LONDON:
HUTCHINGS & ROMER,
9, Conduit Street, Regent Street, W.

Digitized by Google

POPULAR DANCE MUSIC,

Elegantly Illustrated.

QUADRILLES.

		s.	d.
Auber (Melodies of)	C. Godfrey	4	0
Banting	Marriott	4	0
Blue Beard	C. Coote, jun.	4	0
Bridesmaids' (very easy)	W. Crawford	3	0
Bellevue	Marriott	4	0
Chilpéric	Marriott	4	0
Caledonians	Marriott	4	0
Caledonians (with the figures)	R. Coote	3	0
Carnarvon Castle (Welsh airs)	H. S. Roberts	4	0
Comic Tunes	C. Coote	4	0
Dolly Varden	Marriott	4	0
England and Wales	Marriott	4	0
Emerald Isle	H. S. Roberts	3	0
Formosa	W. C. Levey	4	0
Figaro	C. Coote, jun.	4	0
Happy Home	Marriott	4	0
Holidays	J. Pridham	3	0
Ireland	Marriott	4	0
Italy	Marriott	4	0
Irish	Marriott	4	0
L'ancien régime (French airs)	Goodban	4	0
Lady of Lorne	Alister M'Alister	4	0
Little Folks	S. Glover	4	0
Little Children's (very easy)	A. Miolan	3	0
My Darling (ditto)	A. Miolan	3	0
Masquerade Lancers	C. Coote, jun.	4	0
Merrymaking	J. T. Stone	4	0
Nemesis	J. Fitzgerald	4	0
New Lancers	H. J. Tinney	3	0
Orpheus (Offenbach)	C. Godfrey	4	0
Oriental	Marriott	4	0
Overture	C. Coote, jun.	4	0
Pretty Bird	C. Coote, jun.	4	0
Pretty Kitty	C. Coote, jun.	4	0
Punch and Judy	H. S. Roberts	4	0
Punch and Judy Lancers	H. S. Roberts	4	0
Patchwork	E. M. Lott	4	0
Princess Louise	C. Godfrey	4	0
Princess Louise Lancers	C. Godfrey	4	0
Rage of London	C. Coote	4	0
Snapdragon	Marriott	4	0
Sambo	J. Pridham	3	0
Scotland	Marriott	4	0
Twelfth Night	C. Coote, jun.	4	0
Valentine and Orson	C. de Mazières	3	0
Versailles	Marriott	4	0
Winter Nights	Marriott	4	0
Ye Merrie Old Times Lancers	F. Godfrey	4	0

WALTZES.

		s.	d.
Angela	C. Coote, jun.	4	0
Awfully Jolly	C. Coote, jun.	4	0
An der Themse Strand	Kéler Béla	4	0
Alpine	J. Pridham	4	0
Burlesque	C. Coote, jun.	4	0
Blush Rose	C. Godfrey	4	0
Belle brunette	Marriott	4	0
Cornflower	C. Coote, jun.	4	0
Christy's Jewel	C. Coote	4	0
Damask Rose	G. Richardson	4	0
Fairy Visions	C. Coote, jun.	4	0
Gleaners	Marriott	4	0
Golden Tresses	C. Coote	4	0
Joyous Life (Randegger)	Marriott	4	0
Kate Kearney	C. Coote	4	0
Kathleen Mavourneen	Montgomery	4	0
Kiss	C. Coote, jun.	4	0
Kellogg	Arditi	4	0
L'Ardita	Arditi	4	0
Love Dreams	C. Godfrey	4	0
Lover and the Bird	C. Godfrey	4	0
Lisette	Marriott	4	0
Language of Flowers	C. Coote, jun.	4	0
Leila	C. Coote, jun.	4	0
L'Innocence	C. Coote, jun.	4	0
Lilian	C. Coote, jun.	4	0
Little Coquette	C. Coote, jun.	4	0
Moët and Chandon (Songs of the season)	C. Coote, jun.	4	0
Marie Alexandrowna	C. Godfrey	4	0
Nemesis	C. Coote	4	0
Ours	J. M. Ball	4	0
Pauline	C. Coote, jun.	4	0
Primrose	G. Richardson	4	0
Punch and Judy	Marriott	4	0
Patchwork	E. M. Lott	4	0
Princess Louise	C. Godfrey	4	0
Princess Beatrice	C. Godfrey	4	0
Queen of the Fête	C. Coote, jun.	4	0
Song of Songs	C. Coote, jun.	4	0
Spring Blossoms	C. Coote, jun.	4	0
Songs of the Wood	H. J. Tinney	4	0
Summer Flowers	H. J. Tinney	4	0
Sing, birdie, sing	Marriott	4	0
Wood Nymph	Marriott	4	0

GALOPS.

		s.	d.
Archery	C. Coote, jun.	3	0
Breakneck	C. Coote	3	0
Croquet	C. Coote	3	0
Dixey's Land	C. Coote, jun.	3	0
Droshkee	Marriott	4	0
Entre Calais et Douvres	Kéler Béla	3	0
Fun of the Ball	Marriott	4	0
Formosa	W. C. Levey	3	0
Harmony	J. King	3	0
Hue and Cry	E. M. Lott	3	0
Irrepressible	W. Calcott	4	0
Jolly Dogs	Marriott	3	0
Nemesis	J. Fitzgerald	4	0
On and Off	C. Godfrey	4	0
Outpost	C. Godfrey	4	0
Princess Louise	C. Godfrey	3	0
Patchwork	E. M. Lott	3	0
Pekin	Marriott	3	0
Punch and Judy	Marriott	3	0
Roulette	C. Coote, jun.	3	0
Royal Ascot	Marriott	4	0
Trumpeters	C. Coote, jun.	3	0
Tintamarre	C. de Mazières	3	0
Tramp	C. Godfrey	3	0
Wildfire	E. M. Lott	3	0
Wind-up	C. Godfrey	4	0

POLKAS.

Blush Rose	C. Godfrey	3	0
Butterfly's Ball	C. Coote, jun.	3	0
Bacchus	Marriott	3	0
Cremorne	Marriott	3	0
Early in the morning	C. Coote	3	0
Grecian Bend	C. Coote	3	0
Jolly Dogs	Marriott	3	0
Kingfisher	C. Coote, jun.	3	0
Organ-grinder	Marriott	3	0
Orpheus	Marriott	3	0
Punch and Judy	Marriott	3	0
Sailor Boy	Marriott	3	0

SCHOTTISCHES.

Kettle Drum	C. Godfrey	3	0
Jenny Bell	H. C. Swatton	3	0
Nelly	C. Godfrey	3	0

POLKA-MAZURKAS.

Blue Bell	Marriott	3	0
Mignonette	C. Godfrey	3	0
Trebelli	H. Roubier	3	0

VARSOVIANAS.

Les Montagnards	H. Roubier	3	0
Polly Perkins	R. Coote	3	0

Most of the above Dances are published as Duets, and Accompaniments for any Instruments (from the Orchestral parts), price SIXPENCE each, may be had to nearly all.

LONDON: ASHDOWN & PARRY, HANOVER SQUARE, W.

Digitized by Google

Printed by HENDERSON, RAIT, AND FENTON, at No. 69, Marylebone Lane, Oxford Street, in the Parish of Marylebone, in the County of Middlesex.
Published by WILLIAM DUNCAN DAVISON, at the Office, 244, Regent Street, Saturday, June 26, 1875.

The Musical World.

(REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.)

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST, 20s. PER ANNUM,
Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to DUNCAN DAVISON & CO., 244, Regent Street, London, W

VOL. 53—No. 27. SATURDAY, JULY 3, 1875. PRICE { 4d. Unstamped. 5d. Stamped.

HER MAJESTY'S OPERA, THEATRE ROYAL, DRURY LANE.

Third Appearance of Mdlle Marguerite Chapuy.

THIS EVENING (SATURDAY), July 3rd, will be performed ROSSINI'S Opera, "IL BARBIERE DI SIVIGLIA." Il Conte Almaviva, Signor Panzetta; Figaro, Signor De Reschi; Il Dottore Bartolo, Signor Zoboli; Don Basilio, Signor Costa; Fiorello, Signor Rinaldini; Ufficiale, Signor Casaboni; Berta, Mdme Demeric-Lablache; and Rosina, Mdlle Marguerite Chapuy (her first appearance in that character and third appearance in England). Director of the Music and Conductor—Sir Michael Costa.

On MONDAY Evening next, July 5 (fourth appearance of Mdlle Marguerite Chapuy)—Extra Night—"LA TRAVIATA." Alfredo, Signor Fancelli; Germont Georgio, Signor Galassi; Il Barone Duphol, Signor Zoboli; Marchese d'Obigny, Signor Casaboni; Annina, Mdlle Bauermeister; and Violetta Vallery, Mdlle Marguerite Chapuy (her fourth appearance in England).

Sixth Night of "Lohengrin."

On TUESDAY next, July 6, WAGNER'S Opera, "LOHENGRIN." Elsa di Brabante, Mdme Christine Nilsson; Lohengrin, Signor Campanini; Federico di Telramondo, Signor Galassi; Enrico, Herr Behrens; Araldo, Signor Costa; and Ortruda, Mdlle Tietjens.

On THURSDAY next, July 8—Extra Night—Fifth appearance of Mdlle Marguerite Chapuy.

On SATURDAY, July 10—Mdme Christine Nilsson (for the last time this season)—"FAUST."

Doors open at Eight o'clock. To commence at Half-past Eight, except on the occasion of the performance of "Lohengrin" on Tuesday next, July 6, when the Opera will commence at Eight o'clock. Amphitheatre stalls, 7s. and 5s.; amphitheatre, 2s. Box-office open daily from Ten till Five, under the direction of Mr Bailey.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—NATIONAL MUSIC MEETINGS.

THIRD SERIES of PUBLIC COMPETITIVE PERFORMANCES, July 1 to 10, 1875. Judges—Sir J. Benedict, Signor Arditi, and Mr W. G. Cusins. Tenor Solo Singers, Public Competition, This Day (SATURDAY). For details of each day's arrangements, see daily papers.

ALEXANDRA PALACE. — THURSDAY next, July 8,

GRAND ITALIAN CONCERT, by the Artists and Chorus of the Royal Italian Opera Company.

THE LAST ITALIAN CONCERT OF THE SEASON.

MDME ADELINA PATTI.	SIGNOR NICOLINI.
MDLLE SCALCHI.	SIGNOR COTOGNI.
MDME VILDA.	SIGNOR CAPPONI.
MDLLE PROCH.	SIGNOR SCOLARI.
MDLLE SMEROSCHI.	SIGNOR CIAMPI.

INCREASED ORCHESTRA.

CONDUCTORS—Sir JULIUS BENEDICT, Sig. VIANESI, and Mr H. WEIST HILL. Reserved seats, 5s. and 2s. 6d., can be secured of all the Company's Agents. Admission, Half-a-Crown, or by the Guinea Season Ticket.

MR BRINLEY RICHARDS' MATINÉE, BEETHOVEN

ROOMS, Harley Street, MONDAY next, at 3·30. Selections from Weber, Mendelssohn, Chopin, and Brahms, by Lady Amateurs (Pupils of Mr Brinley Richards). Vocalists—Miss Bagnall, Miss Lizzie Evans, Mr W. Shakespeare, and Mr Wadmore. Mr Brinley Richards will play "Rondo Piacevole" (Sterndale Bennett) and other works.

THE "TALISMAN" CHORUSES.

(IN BALFE'S GRAND OPERA.)

No. 1. Chorus of Arabs.
„ 2. Salve Regina (Trio and Chorus).
„ 3. Draw your Swords (Concerted Morceau).
„ 4. Hours and Hours Roll Slowly on (Chorus of Ladies).
„ 5. Thy Kinswoman Edith (Concerted Morceau).
„ 6. Farewell, my Beloved Edith (Finale to Act 2nd.)
„ 7. A Song to Merrie England.
(Part Song—Soprano, Tenor, Alto, and Bass.)
„ 8. Glorious England (Finale).

No collection of Choruses equal in merit to the above has been published for years. The great success with which the "TALISMAN" has been received is sufficient evidence of the beauty of the entire Opera, in which the Choruses form, of course, one of the most effective features.

London: DUFF & STEWART, 147, Oxford Street.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA, COVENT GARDEN.

THIS EVENING (SATURDAY), July 3rd, MOZART'S Opera, "DON GIOVANNI." Mdme Adelina Patti, Mdme Vilda, Mdlle D'Angeri; Signori Marini, Ciampi, Tagliafico, Capponi, and M. Maurel.

MONDAY next, July 5 (first time this season), MEYERBEER'S Grand Opera, "L'ETOILE DU NORD." On this occasion the Opera will commence at Eight. Caterina, Mdme Adelina Patti; Mdlles Smeroschi, Cottino, Bianchi; Signori Naudin, Ciampi, Sabater, Capponi, Tagliafico, and M. Faure.

TUESDAY next, July 6, RICHARD WAGNER'S Romantic Opera, "LOHENGRIN." Mdlles Albani, D'Angeri; M. Maurel, Herr Seideman, Signori Capponi, Carpi.

WEDNESDAY next, July 7, ROSSINI'S celebrated Opera, "SEMIRAMIDE." Mdme Vilda, Mdlle Scalchi; Signori Pavani, Capponi, and M. Faure.

THURSDAY next, July 8 (first time these three years), BEETHOVEN'S Opera, "FIDELIO." Leonora, Mdlle D'Angeri (her first appearance in that character); Mdlle Bianchi; Signori Capponi, Cotogni, Scolara, Sabater, and Marini.

FRIDAY next, July 9, MOZART'S Opera, "LE NOZZE DI FIGARO." Mdlles Albani, Bianchi, Zaré Thalberg; Signori Graziani, Ciampi, Pavani, Tagliafico, and M. Faure.

SATURDAY, July 10, GOUNOD'S Opera, "ROMEO E GIULIETTA." Mdme Adelina Patti, Mdlle Bianchi; Signori Graziani, Cotogni, Bagagiolo, Sabater, Tagliafico, Capponi, and Nicolini.

Floral Hall Concerts.

The LAST FLORAL HALL CONCERT of the Season will take place This Day (SATURDAY), July 3.

The Opera commences at Half-past Eight.

The Box Office, under the portico of the Theatre, is open from Ten to Five. Boxes from £2 12s. 6d. to £6 6s.; stalls, £1 1s.; pit tickets, 7s.; amphitheatre stalls, 10s. 6d. and 5s.; amphitheatre, 2s. 6d.

MR G. W. HAMMOND'S MORNING CONCERT, ST

JAMES'S HALL, THURSDAY, July 8th, at Half-past Two o'clock. Tickets to be obtained of Mr G. W. HAMMOND, 44, Formosa Street, Maida Vale, W.

"NORAH'S MESSAGE."

MDME ADELINA PATTI will sing the new Irish Ballad, "NORAH'S MESSAGE," composed expressly for her by Sir JULIUS BENEDICT, at the Floral Hall Concert, Royal Italian Operahouse, This Day.

ORGAN.

TO BE SOLD, the ORGAN at St Barnabas Church, Douglas, Isle of Man. Enlarged in 1862; enclosed in Gothic Case about 15 ft. high and 8 ft. wide.: Two Manuals; Great Organ—Open Diapason, Stopped ditto, Dulciana, Clarabella, Harmonic Flute, Principal, Fifteenth, Twelfth, Sesquialtra; Swell Organ, CC—Double Diapason, Open ditto, Stopped ditto, Flute, Keraulophon, Principal, Fifteenth, Hautbois, Slide prepared, Grand Bourdon; Two Octaves of Pedals; Two Couplers; Three Composition Pedals. Price £80. It can be taken at once. This advertisement will not be repeated. Apply to J. B. NICHOLSON, 1, Auckland Grove, Douglas, Isle of Man.

PIANIST.—A Young Lady desires further ENGAGEMENTS. Good Reader and Accompanist. Willing to exchange Services for Singing Lessons.—E., 80, Carlton Street, Kentish Town.

MISS MATILDA CLARKE (Professor of the Pianoforte), Certificated Pupil of Sir JULIUS BENEDICT, Receives and Attends Pupils at Home every Morning from Ten till Two. Residence—No. 14, Walpole Street, Chelsea.

MADAME ESTELLE EMRICK (Contralto), open to ENGAGEMENTS for Concerts, Oratorios, Public and Private Soirées, &c. Address—33, Montagu Place, Russell Square.

MR PAUL SEMLER (Pianist) begs to announce that he can accept engagements for Balls, Soirées, &c. His repertoire consists of all the celebrated Dance Music of the day, as well as his own compositions. Terms on application, by letter, to be addressed to the care of Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & CO., Foreign Music Warehouse, 244, Regent Street, W.

THE GUITAR.—MDME SIDNEY PRATTEN, Teacher of this elegant Instrument, is in Town for the Season. For LESSONS and Private CONCERTS, address to her residence, 22A, Dorset Street, Portman Square, W.

Digitized by Google

GOUNOD'S "NAZARETH." Transcribed for the Pianoforte by GEORGE FREDERICK WEST. 4s.; post free, 24 stamps.
"EGLANTINE." Bagatelle de Salon pour Piano. Par FREDERIC LEMOINE. 4s.; post free, 24 stamps. London: ROBERT COCKS & Co., New Burlington Street.

Published This Day.

TWO SONGS.

"EVENING IN AUTUMN." Words by R. HARE, Esq. .. price 3s.
(Dedicated to Miss E. KNAPTON.)

"WAITED AND WATCHED." Words by ORLANDO WRIGHT price 3s.
(Dedicated to his friend, W. MAYERICK, Esq.)

Composed by W. F. BANKS.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

MEDITATIONS FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

By IGNACE GIBSONE.

BOOK III.

(Dedicated to J. W. DAVISON)

Is Just Published, and Contains:—

Pastorale.	In the Highlands.
Les Bergères de Sorrento.	Nuit.
Shepherd Dance.	The Post.

The Book complete, price 10s. 6d.; or each Number separate, 3s.

HUTCHINGS & ROMER, 9, Conduit Street, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

"MY LADY SLEEPS."

SERENADE FOR VOICE AND PIANO.

By IGNACE GIBSONE.

DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

"HOME, SWEET HOME."

TRANSCRIBED FOR THE HARP SOLO.

By CHARLES OBERTHUR.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

VOCAL EXERCISES.

Composed by FRANK MORI.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

N.B.—These Vocal Exercises, as taught by FRANK MORI, are invaluable both to Students and Professors.

Two Sacred Duets (Just Published) by HENRY SMART.

"SUMMER OF THE SILENT HEART,"

AND

"BEYOND THE HILLS,"

SACRED DUETS

For Soprano and Contralto.

Composed by HENRY SMART.

Price 4s. each.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"DREAM ON,"

SONG,

Words and Music by ERNEST HOUGHTON.

Price 3s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"CUPID'S APPEAL,"

BALLAD,

And the Sequel,

"MARRIAGE BELLS,"

SONG.

Price 3s. each.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

BRIGHTON CONCERT AGENTS,
PIANOFORTE AND MUSICSELLERS,
LYON & HALL,
WARWICK MANSION.

TWO DUETS
FOR
TWO PERFORMERS ON ONE PIANOFORTE.

No. 1, DUET IN G. No. 2, DUET IN F MINOR.

Price 3s. each.

Composed by HEINRICH STIEHL.

(Op. 13.)

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"WITH MOONLIGHT BEAMING."

DUET

For Equal Voices.

The Music Composed and Dedicated to
MISS HEGINBOTHAM and MISS MOWER,

By H. KUSTER.

Price 3s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"CHARLIE IS MY DARLING,"

SCOTCH AIR,

AND

PORTUGUESE AIR,

("TO THE BELOVED ONE")

Transcribed for the Pianoforte.

By CHARLES E. STEPHENS.

Price 4s. each.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"OUR DARLING,"

SONG,

(in C and in E flat).

The Words by ETTY LOVELL.

The Music by J. HALLETT SHEPPARD.

Price 3s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

NORAH'S MESSAGE.

SUNG BY

MADME ADELINA PATTI

WITH DISTINGUISHED SUCCESS AT

THE FLORAL HALL.

THE POETRY BY

THE LADY JOHN MANNERS.

THE MUSIC BY

SIR JULIUS BENEDICT.

Price 4s.

LONDON:
DUNCAN DAVISON & CO., 244, REGENT STREET.

Digitized by Google

Look upon this Picture and on this.

THE MUSIC OF THE FUTURE.

(A few Happy Thoughts about Herr Wagner's "Lohengrin.")

"Cost what it may! I must hear Lohengrin!"

I was reckless. Not to know—or rather not to be able to talk about Wagner's chef d'œuvre, argues oneself unknown. So, regardless of expense, for this occasion only, I determined on doing the thing well, and laying out a guinea, at the least, on the evening's instruction and amusement.

Happy Thought.—Instead of "doing it well," do it better, and see if I can't get a Stall given me.

I call on Milburd. Although married, he has not given up joking on serious subjects (by "serious subjects," I mean anything one happens to be personally interested in at the moment), and he says, "My dear boy, since I've been married I don't afford such expensive luxuries. But stay"—I stay, and he adds—"I think I can manage you a Stall at Covent Garden; if you don't mind particularly where it is?"

"O no!" I reply joyfully (for a guinea saved is a guinea gained)—"O dear no!"—this last enthusiastically. [I mentally note down as a manual much required, Hints for Economical Amusements; or, How to Enjoy Yourself on Nothing a Year.]

Milburd writes out something on a card, and encloses it in an envelope.

"You just present that at either Covent Garden or Drury Lane, and it will do the trick."

Thanks! Thanks! Thanks! I would jump with joy, but my gratitude knows no bounds.

Happy Thought.—Open the envelope, and see what Milburd has written. I did not, on consideration, like the way in which he said, "it will do the trick." He has done the trick, and I have found out how it's done.

He has written on a card, "Please admit the Bearer to a Stall in Covent Garden. Flower-stall preferred, but Fruit-stall not objected to. Or an Apple-stall in Drury Lane.—(Signed) MILBURD."

Now how fortunate I didn't wait till the evening, and then, after expending money in a dinner at the Club, and more money in cabs, present myself on this Tomfool's errand at the door of either Opera House.

I've a great mind to cut Milburd.

Happy Thought.—Don't cut Milburd, but send him an order for admission for himself and friends to the Brighton Aquarium on Sunday.

Cazell used to have a Stall. I call on him. He is away yachting. What a fellow, to be away yachting, when there's such a chance of hearing the Music of the Future! Just like him.

Twinton Vick is my man. He is always full of dodges (as I have before mentioned in regard to cheap furniture), and, if he hasn't got a Stall himself, he can tell me how to get one for nothing. I call on him. Yes, he has a Stall. Bravo! and can he let me—— "No, he can't. The Stall is not transferable." And it isn't exactly a Stall, he explains, but a Renter's Ticket. That's the thing for you to do," he says, knowingly; "buy a Renter's Ticket! You can get it, if you look out, for about seven pounds, and it gives you a seat for every performance, throughout the year, at Drury Lane, including the Opera. On the most crowded nights they can't refuse you admission, even if you stop in the Lobby; and in the winter you can go to the Pantomime every night of your life!"

Seven pounds! Evidently a bargain. Why the Pantomime alone would be—— I'll go and buy one at once. Where are they sold?

"Ah," says Twinton Vick, "you'll have to bide your time. You might have to wait for another year; and, at all events, you can't get one for this Opera season——" He sees my sudden and utter despondency, and hastens to add, by way of consolation, "But you look out—a Renter may die, or become bankrupt, or go abroad, and be glad to take anything for his Stall."

LOHENGRIN.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

SIR,—To the student a volume of opera librettos is a curiosity and marvel; for it is a literary museum crowded with monstrosities; a chamber of horrors, without rival or parallel. A painter finds subjects other than crime for his art: why is the musician permitted, in his art, to revel in vice and filth? Assuredly his exalted mission should be—

> "To gild refined gold, to paint the lily,
> To throw a perfume on the violet,
> To smooth the ice, or add another hue
> Unto the rainbow"—

and not to galvanize, with musical life, the person of some wretched murderer, or throw a halo of sentiment and romance around the perpetrators of loathsome villainies. Let the fact be proclaimed, the story of Lohengrin is fit to be played before a wife, sister, or child. It is founded on a Teutonic legend of the mediæval times, the age of fantastic superstition; when saints and witches were common; when every hill and plain, well, wood, stream, and river had its visitant from unseen worlds; when every good action was traced to an angel or saint, and every evil deed to fiend or sorcerer. The German Wagner and our English Tennyson have selected this era for poetic illustration; and the Knight of the Holy Grael is a worthy companion of the Laureate's King Arthur and the Knights of the Round Table. The scene, laid on the banks of the Scheldt, when King Henry of Germany held his court at Antwerp, affords fine opportunities for stage displays. Processions of knights and ladies, in all the stately, picturesque pomp, and gorgeous paraphernalia of chivalry, form, at intervals, sights as magnificent as those seen on the far-famed "Field of the Cloth of Gold." The story is clearly defined, and the unities of time, place, and action, are well observed. The materials of which it is built are both natural and supernatural. Ambition, by sorcery's aid, secures temporary triumph, to be eventually checkmated by the spirit of good. Telramund, afflicted with ambition—that disease of noble minds—meets with a powerful helpmate in Ortruda, a Lady Macbeth and three witches rolled into one. The Thane of Cawdor liked witches, but not for wives: his lady was a woman of flesh and blood, particularly the latter. Ortruda, however, has a dual nature: human and devilish; and both are put under requisition for the prosecution of her husband's schemes. Elsa, the heroine of the drama, a pure and innocent maiden, is brought to grief by her relentless enemies, but rescued by the Knight of the Holy Grael, whose sacred office invests him with miraculous powers. Enduring happiness is lost by that same weakness, fatal curiosity, which cost Eve paradise. The mother of mankind, however, tasted of forbidden fruit; Elsa erred only in seeking to know a forbidden name. Alas! why did not Lohengrin equivocate? Why did he not plead to her "What is in a name?" The lady had her will, but the disclosure brought divorce and separation to our hero and heroine. In these prosaic days, the registrar of marriages performs that enquiring office, and journals publish the intelligence. The moral of the story clearly is a warning to all confiding maidens not to neglect to learn the name and conditions of their betrothed before things go too far.

The poem Lohengrin is but the structure of that lyrical drama, the being formed and fashioned, yet without the breath of musical life. How interesting to the musical student it is to watch the means by which each part and function is kindled into life! How absorbing to see the whole framework animated with the breath of musical genius, and appear before him glowing with all the vigour and warmth of perfect and passionate life! Assuredly few studies are to be found so improving. Wagner's enemies deny not the miraculous life throbbing in his works, but object to the means by which that life is imparted. "Lohengrin," say they, "is a work of genius, but it has no melody." Is melody—so called by you—

Digitized by Google

I ask him if he happens to be acquainted with any Renter who is likely to die, or be bankrupt, or be going away, and glad to take anything for his Stall, before next Thursday—to-morrow, in fact.

No, Twinton Vick cannot speak with certainly as to this. A Renter was very ill the other day, but that was not on an Opera night, and he is all right again now. He runs over the names of some Renters he knows, but they are as well as can be expectcd, in spite of age and other disabilities, and, generally speaking, prosperous, and likely to remain in England. "There was," he adds, meditatively, and with a tinge of regret in his voice, "a fellow the other day—Whimpfen Jessop——"

"Yes," I say, anxiously, noticing his pause.

"And," continues Twinton Vick, slowly, "he certainly did say that he wanted to dispose of his Renter's admission."

"Where does he live?" I ask, prepared to rush off to Whimpfen Jessop, and do business on the spot.

"Ah! I don't know. But I'm afraid it's no use, as I saw him yesterday, and he said now that they were going to give Lohengrin, he had made up his mind not to part with it on any account."

I rise to go, and Vick, shaking me by the hand, says, cheerfully, "You look out, and so will I; and, if I hear of a chance, I'll let you know at once."

We grasp each other's hands with the fervour of men united in a common object, and so part.

Three failures, up to now. I try several men. Some said they thought that I always had a Stall, and were coming to ask me.

Thursday morning.—I rush off to the Theatre. No Stalls. To the Libraries. No Stalls. Call in at Mumps's the Librarian. Mumps's managing man says, that by four o'clock he can get me a Stall, as there is sure to be a lot returned. Why a lot returned? Because they don't give Lohengrin to-night. It's put off till Saturday. And on Saturday I am bound to be chez ma tante by the sad sea wave.

The state of the case is Lohengrin v. Aunt. There will be more Lohengrins, but no more Aunts—that is, with Solicitors, and important business which concerns me.

Again the papers announce Lohengrin. I am cooling a little towards Lohengrin. I don't like the notices, which I have read carefully. I meet Alfred Sharp, so well-known in amateur musical circles, and having the reputation of being able to dine with professional artistes whenever he likes, and even sing duets with them, and he pooh-poohs Lohengrin. "You won't care about it," he says.

I begin to question whether Lohengrin is worth a guinea.

Another friend (also musical) exclaims, "Not heard Lohengrin! O, you ought to hear Lohengrin. You'll find it rather dry; but be there for the overture."

Has he got a Stall? I ask.

No he hasn't, but he had a Stall in Germany, for two shillings a night, and heard Lohengrin over and over again. "There," he adds, "of course they understand how to give it. Still," he admits, "you can form a very fair notion of it here."

It is now Lohengrin v. Guinea, or, to put the equation in full, it is Lohengrin—a guinea, a book, fees to the Stall-keeper, a dinner at the Club, cabs, refreshment after Lohengrin (and during Lohengrin, if, as my friend said, Lohengrin is "dry"), and—I rather think, a new pair of evening boots. Still, as I must have these last,—(made on my "last"—this would do for Sydney Smith),—I cannot exactly charge them on Lohengrin. I can hear Lohengrin without boots—I mean, without new boots.

Happy Thought.—Give Lohengrin another week, and go somewhere else for a third of the money; or, on further consideration, and, as it's sure to be hot and stuffy everywhere, dine comfortably, and go nowhere. This last resolution is carried.

It is Thursday evening; after dinner. I am beginning to forget Lohengrin—I am ceasing to care about the Music of the Future, when I hear a voice in the hall, apparently issuing from the coats and hats which are hung up helplessly in the shadow, saying, petulantly, "I wish he'd come."

As this can't be the expression of a neglected overcoat, left there capable of nullifying genius? No, certainly not. You may as well try to force back the north-west wind by whistling a tune against it. Genius can, does, and will exist in Wagner's works, without the support of that parasite. When Music, heavenly maid, was very young, she assumed the form, and was called Melody. In time the fair one came in contact with Harmony, a hundred-handed giant, and was placed by him under gradual restraint. The poor damsel tries to still retain her sway and hold her empire, but in vain. She must soon settle down to her proper place—to be allotted subordinate duties. What pranks has she, hitherto, in company with her partner, the opera-singer, played before wondering gods and grinning men? Melody, once called divine, has been debased and dragged from her high estate, by allowing herself to become the property, agent, and tool of the being called "The Operatic Star." This said "Star" has grown too big of late—has, in fact, swallowed up not only the sun and moon, but the entire operatic universe. For him composers work and managers toil; for him theatres are built and orchestras formed; for him critics write and claqueurs are hired; for his service, Melody—poor frail one—exists. And how does he serve her, without whom he is nothing? He drags her on to the stage, without need or warning, to bark at her, simper to her, howl at her, and, with his cursed vibrato, to shake her as a dog would a rat. Wagner, wisely, will not entrust himself to this precious pair. Other ambassadors he sends with his messages to the Court of Public Opinion.

To most persons music is limited to a tune. Some few recognize, in fact or fancy, varying sounds, that fill the universe from lowest earth to highest heaven. The motion of all material bodies discourseth music, from the rustle of the tiniest leaf to the roll of the mightiest orb. The emotions of the mind have also their equivalents in sound. Every feeling of the heart has its natural utterance, and every passion of the soul its voice. A feeling or passion, when partially and moderately excited, imparts to speech an appropriate colour and force of sound; but, when unduly excited, it breaks down the artificial barrier of words, and expresses itself by sounds such as those used before the alphabet was invented. The soul, maddened by grief, vents itself in shrieks and groans; and, when delirious with joy, in shouts of boisterous mirth. The musical poet is he who can realize the grades of passion, and has the Prospero-like power over the realms of sound to express them. With him Pope's idea is more fully carried out than by any mere word-poet:—

> "The sound must seem an echo to the sense.
> Soft is the strain when Zephyr gently blows,
> And the smooth stream in smoother number flows;
> And when loud surges lash the sounding shore,
> The hoarse rough verse should like a torrent roar."

Herein is Wagner's excellence. Unlike the composers of past times he builds up opera, not with the artifices of melodies and fugues, but gives each phase of the mind, each individual character, and each action its appropriate musical utterance.

The prelude of the opera, amongst many characteristics, has notably that of intensity. The mind of the listener thereby is worked up to an eager expectancy, corresponding to the attitude of the screwed up fiddle strings, the tones of which, reaching their topmost height, cause a fear and trembling lest they should topple over the bridge of the violins; and by that means they produce an anxiety of mind so necessary and beneficial as a preparation for the coming feast. The prelude is an appetizing sauce, taken before a meal when in a hungry state. The curtain rises on a scene of courtly grandeur. The eye is gratified; but that sensation soon gives place to one of admiration for the dignity of the orchestral themes, and their stately deportment. Attention is brought back to the stage by sounds from many trumpets, and a bass herald gives forth message after message, in a stentorian monotone, so natural and pleasing as to make one regret there are not as many heralds as trumpeters. The king enters, welcomed by his vassals, in a chorus of seven bars. If he were a king of the old opera, he would have been shouted at for half-an-hour, and then come down by its owner, I look in the direction of the voice, and descry a friend. He asks me have I seen Doddlemus, as he has a Stall for him at the Opera. It'll be worth hearing. It's Lohengrin.

Digitized by Google

"Will you have it?" asked friend, desperately, for he can't wait for Doddlemus.

I jump at it. Done! Hooray! Tout vient à celui qui attend! Again I am enthusiastic! Never was such a friend! Never was such an Opera! Never was such a composer! My boots will scarcely hold me, I am so buoyant! Never were such boots, or never wear such boots! [Another for Sydney Smith or Sheridan.] Ho there! a cab! The handsomest and the fleetest! Mes amis! do you not envy me? I am off to Lohengrin!! Away!! Thank goodness, I'm dressed and ready!

Happy Thought (for Men about Town,—to be added to my Manual for Economical Amusement).—Always be in your dress clothes by 7.15 p.m., and at your Club. You never know what may happen. Let an Englishman's motto ever be, "Ready! Aye Ready!" And it can't, if you haven't got on your dress clothes at 7.15 p.m. at latest.

Ho there! a cab! What is a shilling! bah! I might have had a more expensive dinner, in view of Lohengrin for nothing; but it's no use crying over spilt claret-cup.

At the Opera.—Don't get into the line; only unhappy men hampered by dowagers, or daughters, get into the line. These men never hear an overture. No, I am free! Free as the air I'm going to hear. I am set down (after the usual falsehood to the policeman to the effect that you are not going to the Opera, O dear no, but going to call, on a matter of life and death, on your doctor in Bow Street—when the official is obliged to let you pass). I skip—skip is the word—through the gates, I enter the vestibule with the air of an habitué—I know my road—I show my ticket (just the slightest tremble at this supreme moment, lest it should be a practical joke), it is acknowledged, and I pass on down the passage, to the lobby, all among the hat and coat-takers, whom, though I do not love, for they are extortioners and tormentors, I could now embrace. Take it—take my coat! Take my hat! Give me a number. And a book—a book by all means!

I am in my Stall as the Conductor gives the last tap of his bâton, and I shall have my full guinea's-worth, for nothing! I shall hear Lohengrin from the first note to the last! For nothing will induce me to quit this Stall to-night, even during an entr'acte, lest I lose the fraction of a demi-demi-semi-semiquaver.

My pencil! my book! I am nothing without notes, any more than is the great Composer himself. I am about to make notes on notes! Aha! Here are spirits! here's a buoyancy! Gee up, my Warbling Wagner! Go it, band! They do! With one movement the pack (to speak sportingly), is "away?" Tallyho! Yoicks.

The pack is in full cry, and Lohengrin will be before us in another five minutes, Yoicks! Into him, Fiddler! Hark the Violoncello! Good Bassoon then! Tallyho!

Ah! here's an overture!!

This is music!—descriptive of course. Descriptive of Lohengrin. Who was Lohengrin? What is Lohengrin? Wagner is describing Lohengrin in his overture! But though, with the pack I am following the air, I do not catch it. Let me consult my book.

Happy Thought.—Consult my book.

I open it. I make a note. O, who is Lohengrin? Let me look in the Dramatis Personæ. What is this? What do I see? "Count Almaviva"—pooh! he can't be in Lohengrin. Next, "The Countess (his lady);" then "Susanna"—hallo!—then "Figaro!!!"

This settles it. Those Coat-takers have palmed off on me a wrong book, and I gave the man sixpence extra for himself. Will they take it back, now that I have been pencilling on it? I will dash out before the opera begins; for I will hear Lohengrin from first to last.

"Here! hi! look here! You've given me a book of Nozze di Figaro, and the opera to-night is——"

He finishes my sentence for me.

"Is Nozze di Figaro, Sir. It's been changed."

"What! NOT Lohengrin?"

"No, Sir." And he turns to attend to another coat.

I am as angry as if I'd been done out of a guinea. For me, Lohengrin is still the "Music of the Future." But, as I am very fond of Nozze, I must grin and bear it,—or,

Happy Thought.—I must Lohen-grin and bear it.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

SIR,—I should feel obliged if you would kindly inform me, in your next, about how many years W. Kirby has been dead, and oblige, yours respectfully, AN OLD SUBSCRIBER.

289, Southampton Street, Camberwell.

[Can any of our readers supply the information asked by our correspondent?—ED.]

to the footlights to sing a song, accompanied by a sycophantic orchestra, playing pianissimo to his loud voice, and thundering forth, in slavish refrains, his best hits. Instead of which flattering pastime he has to be careful to keep his time, and watchful of the change of keys to avoid speedy grief, for his kingship is not unduly studied. In fact, the Wagner stage is as Republican as the knife-board of a London "buss." Everyone has his share of attention—some more than they like, others have only niggardly regard. Look at the lady in front of the stage, a mimic duchess, and in reality a prima donna; see how quiet she sits, without word or heed. Once only she essays to sing, and then she is hushed to silence as quickly as an old bore telling a stale joke. What self-restraint, humility, and patience in an operatic star! Wagner has worked a miracle in such a subjugation, comparable only to that wrought on lions by the prophet Daniel. The highly-dramatic music allotted to the King, Herald, and Telramund, is carried on with resistless force—no halt to let one of them sing a song. Wagner, like the ancient orator, insists upon "action—action—action." Occasionally the King tries a doubtful phrase, but is stopt in time; he only succeeds in getting a tune to himself when engaged in prayer. Of all things keep me from a melodic bass. In the character of Elsa the great master has departed from his theory. Melody is used abundantly. In this, I am bound to say, inconsistency is shown. Was he desirous of proving he could excel within the ancient lines? or, did he weakly look back, with longing eye, on the flesh-pots of Egypt?

Had he the frailty to sacrifice his art to please a prima donna? Alas! I know not; I only regret the error. Would, however, it stopt with the heroine; unfortunately the hero has too much of the old singing "star" about him. But I will not dwell upon the sins of Wagner's youth; his later works contain no such weakness or blemish. For descriptive music I know none so realistic as in the duel scene. Orchestral passages present to the mind the lunge and parry, the onset and retreat, with wonderous vividness. I never before liked fighting so much. The grandest music in the opera is certainly to be found in that which heralds the approach of Lohengrin in his fairy boat; not only is the orchestral treatment magnificent, but the singers, high and low, soli and cori, are at their very best. In hearing them one cannot but enthusiastically cry with the old poet—

"Let the singing singers,
With vocal voices, most vociferous,
In sweet vociferation, out-vociferize
E'en sound itself."

In the second act, Wagner gives free vent to his genius. No ballad-like phrase intrudes; the passions of the characters and the action of the drama alone find utterance. Solo singers do not like it; a good sign. It is delightful to see those despots knocked about by the orchestra, as if they were being tossed in a blanket thick with chromatic spikes. The first visible effect of the revolution Wagner is working is in their dethronement and reduction to the ranks. I am planning an opera-symphony, in which the singers shall be put in the orchestra, and the instrumentalists enact the characters on the stage. For the propounding of this scheme I crave space for another letter. I am, yours obediently,

JONATHAN JONES, JUN.

(Musical Student and Neophyte of the Order of St Wagner).

PESTH.

(From a Correspondent.)

In consequence of his approaching tour through the United States, Dr Hans von Bülow has been compelled to decline a place as Professor offered him in the projected National School of Music, by Herr von Tresort, Minister of Public Worship and Instruction. Liszt is to be President of the new institution.

Verdi has been prevented by previous engagements from complying with a request to give a performance of his Requiem and one of Aida, under his personal direction, at the National Theater.

Mdlle Hamaker, from the Théâtre de la Monnaie, Brussels, has been singing in Lucia and Les Huguenots,

Digitized by Google

MUSIC IN AUSTRALIA.

To Messrs Henderson, Rait, and Fenton.

Gentlemen,—This will sound to you like an almost unknown "voice from the Antipodes," and I reproach myself with having kept you so long in ignorance of our "translinear" wanderings. During this lengthy silence we have travelled thousands of miles by sea and land, by coach, on horseback, and on rail—over every variety of road that the eye of man ever saw. A genuine Australian road is a curiosity, and is only called "road" by the greatest stretch of courtesy. We have made an exhaustive tour of the Australias, through the wide extent of Victoria, through the vast territory of New South Wales, up to Queensland, that hot tropical colony—"roughing it," as the saying is, but enjoying the change of scene and the interesting features of the different countries. At the same time, our eyes have almost got surfeited with landscapes, and we are anxious to see home once more. We had a glimpse of "home" in that "other Britain," the beautiful islands of New Zealand, with their fine climates, ranging from, say the climate of Orkney to that of the Isle of Wight. New Zealand must surely be the most picturesque and lovely country under the sun. Otago has ponderous mountains, grand lakes, surrounded by ranges of from 3,000 to 9,000 feet high, and continuous, with hill and dale, and the richest agricultural country. Canterbury boasts eye-wearying stretches of plains; and, to the westward, massive ranges, that tower away up to Mount Cook and its glaciers, 13,000 feet high. Wellington, the capital, is the seat of rain, wind, and occasional "shogs" of earthquakes. Nelson, a little town, dull, but pretty, nestling amongst hills, and looking upon a beautiful bay, we saw, flaunting in all the chromatic glories of autumn. Taranalsi, the Cornish settlement, as seen from the steamer, was superb—the little town rimming an open roadstead, with beach of iron-sand, white with mighty rollers, and lying, as it appeared, at the foot of the majestic Mount Egmont, snow-capped all the year round, 9,000 feet high, and the most perfect cone in New Zealand. It was a spectacle to be remembered. Auckland is a dull town, but has a beautiful harbour, which, however, is not so striking as Port Jackson, of which Sydney is so proud. From here we—my brothers and I—visited all the volcanic wonders of the North Island, travelling overland, while father and the rest went round by a steamer. We rode through desolate country for two days, on a bridle-track eighteen inches wide, sometimes overlapped by flax, standing as high as a man on horseback, sometimes concealed by manuka scrub, that almost dislocated our ankles as we galloped through it. We rode fifty miles the first day, and our equestrian pains were no laughing matter, especially as we had to sleep on the hard floor of a Maori wharè (hut) that night. Next day we rode thirty-five miles, and arrived pretty exhausted at the hot lakes. What bathing we had! Swimming in a big lake, warm, and fed by scalding rills of hot water on its banks, and geysers and hot springs dotting the country round, with little balloons of steam hovering on the hill-sides. The Maories, male and female, in gay, flaring robes, sat in a long semi-circle on the shore, while the youths of the village swam all about us. Here, too, we saw an enormous geyser, pumping up its poplar-shaped columns of boiling water sixty feet into the air, the clouds of steam now and then obscuring the spray. We threw in lumps of stone, and they were tossed up like playthings. The whole earth here was hollow, and, at places, you could not stand for the internal heat. Lumps of yellow sulphur, almost red hot, lay around; and at last we had to take to our heels, as an intermittent hot spring raged out behind us. The whole of this place was a wonder to us, but was eclipsed by the fairy scenery of Rotomahana, where the volcanic forces appear in their most charming form. It would take pages to describe the "terraces," where the silicious deposits of a geyser flow over a long series of pure white marble-like steps, each step a basin, of shell shape, exquisitely curved, and fringed by fleecy icicles, or stalactites, of this deposit, while every basin is filled to overflowing with blue water, which harmonizes most enchantingly with the long gradient of eye-dazzling alabaster. The blue is not the blue of sea or sky; it inclines to indigo, and is the product of a pigment, something like the blue of a chromo-lithographic lake. Across the water a short distance is another of these "terraces," but, instead of white, it is pink! We bathed in the basins, which are of different temperatures, getting hotter, of course, as you go up towards the cause of all—the fiercely-boiling geyser. It is altogether a most wonderful region.

When we went down towards Napier, we had a view of Tongariro, the burning mountain, which was not in violent action—smoke was lightly coming out of its snow-clad summit. Splendid ravine scenery, wooded ranges, mountain torrents, foaming through mist; splendid jungle-like forests, with weaving creepers, and a general chaos of humid-green vegetation—varied a most delightful coach journey. New Zealand is a success, as regards scenery, climate, and people. We liked Otago, where there is, of course, plenty of Scotch folks, though we did as well, in a financial point of view, in Canterbury, where the people are, if less enterprising, at any rate, more settled, more cultured, and, in a general way, mellower than the Otago-ites. Father thinks that the settlers of New Zealand are to be the governing race of this hemisphere. Their descendants will be hardier than the inhabitants of the sunny continent, which, it must be said, is not nearly so invigorating in climate as New Zealand. We were in Tasmania lately. (When in London, I once received a little book from Mr Fenton, entitled "Forty Years in Van Diemen's Land," and little did I think then of ever being at the uttermost ends of the earth!) We were transported, not to, but with, the charming little island, which has thrown off its old offensive name, and is gradually being purged of all its old associations. The people are remarkably respectable, and no person of morbid curiosity need go there, for it is as common-place in its society as any other part of the world. And less gossip is afloat than anywhere else. The scenery is exquisite; all the features of Australia compressed in bijou landscapes. The best road in the colonies, a hundred miles long, and made by convict labour, runs right through the island—from Hobart Town, in the extreme south, to Launceston in the north. And now we have come to South Australia, which is about as sunny a part of this vast continent as any we have seen. Wheat and wine are two things for which this colony is celebrated. Grapes are as common as gooseberries—"melting" clusters for twopence and threepence the pound!—and grapes, too, such as you never see at home.

We have just finished a most successful season here, and are now in the middle of our country tour. Without talking too much "shop," I may say that all through this part of the world we have met with unvarying success, and you will be glad to hear that we have not the faintest shadow of regret at ever coming out to these colonies. Scotchmen are everywhere, and we find friends in ilka place (like Rabbie's dog), which sweetens our journeyings to and fro. We are also, as a family, able to plant "oor ain fireside" no matter where we may be. We young folks—Helen, Marjory, Robert (who joined us from Canada), James, and I, by four years of incessant practice, have (though we say it oursel') reached some degree of excellence in part-music, which, with solos from each of us, helps father in his work. We gave a sacred concert before leaving Adelaide, and, as every piece was new, and this was our first appearance in sacred music, as far as we juniors were concerned, we had some hard work getting it up. One of the pieces sung was "O for the wings of a dove" (from Mendelssohn's Motett), though we ought to have sung it all, in justice to the effect of contrast. Another piece was "God is a Spirit," by Sterndale Bennett, who, we regret to see by the Musical World, is dead.

We had a batch of Musical Worlds by the last mail, and copies of that successful song, "Dreams of Home," with which we were delighted. The powerful unanimity of words and music towards the close we think very fine. John the Baptist, by Macfarren, seems to have made a "hit" at home. It is almost time that some great sacred work was "due" (if one might use such an astronomical or railway phrase to the inspirations of genius). We tried to get it in the Adelaide music-shops, but failed, though I don't think it is published at home yet. In Adelaide, lately, Eli was given, and Wagner's Choral March from Tannhäuser. In the little town of Launceston, Tasmania, we heard the Lay of the Bell; in Dunedin, the Messiah; in Melbourne, Mosè in Egitto, with costume and scenery; Moses in a chestnut beard, with the Ten Commandments in his hand, stepping down to the footlights and smirkingly singing his solo. It was absolutely ludicrous, though it pleased a good many Melbourne palates. It is a painful fact, but the colonial palate calls for spice. You can sift out good intelligent audiences in every city south of the line; but still, if you generalize you must say that the Australian mind has not the same culture as at home. That there is a musical public in Melbourne is proved by the fact that the Grosse Passions-Musik of Bach was lately given in the Town Hall. We are longing to hear some really good performances, and have made up our minds, whenever we come to London, to hear first-class oratorio performances and first-class opera, and see the picture-galleries of South Kensington and Trafalgar Square! We leave Adelaide for Melbourne end of May; then off to Sydney; then leave from there for San Francisco by the June mail; then a tour through Canada, arriving home about the middle of 1876. Such is our present arrangement.

Digitized by Google

Now I must draw this rather rambling letter to a close. * * * With best regards, believe me ever yours truly,

DAVID KENNEDY.

Auburn, South Australia, April 19, 1875.

—o—

MUSICIANS WHO HAVE DIED AWAY.*

III.

JOHANNES BEER.

(Continued from page 399.)

CAP. XXI.

OF SUNDRY CELEBRATED VIRTUOSOS IN MUSIC.

When occasionally, partly for my diversion, and partly for other matters, I go tramping like a mendicant friar about the world, I know not how it is I have the peculiar luck to be thrown into the society of people who, when I ask what is their profession, commonly give themselves out for musici. But as many as I have had up before me and tested were very atrocious scoundrels, who boasted most unjustly and viciously of belonging to our stately art, and thus, unwarrantably abused so grand a title as a cover for their wretched scraping and strumming.

For, in case I examined them, as to what artists they had in the country; which ones they held to be the best; what sort of singer such a one was, and what sort of instrumentist, another; who had the best or the worst musical establishment; which Court surpassed the other in the excellence of this art, and so on, they forgot the most famous masters, knowing naught of Perande and others.* When I asked whether they had heard nothing of Barthali,† they said: No, we do not know where that province is situated. They then commenced not only to vilify the most celebrated autores, but to exalt sundry town-piper gentry over the Hesperum. They praised German, but no Latin pieces. For of what benefit were the latter to them? Not one in a hundred would understand the meaning of quibus quabus, duobus duabus, unctis & punctis, glaucus & raucus. They wanted to know, moreover, what was the good of all the running up and down in songs; they did things nicely and simply, as the capuchin monks sang, and did not think much of colourature; item, their schoolmaster possessed greater means than three chapel-masters of the very best sort. He did not trouble himself about chamber musicos, provided only he had a hare sticking on the spit in the kitchen. Summa, it vexes me to waste my time on such contemptible trifles. The intelligent reader will, from these small facts be able to præfigure for himself a large body when he knows what kind of drift-sand serves for an indicio in such like companions, and that no one can fly higher than what he is enabled to do by the wings he inherited at his birth.

CAP. XLVI.

As conversation doth marvellously change its subject in any company, so will I, with the gracious permission of my good masters, the musici, now say something respecting the degraded race of ale-house fiddlers. I am by no means minded to be hard on, or find fault with, anyone, because he may not be capable of much, but ale-house fiddlers are to be attacked, taken to task, and abolished, because, despite their miserable scraping, they do hold such a fearfully high opinion of their own talent, and yet everywhere so horribly prostitute themselves, seeing that, at times, a little tobacco is more acceptable to them than the citizenship of the Roman Empire. We will see, however, where such worthless branches have root. Guard turn out; under arms!

It must be known then that the places whence they spring are generally to be found in low trivial schools. But, at a very early period of their youth, in consequence of all kinds of insolent acts committed by them, they bid adieu to studia, taking French leave, and running away. Then do they join each other in parties of two, three, or four, and, each one taking his fiddle under his cloak, wander about the country, going from one noble house to another, and singing short knightly battle-pieces. Between whiles, they fiddle some ritornello, and, in a word, go on in such a fashion that the yard-dogs, as summi admiratores suæ artis, open their eyes till they are as big and round as saucers.

For this four-part bicinium of theirs, they are contented to receive a dole in the shape of a small piece of bread, cheese, saveloy, or even a well-proportioned and orthographic herring,* taking copper money for copper requiems, and affording the simple people no slight reason for thinking that music, and, therefore, concomitanter, musici, are alike, and for respecting the one as much as the others.

But it is not only that they know nothing; the great objection to them is that everywhere do they prostitute themselves in so loose, ragamuffinly, and shameless a fashion. For to whom is it unknown how unabashed they beg in noble houses and other places frequented by persons of high birth? Now they beg for corn, now for oats, and now for barley. Asses are generally content with thistles. For the sake of such abuses, many a varlet becomes an ale-house scraper who is not really so. Thus, not only is he who knows nothing, or has loosely neglected himself in his youth, an ale-house scraper, but he also belongs to the order, who, as the regular members of it are accustomed to do, subsists by all kinds of reprehensible and beggarly acts. Qui enim proficit in literis et deficit in moribus, plus deficit quam proficit.

They make no account of well-intentioned warnings, and set corrections at naught. They wash as often as Carthusian monks eat meat,† and, when asked why they do not cut their nails, pretend that the latter are better as they are for playing on the harp. —Their wives tramp after them, like the maidens who tell fortunes. Nice boys and nice girls!—I lately revolved in my mind why they are so fond of sleeping in stables, and I found out that their sole motive for doing so is to enrich themselves with hair from the horses' tails. This is why we find in their fiddle-sticks sometimes black, grey, piebald, and red hairs, all mixed up together. They are Frieslanders by nationality, and will frequently drink their very gloves.

When the Frankfort or Leipsic Fair is rung in, there are no more joyous beings to be found under the sun. When, however, the bell is rung for prayers, or when it announces a fast day, they look sadly askance, like a goose in a thunderstorm. What shall I say anent occasions of mourning among the high and mighty? Do you not suppose that the hearts of our friends beat with affright? Of course they do, for whose heart would not do so, when he must do without his stately repasts of pork, and no longer gain a pipe of tobacco with his fiddle, but scrape away on the date pauperibus principle?

There! such wretched labourers are the ale-house fiddlers. It would have been better, and more advisable, for them, had they applied themselves to the estimable profession of stocking-knitting, or taken their degree as broom-makers.

JOSEPH SEILER.

* Marco Gioseffo Perandi, of Rome, from 1640 to 1670 Chapelmaster in Dresden. Perhaps he is the same person as the Berande, already mentioned. He left behind him sacred part music, of which Mattheson speaks in laudatory terms.

† See ante, Note Cap xix.

* What is an "orthographic herring"? Can the manager of the Brighton Aquarium inform us; and, if not, would he mind looking up his authorities? He has now a little leisure once a week, and would not, perhaps, be averse to devoting a portion of it to so interesting an ichtho-literary subject.—J. V. B.

† Once every seven years.

Digitized by Google

MUSIC PAST AND PRESENT IN IRELAND.

(Continued from page 423.)

It is our duty now to speak of some of the various societies which have been formed for either the purpose of the practice of music, or charities connected with the art or artists. The Irish Musical Fund Society claims precedence as being founded solely by the musical professors of Dublin, for the purpose of establishing a fund for the support of those members of the profession who should belong to the society, and, through age, infirmity, or accident, should be rendered incapable of earning a sufficiency for the support of themselves and families, and for the relief of professors belonging to the society in case of sickness. Also for the relief and support of the widows and children of deceased members. This society held its first meeting in the music room of Crow Street Theatre, in January, 1787. Shortly afterwards the Irish Parliament passed "An act for securing a capital stock, belonging to the members of the Irish Musical Fund, applicable to charitable purposes," 34 Geo. III., c. 20. The society increased its funds by annual concerts and subscriptions, till it amassed between eight and nine thousand pounds. The interest of this sum is only available by the claimants. The subscriptions are always added to the fund, so that, no matter how the number of claimants may increase, the fund cannot decrease. The capital is at present lodged in the National Bank, in the name of seven trustees, amongst whom we find Lord O'Hagan and Sir Arthur Guinness. We would beg our readers to bear in mind that the sum mentioned above was principally accumulated from the receipts of annual concerts in the latter part of the last century, and the beginning of this. The concerts given within the past few years by the local musical talent of Dublin for the benefit of this benevolent institution were pecuniarily failures. The public refused to sympathize in the cause. There were two exceptions; the entertainments at which Madame Catherine Hayes and Madame Jenny Lind gave their services. The surplus gained by the former was £150, and the latter, at the Handel Centenary of 1859, drew the sum of £900 over all expenses, which was equally divided between Mercer's Hospital and the Irish Musical Fund. These are the only instances of music being the handmaid of Charity—with one exception, of which we shall speak hereafter—within the last sixteen years. Now, at the annual dinner of the Royal Society of Musicians in London—a society founded for the same purposes as the Irish Musical Fund—there are donations given sometimes to the amount of £1,000, and there is also a large surplus derived from the annual concert, at which all the principal talent, both vocal and instrumental, in the metropolis, assist gratuitously. A royal duke generally presides at the dinner, and the concert is patronized by the nobility and gentry. The latter used to be the case here in the past. But for the last few years, whenever a concert was attempted, it was attended with a loss to the Charity. Let us not be told that the art is progressing, when those who contributed in their days of strength and ability to the instruction and entertainment of the lovers of music are neglected in their old age, and the widows and families they leave behind unthought of. It speaks ill of a music-loving public to leave the professors uncared for, when they are no longer able to contribute to its amusement. Such was not the case; yet at the present such it is. Ten or twelve shillings per week is but a paltry sum to allow a family who had been in comfortable circumstances before the head had either been removed or incapacitated by infirmity. This is generally the sum allowed by the Irish Musical Fund; although at times, when the number of claimants are few, it is raised to fifteen shillings. A musical professor and his family are mostly accustomed, in their best days, to a respectable house, and if not the luxuries, certainly the comforts of life, and the sum mentioned above is totally inadequate to provide either one or the other. The Royal Society of Musicians never give less than a guinea per week, and it would only require a little forethought and exertion on the part of amateurs and promoters of musical doings in Dublin to organize an annual performance, the receipts from which would enable the Irish Musical Fund to administer a similar sum. We trust that this will come home to the hearts of many. At the present the fund is admirably managed by a committee of amateurs and professors, and Mr R. M. Levy, the secretary, has, by his watchful exertions, actually added to the amount already funded. All lover's of musical progress must have lamented the collapse of the Ancient Concert Society. This society was instituted in the year 1835, and for a quarter of a century continued its meetings. We believe these originally took place at the residence of the promoter, Mr Joseph Robinson. The society grew in strength and members, until its weekly meetings were held in the house now belonging to the Royal Irish Academy in Dawson Street, and its concerts were given in the Rotundo. It subsequently advanced to such goodly proportions that it was enabled to build the rooms which bear its name in Great Brunswick Street.

—o—

MADAME NILSSON'S CONCERT.

If charity "blesseth him that gives" in proportion to the amount of the gift, Mdme Christine Nilsson must be fortunate indeed in the result of the concert which took place, on her initiative, in St James's Hall, last Wednesday afternoon. A year ago, it will be remembered, the "Second Swedish Nightingale," emulating the good deeds of the first, arranged a concert on behalf of the Westminster Training School for Nurses, and had the pleasure of handing over to the managers of that most admirable institution the sum of £900. Wednesday's entertainment, given for the same object, yielded, there is reason to believe, a still larger amount, the hall being crowded in every part. So great, indeed, was the desire to be present, that many persons were content to pay their guinea for a chair on the orchestra, commanding an uninterrupted back view of the performers. Under such circumstances the room could not fail to present a very brilliant appearance, the more so because a vast majority of the audience were ladies. The programme was of moderate length, but more than ordinary attraction. It began with a few well-known pieces, such as the great trio from Lucrezia Borgia, sung by Miss Gertrude Ashton (the sympathetic representative of the love-sick maiden in Mr Arthur Sullivan's Zoo), M. Capoul, and Signor Foli; "Non piu mesta," which, of course, Mdme Trebelli contributed; Signor Foli's favourite song, "The Shadow of the Cross"; and "Let the bright seraphim," which served for the introduction of the fair concert-giver to an applauding audience. Other selections, equally familiar, sung by M. Capoul, Mdlle Tietjens, and Mr Sims Reeves, continued the first part, which closed with Cimarosa's lively trio, "Le faccio un inchino." In the execution of this piece were associated—rare conjunction of "stars"—the three distinguished ladies whose names have been already mentioned; and, as each strove to outdo the others in giving dramatic point to the performance, it is hardly needful to state that an irresistible encore followed. The second part was even more interesting than the first, an earnest of its attraction being given by the singing of Mdlle De Belocca and M. Capoul in Rossini's "Mira la bianca luna." We have never heard the young Russian lady to such advantage as on this occasion; while the good effect of her singing in the duet was materially strengthened by a subsequent rendering of Mdme Willy de Rothschild's "Si vous n'avez rien à me dire," to the success of which not alone beauty of voice, but a careful, artistic, and intelligent delivery contributed. M. Jules de Soria obtained an encore for his finished singing of Faure's "Alleluia d'amour," and Mr Sims Reeves won a like recognition of ability by the perfect style in which he gave Cowen's "Aubade." The event of the concert was, however, Mdme Nilsson's introduction of a new song, "Let me dream again," composed expressly for her by Mr Arthur Sullivan. Written in Mr Sullivan's most careful and expressive manner, and sung by Mdme Nilsson with intense feeling, as well as consummate art, the song at once met with favour, and had to be repeated. It will quickly become a favourite everywhere. The concert ended with two of Mdme Nilsson's Swedish melodies, accompanied by Mr Arthur Sullivan. Two violin solos by Herr Wilhelmj were noteworthy features of this, of its kind, most interesting occasion.—Daily Telegraph.

—o—

DUSSEK AND BROADWOOD.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

SIR,—Can any of your well-instructed readers inform me whether the great pianist, J. L. Dussek (uncle of Pio Cianchettini, of infinitesimal memory), ever performed on one of Broadwood's pianofortes? Yours obediently,

SOLOMON EZE.

[We believe yes; but our columns are open to "well instructed readers."—ED.]

Digitized by Google

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

Probably no series of performances on record has been marked by a more constant variety of attraction than that which, in a short time, will bring the 29th season at Covent Garden to a close. We spoke last week of the revival of M. Gounod's Romeo e Giulietta. Other things have occurred, however, also deserving notice. That Madame Adelina Patti should play Mozart's Zerlina, at least once or twice in the summer, was to be expected; and this gave fresh interest to the last representation of Don Giovanni; when, in consequence of the temporary indisposition of M. Faure, M. Maurel sustained the part of the libertine hero, acquitting himself with marked ability. To describe Madame Patti's Zerlina would be to repeat an oft-told tale. It was, as always, perfect, and made its accustomed impression. The remainder of the cast was as before, when Mdlle Zaré Thalberg assumed the character of the peasant flirt. The return of Le Nozze di Figaro was marked, in some instances, by a new distribution of the dramatis personæ. The Countess was Mdlle Albani; Mdlle Bianchi played Susanne; and Mdlle Thalberg was the Page. In each case excellent reason for satisfaction was afforded. A more lively impersonation of the Countess Almaviva's lady's-maid than that of Mdlle Bianchi has not of late been witnessed; nor did her execution of the music leave anything open to adverse criticism. Her "Deh vieni non tardar," in the last act, was noticeable alike for correct intonation and purity of expression. Mdlle Albani's Countess met with undivided approval. The pensive, neglected wife, who, in the upshot, vindicates herself, and turns the tables upon her anything rather than impeccable husband, became realized to the life; and the eloquently speaking airs, "Porgi amor" and "Dove sono," were charmingly given. Mdlle Thalberg, as Cherubino, achieved a new and deserved success. She is the veritable Cherubini of Mozart—the inexperienced youth who thinks of nothing but love, without any absolute notion of what love may signify. This is the Cherubino of the poet-musician—devoid of those conventional stage tricks which too often make the dreamy Page conspicuously obtrusive. How Mdlle Thalberg would sing the music of Cherubino was anticipated by those who had previously heard her in the flowing melodies of Mozart's Zerlina. Her "Voi che sapete" is in every sense irreproachable; and on Saturday (as on the occasion of the first performance) she was compelled to repeat it. The more that is seen of this young and promising artist the higher hopes are reasonably entertained of the career in store for her. To have accomplished what she has accomplished at the age of 17 says a good deal for the present, and a good deal more for the future. Signor Nicolini being otherwise charged with Romeo e Giulietta and the Huguenots, we had, at the last performance of Wagner's much-discussed opera, a new Lohengrin, in the person of Signor Carpi. Having played the "Knight of the Swan" to the Elsa of Mdlle Albani, at New York, Signor Carpi is quite familiar with it. He not only possesses a tenor voice of sterling quality, but knows how to use it, and can sustain high notes without recourse, voluntary or otherwise, to that "tremolo" which is the crying sin of recent times, and of which, it is worth remarking, the greatest of modern tenors—Mario and Sims Reeves, for example—never showed a trace. Moreover, he is an actor, as well as a singer, of undoubted intelligence, and conducts us easily through the mazes of Wagner's labyrinthine score, never for one instant faltering. His reception was highly favourable. As the Duke in Rigoletto, when he again had Mdlle Albani for partner, Signor Carpi was equally at home, giving the duet with Gilda, "Addio, Addio," and the canzonet, "La donna e mobile," with such spirit and effect as to warrant the belief that in him Mr Gye has made a valuable acquisition. The canzonet was, as usual, encored, and with fairer reason than sometimes can be adduced. The revival of Semiramide, with new, characteristic, and imposing scenery, also calls for passing remark. The three leading characters are sustained by Madame Marie Vilda (Semiramide), Mdlle Scalchi (Arsace) and M. Faure (Assur)—the parts of Oroe and Idreno falling to Signors Capponi and Pavani. The most remarkable assumption is that of M. Faure, whose Assur is superior to any remembered since the days of Tamburini, that model Assur of whom no ancient frequenter of Italian opera can fail to entertain a vivid impression. The Semiramide of Madame Vilda (with all her splendid voice) does not make us forget the Semiramide of Grisi, on the Covent Garden boards; nor does Mdlle Scalchi, noble contralto as she possesses, efface, by her Arsace, the memory of Alboni, or that of Alboni's powerful successor, Elena d'Angri. But with the Assur of M. Faure, whatever reminiscences may be conjured up, few amateurs can be other than entirely satisfied. Regarded whether from a dramatic or musical point of view, it is a great performance. The costume and make up, too, are very striking; and M. Faure might sit to any painter for a portrait of an Assyrian Prince of the highest traditional dignity. Do the care and liberality bestowed by the Covent Garden director upon this performance of Semiramide point to something which, next season, would intensely gratify every habitual supporter of his house, not to speak of the public generally? We hint at the production, with appropriate scenic accessories, of Aïda, Verdi's last opera, which, though known to Egypt, Italy, Germany, and the United States, is still strange to France and England. Very many are inclined to hope so.

We have had once more the Huguenots, with Madame Adelina Patti (in lieu of Madame Vilda) as Valentine. That this intrepid lady is determined to convince the public of her ability to shine in the highest attainable sphere of lyric drama has been for some time apparent. At first her physical means were thought insufficient to cope successfully with the dramatic and musical requirements essential to the adequate assumption of Meyerbeer's most cherished heroine. But the performance of Friday night set all doubts at rest. Madame Patti has completely mastered the character; and it is now as easily at her command as that of Amina in the Sonnambula, or that of Rosina in the Barbiere—in both of which she, without dissent, is recognized as peerless. A more truthful conception of a part which so many renowned artists have essayed and so few have succeeded in realizing according to the ideal of the author and composer could not easily be imagined. The music now presents no difficulties that Madame Patti, with her ever-increasing experience, cannot easily surmount; while her keen instinct of dramatic propriety supplies the rest. We have, in short, another "Valentine" to add to the small number of great Valentines who, from Mdlle Falcon, the original (1836), downwards, have appeared upon the stage. It is only by conscientious and unremitting study that Madame Patti has made herself mistress of this most trying part. She has already played it several times at the Royal Italian Opera with more or less success, but her performance on Friday night was a triumph of artistic skill, and the character must henceforth stand prominent in her varied and extensive repertory. The striking situations in the Huguenots are too familiar to require even passing mention. Enough that the duets, between Valentine and Marcel (Signor Bagagiolo), in the scene of the Pré aux Clercs, and between Valentine and Raoul (Signor Nicolini), in that following the "Benediction of Swords," were, as they should always be, culminating points. In each Madame Patti displayed a power and intelligence with which Meyerbeer himself would have been content. Never, perhaps, has Mr Gye's admired prima donna won heartier recognition of her exceptional gifts. In the grand scene with Raoul she was ably supported by Signor Nicolini, who shared with her the applause and calls at the descent of the curtain, and had the honour to pick up some of the bouquets. The Page of Mdlle Scalchi, the Queen of Mdlle Marimon, the Nevers of Signor Cotogni, the St Bris of Signor Capponi, and the Marcel of Signor Bagagiolo, exhibited the qualities which have hitherto gained distinction; and the performance, under Signor Vianesi, was generally effective.

Lohengrin was performed, for the seventh time, on Monday night; on Tuesday Romeo e Giulietta was repeated; on Wednesday the Seyyid of Zanzibar was regaled with a large slice from the Africaine, and a small slice from Robert le Diable; on Thursday Lucia was repeated, with Mdlle Albani as the heroine, and Signor Carpi as the hero; Fra Diavolo was to be given last night; and Don Giovanni is announced for this evening.

LEIPSIC.—Subject to the approbation of the Town Commissioners, a resolution has been passed by the Town Council, fixing the remuneration of the future Intendant of the Stadttheater at 15,000 marks a year, with 15 per cent. on the gross receipts. The Intendant will be amenable to the same rules and regulations as all the other Town Officials, and his engagement terminable by six months' notice on either side.—Herr Franz von Holstein, composer of the Haideschacht and Der Erbe von Morley, has just completed a new four-act work, entitled, Die Hochländer. He has written the words as well as the music.

Digitized by Google

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

F. Burdge, Esq. (New York).—Post Office order arrived safely.

Bookworm.—No;—Dussek died in 1812, many years before Beethoven.

A Young Pianist.—Waldemar Bargiel, whose Trio in F, for pianoforte and strings, was played by Mr Charles Hallé, at his last "Recital," is half-brother to Mdme Clara Wieck Schumann.

Amateur.—Though one of its composer's latest compositions, Schumann's Sonata, for pianoforte and violin, in A minor, contains some of his freshest thoughts and most ingenious writing. Its plan is, for the most part, as clear and symmetrical as if Mozart himself had conceived it. The theme played upon the fourth string of the violin forms the keystone of the entire first movement. The sonata is Schumann's 105th work.

Dr Hedge.—Bach first saw the light at Eisenach, in Upper Saxony, on the 21st of March, 1685; Handel, at Halle, in Lower Saxony, on the 23rd of February, 1685. Nor was there a very long interval between the periods of their respective deaths—Bach quitting this world (at Leipzig) on the 30th of July, 1750, aged 65; Handel, on the 13th of April, 1759 (in London, at the house which is now 57, Brook Street), aged 74. Thus Handel outlived his renowned contemporary nine years, although Bach wrote a vast deal more music than Handel, which is miraculous to record, Handel having been one of the most rapid and voluminous producers ever heard of.

DEATH.

On June 23rd, at West Brompton, George Cressall Ellis, Esq., many years Director of Her Majesty's Dramatic Performances at Windsor Castle, aged 66.

NOTICE.

To Advertisers.—The Office of the Musical World is at Messrs Duncan Davison & Co.'s, 244, Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street (First Floor). It is requested that Advertisements may be sent not later than Thursday. Payment on delivery.

HER MAJESTY'S OPERA.

About Mdlle Marguerite Chapuy, who has appeared twice in the Traviata, and is announced to appear in the Barbiere this evening, we must speak in our next. Also of the magnificent impersonation of Mdlle Nilsson, as Mignon, in M. Ambroise Thomas's popular opera of that name.

We hear, with the utmost regret, that Mad. Norman Neruda, one of the most deservedly popular artists of the day, is seriously indisposed. All amateurs will heartily pray for the accomplished lady's speedy recovery.

The Musical World,

LONDON, SATURDAY, JULY 3, 1875.

LOHENGRIN.

SUBJOINED is an extract from a letter which we have had the privilege of reading, addressed by one of the first lyrico-dramatic artists of the day to an intimate personal friend, on the subject of an opera which has now for some time been drawing crowds of eager listeners to Covent Garden and Drury Lane, and helping materially to fill the treasuries of Messrs Gye and Mapleson.

"J'ai entendu hier pour la première fois, le Lohengrin. Je n'en ai pas manqué une note, et j'ai écouté le tout avec grande attention et sans parti pris: eh bien! mon cher K—— j'en suis encore estomiré.—Jamais selon moi, aucun compositeur, ne s'est servi des masses orchestrales et chorales comme ce diable de Wagner; il procède, il est vrai, d'une toute autre façon que ses devanciers; ce n'est pas ce qu'on est convenu d'appeler de la musique de chanteur, et il est impossible de comparer celà à la Semiramide. Mais quel souffle!—quelle poigne!—et quelle logique, dans l'agencement de toutes ses scènes!—comme il est fort et soutenu!—et comme il est regrettable que nous n'ayons pas ces Bismark là dans notre camp. . . .

"Je m'arrête, car si je continue, avec les idées que je te connais en musique—tu vas me croire enragé et surtout incapable d'apprécier désormais les chef-d'œuvres de Mozart, de Meyerbeer, et de Rossini. Pas du tout; je m'incline devant tous ces génies, ils ont mon admiration sans borne; mais je ne puis me défendre d'un sentiment de respect, et il m'est impossible de rester froid, devant ce fougueux, cet énergumène—si tu veux, ce sans-culotte—faiseur de brèches, qui malgré tout, et tous, prépare au milieu des hurlements hostiles de la foule, la route qui doit conduire au succès, toute une génération musicale—celle de l'Avenir bien entendu."

Our opinion about Lohengrin in particular, and about Wagner in general, has been pronounced emphatically and often; nor do we find that increased familiarity with the music of this new Prophet affords us any cogent reason to change, or even modify, a word that has been written in these columns. Nevertheless it is always agreeable—always, indeed, more or less instructive—to read and ponder the sentiments of others, who, by education, enlightenment, and natural capacity, have a right to differ from us. We have, therefore, sincere pleasure in communicating to our readers the foregoing, which embodies the judgment and sympathies of one who stands deservedly high in the art he professes and adorns, and whose name, had we the privilege to reveal it, would give increased weight to the argument he sets forth with such unaffected simplicity, and, at the same time, with such evident conviction.

DIE ZAUBERFLÖTE AT MANNHEIM.

"IT was"—says the Neue Zeitung—"at a period most unpropitious for the stage, amid the alarms and terrors of war, that Mozart's Zauberflöte was first produced in Mannheim."

On the 29th December, 1793, the Theatre was closed on account of the proximity of the French who, it was feared, would bombard the town. Music and dancing were suspended; the Carnival was forbidden; theatrical performances stopped; and forty hours' course of prayer commanded.—Iffland requested Herr von Dalberg to issue orders for making the necessary chests in which to pack the wardrobe, books, and music. This was done; the whole Theatre was gutted, and everything ready to set out for Neckar-Elz. When there was a talk, at the commencement of February, 1794, of re-opening the Theatre, the Electoral Intendant received a communication from the Government to the effect that:—

"In consequence of the war, his Electoral Highness could no longer pay the annual grant of 15,000 florins. In order the more to encourage the inhabitants to make a stern resistance, all Voluptaria, and among them theatrical amusements, were to be discontinued, though, at other times, there was no objection to patronise the people engaged in such-like pursuits. This proposal to close the National Theatre was made by certain members of the Government, who further suggested that the grant of 15,000 florins might with more profit be distributed among the poor peasants, so hardly treated by the French."

On account of the dearness of milk, it was, also, proposed to forbid the making of the rolls known as "Semmel." Herr von Dalberg immediately wrote to the Elector, at Dresden, representing how advantageous the Theatre was for the town, seeing that the latter gained by it 100,000 florins a year, and that its suppression would prove a great loss to the inhabitants. At the same time, the innkeepers and other tradespeople forwarded petitions for continuing the Theatre. The Elector replied immediately that he himself had never wished to do away with it, and that it was his will everything should remain as before.

On the 2nd March, 1794, the Theatre was re-opened, with a prologue written by Herr von Dalberg, and spoken by

Digitized by Google

Iffland. A few weeks subsequently, Die Zauberflöte was produced for the first time. The following is the bill :—

On Saturday, 20th March, 1794, will be performed

"Die Zauberflöte."

Opera in 2 Acts.—The Music by Mozart.

Dramatis Personæ.

Sarastro	Herr Gern.
Tamino	Herr Epp.
The Queen of Night	Madame Müller.
Pamina, her Daughter	Madame Beck.
Women of the Queen	Madame Nicola.
	Mlle Narconi.
	Mlle Koch.
Genii	Mlle Nicola.
	Mar Nicola.
	Mar Hoffman.
Papageno	Herr Leonhard.
An Old Woman	Mlle Jagemann.
Monostatos, a Moor	Herr Demmer.
Slaves	Herr Kaiser.
	Herr Frank.
	Herr Mehbrei.
Priests	Herr Müller.
	Herr Walther.
	Herr Richter.
	Herr Backhaus.

Slaves. Priests.

This opera is played to-day for the first time.

The heavy additional outlay which this Opera has occasioned, renders it necessary to raise the prices of admission. They have, therefore, been fixed for to-day:—

To the first Pit	1 fl.	12	kreutzers.
To the second Pit	—	36	„
To the Reserved Box on 1 Tier	1 „	12	„
To the Gallery on 3 Tier	—	24	„
To the Side Benches ditto	—	18	„

The Beginning is at a quarter to Six precisely.

Books of the Opera may be procured at Herr Gaab's for 12 kr.

"This opera"—writes Herr Backhaus, the actor, in his diary—"was given with a degree of magnificence surpassing everything ever witnessed on our stage. The costumes and scenery were splendid and beautiful, while, both in singing and acting, our singers, male and female, did all that could be expected from such talented artists. As stage-manager, Herr Iffland rendered great services in getting up the work, and, indeed, the management and public are much indebted to him in all such cases.—The opera was given three days running, with the subscription list suspended, the people flocking to hear it.—That active and clever Intendant, Herr von Dalberg, paid the artists more than 100 ducats extra; in fact, he did everything in his power to render the performance brilliant." The score was procured from Herr Simrock, music-publisher of Bonn, for 26 florins. In Beck's diary we read—"Sublimely as it was given here, there was many a donkey whom Die Zauberflöte did not please."

The hundredth performance took place on the 4th March, 1882. On the 24th August, 1884, the opera was given with scenery by J. Mühldörffer, and on the 11th February, 1855, selected to open the new Theatre. A. Pichler.

Hamburg.—The Stadttheater re-opened for the season with Lortzing's Waffenschmidt. The company was that from the Grand-Ducal Theatre, Weimar, which, under the direction of Herr A. Stems, is at present making a tour through the north of Germany.

Cologne.—The title of "Professor" has been bestowed on Herr Franz Weber, Royal Musical Director and Organist at the Cathedral.

Milan.—The last attraction at the Teatro Castelli has been Bellini's Capuletti e Montecchi. Signore Mariani, Sanz, Signori Bolis, Aldighieri, and Maini, are engaged for the autumn season at the Scala. The operas selected are Verdi's Don Carlos, a new opera by Ponchielli, and another by Josse.

OCCASIONAL NOTES.

Some of our musical contemporaries have been patriotic enough to state that the English pianist, Arabella Goddard, was the first to perform publicly in England the great sonata of Beethoven (Op. 106). They might have added a still more interesting fact—that she was also the first to perform it publicly in Germany.

The programme of the last concert at Buckingham Palace, under the direction of Mr W. G. Cusins, included two English pieces—Dr Macfarren's overture to Chevy Chase, and an air from Balfe's Talismano ("Placida Notte"). The singers were exclusively foreigners—Tietjens, Adelina Patti, Trebelli, Zaré Thalberg, Anna de Belocca, Nicolini, and Rota. The selection contained nothing but stereotyped pieces.

Forkel, in his Life of Bach, relates the following:—"Handel's master, Zachau, organist at Halle, died in the year 1717; and J. S. Bach, whose reputation was now already high (he was in his 32nd year), was invited to succeed him. Bach, in short, went to Halle, to prove his qualifications by performing a piece, as a specimen of his skill. For what reason is not known, however, he did not enter upon the office, but left it to an able scholar of Zachau's, by name, Kirchhof."

"When"—says the Graphic, alluding to the operatic performances at the Crystal Palace, at which Miss Rose Hersee has been the chief attraction—"shall we have an opera-house in London, in which our accomplished English 'prima donna' may find a place fit to receive her, and a company able to support her with credit?" When, indeed! What are our own composers about? We should derive much more gratification from hearing that Arthur Sullivan was composing an opera expressly for Miss Hersee than that he was to superintend the imminent bursting of the enormous South Kensington bubble.

CONCERTS VARIOUS.

Mr W. H. Holmes (under the patronage of their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh), assisted by his professional pupils and some accomplished artists, gave performances of pianoforte and vocal music at St James's Hall, on Friday morning, June 25th. Where so many were engaged, it is impossible to go into the merits or demerits of each player or singer; we can, therefore, only place before our readers the programme of music performed, and add that most of the young artists acquitted themselves to the entire satisfaction of the audience:—Adagio Patetico, from Sonata, "Maid of Orleans" (Sir Sterndale Bennett); Dead March in Saul (Handel), pianoforte, Mr W. H. Holmes; Concerto in C sharp minor, first movement (Ries), pianoforte, Miss Klugh, with second pianoforte arranged by Miss Klugh, performed by Miss Watson; Fugue in D minor (Bach), pianoforte, Miss Alwyn Field; Concerto, with accompaniments (Bach), pianoforte, Miss Collins; Prelude and Fugue in E minor (Mendelssohn), Miss Julia Angarde; Solo (Kalkbrenner), pianoforte, Miss Watson; Sonata (Schubert), pianoforte, Miss Pollon; Song, "I will extol thee" (Eli) (Costa), Miss Julia Wigan; Andante in F (Beethoven), pianoforte, Miss Maud Baglehole; Solo, violin, "Elegie" (Ernst), Mr Henry Holmes, accompanied on the pianoforte by Miss Julia Augarde; Quartet for four performers on two pianofortes, introducing Chopin's posthumous Mazurka (Sir Julius Benedict), by desire, Mdme Lütgen, Mrs Montaigne, Mr W. H. Holmes, and Sir Julius Benedict; Capriccio, introducing an Air by the late Prince Consort (W. H. Holmes), Miss Jessie Morison; Solo, violoncello (Servais and Lütgen), Herr Lütgen, accompanied by Mdme Lütgen; Song, "He thinks I do not love him" (Mdme Sainton-Dolby), Miss Julia Wigan; Fantasia on Russian Themes (Thalberg), Miss Florence Sanders; Song, "The Sea" (Neukomm), Mr Frank Holmes; "The Storm" (Steibelt), pianoforte, Mr W. H. Holmes; Galatea Waltz (H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh), arranged expressly for this occasion by W. H. Holmes, pianofortes, Miss Baglehole, Miss Jessie Morison, Miss Pollon, and Miss Florence Sanders, Mr Frank Holmes and Mr W. H. Holmes; soprano concertina, Miss Alwyn Field; baritone concertina, Mr Field; first violin, Mr Betjemann; viola, Mr W. H. Hann; violoncello, Herr Lütgen; Song, "Memories" (words by Mrs Baines, music by W. H. Holmes), Mr F. Holmes; Ivanowa, Russian theme (arranged by G. W. Hammond), Capriccio à la Scozeese, Highland Echo, Scottish Chimes, Chimes of England (W. H. Holmes), pianoforte, Mr W. H. Holmes. Conductor, Mr Alfred Gilbert. Mr Holmes's next performance is announced for Friday, July 29th.

Digitized by Google

Mr John Thomas, harpist to Her Majesty the Queen, gave a morning concert on June 24th, in St James's Hall. Mr John Thomas's talents are well known and appreciated. He never played better than on the occasion under notice, and his composition for the harp, as well as his vocal works included in his programme, were fully appreciated. The band of harps, who assisted, played Mr Thomas's "Bardic fantasia," Parish Alvars' "Greek Pirates' chorus," and the "War March" in Athalie (with a pianoforte part arranged à quatre mains by Mr Thomas, and played by Messrs Henry Parker and Puddicombe). Mr John Thomas's solos were a selection of Welsh melodies arranged by himself, and Parish Alvars' "Imitation of a Mandoline." With Mr W. G. Cusins, Mr Thomas played a grand duet, of his own composition, for harp and pianoforte, and with Mr T. H. Wright his duo for two harps, "Souvenir du Nord." For his performance of all these pieces he received, deservedly, the applause of a large and intelligent audience. Mr W. G. Cusins gave as a pianoforte solo "Liszt's fantasia on airs from Lucia di Lammermoor." The vocalists were Miss Edith Wynne, Mdlle Enriquez, Miss Wigan (who was highly appreciated in "Bell' raggio"), Mdlle Elena Angele, Mr William Shakespeare (who gave, in excellent style, Mozart's "Dalla sua pace"), Mr Burleigh Tesseman, and Mr Lewis Thomas, who, as usual, sang like a true artist. Mdlle Castellan played De Beriot's Second Fantasia for the violin; and the list of "conductors" included the names of Sir Julius Benedict, Messrs Henry Parker and Puddicombe, as well as that of the accomplished concert-giver.

Signor Alfonso Rendano, the young and clever Italian pianist, gave a recital of pianoforte music at St James's Hall, on Wednesday last, the "Italian Brigade" in London attending in great force to support their talented countryman. Many of the works of the old composers performed by Signor Rendano have not been often heard in this country, yet they held their own against those of the modern schools. Signor Rendano's performance of Bach's Italian Concerto proved that he had studied well the works of the old Leipsic cantor. Two Fugues of P. Martini and Scarlatti were also admirably rendered by Signor Rendano. Chopin's Impromptu (Op. 36), Robert Schumann's "Reiterlied," and Beethoven's Sonata (Op. 31), No. 3, were less satisfactorily played by Signor Rendano. A selection of Signor Rendano's own compositions evidently pleased the audience. They are in the most approved fashionable style of modern pianoforte writing, and we have no doubt many of them will become popular. Signor Rendano is a young and talented artist, who, by diligent study, must ultimately attain a high position in his profession.

Madame de Romanova, a Russian lady of talent, gave a concert on Monday evening, in Store Street Rooms. The programme was long and varied. Madame de Romanova sang several songs in the Russian language, which, from the quaintness and wildness of their melodies, seemed highly to please the audience, for she was recalled after each and applauded to the echo. Another attractive item in the programme was two solos on the zitter, by Mr Wassilieff-Koch, and a duet for guitar and zitter, with Mr Stummvoll. Both were encored. Miss Leonora D'Arcy played excellently Ascher's transcription for the pianoforte of his romance, "Alice, where art thou?"; Miss Helen Rice sang Wallace's "Song of May," and Arditi's "Il Baccio;" Miss Emily Fortesque a song of J. P. Knight's, and a new ballad, "Oh, buy my flowers." A young French lady, Mdlle Blanche Eytel, sang "Bell' raggio" most artistically; Mr Alfred Rudland gave Balfe's "Come into the garden," and Hatton's "Good-bye, sweetheart," with effect; and Mr Charles Wilbye attempted Hatton's favourite song, "To Anthea." The concert was under the direction of Mr Lansdowne Cottell, who, with Miss Blanche Roope and Mr Niels Chrisander, accompanied the singers on the pianoforte.

An Organ Performance took place on Monday, the 28th ult., at the Church of St Lawrence, Gresham Street, City, the executant being Dr Spark, of Leeds, who gave a selection of pieces on the new organ, built by Grey and Davison. Dr Spark played a Concert Fantasia for organ solo, written by himself, in B major, commencing with an adagio, introducing an allegro moderato in B major, followed by a melodious slow movement in G major; the last movement being a fugue in B major, which, after passing through proper development, finishes by returning to the leading subject of the first movement, winding up with a coda. This fantasia is effective, and well written for the instrument. The next piece was the hymn, "Jerusalem the Golden," with variations by Dr Spark, finishing with a fugato movement on the melody of the hymn. This was followed by a fugue, in A minor, by J. S. Bach, and the last piece was a new "Festal March," in E flat, composed for the inauguration of the Yorkshire Exhibition organ. This is an effective march, with a second part in A flat, returning to the first theme, and finishing with a brilliant coda. Dr Spark executed his selection exceedingly well, and finished by playing the National Anthem, it being the anniversary of the Queen's coronation.—J. P.

Miss Edwards, the esteemed and accomplished lady professor, gave a matinée musicale last Saturday, in the Beethoven Rooms. Miss Edwards exhibited the versatility of her talents by coming forward as pianist, vocalist, and composer. Her instrumental performances were Henselt's "Si oiseau j'étais," and Potter's "Pezzo di bravura," and a duet, with Mr Oberthür, for harp and pianoforte, on airs in Oberon, the composition of her accomplished partner. Her vocal contributions were the romance from L'Africaine, "Addio terra nativo," Braga's song (with Mr Lazarus's clarionet obbligato), "Legère Valaque," her new duet, "Farewell, lov'd one," with Miss Alice Fairman, and her well known and admired quartet, "Harmony! oh, harmony!" in which she was joined by Miss Fairman, M. Godrant, and Signor Riccardi. Miss Alice Fairman, among other pieces, sang Miss Edwards' elegant composition, "Gone like the snows," and one of Signor Campana's prettiest melodies. Mr Lazarus played Mr Oberthur's duet for harp and clarionet with the composer; and Signor Martucci two pianoforte solos of his own. Signor and Signora Robiato-Schor, Signori Riccardi and Urio, Herr Werrenrath, &c., were among the list of vocalists—Signor Urio, by-the-bye, reaping "golden opinions" by his chaste delivery of Handel's "Rendi 'l sereno al ciglio." Signori Campana, Romili, and Tartaglione were announced as accompanists of the vocal music.

A meeting of the friends and supporters of the training ship "Goliah," under the direction of the Ragged School Society, and commanded by Captain Bourchier, took place "on board," at Greys (Essex), where the ship is moored, for the purpose of presenting prizes, consisting of writing-desks, knives, and other useful articles, to the most diligent and attentive boys on board. The vessel is admirably adapted for the purpose, being an old eighty-four gun ship, with plenty of room for the officers, instructors, and crew. There are over four hundred boys, who are well cared for, clothed, and fed at the expense of the society. A suitable education is given, so as to render them useful members of society. Amongst other branches taught the embryo "tars" is vocal and instrumental music. The vocal classes, under the direction of Mr Toy, sang, on the occasion under notice, with admirable precision, stentorian voices and powerful effect, the several popular airs of the day, and the national naval songs of England, whilst a band of forty performers, on military instruments, did wonders, under the conductorship of Mr Miami. At the conclusion of the performances Captain Bouchier, and the officers and officials of the "Goliah," received the thanks of the numerous ladies and gentlemen present—and deservedly so—for the admirable system of keeping the ship, and the healthful state of all on board. So admirable an institution deserves every support.

Mr J. B. Welch, a highly respected teacher of singing, gave a concert at the Langham Hall, Great Portland Street, which was fully attended. The programme was evidently appreciated by the audience. An efficient choir opened the concert with Mendelssohn's "Hunting song," after which Mr Edward Wharton, who possesses a fine bass voice, sang "Oh tu Palermo" (Verdi) with taste and effect. Miss Kate Grant, who also possesses a fine soprano voice, gave, with Mr Welch, Mozart's "Crudel Perche," and sang Handel's "From mighty kings," giving, in both, proof of intelligence and judicious training. Miss Coyte Turner, a promising contralto, rendered effectively "Che faro" (Gluck); and Mrs Bradshaw Mackay, Handel's "Vieni Prati"; Miss Maud Woodcock pleased in Sullivan's "Genevieve"; Mr George Sylvestre in Weber's grand scena from Oberon; and Mr David in Mozart's aria "Un aura amoroso." The bénéficiaire sang with his usual excellence "Madamina," and was loudly applauded. Mr T. Ainsworth gave Piatti's song (with violoncello obbligato, played by Herr Daubert); and Mr Franklin Taylor and Herr Daubert executed in a perfect manner Mendelssohn's Sonata, Op. 45, for violoncello and pianoforte; besides which each artist played solos on their respective instruments. Some concerted pieces by Donizetti and Sullivan added variety to the concert, which was a decided success. Mr Frank Frewer and J. B. Zerbini were the accompanists.

The Musical Artists' Society, of which his grace the Duke of Beaufort is president, gave their first concert on Friday evening, June 25th, at the Beethoven Rooms. The vocalists were Miss Sophie Ferrari, Miss Jessie Jones, Miss Mary Davies (Welsh Choral Union scholar), and Miss Annie Butterworth; the pianists Miss Ellen Day, Miss Bolton, Miss Emma Barnett; Mr H. C. Banister, Mr Eaton Faning, Mr J. Lea Summers, and Mr E. H. Thorne. The violinist was Mr Henry Holmes, and the violoncellist Mr Pettit. The programme will, no doubt, interest our readers, we therefore give it in extenso:—Vocal Trio, "In the wood" (Misses Mary Davies, Jessie Jones, and Butterworth)—Hiller; Duo Brillant, in E (Op. 19), pianoforte (Miss Ellen Day and Miss Bolton, pupil of Miss Day)—Charles E. Stephens; Song, "I know my love loves me" (Miss Mary Davies, Welsh Choral Union scholar)—R. O'Leary Vinning; Vocal Trio, "The skylark" (Misses Mary Davies, Jessie Jones, and Butterworth)—A. Gilbert; Fantasia, Tanto patetica, quanto appassionata (Mr H. C. Banister)—H. C. Banister; Two Songs,

Digitized by Google

"The sparkling stars of night," and "As it fell upon a day" (Miss Sophie Ferrari)—C. Gardner; Song, "Ask me no more" (Miss Jessie Jones, violoncello obbligato, Mr Pettit)—Oliveria Prescott; Trio in C minor, for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello (Miss Emma Barnett, Mr Henry Holmes, and Mr Pettit) (recalled)—J. F. Barnett; Duo, in G, for pianoforte and violin (Mr Summers and Mr Henry Holmes)—J. Lea Summers; Song, "There sits a bird on yonder tree" (Miss Sophie Ferrari)—Louis N. Parker; Solos Pianoforte, Sketch, "The Brooklet," "Etude Fantastique" (Mr Eaton Faning)—Eaton Faning; Song, "He roamed in the forest" (Miss Annie Butterworth)—Arthur O'Leary; Sonata, in F, for pianoforte and violin (Mr Thorne and Mr Henry Holmes)—E. H. Thorne. The rooms were very full, and much interest was felt by the audience as the compositions of the young artists were respectively brought forward to be played, and at the conclusion of each piece applause was discriminatingly administered. The accompanists at the pianoforte were Miss Oliveria Prescott, Mr Charles Gardner, and Mr Arthur O'Leary.

Master Henry Walker gave his first Pianoforte Recital on Monday afternoon, June 28, at St James's Hall, under the patronage of His Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh, assisted by Mdme Castellan and Mr Charles Hallé. On this occasion Master Walker made his first appearance in London since his return from America, where the youthful pianist had made a lengthened tour, and obtained general admiration for his artistic qualifications, and universal esteem for his amiable disposition. The following is the programme Master Walker offered to his patrons:—

Duet, pianoforte and violin, Sonata in A major (Mdme Castellan and Master Henry Walker)—Mozart; Solo, violin, Air (Mdme Castellan)—Vieuxtemps; Solo, pianoforte, Sonata Appassionata (Op. 57), (Master Henry Walker)—Beethoven; Duet, for two pianos, Andante and Variations, in B flat (Op. 46), (Mr Charles Hallé and Master Henry Walker)—Schumann; Solo, pianoforte, Berceuse Andante (Op. 57) and Capriccio Scherzo Presto (Op. 16), (Master Henry Walker)—Chopin and Mendelssohn; Duet, piano and violin, Sonata, "The Kreutzer" (Mdme Castellan and Master Henry Walker)—Beethoven.

The performance of the youthful pianist—whose talent we have often eulogised when he was a pupil of Mr F. B. Jewson, at the Royal Academy of Music—was excellent throughout, and the applause he obtained was as genuine as it was deserved.

Mr Hallett Sheppard invited his friends to a "musical evening" at the Beethoven Rooms on Thursday, the 24th ult., the first part of which consisted of Mr Sheppard's new Mass in F (No. 3), excellently performed by a select choir of thirty voices, with pianoforte and harmonium accompaniments. The Mass is well written throughout, full of devotional inspirations, and shows ample proof of Mr Sheppard's mastery over the severer forms of composition. The Kyrie gives at once the impression that the writer is well versed in contrapuntal science, which, in the Gloria, appears still further developed by the fugal treatment of "Cum Sancto Spirito in gloria Dei." The Credo is impressive, and contains remarkable effects for the solo voices. We could not enjoy this movement so thoroughly, not that we found fault with the music, but for the disturbance caused by the entrance of two ladies, who evidently were under the impression that during the "Et incarnatus est" was the most appropriate time to hunt about for their seats. The Benedictus begins with a telling solo for mezzo-soprano, after which the "Hosanna" comes in with well-defined force and effect. The "Agnus Dei" is also finely written—perhaps a little trying for the ordinary range of soprani. It worthily concludes a work by which Mr H. Sheppard has meritoriously enriched church music. We hope that his work will soon be performed in combination with the ceremonies of the cultus for which it is intended, as any performance, however perfect, but apart from them, suffers always under disadvantages. The second part of the concert consisted of an effective part-song, "Return of Spring"; a song, "Zillah," by Balfe, sung with much effect by Mr Richard Mackway; a "Duo Concertante" on an original melody for piano and harmonium, by Mr H. Sheppard, who played the pianoforte, being ably assisted at the harmonium by Mr Oscar Edwards. The Duo was excellently played, and met with particular success. The concert concluded by a highly effective performance of Gounod's cantique, "Nazareth," the solo part sung by Mr R. Prestdrige.—A. B.

Bucharest.—Having been completely repaired and redecorated, the Grand Theatre will be re-opened, in November, for opera.

Naples.—A summer theatre is to be erected in the Via del Museo, with the name of Arena Nazionale.—Fiorelli, archæologist and antiquary, has requested permission of the Municipality to construct a theatre after the model of the ancients. Assisted by the Abbate Mirabelli, professor in the University, he proposes to have the plays of Plautus and Terence performed, in their original language, and with appropriate costumes.

BERLIN.

(From our Correspondent.)

Speaking of the appearance of Mdlle Marie Geistinger in La Belle Hélène, La Grande Duchesse, and Die Fliedermaus, at the Friedrich Wilhelmstädtisches Theater, where she has been attracting large audiences, Herr Ferdinand Gumbert makes the following frank and interesting remarks:—

"There is certainly food for reflection in the fact that, as a rule, Viennese singers have made a hit among ourselves, while our North-German vocalists have only in rare instances been successful in Vienna. To account for this by Austrian antagonism may be convenient, but it is decidedly unjustifiable. That the Viennese should be better qualified, as they really are, than the Berliners to give an opinion in such matters is something arising from very natural causes. Not only do the Viennese possess greater aptitude for singing than the North-Germans, but, by hearing, in their best days, the vocal celebrities of all countries, they have formed their judgment. In former days, only a few such artists visited Berlin, generally not doing so, however, till they were past their prime—I will mention merely Rubini and Mad. Pasta. The consequence is that a Viennese vocal reputation passes current all over the world, while doubts are entertained of a Berlin singer until some other town than Berlin has corroborated the renown he or she has achieved in the Prussian capital. This will always be the case until another style of singing is taught and cultivated here, both in public institutions and privately. The recent failure of Mad. Mallinger in Vienna was utterly powerless to surprise me, for I foretold it. The older readers of this journal, moreover, recollect that at her very first visit here, in the spring of 1869, my opinion of her was identical with the verdict now generally pronounced in Vienna. Having long ceased to notice that the lady sings out of tune, that her bravura is incorrect, that her power of sustaining a tone is limited, and that her want of breath compels her to mutilate the phrases, the majority of the Berlin critics have certainly placed themselves in a peculiar position."

Commenting upon the conclusion of the above, the editor of the Neue Berliner Musikzeitung, in which it is published, observes in a foot note:—

"That the Berlin critics should not be continually repeating what they have so often said, strikes us not as peculiar but simply as natural."

Herr Moritz-Ernst, who lately resigned the stage-managership of the Royal Opera to become manager of the Stadttheater, Cologne, has had the Royal Order of the Crown, Fourth Class, conferred on him by the Emperor of Germany. Apropos of the Royal Operahouse, the Berlin Echo thus alludes to the reduced tariff of admission recently introduced there, for a limited period, by Herr von Hülsen:—

"We can speak with the more satisfaction of the past season, because it did not, like former seasons, draw to its close without exciting any particular attention; on the contrary, several times a week, great interest was manifested by a public who filled every part of the house, and frequently indulged in marks of enthusiastic approbation. The attendance of this public, whose feelings were all the fresher and more impartial, because they seldom enjoy such a treat, was due wholly and solely to the revised scale of admission. The fact that, of late years, the prices of everything required by families of respectability and culture, obliged to study appearances, have been doubled, is a fact which has usually kept away thousands of such families from the Royal Theatres, or entirely closed the doors of those establishments against them, because all their incomes go in absolute necessaries. Now it is precisely among persons thus excluded that we find a far more comprehensive and delicate appreciation of what is true and noble in art, than among the members of the more favourably circumstanced but, after all, not numerous, minority, who attend the theatre every evening and give the tone. These persons are so cloyed that nothing pleases them. They often force the singers to introduce perfectly abnormal distinctions of light and shade, and cause us to dread that the affectation now only too rampant in art, thanks to the detestable virtuoso system, may become permanent. In the public, which has lately filled the Royal Operahouse, a public possessing, it is true, less money in its purse, but all the more knowledge in its head, and warmth in its heart, together with a true feeling of piety towards acknowledged great composers, operatic artists will possess far different critics of what they do. It is to be hoped, therefore, that, in the interest of art, the Royal Intendant-General will, at least once a week during the winter, continue to give performances, at reduced prices, of standard classical works. Such a plan would, in time, prove of inestimable benefit to artists and public as well as to art itself."

Digitized by Google

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

The following is the programme of the Student's Concert, given at St James's Hall, on Thursday evening last:—

Duet, in F minor (MS.), pianoforte and violoncello (Miss Oliveria Prescott and Mr Buels)—Oliveria Prescott (student); Duet, "Ah, guarda sorella" (Cosi fan Tutte) (Miss Farrer and Miss Roby)—Mozart; Rondo, from Sonata in C, Op. 24, "Il moto continuo," pianoforte (Miss Annie Frost)—Weber; Aria, "Sorgete" (Maometto) (Mr Eugène Boutenop)—Rossini; Seventeen Variations Serieuses, in D minor, pianoforte (Miss Daniel)—Mendelssohn; Valse (Romeo and Juliet) (Miss Edouard)—Gounod; Prelude and Fugue, in A flat, Op. 53, pianoforte (Miss Pamphilon)—Rubinstein; Chamber Anthem (MS.), for female voices, "O satisfy" (Misses Nessie Goode, Edouard, Marie Duval, Alice Curtis, Beata Francis, Jessie Jones, Mary Davies, Thekla Fischer, Geary, Amy Aylward, A. Butterworth, M. Butterworth, Bolingbroke, and Reimar)—H. C. Banister; Adagio, from Concerto in G, No. 11, violin (Mdlle de Nolte)—Spohr; Song, "When my thirsty soul I steep" (Mr Robt. George)—T. M. Mudie; Rondo Piacevole, in E, Op. 26, pianoforte (Miss Hancock)—W. Sterndale Bennett; Songs, "Du bist wie eine blume" and "Widmung" (Miss Thekla Fischer)—Schumann; Cavatina in D (Raff) and Hungarian Dance, in D minor (Brahms and Joachim) violin—Mdlle Gabrielle Vaillant and Mrs Marshall; Motet, for female voices, "Laudate Pueri" (solos by Misses Marian Williams, Marie Duval, and Barklay—organ, Mr Walter Fitton)—Mendelssohn; Song (MS.), "The fountains mingle" (Mr Howells) — H. Walmsley Little (student); Polonaise, in A flat, Op. 53, pianoforte (Miss Ludovici)—Chopin; Romanza, "Il lamento" (Miss Marion Williams)—Fiori; Andante and Rondo Capriccioso, in E, Op. 14, pianoforte (Miss Burrough)—Mendelssohn; Duet, "Cantando un di" (Miss Amy Aylward and Miss Mary Davies, Welsh Choral Union Scholar)—Clari; Anthem, "Praise ye the Lord"—Walter Macfarren.

The accompanists of the vocal music were Miss Alice Curtis, Miss Katie Steele, Mr A. H. Jackson, and Mr Jarrett.

PARIS SCRAPS.

(From our Parisian Scrapper.)

M. Ambroise Thomas's Hamlet was given last week at the Grand Opera, with new representatives of the two principal characters, namely Mdlle de Rezké, as Ophelia, and M. Lassalle as the hero. The young lady belongs to a rich and aristocratic Polish family, devotedly fond of music. Like her two brothers, one of whom is a baritone, now at Drury Lane, and the other a bass, about proceeding to Italy, she set about the study of her favourite art with all the ardour of one whose existence entirely depended upon her professional exertions. To this Mad. Nissen-Salomon, of the Conservatory, St Petersburgh, who was her mistress of singing, can bear testimony. In addition to a rich voice of extensive range, Madlle de Rezké rejoices in personal advantages of great value on the stage. She is tall, and graceful, with a fine expressive face. There is another precious gift, too, she possesses, and that is youth, for she is only just twenty. She made her débuts, last summer, at the Teatro Malibran, Venice, where she sang in Faust and Robert le Diable. She proved so successful that the manager of the Fenice engaged her for the winter season to sing in Sig. Schira's admirable opera, Selvaggia. Venice, however, is not Paris, and the young lady would have done better had she studied a little longer and gained more experience before essaying, at the Grand Opera, a part in which she had to contend with the memory of two such artists as Mad. Christine Nilsson and Mad. Carvalho. It is surprising that she got through the ordeal, and the mere fact is an augury of future success.

M. Lassalle, as Hamlet, is, of course, not to be compared with Faure, but his impersonation presents much that is worthy of praise. From a dramatic point of view, however, it is as yet very crude.

M. Halanzier has announced a performance at the Grand Opera, on Saturday, the 3rd, for the benefit of the sufferers by the inundations in the South of France. The editor of the Ménestrel, calling on the public to raise the prices of admission, forwards five hundred francs, for five stalls, with the remark that, on such an occasion, no place ought to be let under a proportionate rate. "Pursue this plan," he exclaims, "and the Opera alone will be able to contribute a hundred thousand francs to the relief fund." Mad. Carvalho re-appears for the first time, after her accident, at this performance. Fears were entertained that she would be under the necessity of leaving the stage, but they prove to have been groundless. Great efforts are being made to obtain an annual grant of 300,000 francs for the Théâtre Lyrique. Referring to this, M. Jennius writes as follows in La Liberté:—

"From a musical point of view, and leaving out of consideration personal questions and private interests, no subject is more important than the destiny of the Théâtre Lyrique, a theatre which, for twenty years led the musical movement in France—a movement that has entirely ceased since the Théâtre Lyrique disappeared—a theatre which produced Faust (appropriated by the Grand Opera) Roméo et Juliette, Mireille, Le Médecin malgré lui, Les Dragons de Villars (now enriching the repertory of the Opéra-Comique) La Perle du Brésil, La Reine Topaze, La Statue, Gil Blas, La Fanchonette (that is: the most successful works in the most different styles)—a theatre which introduced to the public, Gounod, Félicien David, Reyer, Semet, Maillart, Bizet, and many more—a theatre where most of the singers who have since shone at the Opéra and the Opéra-Comique first came out."

M. Offenbach has sold the Gaité to M. Albert Vizentini, who, assumed the management on the 1st inst., in the name of Albert Vizentini and Co. (Limited).

The members of the Boïeldieu family, including M. Adrien Boïeldieu, the Composer's son; MM. Louis and Georges Aigoin, two grandsons; and Lieutenant Alphonse Boïeldieu, a grand-nephew, have addressed a letter of thanks to the Mayor of Rouen, for the hospitality of the Corporation during the recent Centenary.

The Committee of Dramatic Authors and Composers have voted 500 francs to the Samson memorial.

MDLLE MARIE DUMAS.

An interesting "Matinée Musicale Dramatique" was given at the Beethoven rooms in Harley Street, yesterday, by a lady who has gained considerable reputation from her drawing-room comedies and bright sketches of character. Mdlle Marie Dumas acts, reads, recites, gives poetical sketches, and never requires any scenery or effects to aid her. She comes upon the stage, and makes the scene, by her liveliness and expression. Whether this talented lady is discoursing on the miseries of matrimony, the excellence of charity, the sorrow of blindness, or the pathos of age, she invariably gains the universal attention of her audience. As an actress Mdlle Marie Dumas possesses welcome versatility, and her ready flow of humour is very remarkable. In all her scenes and sketches Mdlle Marie Dumas was heartily applauded; and it is certain that a lady who, without scenery and elaborate preparation, can give proper dramatic effect to the poems she recites and the scenes she suggests, must be an agreeable acquisition at a country house in the drawing-room at that pleasant period after dinner and before the guests separate. The matinée was extremely well attended, and, apart from the special entertainment at which Mdlle Dumas assisted, the singing of Mdlle Jeanne Renard, the violoncello playing of M. Ernst Nathan, the harp solos of Mr John Thomas, and the pianoforte performance of Madame Viard Louis, contributed to a pleasant and very successful afternoon. The programme was so well selected and so welcome for its variety that no move was made until after the last duet between Mdlle Jeanne Renard and Signor Monari-Rocca. "Saynites de Salon," as they are called, are not very popular in society, and it will not be forgotten that Mdlle Marie Dumas was one of the first to distinguish herself in this country by introducing these elegant distractions. In point of humour the most successful selection was a comedy for two, called "Les Pièges Dorés," and, in point of pathos, a recitation given for the first time in public, and called "La Jeune Aveugle." The description of the enthusiasm of a young blind girl suddenly restored to sight was quite devoid of exaggeration and welcome for its nature.—Daily Telegraph.

S. LEHMEYER NOT C. LAHMEYER.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

SIR,—In your critique of Miss Leon Hayes' concert, you kindly mentioned my name as conductor of her concert. You little intended to take the laurels from Herr Lahmeyer for having ably done so, not knowing, probably, anything of Herr Lahmeyer in existence as a conductor; and, as he deserves the praise, to avoid all mistakes between the Le and La, I shall beg you to insert my name in future as Herr Sigismond Lehmeyer. I am sorry to trouble you with such a small matter for your valued paper, and remain, dear Sir, yours faithfully,

SIGISMOND LEHMEYER.

Digitized by Google

RICHARD WAGNER, AND HIS RING OF THE NIBLUNG.

(From the "New Quarterly Magazine.")

(Continued from page 429.)

On their first appearance, Wotan and Loge are received by Alberich with undisguised suspicion; but Loge soon succeeds in acting on the vanity of the dwarf by expressing his doubts as to the boasted power of the Tarn-helmet. Thrown off his guard, Alberich changes himself into the shape of a giant-worm, and afterwards into that of a toad. As soon as the latter appears, Wotan puts his foot on it, Loge simultaneously snatches the magic cap from its head. Alberich is fettered and carried off by the gods, who command him to bid the Niblungs bring the treasure from their subterranean regions. At last he is compelled to give up the ring, by means of which he had hoped to recover his lost power; but before doing so he attaches his curse to the gold, which henceforth shall be fatal to its owner, as it has already been to himself, by its own baneful essence. To the giants, who now reappear, Wotan offers gold sufficient to cover their prisoner from head to foot. Freia is placed between two huge poles, and the rapacious pair begin at once to heap the precious toys round the goddess. The whole treasure is thus consumed, and yet a chink remains through which the lovely victim remains visible to her rude oppressors. The giants demand of Wotan to stop the opening first with the Tarn-helmet and after it with the ring, but the latter the god refuses to part with. The giants wrathfully threaten to break the bargain, and are on the point of carrying off the goddess a second time, when, from the deepest recesses of the mountain, rises up the mysterious form of Erda (Hertha), the pantheistic symbol of Earth as the principle and origin of all life. In solemn words she warns Wotan of the curse attaching to the ring, reminding him at the same time of the ultimate doom which threatens the gods. Thus admonished, Wotan throws the ring on the golden heap which the giants immediately set about collecting in an enormous sack; but no sooner have they touched the ring than its curse begins to act. Both claim its exclusive possession, and in the quarrel thus excited Fafner kills his brother Fasolt. The gods stand in silent amazement, recognizing the truth of Erda's warning. But no dark foreboding can for long disturb the calm serenity of their supreme existence. The mists hanging around them are dispersed into brilliant lightning by the hammer of Donnah, and from amidst the black clouds Froh has thrown a rainbow over the cleft dividing the gods from their new habitation. On this bridge they enter their splendid abode, heedless of the complaints of the Rhine Daughters and of Loge's muttered threats of their approaching destruction.

The Rhinegold has been compared by German critics to the Prologue in heaven which Goethe has prefixed to his Faust tragedy. Both pieces have, indeed, the feature in common of foreshadowing in the minds of divine beings the human actions and sufferings of the coming drama. Here, however, the analogy ends. The "Lord" in Goethe's poem is the placid omnipotent ruler of heaven and earth, inapproachable alike to fear or passion. Wagner's gods, on the other hand, are themselves acting a tragedy of no lesser import and of no lesser sadness than the human beings to be afterwards introduced. They are subject to rage and envy, they covet the luring gleam of the gold, and the joy of their divine existence is marred by the consciousness of an inevitable doom. They are, indeed, tragic characters in the deepest sense of that word. Wagner, in making use of this feature, has succeeded in rousing our human interest in beings seemingly so remote from our feeling. The idea itself, however, of a final destruction of this world and of the gods ruling over it pervades the whole system of old northern religions, distinguishing it in that respect from the mythologies of all other nations. It is true that the secret cult of Bacchus or Adonis celebrates the death of that god, but the yearly recurrence of that event, with its regenerated counterpart, indicates its scarcely undisguised symbolism of the change of seasons. In the deeper mind of the Germanic nations, a story, perhaps originally also indicative of a natural event, has at an early period been invested with a permanent and, in a certain sense, ethical character. The very symbol of the world, the World-ash Yggdrasil, with a serpent gnawing its root, and a stag and goat nibbling its foliage, is an image of decay and mortality; the final victory, on the other hand, of the powers of darkness and chaos (dark-elves and giants), over the upper gods (Aisir, from a beam or column, i.e., prop of the world), the representatives of law and order, is brought about, not without some moral guilt on the part of the latter, as is proved by the hope of the ultimate reconstruction of a purified world. This idea of a possible redemption of what was divine in the old fabric, even after the "Dusk of the Gods" (Ragnarökr), Wagner has also introduced into his poem, relieving in this manner the feeling of hopeless doom which forms the dark background of his tragedy.

(To be continued.)

DORN (!) ACROSS MENDELSSOHN.

(Continued from page 431.)

On 13th of September, 1843, Robert Schumann celebrated the birthday of his wife, Clara. I appeared as an unexpected guest at the breakfast table, where, besides David aud Grützmacher, I met Mendelssohn again after thirteen years. When we had partaken of a bountiful repast, we had a succession of musical enjoyments. Schumann surprised his wife with a new trio, which was instantly tried, and Felix produced as his present "The Spring Song," and played it for the first time. This beautiful piece is the pearl of the fifth book of his Lieder ohne Worte, which, as is well-known, is dedicated to Madame Schumann. The little company were so enraptured with it that the composer had to repeat it twice. It was a worthy conclusion to the celebration of the day.

The next day I dined at Councillor Frege's, and again had the pleasure of meeting Mendelssohn, who, even during the dessert, placed himself at the piano and gave us some of his beautiful songs, which were sung, with full appreciation, by Livia Gerhardt, the celebrated singer. My third and last day at Leipsic was devoted to my friend Petschke, who had assembled a party in honour of Mendelssohn, who seemed to be as much at his ease as he had formerly been, as a young man, in the house of Johanna Zimmermann. Petschke had asked me to bring some of my own compositions with me, and I found some attentive listeners to my Schöffen von Paris. Mendelssohn, however, greatly surprised me by declaring he already knew one of the airs I had played, and seating himself at the piano, went through ten or twelve bars, where certainly the harmonies of my air occurred, although I failed to recognize where I had heard them before. "Why, you do not know your own composition again?" said Mendelssohn, "that is the final chorus to The Magician and Monster." That was a melodrama for which I had written the music, and which Mendelssohn had liked at the time, and of which now, sixteen years later, he could remember chords, that had long since passed from my mind. When I expressed astonishment at his memory, he said, in a very gratifying manner—"It is only good melodies we should endeavour to retain."

I fear that the musical festival at Cologne, which gave rise to so much unpleasantness between the heads of the various musical societies, also caused a coldness between Mendelssohn and myself. I could not, in the interest of my party, approve of all the measures which were carried out, and I fear my conduct was represented to him in a manner calculated to wound. Unfortunately, I had neither time nor opportunity, during his twelve hours' stay, to explain to him the Cologne comedy of "party faction;" so I am afraid that he parted from me with resentment in his heart, whilst my admiration for his genius, profound knowledge, noble striving, and great lovableness always remained the same.

On the 9th of November, 1847, five days after Mendelssohn's death, I directed the second Winter concert at Cologne, and, amidst universal sympathy and the expression of the deepest grief, the solemn chorus from St Paul was introduced: "Behold, we reckon those happy who have endured; for though the body die, yet will the soul live for ever."

CETTE.—A Musical Festival is announced for the 29th, 30th, and 31st of August, under the direction of M. Ambroise Thomas.

ST PETERSBURGH.—Rubinstein is busily at work here on his new opera, Nero, for the first performance of which, at Paris, he has signed an agreement with M. Halanzier.

MUNICH.—A Professorship of Musical History is now attached to the Conservatory of Music. Herr Riehl is professor, and the epochs to which he refers are practically illustrated by pupils.

Digitized by Google

THE CERVANTES ANNIVERSARY.

It used to be said of Queen Isabella II. that, "with all her faults, she was Muy Española," and the partisans of her son seem above all things bent on winning for his Government a reputation for the same cheap and doubtful patriotic virtue. I say "cheap and doubtful," for there are in every nation bad as well as good qualities, and the tendency of Royal patriotism may be as much to flatter the worst as to encourage the best. A king of Spain, to be popular, must, in the first place, patronize the bull-fight, but he may besides, if he aspires to the title of an enlightened sovereign, honour the memory of Cervantes. The celebration of the anniversary of the author of Don Quixote need not fill up so vast a place as the Coliseo de la Plaza de Toros, but there is still, as there has always been in this country, sufficient reverence for genius to insure, on an occasion like this, the attendance of a cultivated audience, numerous as well as select. The Society of Literature and Art in Spain, which took upon itself the management of the Cervantes anniversary, determined to hold it in the former church of the Monastery of Doña Maria de Aragon, many years since fitted out for the accommodation of the Upper House or Senate. The place could fairly be made to contain 500 persons, and that would, in ordinary times, have been all that was needed; but, as it was understood that the King and the Princess of Asturias would grace the festivity with their presence, the tickets applied for and, with truly Spanish liberality, issued exceeded 2,000; and, wonderful to say, not much less than half that number miraculously contrived to squeeze in. Such are still, even in these democratized Latin countries, the uses of Royalty. The Spaniards celebrate, not the birthday, but the death of Cervantes, because the date of the poet's birth at Alcala de Henares cannot be positively ascertained, while there falls no doubt on that of his decease, which occurred in Madrid on the 23rd of April, 1616, the same date, though not actually the same day—because England had not at that time adopted the reform of the Roman Calendar—in which Shakspere departed this life.

The hour appointed for the performance was three in the afternoon, but sitting room could only be secured by hours of weary waiting; and when I entered the building at half-past one, I found it already apparently full. The main hall of the Senate House is an elegant elliptical building, lofty and airy, somewhat newly stuccoed and gilt, but otherwise preserving still, almost untouched, the features of the original design, which had intended it as a place of religious worship. The vault is supported by colossal Corinthian columns, in its central part, on both sides, and in the apse opposite to the entrance, where once rose the main altar, and where the throne, surmounted by a canopy of gold and crimson, is now reared. Immediately in front of the throne, on a pedestal, was this day placed a marble bust of the hero of the fête, borrowed from the University. From the breast of this an oak and laurel wreath was suspended, it being understood that the King would not sit in state in solitary greatness, preferring to be accommodated with chairs for himself and sister on the platform at the foot of the throne. The House is divided by the columns into three distinct compartments, marking the sites of former side altars, but now turned to the purpose of tribunes or galleries, one of which, on the right as we enter, is reserved for the Diplomatic Body; another, facing it, was occupied by the Council of State, and above both were those of the Press. Eight other galleries were crowded with persons of distinction of both sexes. The gallery over the door, once the organ loft, was occupied by the choir, consisting of 200 singing boys and girls, pupils of the Conservatorio, or school of music, with their directors, and several instrumental performers, the whole under the management of Don Emilio Arrieta, the Rector of the School, a composer of high renown. The floor of the house was almost exclusively given up to the fair sex, whose many-coloured skirts were at first luxuriantly spread over the deep crimson velvet of the Senator's benches, though they had to be drawn in and in as the multitude kept thronging upon the early arrivals, till the whole audience made a motley mass, and so compact that it was only with the utmost difficulty that the well-mannered but resolute police could cut through it the narrowest possible avenue for the entrance and exit of the Royal party. In the midst of all the hubbub, the committeemen, stewards, or masters of the ceremonies bustled about, men of note as writers or artists most of them, but who had this day admitted into their body the Alcalde (or Mayor) of Alcala de Henares, the poet's birthplace, and that of Argamansillade Alba, an aldea (or village) of La Mancha, supposed to have been the home of Don Quixote.

The ceremonies of the day were somewhat common-place, but pertinent to the occasion. Punctual to a minute, the King, greeted with the strains of the Royal March, entered the hall at 3 o'clock, and took his seat on the fauteuil on the right of the throne, having his sister on his left. Opposite to him, before a writing-table, was the President of the Society, Don Cayetano Rossell, who opened the proceedings by reading an Exordio illustrative of the main events in the poet's life. Then followed, alternately, pieces of vocal and instrumental music and the reading of chapters of Don Quixote and other extracts from the author's works. The reading was lengthy and somewhat unimpressive, the music not quite first-rate, the only successful declamation being that of Doña Eliza Mendoza Tenorio, a distinguished actress, who recited a poem by Don Ventura de la Vega, in which the highest rank among men of genius was claimed for Cervantes, and Spain was exalted as the "first nation in the world." The music began with a choral performance of an anthem, or cantiga, of the 15th century, and closed with a cantata, the words by Señor Arana, the music by Señor Arrieta—the quaint, tame, yet solemn notes of the ancient melody pleasantly contrasting with the wild, inspiriting strain of the brave modern composition. There was, besides, a sonata by Señor Monasterio, executed by 18 young violin performers of the Conservatorio, two of whom were girls; and a solo on the harp by a young artist of great promise, aged 15, known under the nom de guerre of Señorita Esmeralda Cervantes. A few of the performers elicited bursts of applause, of which the King himself gave the signal, encouraging a breach of the courtly etiquette which forbids any demonstration of that kind in the presence of Royalty. This amiable condescension on his part won him the hearts of the assembled multitude, who had received him with respectful silence as he came in, but greeted him with loud cheers as he left the hall, giving him a pleasure which he was at no pains to conceal. The performance was over at 5 o'clock.

I did not attend the religious ceremony which was performed in the morning at the Church of the Trinitarian nuns, and consisted of a requiem or funeral mass sung for the deliverance of the poet's soul from purgatory, and extending the same release to all the other souls of departed literary worthies; but I went in the evening to the Zarzuela Theatre, where there was a special performance in behalf, and for the benefit, of the Literary Fund, and at which, also, the King and Princess were present. It opened with Marina, an opera in two acts, by the Maestro Arrieta, which holds a distinguished and well-deserved rank both on Spanish and foreign stages. There followed an interlude, in which four poems in honour of Cervantes, by Señors Grilo, Del Palacio, Serra, and Señora del Riego Pica, were read by the actors, and the whole ended with a zarzuela or vaudeville, by Narciso Serra, entitled El Loco de la Guardilla ("The madman in the Attic"), an extremely amusing, yet deeply touching and thrilling piece, of which Cervantes is the protagonist, and a work of real genius, which could be easily translated for foreign audiences, and which, in England, at least, would be sure of as great a success as it has commanded for these last 12 years on the Spanish stage.

The zarzuela was, perhaps, the climax of the many genuine emotions evinced by the cultivated part of the Madrid population at this interesting commemoration of him they call the "Prince of Spanish Geniuses," and whom they designate as the "Manco, or One-armed Man, or Cripple of Lepanto." This day, consecrated to the ceremony about which all men were of one mind, made, as it were, a break in the gloom, an oasis in the wilderness; it threw a ray of light into that long night of mad discord, of senseless revolution, brutal civil war, and chronic misgovernment which has become for so many years the normal condition of this distracted country, and which the ordinary resources of mere idle dissipation and sensual enjoyment only deepen by their repulsive contrast. It would not be right to despair of Spain or the Spaniards so long as the man who so well divined and defined the character of the country and people continues to be the object of heartfelt and generous worship. Some of the poets whose verses were read at the Zarzuela Theatre last evening, and especially Señor Manuel del Palacio, did not court applause by ministering to their countrymen's vanity, but told them bold yet wholesome truths, proving by the acclamation with which they were received, that Spanish hearts are still accessible to deep, generous, and, let us hope, not transitory feelings. Señor Palacio mourned over the prostration of a country which no longer produces "either Quixotes for war or Sanchos for peace—a country plunged into such ignoble sloth that to look for a spark of life one must grope among the dead." Even among the ashes of the dead, however, one would look in vain for any relic of Cervantes. The poet terminated his career in this city. The street in which he lived, the house which he inhabited and in which he breathed his last, are still pointed out, and so likewise is the church of the Trinitarias where his body was interred; but he died in extreme want and after long sufferings, obscure and unnoticed, the man unheeded, though his works had already risen to world-wide fame, perhaps because he was too independent to solicit, or too proud to accept, human aid. He died and made no sign, and was conveyed to his resting-place "unattended," his ashes mouldering in the heap of a hundred corpses thrown pell-mell into the common vault of a low, crowded parish church. But let that nation, ancient or modern, which deals with more justice towards its own great men cast the first stone. The lot of Cervantes was sad, but not, perhaps, more melancholy than that of Dante or Tasso, of Galileo or Milton. Nor was his life, though checkered by adversity and pinched by poverty, unredeemed by glimpses of that glory which was his idol, as it is every Spaniard's. Compelled to accept low offices in the Excise and the Commissariat, serving as a page, and enlisted as a private soldier, he found, in the wound he received at Lepanto, in the captivity he endured at Algiers, in the imprisonment he was subjected to at Castro del Rio, so many spurs to urge him to action, to exalt and strengthen his character, and also so many arguments, to confirm him in his self-respect. Like other truly great men, Cervantes was sure of himself, and he courted adversity and cherished misery with not a little of that desperate, suicidal, and more than half-crazed spirit with which his hero stood sword in hand before the open cage of the Royal lions. Had he never been in durance he might, perhaps, never have dreamt of Don Quixote.

Digitized by Google

PIERSON'S JERUSALEM.

By Amicus Patriæ (1852).

"Let old forms and time-honoured words perish with due honour, and give us fresh symbols and new forms of speech to express not what our fathers felt, but what we feel. Goethe says, 'The spirit world is not foreclosed. Thy senses are dulled; thy heart is dead. Arise, become a learner; and bathe that earthly breast of thine, unwearied, in the dew of a fresh morning.'"

Rev. F. Robertson on The Influence of Poetry.

The production of two new works of importance, both by Englishmen, and at a provincial festival, is an occurrence in musical history evidencing an advance in art, both by the appreciation of native talent, and by the extension of the sphere of its influence. As one who has watched the growth of the Norwich Musical Festival from a very early date in its career, and has a consequent interest in its success, I may, perhaps, be permitted to address a few remarks upon this subject, feeling that whoever makes an effort in a worthy cause will be secure of excuse for the smallness of that effort—"the will will be taken for the deed."

It is a great object both for the artist and his hearers, that on the production of a new work a way should be prepared for its fair understanding. Technical criticism, besides that it cannot be given to any extent till after perfect performance, is not sufficient, either in scope or bearing, for the general public. They require to have their attention and sympathies opened to the mode in which they are themselves affected, not to that in which the musician only can be touched; in fact, to be prepared for those impulses which, however veiled in their origin, are the agents through which genius accomplishes its wondrous ends—genius, of which Milton greatly says, with an especial reference to sacred poetry and music:—

"These abilities, wheresoever they be found, are the inspired gift of God rarely bestowed, but yet to some (though most abuse) in every nation: and are of power, beside the office of the pulpit, to inbreed and cherish in a great people the seeds of virtue and public civility, to allay the perturbations of the mind, and set the affections in right tune; to celebrate in glorious and lofty hymns the throne and equipage of God's Almightiness, and what He works, and what He suffers to be wrought with high providence in His Church."

We should all, indeed, do more justice both to artists and to ourselves, were we to escape more frequently from the study of causes, to the enjoyment of effects, at least on the first production of a work—were we more trustful as to the power of art to affect us by its creations directly and at once, and more reliant on the impulses to good thus awakened in our minds. In accordance with such views I have prepared the following analysis of Mr Pierson's oratorio of Jerusalem, because, not having been yet heard in its integrity, public curiosity is more on the alert concerning it. Dr Bexfield's has already enjoyed one favourable trial, and has had time to make its own impression, before the period of its second hearing shall arrive.

High art is that which achieves its end, whatever that end may be; the very highest art is that which makes to itself a noble end and achieves it. Simply taking the words of the oratorio as our criterion, it must at once be admitted that Mr Pierson has fulfilled the first half of this hypothesis; he has made to himself a noble end; his theme, as a whole, is the most momentous which the human soul can grasp—its own immortality—and the scriptural sentences selected to develop this sublime truth, are so arranged as to place before us, simply yet dramatically, the transgressions, the destruction, and the future restoration of God's chosen people and city, with the final redemption of the righteous dispersed over the face of the whole earth. Thus far we have the two great desiderata of a work of art—interest and action.

But the mind, which originally furnished the composer with his subject, has exercised a still deeper insight into the means by which the Almighty condescended to reveal to man his future destiny. The object was to select a whole from the body of the Sacred Book, perfect in itself, and yet fitted to the highest purposes of music; and it has been done.

The oratorio is divided into four portions—an Introduction or Prologue, and the three parts usually adopted for such a work. The former opens with an apparent anachronism—the words of Christ are spoken before those of all the prophets who preceded him in the world. But after the first impression we recall this text—"In the beginning was the 'Word,'" and we feel the seeming contradiction to be a tacit acknowledgment of the supremacy of the Redeemer. For the more direct purpose of the plan, it places before us, as the consummation of the course of error which had called down Divine punishment, the crucifixion; and it does so with exquisite discernment, in those few concluding sentences of the Saviour's mission, which disclose, not His bodily suffering, but His spiritual mercy.

And Jesus said: Daughters of Jerusalem, weep not for me; but weep for yourselves, and for your children!

O Jerusalem! If thou hadst known, at least in this thy day, the things which belong unto thy peace! but now they are hid from thine eyes.

And when they were come to the place which is called Calvary, there they crucified Him.

Then said Jesus: Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do.—Luke xxiii. 28; xix. 42; xxiii. 33, 34.

The Prologue closes with the stern denunciation of the Hebrew lawgiver, fortelling in the wilderness the destruction of the future city.

And Moses spake unto all Israel, on this side Jordan, in the wilderness.—Deut. i. 1.

The Lord shall bring a nation against thee from far, from the ends of the earth, as swift as the eagle flieth: a nation whose tongue thou shalt not understand; a nation of fierce countenance, which shall not regard the person of the old, nor show favour to the young. And he shall besiege thee in all thy gates, until thy high and fenced walls come down. And thy life shall hang in doubt before thee, and thou shalt fear day and night.—Deut. xxviii. 49, 50, 52, 56.

Thus, at a glance as it were, are the characteristics of the two covenants—strict justice and redeeming mercy—placed before us, and an epitome of the oratorio, in its whole scope, given at the same time; felicitously enhancing the poetry of the main action, by awakening, even before its commencement, the most trustful uplifting of the soul towards the Redeemer, and the sublimest pity for those whom He would not denounce.

(To be continued.)

LEEDS EXHIBITION.

(To the Editor of "The Musical World.")

Sir,—The documents published in the "Musical World" of last Saturday were not written by Mr Dayson (General Manager), nor were they even signed by him. Dr Spark took advantage of a time when the arrangements were in a sort of muddle, and, at his instigation, the first letter was written by one of the officials, with whom the Dr happened to be intimate.

I would suggest that Dr Spark should look into his Dictionary for the meaning of the word "INAUGURATE,"—his present view of it is extremely childish.

Dr Spark has mentioned "lies." I must say once more that all MY statements are perfectly true, and have been derived from the very best authority. Dr Spark said in one of his letters—(referring to his much-beloved document)—"Mr Best has seen this letter." Your intelligent readers will be glad to know that the Doctor's remark was utterly untrue; of this you will find ample proof enclosed. Whilst thanking you for inserting this correspondence, I should say that, as far as I am concerned, the matter ends here. I have done my best to ventilate the affair, and am sure most of your readers will see that Dr Spark's appearance and adventures in this case are not at all creditable to him.—I am, Sir, Yours obediently, Veritas.

Leeds, June 24th, 1875.

Digitized by Google

Autograph Letter of Sir W. Sterndale Bennett.

(From "Concordia.")

The subjoined interesting letter, which we print in fac-simile at the request of subscribers, was addressed to the annotator of the programmes of the recent daily concerts at the Royal Albert Hall. The Caprice referred to is that in E major for pianoforte and orchestra.

66, St John's Wood Road, November 6th, 1874.

My dear Mr Bennett,—I was very sorry to miss you yesterday, being obliged to go to the Academy by ten o'clock. With regard to my Caprice I really cannot remember much. It was first played by me at one of my benefit concerts at the Hanover Rooms; how many years ago I am afraid to say. I played it at Leipsic, and afterwards sold it to the Publishers there. When I sent them the score, they found out that I had left out P. F. part, which, in fact, I had never written. The score you shall see if you think it will be of any use in the kind interest you take in the work. The last time I heard it at the Philharmonic, it was played by Miss Kate Loder (now Lady Thompson), and conducted by Costa, long after our misunderstanding. Ever sincerely yours,

WILLIAM STERNDALE BENNETT.

[We cannot give in fac-simile this charming letter, addressed from one Bennett to a namesake worthy of him; but in our next number we shall have the pleasure of presenting our readers with the fac-simile of another letter addressed by our great English musician to an intimate friend, apropos of the sonata in A flat, entitled, The Maid of Orleans, written especially for, and dedicated to, Arabella Goddard. We have also some data about the Caprice in E, which Sterndale Bennett would seem to have forgotten.]

—o—

VIENNA.

(From a Correspondent.)

The great success of Verdi's Requiem induced the manager of the Imperial Operahouse to supplement the original three performances by a fourth. Verdi has promised Herr Jauner to come and superintend the getting up of Don Carlos in the winter.

Mad. Mallinger concluded an unsuccessful engagement by appearing as Mrs Ford, in Die lustigen Weiber von Windsor, and Miss Minnie Hauck wound up a very successful one as the heroine of M. Ambroise Thomas's Mignon.

—o—

WAIFS.

La Fille de Madame Angot has been filling the Criterion Theatre during the week.

The indefatigable redaction of Le Ménestrel is gathering materials for a biography of Spontini.

Signor Tamberlik, the famous Roman tenor (last of the Romans?) has been in London on a short visit. He was to leave on Tuesday.

Mr John Jackson, associate of the Royal Academy of Music, has been appointed organist and choirmaster at Holy Trinity Church, Rotherhithe.

"A welcome from Alma Mater" to the American "Rifle Team," now visiting Dublin, written by Dr Waller, LL.D., and set to music by Sir Robert P. Stewart, made a "hit" at the dinner given by Trinity College, Dublin, to the members of the International Rifle Match, last Saturday. The "Welcome" introduces "Hail Columbia," and "The Star Spangled Banner," and were sung in chorus by the Trinity College students, amidst tumultuous applause. Sir Robert conducted.

ALEXANDRA PALACE.—The attractions during the ensuing week will include a performance, on Monday, by the Haymarket Company, of David Garrick, in which Mr Sothern will make his last appearance this season. Mr Buckstone and Miss Minnie Walton will also appear; and on the same day, another visit to the Park will be made by the Members of the Four-in-Hand Club. On Tuesday, the National Temperance Fête is to be held; on Wednesday, the Brass Band Contest of the Metropolitan Schools will take place; and on Thursday, the last of the series of Italian Concerts will be given by the artists and chorus of the Royal Italian Opera, including Mdme Adelina Patti, Mdlle Scalchi, Mdme Vilda, Mdlle Proch, Mdlle Smeroschi; Signor Nicolini, Signor Cotogni, Signor Capponi, Signor Scolara, and Signor Ciampi. The conductors on this occasion will be Sir Julius Benedict, Signor Vianesi, and Mr H. Weist Hill. On Saturday, the sixth of the series of Popular Concerts will be given, in which Mdme Nouver, a new soprano, Mdme Demeric-Lablache, Signor Lodovico Breitner, and Mr Santley will appear. Mendelssohn's Loreley will be given, with increased orchestra and choir.

The Graphic states that there is no foundation for the report that Mad. Arabella Goddard will return to England for the autumn and winter season. The Graphic, as usual, is well-informed.

Mdlle Zaré Thalberg, as well as Mdlle Emma Albani, will, we are informed, take part in Mr Gye's provincial tour next autumn. Both are engaged by Sir Julius Benedict for the Norwich Festival.

In the new Act to regulate the houses of public entertainments in London and Westminster, the statute is deemed to have come in force on the 29th September last, proceedings for penalties to be stayed.

M. Mayer, the manager of the Princess's Theatre, the regular season of which was to terminate on Saturday night last, announced his intention to continue the performances during the week expiring to-day, for the benefit of those who suffered by the inundations in the south of France.

The Prince of Wales, and the committee of the club bearing His Royal Highness's name, have engaged a band of instrumentalists to perform three times a week at the club and in their racket grounds. Mr J. B. Clarke, Bandmaster of the Scotch Fusilier Guards, is appointed director. Mr Clarke is a "Cork boy."

Advertisements.

THE VOICE & SINGING

BY

ADOLFO FERRARI.

THE FORMATION AND CULTIVATION OF THE VOICE FOR SINGING.

Price 12s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, REGENT STREET, W.

"The remarkable qualities of this book are the author's freedom from conventional trammels, the strong sense of his opinions, and the novelty yet evident soundness of his precepts; his work has consequently come into general use as a manual of vocal instruction."—Daily News.

THE ART OF SINGING.

New Edition, Revised and Improved, of

A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR

THE VOICE.

By T. A. WALLWORTH.

A Method as used by the Author in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which he has cultivated the voices of his Pupils, Mdlle Alwina Valleria, Miss Lucy Franklein, and other successful Vocalists.

Full Music Size, price 7s.

London: HAMMOND & Co. (late JULLIEN), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his Residence, 36, Wimpole Street.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE,

For invigorating and enriching the voice, and removing affections of the throat.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE is universally acknowledged to be the most valuable remedy for sore throat, hoarseness and relaxed throat. It should always be taken before singing or reciting, as it strengthens the vocal organs. It is most extensively prescribed by the faculty for the throat and voice. Dr Lewis of Basingstoke says he finds them most efficacious, and in Dr Copland's Dictionary of Practical Medicine (Longman & Co.), they are strongly recommended at pages 872 and 1492. They are used by all the greatest vocalists and orators in Europe, and have been established over a quarter of a century. Testimonials from Patti, Grisi, Lablache, Santley, &c. Sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d. by all Chemists throughout the United Kingdom and the Colonies.

WILFORD MORGAN'S SONGS.

HER I LOVE	4s.
COULD I BUT CALL HER MINE	4s.
MY SWEETHEART WHEN A BOY	4s.
SWEET EVENING AIR	4s.
(N.B.—The above Songs have been sung with distinguished success by Mr WILFORD MORGAN.)
LITTLE BIRDIE, SING TO ME	4s.
(Sung by Miss EDITH WYNNE.)

ANTHEM.

IF THOU WILT FORGET ME (THE 13TH PSALM) .. .. .. 4s.

(For Tenor or Soprano Solo, with Chorus ad. lib., as sung at the Temple Church. Composed by WILFORD MORGAN.)

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Digitized by Google

NEW SONGS.

THE LAST FAREWELL.

New Song by J. L. HATTON.

Sung by Mdlle ALBANI, at the Floral Hall Concerts, with the greatest possible success. In C and E. Price 4s.

NEW SONGS
BY ARTHUR SULLIVAN.

SWEETHEARTS. In A♭ and B♭. Sung by E. LLOYD 4s
THE JUDGE'S SONG. From Trial by Jury. Sung by Mr. FRED SULLIVAN 4s
TENDER AND TRUE. In E♭ and F. Sung by EDITH WYNNE 4s
THE DISTANT SHORE. In E♭, F, and G 4s
THOU ART WEARY. In D minor and F minor ... 4s
THOU'RT PASSING HENCE... ... ... 4s

NEW SONGS
BY VIRGINIA GABRIEL.

CLOVELLY. Words from "Songs for Sailors." Dedicated to H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh... ... 4s
SOWING AND REAPING. Sacred Song 3s
SHE CAME LIKE A DREAM. Sung by Madame ENRIQUEZ 3s
THE WHITE DOVE 2s 6d

NEW SONGS
BY FAVOURITE COMPOSERS.

YES AND NO ... ... LOUISA GRAY 3s
MY LADYE ... ... AMY COMPTON 3s
IN THE TWILIGHT HOURS „ 3s
ELSIE'S DREAM ... JOSEPH L. ROECKEL 3s
BESIDE THE SEA ... „ „ 3s
SUMMER WINDS ... „ „ 3s
SO LONG AGO... ... GEORGE BARKER 3s
NINETTE ... ... „ „ 3s
THE ENTREATY The Lady CLARENCE PAGET 3s
GLAMOUR ... „ „ 3s
SWEET LISETTE ... ... J. L. ROECKEL 3s
THE CHILDREN IN THE WOOD „ 3s

CHAPPELL & CO.,
50, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON.

ROYAL
ITALIAN OPERA.

PRODUCTION OF WAGNER'S
'LOHENGRIN.'

The Books of Airs (in Two Books), arranged for Pianoforte, with ad. lib. accompaniments for Flute, Violin, and Violoncello, by

W. HUTCHINS CALLCOTT

PRICE.

Solos ... ... 5*s. each.*
Duets ... ... 6*s.* „
Accompaniments ... ... 1*s.* „

LONDON:
HUTCHINGS & ROMER,
9, Conduit Street, Regent Street, W.

Digitized by Google

In 74 Numbers, price One Penny, or in One Volume, cloth, gilt edges, price 7s. 6d.

MOTETS FOR THE YEAR.

A COLLECTION OF OFFERTORIES,

WITH APPROPRIATE WORDS FOR EVERY SUNDAY AND DAY OF OBLIGATION DURING THE YEAR.

Edited and Dedicated (by permission) to the Right Rev. J. DANELL, D.D., Lord Bishop of Southwark, by

W. M. LUTZ,

ORGANIST OF ST. GEORGE'S CATHEDRAL, SOUTHWARK.

CONTENTS.

1	1st Sunday in Advent	Ad te levavi	Bs. Solo or Qrtt.	Webbe
2	2nd Sunday in Advent	Deus tu convertens	Qrtt. or Chorus	Henry Smart
3	3rd Sunday in Advent	Juste et pie vivamus	Duet or Chorus	Webbe
4	4th Sunday in Advent	Ave Maria	Solo or Chorus	W. M. Lutz
5	Any Sunday during Advent	Rorate	Chorus & Solo	Webbe
6	Christmas Day	Adeste Fideles	Solo & Chorus	Webbe
7	Sunday within Octave of Christmas	Attolite	Solo & Chorus	Webbe
8	Circumcision	Tui sunt cœli	Ten. So. & Chor.	A. Sullivan
9	Epiphany	Reges Tharsis	Chorus	W. M. Lutz
10	Sunday within Octave	Jubilate	Chorus	W. M. Lutz
11	Holy Name	Jesu dulcis	Qrtt. & Chorus	Beethoven
12	3rd Sunday after Epiphany	Dextera Domini	Chorus	Schumann
13	Septuagesima Sunday	Bonum est	Solo & Chorus	Benedict
14	Sexagesima Sunday	Perfice	Solo or Chorus	Webbe
15	Quinquagesima Sunday	Super flumina	Soli & Chorus	Webbe
16	1st Sunday in Lent	Ecce nunc tempus	Duet or Chorus	Webbe
17	2nd Sunday in Lent	Preces populi	Chorus	Webbe
18	3rd Sunday in Lent	Justitiæ	Chorus or Qrtt.	Mendelssohn
1	4th Sunday in Lent	Ad te levavi	Bs. Solo or Qrtt.	Webbe
19	Passion Sunday	Stabat Mater	Chorus	Webbe
20	Palm Sunday	Improperium	Chorus	Andrè
21	Easter Sunday (Gradual)	Hæc dies	Chorus or Trio. T.T. & B.	Webbe
22	,, ,, (Offertory)	Victimæ	Chorus	Webbe
23	Low Sunday	Angelus Domini	Chorus	Andrè
24	2nd Sunday after Easter	Deus misereatur	Chorus & Soli.	Webbe
25	3rd Sunday after Easter	Lauda anima	Solo or Chorus	Webbe
10	4th Sunday after Easter	Jubilate	Chorus	W. M. Lutz
26	5th Sunday after Easter	Benedicimus	Duet or Chorus	Webbe
27	Ascension Day	Ascendit Deus	Duet or Chorus	Webbe
28	Sunday within Octave of Ascension Day	Rex Gloriæ	Duet or Chorus	Webbe
29	Whit Sunday (Gradual)	Emitte / Veni sancte spiritus	Trio or Chorus / Duet or Chorus	Webbe / Webbe
30	,, ,, (Offertory)	Confirma hoc Deus	Soli or Chorus	W. M. Lutz
31	Trinity Sunday	Benedictus est	Chorus	W. M. Lutz
32	1st Sunday after Pentecost	Intende voci	Chorus	Andrè
33	Corpus Christi (Gradual)	Lauda Sion	Duet or Chorus	Webbe
34	,, ,, (Offertory)	O sacrum convivium	Solo	Webbe
35	2nd Sunday after Pentecost	Domine convertere	Soli & Chorus	W. M. Lutz
36	3rd Sunday after Pentecost	Protector	Duet	Webbe
37	4th Sunday after Pentecost	Illumina	Solo or Chorus	W. M. Lutz
38	St Peter and St Paul	Roma felix	Duet or Chorus	Webbe
39	5th Sunday after Pentecost	Audi hymnum	Solo & Chorus	Webbe
14	6th Sunday after Pentecost	Perfice	Solo or Chorus	Webbe
40	7th Sunday after Pentecost	Sicut in holocaustis	Qrtt. or Chorus	Mozart
41	8th Sunday after Pentecost	Tu es gloria	Bass Solo	Webbe
18	9th Sunday after Pentecost	Justitiæ	Chorus or Qrtt.	Mendelssohn
1	10th Sunday after Pentecost	Ad te levavi	Solo or Quartett	Webbe
42	11th Sunday after Pentecost	Exurgat Deus	Chorus	Webbe
43	Assumption	Assumpta est	Chorus	Neukom
44	12th Sunday after Pentecost	Benedicam	Chorus	Eybler
45	13th Sunday after Pentecost	In te speravi	T. So. (& Chor. ad lib.)	W. M. Lutz
36	14th Sunday after Pentecost	Protector	Duet	Webbe
13	15th Sunday after Pentecost	Bonum est	Solo or Chorus	Benedict
46	16th Sunday after Pentecost	Domine in auxilium	Soli & Chorus	W. M. Lutz
47	17th Sunday after Pentecost	Oravi	Soli & Chorus	Dr Crookal
48	18th Sunday after Pentecost	Timebunt	Chorus	W. M. Lutz
49	19th Sunday after Pentecost	Si ambulavero	Bs. Solo (Chor. ad lib.)	W. M. Lutz
15	20th Sunday after Pentecost	Super flumina	Chorus	Webbe
50	21st Sunday after Pentecost	Vir erat hus	Chorus	W. M. Lutz
51	22nd Sunday after Pentecost	Recordare	Solo & Chorus	Führer
52	All Saints (Gradual)	Tibi omnes angeli	Chorus	Webbe
53	,, (Offertory)	Justorum	Solo	Webbe
54	23rd Sunday after Pentecost	Hæc dicit Dominus	Soli & Chorus	Webbe
55	Nativity	Beata	Chorus	W. M. Lutz
56	Holy Name	Ave Maria	Solo	Cherubini
57	Seven Dolors	Stabat Mater	Chorus	Gregorian
4	Rosary	Ave Maria	Solo or Chorus	W. M. Lutz
55	Maternity	Beata	Chorus	W. M. Lutz
58	Purity	Succurre miseris	Duet & Chorus	Webbe
4	Patronage	Ave Maria	Solo or Chorus	W. M. Lutz
59	Confessor	Ecce sacerdos	Duet	Webbe
60	Martyrs	Qui seminant	Duet & Chorus	Webbe
61	One Martyr	Justus ut palma	Qrtt. or Chorus	W. M. Lutz
62	Apostles	Gloria et honore	Qrtt. or Chorus	W. M. Lutz
63	Virgins and Holy Women	Diffusa	Qrtt. or Chorus	W. M. Lutz
64		Asperges	Chorus	Gregorian
65	In Paschal time	Vidi aquam	Duet or Chorus	Webbe
66	Prayer for the Queen	Domine salvum fac	Chorus	Martini

APPENDIX.

67	Magnificat	Soli & Chor.	Webbe
68	Alma (from 1st Sunday in Advent till the Purification)	Solo & Chor.	Webbe
69	Ave Regina (from the Purification till Maunday Thursday)	Soli & Chor.	Webbe
70	Regina Cœli (from Holy Saturday till Trinity Eve)	Soli & Chor.	Webbe
71	Salve Regina (from Trinity Eve till Advent)	Soli & Chor.	Webbe
72	O Salutaris	Chorus	Webbe
73	O sacrum convivium	Dt. or Chor.	Webbe
74	Tantum ergo	Chorus	Webbe

Also, Just Published,

SHORT MASSES FOR SMALL CHOIRS.

EDITED BY SIR J. BENEDICT.

A COLLECTION OF MASSES, FOR ONE, TWO, THREE, AND FOUR VOICES,

WITH ORGAN ACCOMPANIMENTS.

Price Sixpence each, or in One Volume, cloth, price 5s.

CONTENTS.

1	Webbe's Mass	(3 voices)	in A.
2	,, ,,	,,	in D.
3	,, ,,	,,	in B flat.
4	,, ,,	,,	in F.
5	,, ,,	,,	in C.
6	,, ,,	,,	in D minor.
7	Webbe's Mass	(4 voices)	in G.
8	Missa de Angelis	(Unison)	in D.
9	Dumont's Mass	,,	in D minor.
10	Missa in Dominicis diebus per annum	,,	in D minor.
11	Missa pro defunctis	,,	in F.
12	Weasley's Gregorian Mass	(4 voices)	in G.

These Masses are published in a cheap form, in order to meet a growing demand for simple, melodious, harmonized music. In the cases where the register has been found too high for boys' voices, supplementary notes have been inserted.

They are thus adapted as well for Chancel Choirs, as for those in which the Soprano parts are taken by female voices.

LONDON: BOOSEY & CO., 295, REGENT STREET, W.

Printed by HENDERSON, RAIT, AND FENTON, at No. 69, Marylebone Lane, Oxford Street, in the Parish of Marylebone, in the County of Middlesex.
Published by WILLIAM DUNCAN DAVISON, at the Office, 244, Regent Street, Saturday, July 3, 1875.

Digitized by Google

The Musical World.

(REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.)

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST, 20s. PER ANNUM,
Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to DUNCAN DAVISON & CO., 244, Regent Street, London, W.

VOL. 53—No. 28. SATURDAY, JULY 10, 1875. PRICE { 4d. Unstamped. 5d. Stamped.

HER MAJESTY'S OPERA, THEATRE ROYAL, DRURY LANE.

Madame Christine Nilsson.

THIS EVENING (SATURDAY), July 10th, will be performed (for the last time this season), "FAUST." Faust, Signor Campanini (his first appearance in that character this season); Mephistophiles, Signor Castelmary (his first appearance in that character this season); Valentino, Signor De Reschi; Wagner, Signor Costa; Siebel, Mdme Trebelli-Bettini; Marta, Mdlle Banermeister; and Margherita, Mdme Christine Nilsson. Director of the Music and Conductor—Sir Michael Costa.

Extra Night.

On MONDAY next, July 12, "LOHENGRIN." Elsa di Brabante, Mdme Christine Nilsson; Lohengrin, Signor Campanini; Federico di Telramondo, Signor Galassi; Enrico, Herr Behrens; Araldo, Signor Costa; and Ortruda, Mdlle Tietjens.

Special Notice.

On the occasion of the performance of "Lohengrin," the Opera commences at Eight o'clock precisely.

TUESDAY next, July 13 (sixth appearance of Mdlle Marguerite Chapuy), "IL BARBIERE DI SIVIGLIA." Il Conte Almaviva, Signor Brignoli; Figaro, Signor De Reschi; Il Dottore Bartolo, Signor Zoboli; Don Basilio, Signor Costa; Fiorello, Signor Rinaldini; Berta, Mdlle Bauermeister; and Rosina, Mdlle Marguerite Chapuy (her third appearance in that character and her sixth appearance in England).

On THURSDAY next, July 15—Extra Night—will be presented (for the first time this season), MOZART'S Opera, "IL DON GIOVANNI." Donna Elvira, Mdme Christine Nilsson; Don Ottavio, Signor Gillandi; Leporello, Herr Behrens; Don Giovanni, Signor De Reschi; Masetto, Signor Zoboli; Il Commendatore, Signor Costa; Zerlina, Mdlle Elena Varesi (her first appearance in that character); and Donna Anna, Mdlle Tietjens.

SATURDAY, July 17, Seventh appearance of Mdlle Marguerite Chapuy.

Doors open at Eight o'clock. To commence at Half-past Eight, except on the occasion of the performance of "Lohengrin" on Monday next, July 12, when the Opera will commence at Eight o'clock. Amphitheatre stalls, 7s. and 5s.; amphitheatre, 2s. Box-office open daily from Ten till Five, under the direction of Mr Bailey.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—This Day (SATURDAY), LAST DAY of NATIONAL MUSIC MEETINGS and GARDEN FETE. Distribution of Prizes by Mdme LIND-GOLDSCHMIDT. Concert by Winners of Prizes at the Competitions. Band of the Scots Fusilier Guards for Promenade on the Lawns. Admission to Palace, Half-a-Crown, or by Guinea Season Ticket.

MISS CLINTON FYNES' MATINÉE MUSICALE, at her Residence, 39, Baker Street, Portman Square, MONDAY, July 12th, at Three o'clock. Vocalists—Mesdames Edith Wynne, Catherine Arnold; Mr Nelson Varley. Instrumentalists: Violin—Mr Carrodus, Mdme Varley-Liebe. Harp—Mr John Thomas. Violoncello—Herr Theodore Liebe. Pianoforte—Miss Clinton Fynes. Conductors—Messrs Cowen, Berger, and King Hall. Tickets, 10s. 6d. each; at Messrs Moutrie, 55, Baker Street, W.; and of Miss CLINTON FYNES, 39, Baker Street, Portman Square.

MDLLE E. TATE has the honour to announce that her CONCERT will take place on SATURDAY Evening, 24th July, 1875, at ST GEORGE'S HALL, Langham Place, Regent Street. (Mdlle E. TATE, who, by command of Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen, had the honour recently to perform at Osborne, was presented by H.R.H. the Princess Beatrice with a valuable Watch ornamented with diamonds.) Vocalists—Mdlle Victoria Bunsen, Mdlle Marie Duval, Mdme May Bolt; Mr Burleigh Tessaman, Herr G. Werrenrath, Mr Wadmore. Instrumentalists: Pianoforte—Mdlle E. Tate and Mdlle Felicia Bunsen. Violin—Herr Wiener. Violoncello—Herr Daubert. Conductors—Mr Sidney Naylor, Herr Ganz, and Herr Schuberth. Stalls, 10s. 6d.; reserved seats, 5s.; balcony, 2s. 6d.; admission, One Shilling. Tickets to be had of Stanley Lucas, Weber & Co., 84, New Bond Street; at all the principal Musicsellers; and of Mdlle E. TATE, 62, Fleming Road, Kennington Park. Concert to commence at Eight; carriages may be ordered for Ten o'clock. The Grand Pianoforte from Messrs Erard's.

MISS LILLIE ALBRECHT will play THALBERG'S ANDANTE in D flat, Op. 36, at Mdme Louise Liebhart's Matinée Musicale, on Wednesday next, July 14th.

"LORELY."

MISS AMY STEWART will play SAUERBREY'S "LORELY" (Transcription) at Miss Emily Faithful's Readings, at the Egyptian Hall, next week.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA, COVENT GARDEN.

THIS EVENING (SATURDAY), July 10th, GOUNOD'S Opera, "ROMEO E GIULIETTA." Mdme Adelina Patti, Mdlle Bianchi; Signori Graziani, Cotogni, Bagagiolo, Sabater, Tagliafico, Capponi, and Nicolini.

Last Week of the Season.

MONDAY next, July 12, VERDI'S Opera, "RIGOLETTO." Mdlles Albani, Scalchi; Signori Graziani, Tagliafico, Fallar, and Carpi.

TUESDAY next, July 13, MEYERBEER'S Grand Opera, "L'ETOILE DU NORD." On this occasion the Opera will commence at Eight o'clock, instead of Half-past. Mdme Adelina Patti, Mdlles Smeroschi, Cottino, Ghiotti; Signori Naudin, Ciampi, Sabater, Capponi, Tagliafico, and M. Faure.

WEDNESDAY next, July 13 (Benefit of Mdlle Zaré Thalberg), MOZART'S Opera, "DON GIOVANNI." Mdlle Zaré Thalberg, Mdme Vilda, Mdlle D'Angeri; Signori Marini, Ciampi, Tagliafico, Capponi, and M. Maurel.

THURSDAY next, July 15 (Benefit of Mdme Adelina Patti), VERDI'S Opera, "LA TRAVIATA." Mdme Adelina Patti, Mdlle Cottino; Signori Graziani, Tagliafico, and Naudin.

FRIDAY next, July 16 (Benefit of Mdlle Albani), GOUNOD'S Opera, "FAUST E MARGHERITA." Mdlles Albani, Scalchi; M. Faure, M. Maurel, Signori Tagliafico and Nicolini.

SATURDAY next, July 17 (Last Night of the Season), MEYERBEER'S Opera, "L'ETOILE DU NORD." Cast as above. On this occasion the Opera will commence at Eight o'clock, instead of Half-past. Conductors—Signori Vianesi and Bevignani.

The Opera commences at Half-past Eight.

The Box Office, under the portico of the Theatre, is open from Ten to Five. Boxes from £2 12s. 6d. to £6 6s.; stalls, £1 1s.; pit tickets, 7s.; amphitheatre stalls, 10s. 6d. and 5s.; amphitheatre, 2s. 6d.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Under the immediate Patronage of
Her Most Gracious Majesty the QUEEN.
His Royal Highness the Prince of WALES.
Her Royal Highness the Princess of WALES.
His Royal Highness the Duke of EDINBURGH.
Her Royal Highness the Princess CHRISTIAN.
His Royal Highness the Duke of CAMBRIDGE.
Her Royal Highness the Duchess of TECK.
His Serene Highness the Duke of TECK.
and
His Royal Highness the Prince CHRISTIAN.

President—The Right Hon. The Earl of DUDLEY.

Principal—Professor MACFARREN, Mus. D. Cantab.

The ANNUAL PRIZE CONCERT will take place at ST JAMES'S HALL, on WEDNESDAY Morning, the 21st inst., at Two o'clock, on which occasion H.R.H. the Princess Louise (Marchioness of Lorne) has most kindly consented to present the Prizes.

There will be a complete Band and Chorus, formed by the Professors and the late and present Students of the Academy. Conductor—Mr WALTER MACFARREN.

Admission, One Shilling. Stalls, 5s.; family tickets, to admit four persons, 16s.; balcony, 2s. 6d.; to be had at the Musicsellers; at St James's Hall; and at the Academy.

By Order, JOHN GILL, Secretary.

Royal Academy of Music,
4, Tenterden Street, Hanover Square.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.—Her Royal Highness the Princess LOUISE (Marchioness of LORNE) has most kindly consented to present the PRIZES at the Annual Concert, on Wednesday, the 21st inst.

By Order, JOHN GILL, Secretary.

TRAVELLER.

TRAVELLER WANTED, for a MUSIC PUBLISHER.
Apply, personally, at 3, Great Marlborough Street (First Floor.)

MR PAUL SEMLER (Pianist) begs to announce that he can accept engagements for Balls, Soirées, &c. His repertoire consists of all the celebrated Dance Music of the day, as well as his own compositions. Terms on application, by letter, to be addressed to the care of Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & CO., Foreign Music Warehouse, 244, Regent Street, W.

GEMME D'ANTICHITA.

RACCOLTA DI PEZZI VOCALI.

COMPOSTI DAI PIU CELEBRI

MAESTRI ANTICHI.

This unique Work has been carefully revised, and is now re-issuing in 200 Numbers, selected from the most esteemed Works of Bach, Handel, Beethoven, Spohr, Stradella, Scarlatti, Mozart, Pergolesi, Paesiello, Carissimi, Cimarosa, &c., &c. Edited by Lady Thompson, Macfarren, Wilhelm Ganz, Adolphe Ganz, Callcott, Lucas, Molique, Perugini, &c. The whole carefully revised and edited by JOSIAH PITTMAN. Lists Gratis.

C. LONSDALE'S

Musical Circulating Library,

26, OLD BOND STREET, W.

THE "TALISMAN" CHORUSES.

(IN BALFE'S GRAND OPERA.)

No. 1. Chorus of Arabs.
„ 2. Salve Regina (Trio and Chorus).
„ 3. Draw your Swords (Concerted Morceau).
„ 4. Hours and Hours Roll Slowly on (Chorus of Ladies).
„ 5. Thy Kinswoman Edith (Concerted Morceau).
„ 6. Farewell, my Beloved Edith (Finale to Act 2nd.)
„ 7. A Song to Merrie England. (Part Song—Soprano, Tenor, Alto, and Bass.)
„ 8. Glorious England (Finale).

No collection of Choruses equal in merit to the above has been published for years. The great success with which the "TALISMAN" has been received is sufficient evidence of the beauty of the entire Opera, in which the Choruses form, of course, one of the most effective features.

London: DUFF & STEWART, 147, Oxford Street.

Just Published.

TWO SONGS.

"EVENING IN AUTUMN." Words by R. HARE, Esq. .. price 3s.
(Dedicated to Miss E. KNAPTON.)

"WAITED AND WATCHED." Words by ORLANDO WRIGHT price 3s.
(Dedicated to his friend, W. MAYBRICK, Esq.)

Composed by W. F. BANKS.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

MEDITATIONS FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

By IGNACE GIBSONE.

BOOK III.

(Dedicated to J. W. DAVISON)

Is Just Published, and Contains:—

Pastorale.	In the Highlands.
Les Bergères de Sorrento.	Nuit.
Shepherd Dance.	The Post.

The Book complete, price 10s. 6d.; or each Number separate, 3s.

HUTCHINGS & ROMER, 9, Conduit Street, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

"MY LADY SLEEPS."

SERENADE FOR VOICE AND PIANO.

By IGNACE GIBSONE.

DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

"HOME, SWEET HOME."

TRANSCRIBED FOR THE HARP SOLO.

By CHARLES OBERTHUR.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

VOCAL EXERCISES.

Composed by FRANK MORI.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

N.B.—These Vocal Exercises, as taught by FRANK MORI, are invaluable both to Students and Professors.

BRIGHTON CONCERT AGENTS,

PIANOFORTE AND MUSICSELLERS,

LYON & HALL,

WARWICK MANSION.

TWO DUETS

FOR

TWO PERFORMERS ON ONE PIANOFORTE.

No. 1, DUET IN G. No. 2, DUET IN F MINOR.

Price 3s. each.

Composed by HEINRICH STIEHL.

(Op. 73.)

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"WITH MOONLIGHT BEAMING."

DUET

For Equal Voices.

The Music Composed and Dedicated to

MISS HEGINBOTHAM and MISS MOWER,

By H. KUSTER.

Price 3s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"CHARLIE IS MY DARLING,"

SCOTCH AIR,

AND

PORTUGUESE AIR,

("TO THE BELOVED ONE")

Transcribed for the Pianoforte.

By CHARLES E. STEPHENS.

Price 4s. each.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"OUR DARLING."

SONG,

(in C and in E flat).

The Words by ETTY LOVELL.

The Music by J. HALLETT SHEPPARD.

Price 3s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

NORAH'S MESSAGE.

SUNG BY

MADME ADELINA PATTI

WITH DISTINGUISHED SUCCESS AT

THE FLORAL HALL.

THE POETRY BY

THE LADY JOHN MANNERS.

THE MUSIC BY

SIR JULIUS BENEDICT.

Price 4s.

LONDON:

DUNCAN DAVISON & CO., 244, REGENT STREET.

Digitized by Google

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

Repetitions of Lohengrin, Romeo e Giulietta, Lucia, Fra Diavolo, and Don Giovanni, with a pot-pourri made out of the Africaine, and some of the ballet music from Robert le Diable, for the special edification of the Seyyid of Zanzibar, constituted the programme of last week. As Edgardo, in Lucia, Signor Carpi advanced another step in public opinion, and confirmed the judgment of those amateurs who believe that in him Mr Gye has found that rara avis, a new tenor of capacity. The progress of this young singer will be watched with general interest. As Lohengrin he continues to win approval in a part by no means easy to sustain with credit, and he has now shown himself equally conversant with the music of Verdi and Donizetti. About Mdlle Albani's Lucia it is unnecessary to say more than that it is ripening into that absolute excellence which in each successive assumption she appears more and more likely to attain. In consequence of the indisposition of Mdlle Zaré Thalberg, the part of Zerlina was undertaken by Mdlle Bianchi, one of the most useful and versatile, although one of the youngest artists in the theatre, who undertook it at a very short notice, and acquitted herself in a manner deserving the highest credit.

The operas during the current week have been the Etoile du Nord—with Madame Patti and M. Faure; Lohengrin—8th time; Semiramide; Fidelio—with Mdlle D'Angeri, first time, as Leonora; and Le Nozze di Figaro. Romeo e Giulietta this evening.

HER MAJESTY'S OPERA.

The choice of La Traviata as an opera in which to exhibit the qualifications of a singer unknown to London amateurs may be regarded as doubtful; but on more than one occasion, since Piccolomini first played the part (1856) at Her Majesty's Theatre, under the direction of the late Mr Benjamin Lumley, it has proved fortunate. Such was the case the other night at Mr Mapleson's theatre, when Mdlle Marguerite Chapuy, of the Paris Opéra Comique, made her appearance before us in the character of Violetta. Mdlle Chapuy is a practised singer and an actress of real intelligence. The first notes she had to utter evoked sympathy, and this was extended to her from the beginning till the end. It is rare that one so young succeeds in becoming a mistress of her art; but Mdlle Chapuy is exceptionally gifted. Amateurs, however, are aware of the esteem she enjoys in her own country, where, on the boards of one of the accredited theatres, it is not easy to earn distinction. We are informed that she now for the first time appears in opera of which the Italian language is the medium of expression; and, if this be true, we may compliment her on the success she achieved. From the opening brindisi ("Libiamo, libiamo"), this success was never for a moment doubtful. Mdlle Chapuy might even dispense with the physical cough, which in no sense redeems the character of Violetta from what cannot fail to offend prejudices that the beauty of Verdi's melodies and the dramatic force of his concerted and descriptive pieces are unable completely to set at rest. Verdi, the composer, has elevated a questionable character into a position of questionable interest; and this behoves the representative of his heroine to aid him in that process of purification by music through which he has made the "Dame aux Camelias" more or less acceptable on the operatic stage. Mdlle Chapuy, in her assumption, exhibits the characteristics of so thorough a lady that we feel in no way disposed to inquire about Violetta's antecedents; nor are we surprised at the spell she exercises over Alfredo, or at the sympathy innately felt towards her by Alfredo's father—personages, nevertheless, the younger especially, for whom little genuine interest can be entertained. Mdlle Chapuy, in her general delineation, somewhat resembles the late Madame Bosio. Theirs may not be the absolutely correct version; but it is surely the most agreeable because the least suggestive. As a singer, Mdlle Chapuy possesses advantages the value of which are evident at once. Her voice is strong and resonant, and, if occasionally rebellious, when she has to express emotion, is quite at her command. This was shown particularly in the slow movement, "Ah! fors' è lui," and the cabaletta, "Sempre libera degg'io," its brilliant sequel, which were entirely appreciated by the audience, who called forward Mdlle Chapuy, and her companion, M. Capoul—than whom a more earnest and impassioned Alfredo, Frenchman though he be, has rarely been seen on the Italian boards. In the subsequent scenes, both with Alfredo and Germont the elder (Signor Galassi), Mdlle Chapuy convincingly displayed her ability both as singer and actress. Here the dramatic side of Violetta becomes prominent; and here Mdlle Chapuy created the liveliest impression. In the final act—when the sudden excitement created by the unexpected return of Alfredo is to the unhappy lady but as the last flicker of an expiring lamp, Mdlle Chapuy gave signs of real dramatic instinct; though she comparatively fails to express the words—

"E ritornato all' amor mio,
"Digle che vivere ancor vogl'io"— with that outburst of seemingly uncontrollable passion which used to be the most striking feature in the performance of the lady who introduced Violetta to an English public. To sum up, however, Mdlle Chapuy obtained a thoroughly legitimate success. On Saturday night, as Rosina, in the Barbiere di Siviglia, her second part, she was equally well received, but here she had formidable comparisons to contend with. To the florid music of Rossini her voice lends itself with hardly the same facility as to the declamatory strains of Verdi. She acquitted herself, nevertheless, throughout to the satisfaction of amateurs; was encored in the cabaletta of "Una voce poco fa;" greatly and deservedly applauded in the duet with Figaro, "Dunque io son" (embellished in a manner that would have astonished Rossini himself); again encored in the characteristic "Aragonese" from Auber's Domino Noir, introduced in the "Lesson-scene"—something to perplex Dr Bartolo far more than the traditional variations on Rode's air, or the equally apposite "Nel cor piu" of Paesiello; and acted the character throughout with equal spirit and intelligence. That Mdlle Chapuy is an artist of no ordinary calibre was sufficiently proved by the two assumptions to which we have made reference. The general performance of the Barbiere was scarcely up to the mark to which we are accustomed at Her Majesty's Opera. Signor Zoboli's Bartolo, however, was more than creditable; and Mdme Demeric-Lablache's Bertha one of the very best we remember. Then we must take into account the orchestra. No conductor knows better how to make up for shortcomings on one side the foot-lamps than Sir Michael Costa, with his splendid cohort of instrumentalists on the other. About the welcome revival of Mignon, the serio-comic masterpiece of M. Ambroise Thomas, with Mdme Christine Nilsson as the heroine, we must speak in another notice.

The operas for the current week have been La Traviata, Lohengrin, and the Barbiere. Faust, with Mdme Christine Nilsson as Marguerite, is announced for this evening.

VIENNA.

(From our Correspondent.)

The Emperor has conferred the Commander's Cross of the Francis Joseph Order, with the Star, on Sig. Verdi. Sig. Ricordi, the well-known musical publisher of Milan, has received the Chevalier's Cross of the same Order, and Herr Jauner, the Manager of the Imperial Operahouse, has been decorated by the King of Italy. All these marks of distinction were bestowed in connection with the performance of Aida and the Manzoni Requiem.

CARLSBAD (Bohemia).—The excellent performances of our Curcapelle, under the direction of Herr A. Labitzky, are, as usual, a source of great attraction and pleasure to our numerous visitors. Among the more remarkable concerts we must point out the one given for the benefit of the Orchestra Pension Fund, the programme of which contained Mendelssohn's Overture, Die Hochzeit des Camacho; March from L'Africaine; Overture to Santa Chiara, by H.R.H. the Duke of Saxe-Coburg; Concertino, for harp and orchestra, by C. Oberthür (brilliantly played by Herr K. Jirmus, who this year is engaged in place of Mdlle Dubez, now at the Russian Private Capelle of Castle Trevano, in Dessin): also a Violoncello Concerto, by Goltermann (played by Herr A. Lang). At another concert we had the Prelude to Wagner's Meistersingers; also C. Oberthür's "Virgo Maria," arranged for full orchestra, played for the first time, and so favourably received that it has been repeated several times. An Overture, by Dupont, to Bianka and Siffredi, had also success.

Digitized by Google

Tristan and Isolde.

(From a Correspondent.)

Now that Wagner's most popular opera has been given both at Her Majesty's and at Covent Garden, and that the English musical public, if not converted to the theories put forward by the great German composer, has at least shown a very unmistakable interest in his music, a description of the performance here last week of Tristan and Isolde—a work which has hitherto been performed only at Munich and Weimar—may not be unwelcome. Weimar, a quiet, unpretending Residency Town, of some 16,000 inhabitants, has many artistic associations, both past and present, which cannot fail to interest the passing traveller. For more than half a century it was the home of all that is brightest in Germany's literature; Schiller, Göthe, Wieland, and Herder all lived here, and at every turn and corner one finds some recollection, some memento of those great names. The Town, too, has long been renowned for the energy with which it has thrown itself, heart and soul, into the study of Wagner's music. Liszt, one of the greatest supporters of the new school, and a friend of Wagner, was formerly Capellmeister here; and, though he has resigned that post, he still passes his summers in a house, the "Hof-gärtnerei" just outside the town, which has been put at his disposition by the Grand Duke. Ably seconded by his successor in office, Herr E. Lassen, he has been enabled to plant the "music of the future" more firmly in Weimar than perhaps anywhere else in North Germany. The libretto of Tristan was written by Wagner in 1857, when in his 45th year; he composed the music shortly afterwards at Venice. The composer explains that it was the desire to produce something which, by reason of its less ambitious proportions, would enable him to hear once more a production of his own, that induced him to pause in the elaboration of Die Nibelungen, and turn his attention for a time to a shorter work—"a wish which the encouraging reception in Germany of older works seemed to place within my grasp."

The story of Tristan and Isolde—one of the most wide-spread of the Celtic Sagas—is found in full in the poem of Gottfried von Strasburgh ("Meister Gottfried" as he is usually designated) the contemporary of Wagner's other heroes, Wolfram and Walther von der Vogelweide, who lived about the beginning of the 13th century. Gottfried was, next to Wolfram, the greatest Epic writer of the Middle Ages. A deep perception of the beautiful, a thorough mastery of the human character, a clear and easy diction, are the marked characteristics of his writings. None has drawn so vividly as he the daily life of the Knights of old; how they lived, and fought, and loved, and died. As in Wolfram's Parcival, Gottfried opens his poem with the history of the hero's parents—Riwaleie, King of Parmenia, and Blanchefleur, sister of King Marke of Cornwall—of their loves and adventures of Tristan's birth, and his parents' death; how he was subsequently captured, when but 14 years old, by Norwegian pirates who, frightened by a storm, landed the child on the Cornish coast, and how his kinship with King Marke was eventually discovered. Of all this, however, there is no mention in the opera. Tristan had been living some years at the Court of his uncle King Marke, when the country was thrown into consternation by the arrival of Morold, brother-in-law of Gurman, King of Ireland, who demanded that thirty noble boys, chosen by lot, should be given over to him as a tribute to the Suzerain Irish Court. Tristan offers to fight the mighty Irishman in single combat, and, though severely wounded, is enabled, by the help of "Gott, Recht, and hoher Muth," to slay Morold, and release his countrymen from that dreaded obligation. All Cornwall, however, cannot find the antidote to heal the poisoned wound. This is only known to Morold's sister, the Queen of Ireland; and, in despair, Tristan determines at last to run the risk, and seek a cure at the hands of his victim's sister. The Queen takes pity on the lone stranger, who arrives at her Court in disguise, and not only undertakes to heal his wound, but intrusts to his care the education of the beautiful Isolde. He succeeds in his task, and becomes so beloved at the Irish Court that it is with difficulty he is allowed to depart and re-visit once more his boyhood's home. On his arrival in Cornwall he finds the chieftains urging King Marke to take to himself a wife. Tristan, remembering his late pupil, the loveliest maiden of her age, begs of his uncle to allow him to return to Ireland and make her, in the King's name, an offer of marriage. Marke, after much hesitation, at last consents, and Tristan sets sail again to Ireland. Soon after his arrival an accident reveals to Isolde that her former tutor is none other than the slayer of her uncle Morold. Tristan upon this admits the truth, and reveals the real object of his mission. In spite of the girl's repugnance to the match and to "Kornwalls müden König," her parents consent, and Isolde leaves for her new home, in despair at her fate and indignant with Tristan, to whom she attributes all her misfortunes. We now approach the catastrophe of the poem. Forgetful of their former antagonism, Tristan and Isolde give themselves up to the most passionate love, brought about by the all-powerful influence of the Minnetrank, or love-potion—an elixir which makes them the victims of an inevitable fatality.

Act I. of the opera opens, on board ship, with the journey of the bride to Cornwall. Isolde, first bemoaning her fate, relates the above story to her attendant, Brangäne, and then, violently upbraiding Tristan for his cruel conduct, invites him to join with her in drinking a death-potion. Brangäne hands them instead the Minnetrank, which immediately works its effect; and the last scene of the act depicts the despair of the lovers at their separation when King Marke arrives on board to lead away his bride to her future home. In the following act the scene is laid in the garden of King Marke's castle; the marriage ceremony has been performed, and Isolde is Queen of Cornwall. Marke, a prey to suspicions, but yet too devoted to accuse his wife, starts off on a hunting party, attended by all his court, and the lovers arrange a meeting that very night in the garden. The famous love-scene follows; the pair, blinded by the delirium of passion, are heedless of all the risk they run. In spite of Brangäne's oft-repeated warnings they linger on, unconscious of all save their loves and sorrows, and are rudely awakened by the entry of King Marke at break of day. Urged on by Melot, a jealous courtier, the King has returned earlier than expected, and discovers but too plainly the treachery of the one and the infidelity of the other. Tristan leaves the court of his uncle branded as a traitor, a disgraced and ruined man. In the third and last act the scene is laid in the garden of Tristan's castle, on the coast of Brittany. As the curtain rises, Tristan is seen, extended on a couch, sleeping, as it were, the sleep of death, and tended by the faithful Kurwenal, who, in all his wanderings, has never left his master's side. A shepherd stands on the look-out, awaiting the first sign of a ship from Cornwall, to bring the glad tidings to his suffering lord. Tristan gradually recovers consciousness, and realises his fate and position; his agitation momentarily increases; in vain does Kurwenal constantly ask news of the herdsman, and scan the horizon himself, from time to time, in search of the expected sail. At last, after a painful period of suspense, a ship is seen bearing down from the north. She enters the port, and Isolde is seen standing on the deck. Tristan, in an agony of impatience, raises himself from his bed of sickness, and totters towards the castle gate; but the effort and excitement are too much for him; his last hour has come, and he has but strength to murmur once more the beloved name Isolde, to fall into her arms and die. The despair and grief of the unhappy queen at this terrible blow is interrupted by the arrival of a second ship, with King Marke, Melot, and Brangäne on board. The last has in the meantime explained to the King how she had been the cause of all this sorrow, by having given the lovers the all-potent elixir, and he immediately sets sail to follow them, and grant them his pardon and forgiveness. Kurwenal refuses to admit the royal party within the castle; a struggle ensues, in which retributive justice avenges the betrayal of Tristan by the death of Melot at the hands of Kurwenal, who is himself afterwards slain by the King's attendants. When at length Marke enters the castle, he hastens to announce his message of reconciliation and peace. It is too late; he comes but to find Tristan dead and Isolde lying insensible on the lifeless body of her lover.

Such is Tristan's history as it appears in Wagner's libretto—three chapters, as it were, out of the life of Meister Gottfried's hero. The ill-fated love of the unhappy pair is the one theme of the opera, and the interest of the plot is entirely concentrated on the issue of that love. The other characters are few in number, and the subordinate parts do little more than unfold the story of the drama. The ship's crew or attendant knights occasionally utter a few words, but of actual chorus there is no vestige throughout the whole work. The very first bars of the overture introduce us to the "love phrase," expressive of a longing, eager, unsatisfied desire, and the same idea continually recurs as the opera proceeds. In the introduction to, and at the end of the first scene of Act II., the same notion—this craving after an absent love—is carried out by the constant repetition of the ascending passage ending on a minor 9th; while the "hunting phrase," heard sometimes on the stage, sometimes in the orchestra, reveals the ever-present fear of Brangäne, lest the King should return and discover Isolde's infidelity. This whole passage is a marvel of descriptive music-painting, if I may be allowed to use the word. Later on in the same act, the duet in four flats (three-four time), with its syncopated rhythm and highly original accompaniment, followed by a series of arpeggio chords, as Tristan and Isolde sink, lost in a dream of love, into each other's arms, is, perhaps, the most beautiful passage in the whole opera. In Act III. the treatment of the shepherd's horn, played on the stage, is wonderfully worked out; the long minor unaccompanied solo at the beginning of the first scene; the perpetual recurrence of the horn in minor tone so long as the watchman fails to see the expected sail; and, at last, the sudden burst into a joyous major as the ship heaves in sight; all this is admirably dramatic and picturesque. Properly to appreciate the opera, a certain amount of instruction in Wagner's dramatic ideas is no doubt necessary, and, above all, a thorough knowledge of the feelings he aims at representing on the stage—in other words, of the story of the work. The opera consists almost entirely of declamatory recitative; no stage vocalisation is anywhere permitted; no chorus, not even an air—employing the term in its usually accepted sense as the equivalent for rhythmical melody—is to be found; and, as in all Wagner's operas, the musical interest is concentrated chiefly on the wonderfully elaborate and rich accompaniment of the orchestra.

Digitized by Google

Before ending, I must add a few words of praise as to the execution of the work. Nothing could have been better than the singing and acting of Herr and Frau Vogl, of the Royal Opera of Munich; both real artists, they threw themselves thoroughly into their parts, the most difficult, perhaps, that even Wagner has ever written, and the result was a faultless impersonation of the two principal parts. Herr Milde (barytone), who took the part of Kurwenal, was thoroughly at home in his rôle, and succeeded in awakening in the audience a keen sympathy for the brave and faithful attendant. Herr Hennig (bass), as King Marke, and Fräulein Dotte (soprano) as Brangäne, made the most of two somewhat ungrateful parts. Lastly, the orchestra, though small, was well in hand, and left nothing to be desired. The tempos were faultless throughout, and their conductor's reading of Wagner's music came as near to perfection as possible. The house was crowded on both nights. The Queen of Würtemberg and the Grand-ducal Family were present, and the Wagner world was well-represented by a crowd of enthusiastic admirers, among whom may be mentioned the Abbé Liszt and Madame Wagner. The vast majority of the audience evidently knew the opera thoroughly before; no applause was tolerated for a moment during the acts; but, the curtain once down, the long-repressed enthusiasm broke out, and the Vogls were greeted with rounds of well-earned applause, such as are seldom heard in German theatres. I have only to add that the scenery and appointments are good, the acoustic properties of the theatre excellent, and the grouping of the sailors, and especially of the tableau in the last act, cleverly and effectively arranged.

BRUSSELS.

(From a Correspondent.)

Among the artists re-engaged at the Théâtre Royal de la Monnaie may be mentioned Mdlles Hamaekers, Reine, MM. Warot, Devoyod, and Echetto. Mdlle Priola is replaced by Mdlle Derivis. The season will be inaugurated, in all probability, by Halévy's Reine de Chypre. Among the other operas named as selected for performance are Gounod's Mireille, Les Huguenots, and Robert le Diable.

Leopold II. te Mechelen, a cantata—with Flemish text—composed by M. Gustave Van Hoey, Director of the Academy of Music at Mechlin, was recently performed. The King was present.

RICHARD WAGNER, AND HIS RING OF THE NIBLUNG.

(From the "New Quarterly Magazine.")

(Continued from page 449.)

In connection with these considerations, I will add a few remarks about the original sources of Wagner's poem, and about the way in which he has remodelled the old story for his dramatic purposes. The oldest Teutonic traditions of national gods and heroes contained in popular tales and songs were, at an early date, collected by the priests and scholars of that branch of the great nation which had settled in Iceland. The noble zeal shown in preserving pagan traditions does great honour to the wisdom of the Christian priests of that island, who, differing in this from the intolerant destructiveness of their brethren in most other countries, carefully preserved every trace of the early history of their nation. The two most important collections of Sagas in Iceland are the two Eddas, i.e., "great-grandmothers," a name applied to them, most likely, owing to their antiquity. The elder Edda, written in alliterative verse, is said to have been composed by "Sarmundr the Wise," who died in 1133; the younger, or Snorra-Edda, a prose-tale of similar contents, is conjecturally ascribed to Snorra Sturluson, a priest who lived in Iceland from 1178 to 1241. Besides these I mention the Saga of the Volsungs as bearing on the subject of Wagner's dramas. The same stories, which thus became fixed in Iceland, retained a precarious existence in the floating traditions of wandering poets and singers in Germany. Now and then greater or lesser parts of these lays were written down, or even translated into Latin, by the monks; but this was never done in as systematic a manner as in Iceland, the Christian collectors endeavouring, moreover, frequently to efface the traces of pagan mythology from their versions. Hence the scanty remains of mythological lore in the old German language. But in another respect Germany has well deserved of our story by fixing it locally, and connecting it with its most beautiful river, the Rhine. From the Rhine Alberich steals the fatal gold, and to its waves it must be restored before the whole tale is told, and gods and men may rest from their troubles. About the end of the twelfth century, that is during the highest bloom of the chivalrous epic in Germany, the popular songs relating to our story were collected in the form of a continued narrative, known as the Niblungen-Lied—how and by whom remains at the present day a subject of internecine feud amongst the different schools of German philologists. In this poem, or collection of poems, the story appears entirely divested of its mythical character, and intermixed to a great extent with local traditions and later historical events.

In all essentials Wagner has justly preferred the pure Icelandic sources to the mixed versions of later ages, changing, however, the Icelandic names for their German equivalents—such as Odin for Wotan, Sigurd for Siegfried, and his mother, Hiordys, for Sieglinde. In a general way, it may be affirmed that the incidents of Wagner's drama also occur in the Icelandic Sagas; only the way in which these incidents are connected with each other, and condensed into a dramatic organism, as also the deep transcendent meaning which is imparted to them, betray the hand of the great modern poet. One example of Wagner's mode of proceeding must suffice us here. The chief compounds of the subject of Rheingold are, as the reader will remember, the building of Wallhall by the giants; their quarrel with the gods about the payment; their abduction of the goddess of youth, and the robbing of the gold by the gods to pay the ransom. Every one of these incidents occurs in either of the Eddas, but all in separate tales, without any connecting link amongst them. The stupid giants are cheated by the gods in a manner not concerning us here; the latter take the gold from Andwari, the dwarf, to win back their own liberty. The stones, indeed, lie there like costly jewels, waiting for the artificer's hand to join them together to a diadem of matchless beauty. This task of combining the disjecta membra of a deep though disturbed tradition, and of dramatically enforcing their half-forgotten, if ever consciously felt, meaning, our poet has fulfilled in a manner which displays no less reverence for the spirit of his original, than power of recasting it in his individual mould.

(To be continued.)

Digitized by Google

SALVINI.

(From the "Saturday Programme.")

At the commencement of the London season of the year 1875, comparatively very few Englishmen had even heard of Tommaso Salvini. But before the curtain falls he is declared to be the event of the year, the "lion" of London; his name is on everyone's lips: he has galvanized society with a taste for art; he has filled Drury Lane at all his performances: and those who have not seen this famous actor, after all that has been said and written about him, may be put down amongst the crowd of hopeless Philistines, on whom all art influence and good taste are wasted. It must be distinctly remembered that Signor Salvini arrived in this country preceded by no noise or advance guard of puffery. He was preceded by that best of all advertisements, the esteem and gratitude of those who had seen him act in other countries. His first audience consisted mainly of travellers who were superior to the insular ignorance of their fellow-countrymen, some of whom had seen him act on the continent, whilst others had caught the sound of his fame, which reached our shores from Italy, Spain, and America. The success of that first performance of Othello was so great that there was no resisting it. You could read it in the faces of the audience, and detect it in the excited voices of such as issued from the theatre. This is the way to affect an audience. This is how we detect the difference between the true and spurious metal. What need of posters? What necessity for advertisements? Of what value the publication of columns of laudatory criticisms from the newspapers of the world, when all the thousands, who had seen him, bore to their homes a record of his fame, and became critics and Shaksperian students at the touch of his inspiration? Those who understand the English people, and have studied that curious "caste" known as society, will not have been prepared for such a thorough revolution. A Sultan may come and turn the heads of the people; a Shah of Persia may arrive covered with diamonds and emeralds; an Emperor or so may ride through the streets, and the English people will turn out of their houses, decorate their balconies, and, possibly, throw up their caps. One can quite understand that our holidays are few and our opportunities for excitement scanty. But Signor Salvini, in his way, is as conspicuous a star in the history of our London seasons as any of the Sultans, Shahs, or Emperors who have preceded him. He has done far more extraordinary things. He has broken the ice of prejudice, he has undermined the fortress of pride, and he has blown up the cant which has hidden the best dramatic art from the people. The prejudice which, with one breath, denies that any dramatic talent exists in this country, and with the next argues that it cannot be alive elsewhere—the cold, indifferent, cynical tone of a half-educated society—the prejudices of actors and professors of art, all are broken down by the genius of Salvini. It is genius, and nothing else, which can bring back the highest intelligence to the play-house, which can restore the drama to its niche amongst the fine arts, and which could wring out from the assembled dramatic profession one splendid shout of congratulation and approval. For the genius of Salvini has put down its foot, and there it stands unmoved. It has made a mark which can never be effaced. It will stand neither argument nor discussion now. It has rushed along with such a torrent that the strength of this one or that is powerless to resist it. The genius of Salvini is universally declared. There may, perhaps, be lingering in some dark corner a scowling egotist who will cavil at the approval of the art-world in order to air his conceit, and eventually succeed in covering himself with ridicule. At dinner-parties one may yet find some superficial and half-educated lady who passes for being clever because she is contradictory. To deny the genius of Salvini would be the stock-in-trade of such as these. But such mean and miserable exceptions only prove more emphatically the truth of the verdict of the world. Sympathy in opinion is very pleasant, but it would be far preferable to be wrong with the world of art than right with the disputatious mob. Whilst Signor Salvini has ennobled art he has also added strength and dignity to criticism. The very atmosphere of art has been purified by his presence.

(To be continued.)

MUSIC AT BOULOGNE-SUR-MER.

(From a Correspondent.)

M. Lemaitre commenced the direction of the concerts at the Etablissement des Bains and the performances at the Salle Monsigny on June 14th. The chef d'orchestre, M. Bottreau, is not unknown to the Boulonnaise, having been conductor at the theatre four years ago. This season he is chef at both theatre and Etablissement, and a more able one could not be found to fill the two positions. The afternoon concerts, for the future, will be continued daily, from four till five. They are of the usual character—viz., two overtures, an andante movement, a valse, and a fantasia. The orchestra, though not yet quite complete, plays well, under the excellent conductorship of M. Bottreau. The season at the theatre really commences to-morrow (Thursday, July 1st), when Adam's Si j'etais Roi! will be given, to be followed on Saturday by La Favorita. M. Lemaitre decided to give three opera nights with his new troupe, and I think he acted wisely. The first was Halévy's Mousquetaires de la Rèine, on Saturday last. The house was a crowded one, but it had been understood among the new artists that the Boulonnaise were difficult to please; this may, therefore, account for the extreme nervousness of some of the principal singers. Added to this, I think I may not be thought indiscreet in telling a fact which was at that time only known behind the scenes, namely, that two of these, husband and wife, had just received the news from their home at Toulouse, that everything they possessed had been washed away by the late terrible floods in that neighbourhood. I think they had great pluck, and strong hearts, under the above circumstances, to come forward—one as a gay Mousquetaire, the other as a lively dame d'honneur—before what they thought was a very critical audience. Mr Charelli, well known as first tenor at the Opéra Comique, did his utmost, and sang the opening air, "La chasse du Roi," with such taste and zest that he was recalled twice. M. Desuiten, the bass, already known here, was warmly welcomed in the character of the Capitaine. Especially so was his capital acting, and he created a perfect uproar of applause, when he said the words, "Dans le temps de notre bon roi Henri c'etait les generaux qui faisaient la guèrre et les prêtres qui faisaient les processions." Mdlles Emma Nelly and Fage were, as I have stated, both nervous; but, from what one could hear of their voices occasionally, I trust I shall be able to speak favourably of them both. La Juive was given on Sunday with success.

Last night, Martha, où le Marché de Richmond was played, to a poor house. Mdlle Nelly, in the title rôle, sang exceedingly well throughout, but betrayed nervousness at the commencement of Act III., where she comes in alone, at the "lever du rideau." Her rendering, however, of the air of the opera left little to be desired, as it was sung with great accuracy and good taste. She was frequently recalled. M. Charelli's Lionel was perfect; and when he sang "Belle image à mes yeux," with taste, pathos, and accuracy, "he brought down the house."

Mdlle Fage, in the character of Nancy, seemed to have taken heart last night, sang right well, and acted with much spirit, especially at the end of Act I.—the market scene. M. Desuiten, as Plumket, also sang and acted well. Altogether, Martha was a success; and if this be a sample of what M. Lemaitre can put on the boards of the Salle Monsigny all through the season, he will, no doubt, have great success.

The evening concert in the Etablissement Gardens, under the direction of M. F. Lefebvre, have also begun; but 8 till 9 p.m., at this time of the year, is rather too soon to tempt people to sit in a garden so near the sea, however good the orchestra of the Société Musicale may be. Mornings and evenings are still cold, and the latter have been wet during the past week.

June 30, 1875. X. T. R.

Digitized by Google

PIERSON'S JERUSALEM.

By Amicus Patriæ (1852).

(Continued from page 451.)

The three Parts—that is the body of the work—are comprised in the following argument:—

PART I.

Prophetic warnings and denunciations, chiefly from Isaiah and Jeremiah. The Fall of Jerusalem depicted.

PART II.

The Destruction lamented, the Restoration promised.

PART III.

Prophecies concerning the recall of the Jews from all the countries where they are now living in a state of exile. The great battle of Armageddon (in the "Valley of Decision"), which will end in the total defeat of the armies attacking Jerusalem.

The New Jerusalem: the Last Judgment: the Salvation of the Righteous.—Doxology.

These selections are made and combined with the same admirable taste, preserving clearness of general outline, with the most perfect fitness as to musical purposes. No dramatis personæ are indicated, but the whole is so managed by the compiler and composer conjointly, that we are compelled into the right mode of feeling and appreciating it—not as a succession of independent compositions, but as the united voices of prophecy as uttered by lips inspired of God, re-invested with the harmonies of a new language—a language that from time immemorial has exercised its mysterious sway over the human mind, and which in its wondrous versatility becomes the richest expositor of and stimulant to the feelings—aye, even of nations themselves—from the cradle and the baptismal hymn, to the grave and the funeral lament.

I feel the slight analysis of the scheme here given, not alone necessary to the right understanding of this peculiar work, but due to that fine religious feeling and literary taste, which has left us so perfect a memorial of its existence. The oratorio appears, as the late Mr Sancroft Holmes compiled it, with one exception—the introduction of these words into the third part as a quintet:—

"'I heard a voice from heaven, saying: Write, Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord; even so, saith the Spirit, for they rest from their labours, and their works do follow them.'—Rev. xiv. 13. Also, Burial Service in the Book of Common Prayer."

This addition was made soon after his death, as a spontaneous requiem to his friend, by Mr Pierson.

I come now to the second point for consideration, whether the composer has achieved the end made to himself, which I hope I have demonstrated to be a noble one, and for which he was furnished with so noble a basis. All the musical opinions hitherto expressed would warrant an unhesitating affirmative, but as this cannot be proved till the work is heard, I shall adhere to my prescribed course of analysis, believing that Mr Pierson may be safely left to make his own appeal to public opinion from the orchestra.

In music as in literature, there must be almost constant change, either progressive or otherwise, and perhaps the ripening of any one branch of art takes place at that exact period when a school is acknowledged. For instance, Handel brought the oratorio to perfection, and established it at one and the same moment, and both numerous and great have been his scholars. But Handel could not stop the improvements in musical instruments, and the consequent enlargement of the means of expression—the consequent addition both of ideas to musical conception and words to musical language, so to speak, which has since grown out of them. Such inroads upon recognized forms may and do break down the barriers between styles, but they neither destroy what is great of an older date, nor prevent its birth in modern times. The cloudy vastness of Homer was not lessened when succeeded by the mediæval brightness of Dante, and the lasting glories of our own Shakespere. Milton has kept his own sphere undisturbed, though a crowd of successful poets have since both trod in his steps and opened up new paths. Beethoven himself (to come to a musical illustration), while he said of Handel, "Go and learn how to produce such great effects with such restricted means," was multiplying, every time he wrote, the resources in the hands of future musicians, so much so as to displease his master, Haydn, himself again an innovator. The present will have its own poetry and its own poets—its own music and musicians; and the public will do as it ought—disclaim the exclusive ascendancy of any one school or any one train of feelings, and will judge largely and fairly of those who enter the arena to struggle for that crown of which a German author has said, "The gems are too often formed of tears."

Our new composer therefore must be looked upon as the disciple of no particular mode or school. His elementary instruction was obtained from good English masters, his subsequent career has been one of individual study and observation, and now having grasped all the varied resources that the present state of his art places at his command, he comes before his countrymen from a distant land (where his power is already acknowledged) earnestly and fearlessly obeying the promptings of his own spirit, quietly defying the prejudice which, it must be confessed, has long reigned against the English in musical matters, and ready to trust to the fair dealing and sound judgment which, in spite of such prejudice, rarely fails eventually to bestow, through public applause, the just award.

(To be continued.)

ANNA DE BELOCCA.

(From the "Graphic.")

This new "star" in the operatic firmament is of Russian origin. Her father, M. de Bellokh, is an Imperial Councillor of State. There was no necessity whatever for Mdlle Anna to earn her living by any professional pursuit; but from her earliest youth she evinced a disposition for music so marked that, instead of being dissuaded, she was encouraged by those immediately about her, to cultivate that most seductive of all the arts. Born at St Petersburgh on the 4th of January, 1854, Mdlle de Belocca is now in her 22nd year. She began learning music under Mad. Nissen Salaman, in the Russian capital, and afterwards continued her studies in Paris, under Signor Nicolas Lablache (son of "the great Lablache"). Her finishing lessons, however, were undertaken by M. Maurice Strakosch—brother-in-law, and formerly artistic adviser of Adelina Patti. Under the auspices of this professor, Mdlle de Belocca made her début at the Paris Italian Opera (Théâtre Ventadour), last summer, as Rosina, in the Barbiere di Siviglia. Her success was brilliant, and at once acknowledged by the Parisians, whose enthusiasm was not surpassed even by that of the large number of her compatriots who, naturally enough on such an occasion, formed part of the audience. Mdlle de Belocca's next opera in Paris was La Cenerentola (again Rossini), in which she received no less applause; and her third essay was with Semiramide (once more Rossini). In this last, her performance of Arsace, a part which has been the crucial test with so many renowned artists, from Brambilla to Alboni, and from Alboni to Trebelli Bettini, proved her capability to shine in serious as well as in comic opera. Arsace, followed by the last act of the Romeo e Giulietta of Vaccaj, in which she assumed the character of Romeo, at a miscellaneous entertainment for her benefit, put the seal on her Parisian triumphs. The fame of these speedily reached London, and the offer of an engagement from Mr Mapleson, for a limited number of nights at Her Majesty's opera, during the present season, being accepted, Mdlle de Belocca made her first appearance before a London audience, in her maiden part of Rosina, on the 24th of April. Her voice struck every amateur by its peculiar freshness and quality. It was not absolutely a contralto, nor absolutely a mezzo-soprano; but, in a most agreeable manner, blended the characteristics of both. In the cavatina, "Una voce poco fa," it was a pure mezzo-soprano; whereas in the brindisi from Lucrezia Borgia ("Il segreto per esser felice"), it was as pure a contralto. In any case, the singing and acting of Mdlle de Belocca, as the lively heroine of Beaumarchais and Rossini, was such as to win entire sympathy, and ensure an undisputed success. Shortly after, the new singer played Cherubino, in the Nozze di Figaro of Mozart, and by her impersonation of this character advanced another step in public estimation. The Russian lady is now on the threshold of fame; and the greatest hopes are entertained of her future career. That these hopes may be fully realized, is the earnest wish of every amateur; for it is long since a young artist with greater artistic promise and greater personal attractions has appeared on the stage of the Italian Opera.

Digitized by Google

MUSIC PAST AND PRESENT IN IRELAND.

(Continued from page 442.)

The object of this society was the production of the choral works of the great masters, and for this purpose a numerous chorus was kept in weekly practice under the direction of Mr Joseph Robinson who was the conductor. At the concerts, which were the results of these practices, the best works of Handel, Hadyn, Mozart, Mendelssohn, and other worthies, were produced with adequate principals, band, and chorus. Handel's Samson was the first work given, leaving such an impression of the resources of the society and the ability of the conductor, that the latter was looked upon as the pioneer of progress, and the former as the field for his display. Many were the noble renderings of the gigantic and lovely compositions of the above named masters. Judas Maccabæus, Israel in Egypt, The Messiah, The Creation, The Seasons, and Mozart's and Hadyn's "Masses," deserve mention. Then the works of Mendelssohn were first made known to a Dublin public by the Antient Concerts—the Lobgesang, St Paul, Athalie. The last went better than ever we heard it in the sister country, and some of the settings of the Psalms by the immortal composer never were given more fervently. Instance "When Israel out of Egypt came," and "As the hart pants after the waterbrooks;" the last replete with charm. But to enumerate all the "Antients" achieved would require a paper. We cannot refrain from making an observation on the production of the Elijah, immediately after the composer's death in November, 1847. Indeed, the work was in rehearsal when the news of his decease arrived. It was a performance worthy the occasion. We well recollect a distinguished amateur, Mr John Stanford, who undertook the part of the Prophet, and who recited and sang the splendid music with a fervour which almost amounted to inspiration. He was only second to Staudigl, who "created" the part, as the French say, at Birmingham the year previous. The band and chorus were remarkably fine. Some of the choruses we remember for their delicacy of expression—instance "He watching over Israel," and "Blessed are the men that fear Him;" others for their pomp of utterance, as "Thanks be to God, He laveth the thirsty land," and "Be not afraid." Then the conductor, Mr Joseph Robinson, not only kept the host of performers well in hand, but manifested such an intimate knowledge of every salient point in the score that no phrase of loveliness or power was unrevealed. Many are the reasons assigned for the dissolution of this society—one which seemed to possess all the vital energy of artistic progress, and one which exhibited in its working a genuine desire for the exposition of the most lofty phases of the ideals in the art. That there may have been some errors in the administration is likely; but it is unlikely that they would have had the effect of dissolving the society. We have inquired a good deal into the subject, and after all are obliged to come to the conclusion that the "Antient Concerts" died from a decadence in taste amongst our better classes—those who supported the institution from the beginning, and under whose influences it grew and prospered. We have no under-middle class here as in England, and all fostering of art must emanate from the educated and upper citizens. If these fall away, the cultivation of art must languish. Our musical societies are exclusive, and the members invite audiences and bear the expenses of performances. The general public have nothing to do with them. That the best promoters of art should be found amongst the cultivated, and those with leisure to study, is true. But may not this eclecticism lead to cliqueism? And if so, to the contraction within small limits of what was intended for the elevation and refinement of the people at large; at least of all those who derive pleasure from sweet sounds. These observations are forced upon us when pondering over the fate of this society. The present has nothing to compare to it, and neither will the future, except there be a reorganization of musical forces on a broader basis, which will admit all members of the music-loving community to meet on the one platform. Mr Joseph Robinson, who conducted the Antient Concerts with such rare ability, is a genuine musician, as his works, both sacred and secular, attest. His wife is a charming pianoforte player, and likewise an accomplished musician. Mrs Joseph Robinson is the composer of the sacred cantata, "God is love." This most devotional and graceful work was written by the fair composer during the tedious hours of illness. And, as a thank-offering for recovery, she devoted its first performance to charity. It was given for the benefit of Sir Patrick Dun's Hospital, December the 22nd, 1868. The Hibernian Catch Club, which is now the principal social club in this kingdom, originated about 150 years ago by meetings of the gentlemen of the Dublin choirs, for glee-singing and good fellowship, in the Thatched House Tavern, Castle Street. When it afterwards removed to the Bull's Head in Fishamble Street, it in some way roused the ire of Dean Swift, who inhibited the gentlemen of St Patrick's choir from attending its meetings on pain of dismissal. Swift had no music in his soul. He hated and ridiculed the art and its professors. Well had it been for the lord of satire had he delighted in sweet sounds. He would then not have deceived the two women who loved him, and been left to die a drivelling dotard in the hands of menials. He called it "a club of fiddlers." Nevertheless it progressed, and, in addition to its musical members, included most of the nobility and gentry, and literary celebrities in its gatherings. It has continued to flourish ever since, and is, at the present, distinguished for its elegant social entertainments. The gentlemen of the cathedral choirs are still its principal support; but the club includes amongst its members many of the nobility and gentry, and the highest in judicial station and professional eminence. His Grace the Duke of Abercorn is, at the present, its chairman. The members dine together at their rooms in Brunswick Street the second Tuesday in every month from November to June. The glee singing at these meetings is the great attraction. Mr Henry Bussell is indefatigable in his duties as secretary, and the committee do not spare themselves in the cause of art and sociability.

(To be continued.)

—o—

BERLIN.

(From an Occasional Correspondent.)

Professors H. Bellermann, M. Blumner, A. Haupt, Herren Eckert and Radeck, Capellmeister, have been elected members of the Academy of Fine Arts (Musical Section).

Herr Dorn has sufficiently recovered from his late illness to be able to go to his Weinbergs-Villa, at Loschwitz, near Dresden. He is announced to conduct the concert of the Gustavus Adolphus Guild, at the beginning of next season. The first concert of the series was given under his direction twenty-five years ago.

On the 1st May, 1876, Madlle Helene Meinhardt, one of the most popular artists at the Friedrich-Wilhelmstädtische Theater, will migrate to the Theater an der Wien in Vienna.

—o—

DEATH OF MR VAN PRAAG.

Concert-givers, and members of the profession generally, will learn with regret the death, at an advanced age, of the well-known concert-agent, Mr Van Praag, which took place at San Francisco, on the 5th of June last. There are few who will fail to remember the activity and urbanity with which Mr Van Praag executed whatever fell to his share in the way of management, or to whom his abilities as a linguist, and his natural gift of organization, are unfamiliar. From the commencement of his professional career—when (in the year 1847) he occupied a position of responsibility and trust at the Royal Italian Operahouse—to its close, when, almost broken hearted at the loss of a much-loved wife, he gave up an established position in the musical world of London to join his children and grandchildren in San Francisco, he steered cleverly among the diverse influences that are constantly warring in the restless sea of musical life, making singularly few enemies, and contriving to retain the goodwill of the most opposite parties. After residing at Bordeaux for some time, as Consul to one of the Spanish American Republics, he re-appeared in London, and, from about the year 1860 to 1872, was to be met presiding, with his usual energy, as acting manager to all the musical societies and concerts of note. We learn that his last illness was one of considerable suffering, but that he retained possession of his exceptional faculties to the end. During his short sojourn in the South he made hosts of new friends, who heartily sympathize with his family in their bereavement. May his awakening to the unknown be such as to repay the troublesome turmoil of so many years of public service; and we are sure that none will fail to join with ourselves in the last peace-suggesting, if mysterious, wish—"Requiescat in pace."

Z.

Digitized by Google

Balfe.

TO THE DEAN OF WESTMINSTER.

VERY REV. SIR,—Having been informed that an application has been made to you, seeking permission to erect in Westminster Abbey a Monumental Tablet, in commemoration of the distinguished Musical Composer—our fellow-countryman—MICHAEL W. BALFE, we, the undersigned, desire to be allowed to convey to you the strong and general sympathy felt by the Irish public with this request, and our earnest hope that it may be granted. We do so because we believe that the fame of BALFE belongs to more than our own generation. In achieving not only a British but a European reputation, he has added honour to the country, and his name deserves to be nationally recorded. Signed by—

The Duke of Edinburgh, President (on behalf of the Royal Irish Academy of Music); the Duke of Abercorn, Lord Lieutenant of Ireland; the Lord Mayor of Dublin (on behalf of the Balfe Memorial Committee); the Archbishop of Armagh; the Archbishop of Dublin; the Lord Chancellor of Ireland; the Duke of Leinster; the Bishop of Limerick; the Dean of St Patrick's; Viscount Monck; the Marquis of Kildare; the Bishop of Derry and Raphoe; Sir Robert P. Stewart, Mus. D., Professor, University of Dublin; Dean MacDonnell; the Master of the Rolls; Lord O'Neill.

Dublin, 31*st May*, 1875.

TO HERCULES MACDONNELL, ESQ.

MY DEAR SIR,—I beg to acknowledge the Address which I have had the honour to receive from you, signed by His Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh and other distinguished persons, with a letter from yourself, dated June 8th, in reference to the erection of a Monumental Tablet in Westminster Abbey, in Memory of the late Mr Balfe. I have delayed to reply, partly from absence in the country, partly from the desire to give full consideration to the request contained in the memorial and in your letter. With every wish to accede to a desire so forcibly expressed, and supported by so many eminent names, I am compelled to adhere to the same answer which I have already given on more than one occasion, in reference to this and similar applications—that I cannot, in consideration of the limited space in the Abbey and its cloisters, and of the demands of those who shall come after us, admit, unless in exceptional cases, the increase of cenotaphs, until I have received from the Government the assurance that the accommodation for such monuments will be enlarged, so as to give additional room for their suitable erection. I have been led to hope that such assurance will be given, but I have not yet been able to succeed in obtaining it; and you will, therefore, understand that I am, for the present, debarred from acceding to a request which it would have given me so much pleasure to satisfy, both from the desire to meet the wishes of the distinguished persons who have applied, and also to render honour to a gifted native of the Sister Island.—I beg to remain, my dear Sir, yours faithfully, ARTHUR P. STANLEY.

Deanery, Westminster, 22*nd June*, 1875.

TO EVERY AMATEUR IN IRELAND.

SIR,—We are directed by the Balfe Memorial Committee to earnestly request your aid and influence in their effort to worthily commemorate the name of one of Ireland's most gifted and widely-known sons of genius. It is intended to place his bust or statue in a suitable place in his native city, and to establish an annual musical Balfe Scholarship or Prize. We trust you will be good enough to authorize your name to be placed on the list of subscribers, which will then be published. Names will be received by any member of the committee, or at any of the principal music publishers, Dublin; and subscriptions can be lodged in the National Bank, College Green, to the account of the Balfe Memorial Committee. We have the honour to be, your obedient Servants,

HERCULES MACDONNELL,
JOHN O'DUFEY,
R. M. LEVEY. } Hon. Secs.

Mansion House, Dublin, Nov. 1874.

Memorial to Michael W. Balfe.

(Commendatore of the Order of Carlo III. in Spain; Chevalier of the Legion of Honour in France.)

BORN IN DUBLIN, MAY 15th, 1808.

It is proposed to commemorate the name of the eminent musician and composer, Balfe, by placing his statue or bust in a suitable place in Dublin, his native city, and to establish an Annual Musical Scholarship or Prize, which will each year appropriately recall his memory to the Irish public. The precise application of the fund to be decided by a general meeting of the subscribers. Balfe's claim to such distinction need not be enlarged on; and it is hoped that local committees will be formed in the principal towns.

Committee:—The Lord Mayor, the Duke of Leinster, Lord O'Neill, Viscount Gough, Lord O'Hagan, Sir Jocelyn Coghill, Sir Arthur Guinness, Sir Richard G. Macdonnell, Joseph Robinson, Chancellor Tisdall, Nicholas Donnelly, Dean Macdonnell, Henry Doyle, P. W. Joyce, P. J. Keenan, Michael Gunn, T. A. Jones, T. Maxwell Hutton, Edward Blackburne, John Dunne, Sir Francis Brady, Bart., Hercules Macdonnell, Sir Robert Stewart.

—o—

ALEXANDRA PALACE.

(Concert of the International Mozart Institution.)

If the financial success of the concert given was, on account of the very unfavourable weather, not quite satisfactory, the London representative of the Institution (Mr Sigmund Menkes) must be congratulated upon having secured the co-operation of the following accomplished artists to aid him in his work. Mdme Marie Roze, Mdlle Felicita Pernini, Mdme Demeric-Lablache, Mdlle Bauermeister, Miss Rose Hersee, and Mdlle Georgina Schubert; Mr Santley, Mr Edward Lloyd, and Herr Behrens. The instrumentalists were Herr Franz Schubert, jun., and Mr Charles Hallé. Sir Julius Benedict, who is always ready at hand where a good work can be done, conducted.

Mr Charles Hallé played Mozart's Concerto in D minor, with such finish and delicacy, especially the Adagio, that his audience were quite delighted; Mdme Roze gave "Deh vieni non tardar" capitally; Mdlle Pernini sang with effect "Placido il mar" (Idomeneo), and the duet, "Sull' aria," with Mdme Demeric-Lablache; Mdme Lablache also sang "Voi che sapete;" Miss Rose Hersee made a "great hit" in "Dove sono," and appeared to special advantage in the duet, "La ci darem la mano," with Mr Santley; Mdlle Bauermeister gave "Gli angui d'inferno;" and Mdlle Georgina Schubert (who made her first appearance in England on this occasion), "Io l' amero" (Il Re Pastore), violin obbligato, Herr Franz Schubert. Mr Edward Lloyd sang "Dalla sua pace;" and Mr Santley "Hai' gia vinta la causa" (Nozze di Figaro); and Herr Behrens "Qui sdegno." The overtures were Zauberflöte and Le Nozze di Figaro, and the symphony, the Jupiter. The choruses given were "Placido è il mar," "Ave verum," the "Kyrie" and "Gloria" from the 12th Mass, and "To Rome's Immortal Leader." The band and choir, conducted by Sir Julius Benedict, went splendidly. Her Royal Highness the Grand Duchess of Mecklenburg-Strelitz was present during the greater part of the concert, and, we are informed, expressed her gratification with what she had heard, to Mr Menkes, at the same time promising to give her patronage to all his future undertakings, in England, in favour of the International Mozart Institution.

Paris à Toulouse.

"Merci! Je me retrouve en écoutant ta plainte;
Celui qui souffre et vient est déjà mon vainqueur;
La flamme généreuse en moi n'est pas éteinte,
Et ce qu'a dit ma bouche était loin de mon cœur.

"Prends mon or, et par lui que ta douleur espère!
Prends l'or de mes malheurs à tes maux consacré;
Prends l'or de mon travail, qui deviendra prospère;
Prends l'or de mes plaisirs, il deviendra sacré!

"Oui, ma sœur, dans ton deuil reprends une espérance:
Je ne t'oublierai point, quel que soit le destin,
Car nous ne sommes pas deux villes, mais la France,
Et le temps d'égoïsme est un passé lointain!

"Après les jours mauvais, au sortir des abîmes,
Faisons pour nous aimer des efforts plus fervents,
Et du moins unissons, en comptant tes victimes,
Sur les lèvres des morts les baisers des vivants!"

MAYENCE.—Herr Betz has made a hit in Der fliegende Holländer.

BERGAMO.—Signor Ponchielli has undertaken to write music for the ceremony of depositing, next September, in the church of S. Maria, the urns containing the remains of Donizetti and Mayr. Professor Bernadino Zendrini will pronounce the funeral oration.

Digitized by Google

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

DR SYDENHAM.—No. It was Steibelt, not Dussek, who had that discomfiting meeting with Beethoven. Clementi, not Woelfl, was confronted with Mozart, at the desire of Joseph II.—a precious musical humbug, although brother of the Gluck-taught Marie Antoinette. Sterkel never had to do with either one or the other; but Mozart, when a child, did know Wagenseil. About Bomtempo Dr Sydenham is wholly in error, as also about Abbé Gellinek, whom he evidently confounds with Abbé Vogler.

MARRIAGE.

On the 30th of May last, at St Saviour's Church, South Belgravia, by the Rev. J. Walker, SAMUEL GRAY, Esq., of Strangeway's, Manchester and London, to EMILY, youngest daughter of Professor Glover of Dublin.

DEATH.

On June 4th, at Peckham, MR G. H. DAVIDSON, formerly of Peter's Hill, Doctor's Commons.

NOTICE.

To ADVERTISERS.—The Office of the MUSICAL WORLD is at Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & CO.'S, 244, Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street (First Floor). It is requested that Advertisements may be sent not later than Thursday. Payment on delivery.

With this number of the MUSICAL WORLD Subscribers will receive four pages extra, and again, from TIME TO TIME, as expediency may suggest.

The FAC-SIMILE of the letter of Sir Sterndale Bennett, promised in our last impression, will appear next week.

The Musical World,

LONDON, SATURDAY, JULY 10, 1875.

THE Festival of the Three Choirs of Worcester, Hereford, and Gloucester, after nearly a century and a half's existence, with a certain benefit to charity, though (as must be generally admitted) not with much benefit to art, seems now approaching towards dissolution. The subjoined, from a Worcester journal, will sufficiently explain our meaning:—

"THE FESTIVAL OF THE THREE CHOIRS.—The Dean and Chapter of Worcester have now nearly completed the arrangements for the proposed festival, or series of sacred song, which they have determined shall take the place of the old 'Festival of the Three Choirs,' with band and oratorios, at the Cathedral, and secular evening concerts at the College Hall. It has been determined that the substituted 'festival' shall occupy two days—Wednesday and Thursday, September 22 and 23—with a rehearsal on Tuesday, 21st. The whole programme has not been finally decided, but will consist of full choral service morning and evening, with anthems, and the following are among the works selected: 'God, Thou art great' (Spohr); 'Hosanna' (Gibbons); and 'The Wilderness' (Wesley). The cathedral choirs of Hereford and Gloucester have accepted engagements to join that of Worcester on the occasion."

How gracious on the part of the "Cathedral Choirs of Hereford and Gloucester," who, it need scarcely be said, must eventually row in the same boat—if, as Douglas Jerrold said to Albert Smith, "not with the same sculls"!—Nevertheless, it behoves all who diligently watch the prognostics of what "looms in the future" not to treat this revolution as a trifling matter. It is the most recent protest against those who hold, with the late magnanimous statesman, Cavour, that "a free Church in a free State" is the best thing both for State and Church. The time of sacerdotal despotism is happily passing away, as general education—which means nothing short of general civilization—advances. People have long been asking what is the exact signification of "Dean and Chapter." A cathedral is the biggest and stateliest church of a district, in a Protestant just as it is in a Catholic country—no more. And to this may be added, that, for the greater part, the prescribed daily service is more sparsely attended than, at any ordinary times, in the very smallest Nonconforming chapel. Will not eager inquirers who take an interest in the subject begin to meditate more curiously upon the "abstract and brief chronicle" of non-resident canons—of pluralities, in short, and simony en bloc? Will not others, more intently anxious about general financial information, after the style of the late much-regretted Joseph Hume, begin to ask "how about the administration of so-and-so?—how about so-and-so?—and"—still more threatening—"how about So-and-So?" It is all very well for rich and thriving potentates to inveigh against the desecration of the "Holy of Holies;" but would those potentates bend to confarreation with the members of the Three Choirs, as of old—at the Duke and Boot (Gloucester), the Earl and Shoulder (Hereford), or the Fish and Volume (Worcester)? Doubtless, those were glorious days, and those were glorious hostelries; but, with the aid of some little research, it may be found—in the library which (fine old port excepted), for years, has been the chief attraction to strangers at the Service Tree and Sable, Tadcaster—that many of our musical forefathers possessed red noses—rarely an appendage of Italian vocalists. This, however, by the way.

Look at the programme of the 152nd "Festival" of the Three Choirs. Wherein does it differ from a series of ordinary church services? And how can it be expected that people will come from far and wide to listen to it, when they can hear something much more impressive at St Anne's Church, Soho—to say nothing of other places all over the realm? The printed homilies of our illustrious ex-Prime Minister would seem to have acted on the Worcester Cathedral authorities in a sense precisely opposed to that which instigated their composition. Cavour and Gladstone, in fact, are simultaneously thrown overboard.

Otto Bearb.

Seventeen Years Ago.

MANY of our readers may not be displeased to peruse the address which accompanied the last farewell of Miss Louisa Pyne and Mr W. Harrison to Drury Lane Theatre (seventeen years ago). Here it is:—

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN,—Once more are we called upon, at the termination of our season, to say farewell to those kind friends and patrons, whose generous support has been so constantly extended to us since we first attempted, at the Lyceum Theatre, to establish English Opera in London. Upon the present occasion, however, there is little room for any feeling of reluctance in pronouncing that word "farewell"—in general so sad a one to utter. For now it is not for a series of months, or even weeks, we bid adieu; in a few days we shall, we feel assured, see once more gathered round us the same kind friends, whose cheering presence we now gratefully acknowledge. On Monday, the 20th instant, we shall re-open at Covent Garden, in the new and splendid theatre, built by Mr Gye expressly for operatic performances, which theatre we have taken for a series of seasons extending over several years. Thus have we every reason to believe the permanent home we have so long desired to found for English Opera has been secured; and, trusting to your continued support, no exertion shall be wanting on our part to make the Royal English Opera a fit companion to the Royal Italian Opera, with which it will alternate, season after season, in the magnificent building which now stands upon the site of the old Covent Garden Theatre. Fuller details of our intentions in our new home will be found in the announcement at the end of this address. And now a few words as to the season just completed in this theatre. At the commencement of this season we issued a prospectus, in which we stated our intention of producing certain novelties. That only one of these—Flotow's Martha—has been given during the thirteen weeks we have been open here is to be attributed solely to the unexampled favour with which the Rose of Castile, and the other operas of our répertoire have been received. Our generous patrons, the public, have, in fact, shown such persistency in flocking to the theatre to witness these operas that we have not hitherto felt justified in withdrawing them from the bills. Mr Balfe's New Opera, which was to have been one of our first productions, is all ready; but involving, as it does, an outlay of no ordinary extent, in scenery, machinery, dresses, and appointments, the whole of which have been made expressly for it, we felt that greater justice could be done to it at Covent Garden, where we are now permanently established, than by producing it for a few nights at this establishment. It will, accordingly, be positively produced on our opening night in our new home. Of the other novelty that we announced—the opera of Rip Van Winkle, by Mr George Bristow, the American composer, we can only say, that it is also ready, and will be produced at the earliest opportunity that you, our patrons and supporters, will afford us. Though hitherto debarred, by the continued favour shown to works in our existing répertoire, from producing very many novelties (a state of things we are far, indeed, from regretting), we shall be always happy to receive new works from native composers, and have made up our minds to produce, at least, one Grand English Opera each season; it being our ambition to furnish, in every sense of the word, a permanent home for native talent. We shall, therefore, esteem it a favour, if composers, who have operas ready, will send them for approval—promising that they shall have the very best attention, and, if suitable, shall be presented with all care and completeness, and at the very earliest opportunity. We have little more to say, except to thank you most sincerely and earnestly for the support you have extended to us, and to solicit a continuance of that support in our new habitation; and so, until Monday evening, the 20th instant, when we trust to meet you again in Covent Garden Theatre, we bid you most respectfully and gratefully, FAREWELL." "LOUISA PYNE."

Digitized by Google

Theatre Royal, Drury Lane, December 11, 1858. "W. HARRISON."

Well—seventeen years have flown away; and where is English opera? Echo (Hibernian) answers — "No where." It may be almost taken for granted that our sole chance now is the sudden apparition of an English Wagner, who, with vehement pertinacity (or pertinacious vehemence), insists upon everything being carried out in accordance with his own special manner of procedure.

A. S. Silent.

A LIST OF BALFE'S OPERAS.

THESE are the operas composed by Michael William Balfe:—

1.	I Rivali di se stessi	Palermo, 1829
2.	Un Avertimento ai Gelosi	... Pavia, 1830
3.	Enrico IV., al passo della Masna ...	... Milan, 1831
4.	Siege of Rochelle	London, 1835
5.	Maid of Artois	 1836
6.	Catherine Grey	 1837
7.	Joan of Arc	 1837
8.	Diadeste	 1838
9.	Falstaff	 1838
10.	Keolanthe	 1841
11.	Le Puits d'Amour	... Paris, 1843
12.	Bohemian Girl	London, 1843
13.	Daughter of St Marc	 1844
14.	Les Quatre Fils Aymon	... Paris, 1844
15.	The Enchantress	London, 1845
16.	L'Etoile de Seville	Grand Opera, Paris, 1845
17.	The Bondman	London, 1846
18.	Letty	 1847
19.	The Maid of Honour	 1847
20.	The Sicilian Bride	 1852
21.	Pittore e Duca	... Trieste, 1856
22.	The Rose of Castile	London, 1857
23.	Satanella	... ,, 1858
24.	Bianca	... ,, 1860
25.	Blanche de Nevers	... ,, 1860
26.	The Puritan's Daughter	... ,, 1861
27.	The Armourer of Nantes	... ,, 1863
28.	Il Talismano, composed	... ,, 1865

Three Cantatas—one in Paris, one in Bologna (for which Balfe was elected member of the Philharmonic Society), and Maseppa in London, at Exeter Hall, must be added.

Twenty-eight dramatic works (besides the here non-included Devil's in it—produced by Miss Romer at the Surrey Theatre), three cantatas—and how many other pieces of various kinds! Who can say we had not, in Balfe, a prolific composer?

A LETTER FROM SIR MICHAEL COSTA.

(From the "Figaro," July 3, 1875.)

It was officially stated that Costa, Benedict, Elvey, Hallé, Ella, and Hullah, had been appointed Examiners "into the progress and working of the South Kensington Training School," and that they "will also advise the Committee of management in its work of organization." This is incorrect, as far at any rate as Sir Michael Costa and Mr Hallé are concerned, while of the sentiments of the other gentlemen I am not informed. Mr Hallé's letter agrees in all respects with that of Sir Michael Costa, who writes as follows:—

59, Eccleston Square, S. W., June 28, 1875.

SIR,—In answer to your letter of June 26th, I beg to say that I have promised to be an Examiner and pass judgment on the progress of the pupils, and that is all, so far as I am concerned; but if other gentlemen, whose names have been published, have agreed to serve or not I am unable to say, nor do I know anything about the arrangements of the directors of the National Training School at South Kensington.—Sincerely yours, M. COSTA.

The Musical Editor of the Figaro.

This letter, written with characteristic straightforwardness by Sir Michael Costa, explains the whole position. He and some at least of his colleagues have consented to "pass judgment on the progress of the pupils" (when there are any pupils), but have not consented to "advise the Committee of Management on its work of organization."

OCCASIONAL NOTES.

IN one of the chief mouthpieces of our ex-contributor, Mr Shaver Silver, we read the subjoined:—

"An article in the last number of the Deutsche Rundschau on the musical setting of Heine's songs makes known a fact which might easily have been guessed from Heine's letters on musical subjects in his correspondence from Paris—that he had neither theoretical nor practical acquaintance with the art. He at one time, it seems, took music lessons, and had some idea of learning to play the piano. But instead of "practising" himself, he found it more interesting to make his professor play to him his favourite melodies. He was always interested to learn that a song of his had found favour in the eyes of a great composer; and one of the sorrows of his exile consisted in the fact that he rarely had an opportunity of hearing the music to which Schubert, Mendelssohn, Schumann ['and Meyerbeer,' the writer might have added] had set them. In one of his letters from Paris (in the Französische Zustände) Heine remarks that, under the French copyright system, which gives the author of words set to music equal rights with the composer, the 'Buch der Lieder' would have brought him in a small fortune through the music publishers alone. As it was, the German music publishers did what they liked with them; and Heine never received so much as a gratuitous copy of one of his own songs set to music."

Can Mr Shaver Silver, who (in parenthetical significance) adds —"and Meyerbeer"—be aware that some of the most musical settings of Heinrich Heine's lyrics are by an Englishman? We think not; because, though his physical temperament is atrabiliously robust, his psychological conformation is ethereal. Let him at once go to Cramer's, or Chappell's, and purchase the Heine songs by G. A. Macfarren. This is an edict.

ACCORDING to M. Julien Stader, a French statistician, 1,017 people have, from the beginning of the nineteenth century up to the present date, perished by fires in theatres, while the pecuniary loss amounts to twelve millions of pounds sterling. Paris has more places devoted to dramatic entertainments than any other capital. With regard to the ratio existing between the number of theatres and the population generally—in Italy, there is a theatre for every 75,000 inhabitants; in France, one for every 110,000; in Russia, one for every 1,360,000; and in Turkey, one for every 2,000,000.

MDLLE ZARÉ THALBERG is to play Zerlina (Don Giovanni), for her benefit; Mdlle Emma Albani, Marguerite (Faust), for hers; Mad. Adelina Patti, Violetta (La Traviata), for hers. Hamlet will not be given this season at either Italian Opera. Tant pis.

THE following list of operas, produced in Italy during the first six months of the present year, is taken from Il Trovatore:—

1. Elena in Troja, comic, D'Alessio, at the Politeama, Naples; 2. Colomba, comic, Aless. Fava, Bologna; 3. Il Pipistrello, comic, De Giosa, Teatro Filarmonico, Naples; 4. Gustavo Wasa, serious,

Digitized by Google

Marchetti, Scala, Milan; 5. Amore e Vendetta, Marchiò, Reggio; 6. Corinna, serious, Rebora, Teatro Mercadante, Naples; 7. Selvaggia, serious, Schira, Fenice, Venice; 8. Dolores, serious, Auterri-Manzocchi, La Pergola, Florence; 9. Don Luigi di Toledo, comic, Ceriani, Politeama, Naples; 10. Le Figlie di Bianca, comic, D'Alessio, Politeama, Naples; 11. Amore a suo Tempo, serious, Tofano, Teatro Corso, Bologna; 12. Scomburga, serious, Pellegrini, Teatro Guillaume, Brescia; 13. Luigi XI., serious, Luca Fumagalli, La Pergola, Florence; 14. La Rosa del Cadore, serious, Predazzi, Teatro Brà, Alessandria; 15. Le tre Zie, comic, Giacomelli, Leghorn; 16. Il Ritorno del Coscritto, comic, Tolomei, Siena; 17. Don Bizzorro e le sue Figlie, comic, Mugnone, Teatro Nuovo, Naples; 18. La Fata, semi-serious, Miceli, Teatro Filarmonico, Naples; 19. Le Rivali senz' Amante, comic, Greco Tiloteo, Circolo Napoletano, Naples; 20. Filippo, semi-serious, Crescimanno, La Pergola, Florence; 21. Isabella Orsini, serious, Rossi Isidoro, Pavia; 22. Una Burla, comic, Ferd. Parasini, Bologna; 23. Maria e Fernando, serious, Feruccio Ferrari, Teatro Brunetti, Bologna; 24. Giudetta, semi-serious, Sarria, Teatro Mercadante, Naples; 25. Benvenuto Cellini, serious, Orsini, Teatro Mercadante, Naples; 26. I quattro Rustici, comic, Moscuzza, Politeama, Florence; 27. Il Cacciatore, buffo, Canavasso, S. Radegonda, Milan; 28. Un Matrimonio sotto la Repubblica, serious, Podestà, Teatro Dal Verme, Milan; 29. Steno, comic, Panico, Teatro Nuovo, Naples; 30. La Vendetta d'un Folletto, comic, Mililotti, Teatro Quirino, Rome; and 31. I Viaggi, D'Arienzo, Teatro Castelli, Milan.—Of the above 31 operas, 11 were produced in Naples alone.

—o—

CONCERTS VARIOUS.

Madame Sidney Pratten's concert at the Beethoven Rooms, under most distinguished patronage, was attended by a large and fashionable audience. Madame Pratten's share in the programme was by no means the least interesting. The pieces she played, which especially deserve notice, were some compositions by Schulz, for guitar alone, a duo-concertante for guitar and flute (with Herr Svendsen), a duet for guitar and pianoforte (with Signor Romano), and two marches by Madame Pratten herself. All these were given in capital style. Some vocal pieces sung by Madlle Maria Mariani, Miss Helene Arnim, Mr Trelawny Cobham, and Mr Frederick Penna, were favourably received.

Signor Alfonso Rendano's recital, in St James's Hall, was attended by a numerous audience. Madame Adelina Patti, Sir Michael Costa, and other eminent artists were present. The programme was selected from the works of the masters dating from the middle of the 17th century up to the present time, thereby proving that Signor Rendano has devoted himself to the study of the most celebrated composers for his instrument. His playing is alike distinguished by a firm and delicate touch, his execution being marked by clearness and precision. He excels in tender and cantabile phrases, which he expresses with rare appreciation. The pieces redemanded were a scherzo by Jadassohn, and a chant du paysan, one amongst several charming compositions contributed by Signor Rendano himself, who was honoured by warm and repeated marks of approval.

The fifth concert of the Schubert Society was for the benefit of the director, and took place on Wednesday, 30th June. The rooms were crowded. The programme was miscellaneous. Amongst the instrumental pieces, the trio in C minor, of Beethoven, for piano, violin, and violoncello, was very much applauded. It was played by Mr Arthur Wilford, pianoforte, Herr Concertmeister Franke (who made his first appearance on this occasion), violin, and Herr Schuberth, violoncellist. The "encores" of the evening were "She wore a wreath of roses" (Madame Roche), "To Anthea" (Mr Wadmore), and a Danish song (Herr Werrenrath). Madame Rosita, Mdlle Thekla Friedländer, Miss Beard, Miss Louisa Dickes, Madame May Rolt, Miss Sanders, and Mdlle Montagnan (her first appearance in public)—all members of the society—"assisted." The ninth Soirée Musicale, given by the members of the society, is announced to take place on Wednesday the 14th inst.

Benefit concerts, beneficial, and too often the reverse, are furiously raging as the season draws rapidly to its close. Whilst such a host of talent, English and foreign, still remains in our metropolis, much more is expected from concert-givers than when the musical season dawns in London, in company with the November fogs. Amongst the many concerts of the past week was Mr Vandeleur Lee's, given on Wednesday, at the residence of Major Wallace Carpenter, Ashley Place. The weekly operatic practices for amateurs, together with the bi-monthly matinées, held by Mr Lee, at his residence in Park Lane, form a pleasant feature of the London season. The programme was composed of many old favourites, and some new. Most of the distinguished artists from Her Majesty's Opera company assisted at the concert. Madame Marie Roze Perkins sang Mr Cowen's "It was a dream." Mdlle A. de Belocca gave the well known scena from Semiramide, and Cherubini's "Ave Maria." The novelties of the concert were "The angel's message," (Mrs Shaw), sung by Madame Trebelli-Bettini with such finish and expression as to obtain for it an enthusiastic encore; Handel's "Lord, remember David," adapted to Italian words, was given by Signor Urio unexceptionably well, but scarcely received the applause which it merited; a romanza by Signor Tito Mattei, called "Amo," written for Signor Brignoli, was admirably sung by that clever artist—it is one of the composer's happiest efforts; two short pianoforte pieces, composed and played by Signor Mattei, were all the instrumental contributions to the programme. Madame Demeric Lablache, besides singing what she was put down for, came forward to fill up a breach caused by the unavoidable absence of Mdlle Singelli; she, with Signor Castelmary, sang the duet, "Crudel Perchè." A débutante, Madame Zimmermann, was evidently so overcome by nervousness that her intonation was affected; when she has mastered the difficulties of the English language, she will doubtless do justice to Crouch's "Kathleen Mavourneen." Signor Gillandi and Mr Crotty contributed; the one "Ah si ben mio" (Il Trovatore), the other "Ah per sempre" (I Puritani).—H. L. B.

—o—

PROVINCIAL.

Jersey.—Mr Milne's fourth concert at the Royal Hall was given under the patronage of Col. H. Wilkie and the officers of the 29th Regiment, yet it did not "draw" a house such as the merits of the artists deserved. The attendance in the first seats was good, but the one and two shilling places were half empty, and this, in spite of the continual cry that Jersey lacks suitable means of evening recreation of this sort. The instrumental part of the programme was certainly the best. Nothing could be finer than Mdlle Bertha Brousil's performance on the violin, and that of Mr T Selby on the violoncello. Mr Nicholson's "The Harmonious Blacksmith," with variations for the flute, and Mr T. Selby's solo on the violoncello, were delightful. Mesdames Whittaker and Thaddeus Wells were the vocalists.

Brentwood.—A concert has been given in the Town Hall, Brentwood, for the benefit of Master Brackley, permanently injured on the railway while in the performance of his duty at the Brentwood Station, on the 5th of May last. This generous undertaking, we believe, was owing principally to the active efforts of Mr H. Morley, R.A.M., of Brentwood, who, with the assistance of a few other local gentlemen, made and carried out all the arrangements. Considerable sympathy has been felt for the lad ever since his misfortune, and it was strongly manifested on this occasion by the hall being well filled. The programme of the evening was carried out by the Misses Mary and Mercy Hewkley (Sacred Harmonic Society, London), and Messrs J. Hewkley, Cassiday, and J. Hayes (Warley), as vocalists; and Miss Simmons, Miss Hewkley, and Mr H. Morley, as instrumentalists. The gem of the evening was, undoubtedly, Mr Morley's violin solo, Singlée's "La Sonnambula," which awoke the sympathies of even the most unmusical of the audience, and was loudly redemanded. Mendelssohn's "Presto Agitato" was played by Miss Simmons, as well as a duet with Mr Morley, for pianoforte and violin. The vocal portions of the programme were well rendered; and, at the close, Mr Morley thanked the ladies and gentlemen who had so kindly come forward and given their gratuitous services. The net amount realized was £20; and we are glad to state that the lad himself, though still unable to be moved, is progressing towards recovery.

—o—

DURHAM CATHEDRAL.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

Sir,—Having seen a series of statements relating to the works progressing in the choir of Durham Cathedral, founded on a corresponding series of inquiries contained in a letter which appeared in a local paper, I do not lose a day in replying to those inquiries. No analogy exists between the works in question and those proposed for the decoration of St Paul's. In the first place, no "showy embellishments of a florid Perpendicular style" have been proposed or thought of, and no "brass bar," but a fine brass altar rail, is proposed, not in place of an old marble altar rail, but of one of modern date. No Renaissance pavement is contemplated, but a rich one in early style. The pulpit is Romanesque, as is the Cathedral; but I am not aware that it is "Lombard," though it rests on sculptured lions. An open and non-obstructive screen is proposed, which is, in my opinion essential to the grandeur of the Cathedral. The old screen was removed in the time of the late Dean but to leave the Choir without screen was an anomaly, and has produced such an exaggeration of the popular theory of "vista" as to convert the most grand of our cathedrals into something like a magnified corridor.

George Gilbert Scott.

Digitized by Google

JOHN HULLAH SPEAKS.

Paper read (June 17, 1875) at the Society of Arts' Rooms, before the members of the Metropolitan Schools' Choral Society, by JOHN HULLAH.

I shall not waste time so valuable as yours—to the community as to yourselves—on any considerations relative to what, a great many years ago, I ventured to speak of as "The Duty and Advantage of Learning to Sing." I take it for granted that a body composed like that which I have the pleasure to address agrees with me in holding it to be a duty or advantage, or both, to learn to sing; and that this duty should be enforced and this advantage spread as widely as possible. I shall also assume, for the sake of clearing the ground before us, that you agree with me on another matter—that, whatever may be the amount of musical science or skill we may hope to give to anybody who comes under our influence, its quality should be the very best at our disposal. No man can possibly know how far the traveller he sets on the way of life may get, or have to go; but it is no less his bounden duty to take care that he sets him on the right road. The amount of musical science or of skill attained or attainable by this or that searcher after either will no doubt vary to the end of time; but the quality, I repeat, of that much or little of it which it may be possible to give to the dullest should be the same as that given to the brightest. No more abominable educational heresy was, I believe, ever promulgated—and we hear it suggested, if not actually promulgated, every day—than this, that the aims and processes of the teachers of the poor are to differ in kind from those of the teachers of the rich.

Having agreed upon this, let us without further preparation consider what our aims and processes in teaching music, to whatever class, should be.

First I must premise that, if the study of music is to be made as little difficult and as little unpleasant as is consistent with the successful study of anything worth knowing, it must be begun early. Every art should be begun early, and music should be begun and may be begun earlier than any. Every year added to our lives adds to the difficulty of becoming musicians. Children without any especial aptitude for music can be made in a few weeks, days, or even hours, to do things—recognise sounds sung or played to them, for instance—which would cost men or women by no means advanced in years long-continued and painful labour. There is this encouragement also before us in beginning to teach music early; that if, as too often happens, your pupils be withdrawn from your charge before any so-called "results" of your teaching can have been made manifest, what you have been able to do, what you have taught, is not lost irrevocably. It may be gone astray for a time, but it will come back again when earnestly called for, even after years of estrangement. An art like music is not of the nature of a congeries of facts—like a legal case, for instance, often got up to-day and forgotten again the day after to-morrow: it is a personal possession, a part of one's own being, a habit inseparable, a condition of our existence. But, I repeat, every year adds to the difficulty of obtaining this possession, of forming this habit—in other words, of making a "musician" either of one's self or of others.

But you will ask—What do you mean by a "musician?" The making a musician is an undertaking in which we have, some of us, not the qualification, none of us the time to engage. It is generally understood, too, that the proper subjects out of which musicians are made have some special and rare gifts and qualifications; and so forth. Let me explain first what a musician is not, or, more properly, what he need not be. He need not be a performer on any instrument; he need not be what in the full sense of the word is meant by a singer; nor need he be gifted with one spark of musical invention. What then, you will say, is he, or knows he? What can he do? A musician I should define to be one who can identify musical sounds; who, seeing represented in any characters he understands, or even hearing described in language he understands, a succession or combination of musical sounds, knows how it will sound; or è converso, hearing such a succession or combination, would be able to write it down, or in some way convey or describe to others what it was. A person, no matter of what age, who knows that the second of these two sounds stands in the relation of a fifth to the first  , or the second of these two in that of a minor third  (there is no need to multiply examples), is to a certain extent a musician. He would show, in the recognition of these relations, a power which, though of itself small, might, with reasonable application, and in reasonable time, be developed into the power of appreciating, nay, of taking in almost at a glance, a score of many parts, and of proving that he did so, as every orchestral conductor is continually required to do, by pointing out errors in the course of its performance, arising whether from incorrect transcription, or careless reading on the part of performers. How is this "sympathy of eye and ear," which, I repeat, of itself alone constitutes a musician, to be attained? It may and it has been obtained by putting an instrument into the hands of him whom you desire should attain it. But I know this is not absolutely necessary to, and, I believe, is not the best way, to begin its attainment. The first organ or faculty of a musician we have to train is his ear; and we shall do this best and most easily if also we employ, and in employing train, his voice. You will all, I am sure, bear me out in saying that there is very little difficulty in making very young and very undisciplined children imitate two or three musical sounds uttered in succession. So much of the faculty of memory as will enable them to do this comes to them very early. But the power of imitating even a protracted succession of sounds—an entire melody, for instance—will of itself have no bearing on the power of realizing those sounds from any symbols or description, when their order or proportionate lengths has been changed. We must, if we desire that a child should do this—should make even a first step beyond mere imitation—give him some means of identifying those sounds—sounding them when told to do so, or naming them when sounded. For example:—Any child can imitate this:  , or a dozen passages like it. I wish, from the dozen, that he reproduce this particular one. We must be agreed on a description of it, and the best description will be a name for each sound composing it. Each name might be a word, and the three words in one order might form a sentence or clause of a sentence; for instance—"Three blind mice." No doubt "Three blind mice" would bring to mind But how, if we were to say to our little pupil, sing us "Blind mice three?" Would he invert the order of these sounds, and sing  ? Or would he, being asked for "Mice three blind," or "Blind three mice," sing  or ? Assuredly not. And equally as assuredly, if he could even be taught to do so, with these three simple words and sounds, the extension of such a power of association to a larger number would, after being found more and more difficult, soon be found impracticable. This difficulty is probably as old, if not as music itself, at least as any attempt to represent or describe musical sounds. The way to meet it was known certainly in the eleventh century, possibly earlier. Give to each sound of the natural septenary, to begin with, a different and arbitrary name, and complete the scale by calling the eighth like the first, and the octaves above or below these like them, and you have a set of names by which any set of sounds in the same scale can be described, and, therefore, reproduced at will. Mi, Re, Do, three of the time-honoured sol-fa syllables, as you will all know, are of themselves as easy to sing as "Three blind mice;" and Do, Re, Mi; Do, Mi, Re; or Re, Mi, Do, will, I venture to say, be found easier to sing at call—that is, scientifically—than "Blind mice three," or "Mice three blind," or "Blind three mice;" if only for the reason that the syllables represent only sounds the order of which is as immaterial as it is variable; whereas the words, which in their direct or original order, represent an idea, or at least the subject of one, represent nothing at all when their order is changed.

(To be continued.)

Digitized by Google

THE NEW PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

It would seem that, to show their appreciation, the subscribers had determined to encore everything in the programme of the last concert of this society. If in this, their apparent desire, they evinced an exception, it was in the case of that number in the programme, which by reason of its novelty and its being the work of a musician who bears a great name, it would have been naturally thought to have excited the largest amount of attention and favour; for subscribers to Philharmonic Societies have an interest in the progress of music, and can hardly hold to the opinion that it must never move from the position in which it was left by Beethoven. In this respect they differ from many concert audiences whose taste requires that every piece performed should be a "familiar thing." Yet so it was; and Brahms' pianoforte concerto in D minor failed to win the suffrages of the majority, admirably as it was rendered, while the solo instrument was in the hands of that wonderful executant, Herr Jaell. Had this performance taken place elsewhere than at a Philharmonic Society's concert, we might have accounted for this lack of enthusiasm, on the ground that the solo instrument in this concerto, as in some of the concertos of Beethoven, although to a greater extent, fails in the possession of a thoroughly independent part, and the mind of an ordinary listener, as opposed to the mind of a Philharmonic subscriber, cannot appreciate a performance upon an instrument, be it what it may, whose doings are interlaced with those of the various other instruments, although perhaps having a little more to say than the rest. Hence it is not an uncommon thing to hear a non-musician say that he would rather hear a pianist play a solo independent of an orchestra; then the artist's powers would be more apparent. But we hope better things of those who attend Philharmonic Society's concerts. We must, therefore, account for the fact that we speak of in some other way. And, put it how we may, there is no way of disguising the truth; but it must be owned at once that the concerto does not appear to possess the elements calculated to win the favour of an audience accustomed to hear the best music, and not indisposed to be familiarized with novelty. The applause that followed its performance was evidently due to the solo pianist, rather than to the work in which he had been taking part. Called upon to distinguish between any two of its movements, we should yield the palm to the finale, which afforded Herr Jaell opportunities of introducing two cadenzas, of which the maestro failed not to avail himself. But apart from this, the movement in its construction is more thoroughly appreciable and decided. To this society, and to "The Philharmonic Society," we are indebted for the introduction to London of important works by Brahms and Raff. Each society has given a symphony by Raff (of which we wrote at the time), and each has favoured us with a work of Brahms; but while listeners drew delight from what they heard of Raff, the same can hardly be said of Brahms. We are now in the domain of fact—not of opinion. The truth is, great and skilful as he is—and that Brahms is great none deny—Brahms is not Raff. Whatever the former has, the latter has, and something more. In other words, Raff has more genius, and in all other respects is the equal of Brahms. While the memory of Raff is green, that of Brahms will have assumed its autumnal tints. Those of the readers of the Musical World who are musicians will, doubtless, find for themselves the reasons of this judgment, and those who may not be musicians (and many of the numerous subscribers to this periodical are such for the information it imparts), would hardly be able to follow us in a technical argument.

Having written thus much with respect to the chief piece in this interesting programme, we shall not have occasion to occupy so much space respecting the other portions of it. The concert commenced with a splendid performance of the overture to Der Freischütz, which was re-demanded vociferously and consequently repeated. The next instrumental piece was Mendelssohn's "Reformation" Symphony, and the most fastidious of listeners could not but have been delighted at the eloquent interpretation of this beautiful work, which, under the very careful direction of Dr Wylde, the excellent orchestra of the society gave the subscribers Gounod's "Funeral March of a Marionette" (the subject of which every musical Frenchman will remember), with its delicate and thoroughly characteristic orchestral treatment; Herr Jaell's solo performances on the pianoforte; Chopin's Nocturne, and the pianist's own Serenade (encored, for which the performer gave his own transcription of Wagner's overture to Tannhäuser); and a brilliant performance of Rossini's orchestral masterpiece, the William Tell overture, constituted the remaining instrumental features of this concert.

Mr Santley was the vocalist. He was recalled after Gounod's couplets from Mirella, "Se l'Arlesi son regine;" encored in the celebrated song of Wagner's from Tannhäuser, "Oh! du mein holder Abendstern;" singing, finally, Mendelssohn's "The shepherd's lay," and Hatton's "To Anthea," the latter creating a demand for its repetition not to be resisted.

The concerts during the season now brought to a close, under the joint direction of Dr Wylde and Herr Ganz, seem to have been of a progressive character—not as regards the music or the quality of the programmes, but with respect to the success they have achieved. And certainly it would be difficult to frame a programme that would more thoroughly reach the sympathies of an auditory than that which was presented to the crowded assembly in St James's Hall last Saturday afternoon. It is now nearly a quarter of a century since the New Philharmonic Society has been established, and if our historical knowledge be not at fault, the concerts were at their commencement under the joint direction of Dr Wylde and M. Berlioz. For many years, however, the doctor has had them entirely in his own hands, and, during that long period, despite his many engagements, he found time to prepare for his subscribers, in addition to works of acknowledged merit, works entitled, by reason of the applause with which they were greeted in other countries, at least to a presentation here on the ground of novelty. Dr Wylde was the first to give a recital (with "cuts"), of Lohengrin. He has been for long a favourite with the subscribers, and with the fathers of those of recent years only. A cordial welcome awaits him ere he steps upon the platform. His bright good-humoured smile, so well known for many years, secures the sympathy of his friends, and it cannot be denied that a face long familiar predisposes a favourable judgment. Add to this a sense of the knowledge that the doctor has been zealous to gratify his subscribers in all his arrangements, and there will be little difficulty in discovering the causes of his present popularity. But of late his engagements have so increased, that he has been unable to allow so much of his time to these concerts as formerly. Last year he showed wisdom in seeking for a co-director, and that wisdom was equally apparent in the selection. Herr Ganz, being somewhat of a cosmopolitan, is well fitted for the position he occupies. It enables him to become acquainted with artists of all nationalities. A good musician and conductor, he knows well how to form his orchestra; and the gentlemen of musical status whom we see as interpreters of the mind of Beethoven and others in the band of the New Philharmonic Society proves our statement.

About the financial result of the present series of concerts we know nothing. They have been artistically successful; and, having given a taste for novelties, it will in future be a necessity to foster with discretion. Novelty for its own sake must be eschewed, else the musical palate will become vicious; but, having confidence in the directors, we may trust to their judgment. They are hopeful for the future, and have already made reference to their next season.

F. P.

June 24th.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

SIR,—Your correspondent signing himself "Truth" is rather ambiguous in his remarks on the late contest at York. He says "the gentleman who should preside at York ought to be a sound harmonist, a good vocal writer, should understand scoring for a band, conducting, &c., he ought also to be a man of mark, and socially respected. I venture to say that in all these points Dr  will be found au fait." Does he thereby insinuate that Messrs , *, and  are not au fait in these points; and, if not, what can be the meaning of his sentence? Perhaps he will kindly enlighten us. If interpreted rightly, how dare he sign himself "Truth."—Your obedient servant,

THE G MINOR.

Digitized by Google

JOTTINGS FROM LONDON.

(To the "Dublin Mail.")

Dublin, that much-slandered though beautiful city, has ample revenge upon her gigantic rival this season. Dublin has been deemed unwashed and slattern. Her streets have become proverbial for sloppiness, and the saying of the Countess of Cork, "Dear, dirty Dublin," has stuck to her even as some of her own mud; while London, the all-embracing, magnanimous, and comprehensive, has looked in pity upon her Hibernian sister, and, with a supercilious smile, has said, "Look at me, copy me; see what I have done—here are clean streets and polished highways, where daintiest of ladies may promenade without soiling their shoes, with crossings so well swept that they are like the halls of the surrounding mansions." Easy, my Lord London; don't flatter and hug yourself in such a magniloquent complaisance. Look at your streets and flagways for the past week. Could anything be more palpable than your majesty of mud? Mud on the highways, mud on crossings, mud spattered from carriages, cabs, omnibuses, costermongers' carts, and every species of vehicle. Aye, and that mud clinging with national tenacity to the garments whereupon it rested, resisting the brush and leaving many hued-stains to tell of its success. Such a day as yesterday, the 1st of July!—one can scarcely believe it was the first; Cockneydom doubted it. Ladies and gentlemen remained indoors. Those who ventured out in carriages had the windows closed—omnibuses were crowded with dripping passengers, each armed with a steaming umbrella; and "Cabby" looked so forlorn in his greatcoat, from which flowed a limped stream, while from his hat came drops large and continuous, that one was inclined to forgive him all his sins of overcharge and extortion. A dog opposite, taking shelter against a hall-door, as he shivered and looked wistfully, filled me with melancholy. Though pouring, pouring with that attention to the English character, it was not a day to remain at home and alone; so I made a rush into a vehicle, got to the Victoria, and steamed down to the Crystal Palace. Even there the rain tried to assert its supremacy. But the big drops which occasionally came from the roof only made one feel comfortable at the shelter afforded by the beautiful building. Here I found eleven young ladies, all soprano singers, competing for the prizes offered by the promoters of the National Music Meetings—young and comely, with bright voices and anxious faces. The fright of one or two as they came forward before the judges—Sir Julius Benedict, Mr W. G. Cusins, and Signor Arditi—amounted to something which bordered upon pain. Well, to it they went. I admired the pluck of these charming girls. The struggle was hard, and as one finished and another commenced, it was clear that the jury would have a serious task to perform. Four were selected to sing again, ere the judges would decide, and here was more anxiety. The pieces were from Handel, Bellini, Donizetti, and Balfe. At length the prizes were declared. The first, £25, to Miss Charlotte Larcom; the second, £10, to Miss Anne Carrina; while certificates of merit were given to others. I must say there was a promising amount of vocal ability exhibited, and that some of the eleven aspirants will take position in the concert-halls of the kingdom.

Salvini is all the rage, and to be in London without seeing him would be an offence against good taste; so, of course, I went to see the Italian in Othello. He is a man of fine presence and great mobility of feature, splendid and expressive eyes, and a voice of many modulations. His conception of the character is genuinely Shakesperian, and his acting, with all its intensity, unexaggerated, never overstepping the bounds of Nature. I do not wonder at the late Charles Dickens saying he was the greatest actor in the world, after seeing him perform at Rome in the year 1859. An incident occurred near me which was highly amusing. A gentleman said to the lady under his charge, during the last act, "Shall we go now?" to which she replied, with an almost tearful expression of countenance, "Oh, uncle, dear, sure you wouldn't ask me to go till I see him smother her?"

The operas are in full swing—Lohengrin still a bone of contention among the dilettanti; some asserting it is the finest music ever written for the stage, and others that it is untuneful, inexplicable, and exactly what an opera ought not to be. I heard a gentleman, upon whose judgment I place some value, say yesterday that at first one does not like it at all, it being wearisome; but that after a few hearings it not only gets into the intellect, but the heart. However, it is a nice little controversy. Madame Patti, in Romeo and Juliet, at Covent Garden, is incomparable. I do not think such a Juliet was ever before seen upon the stage.

In Semiramide, at Her Majesty's, the band and chorus were superb, and Mdlle Tietjens asserted her supremacy as queen of lyric tragedy. Madame Trebelli's Arsace could not be over praised. All the other parts had competent representatives. Madame Christine Nilsson, as Mignon in Ambroise Thomas' opera, gains golden opinions. She is excellently supported by M. Capoul; so that altogether the French composer's work is an attraction.

July 2.

CONCERNING SPAIN AND OLD SACRED MUSIC.*

All the great musicians of whom Spain could boast, during the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries, studied either at Montserrat or at the Escurial, though these were far from being the only conservatories and academies in the Peninsula. An Academy of Music was founded and endowed in Salamanca by Alfonso X., King of Castile, as far back as 1254. The Chapter of the Cathedral of Toledo possesses a manuscript containing airs composed by that sovereign, and written down according to the system then recently invented by Guido d'Arezzo. In the following century, Juan I., King of Arragon, established a School of Music in Barcelona. The same impulse was felt all over the Peninsula. In every town, even in towns of not much importance, there were guilds or societies which sent forth musicians of merit, not bent, however, on seeking renown abroad, but anxious rather to promote the cause of music where they lived. It is this fact which has misled certain critics into bringing a charge of mediocrity against Spanish sacred music. Such critics were ignorant that Spanish composers did not attempt to win celebrity among foreign nations, each one being contented, like Bach, to create for himself, in the town where his church or chapel stood, a little world of his own, and a band of performers, musically irreproachable and sincerely artistic within the limits of sacred music.

The most hearty welcome awaited all travelling musicians. They were listened to on the organ; their own music was performed; and we still find preserved in the archives of many churches manuscript copies of the sacred music these strangers brought with them. Antoine Févin, a native of Orleans, makes a brilliant figure in such archives, a fact which has caused many Spanish scholars to believe him to have been their fellow-countryman.

The Chapel of Fontarabia always enjoyed a high renown, and, at the very outset, boasted of a musician, Andres de Sylva, still famous. The festivals of days gone-by are still honourably remembered in Fontarabia, and it is especially in religious ceremonies that all the old traditions of the place re-appear. We have seen certain very curious specimens of the kind, reminding us of the Mysteries of the Middle Ages. We then hear, alternating with ancient sacred music, popular melodies applied to religious subjects as they have been handed down through centuries. This still occurs in the second-class towns of Portugal and Spain, as well as in certain towns of the South of France, such as Perpignan, Port-Vendres, Collioure, Narbonne, Banyuls-sur-Mer, and all along the west side of the Pyrenees. On the Feast of the Epiphany, the procession of the Wise Men of the East is represented by a grotesquely dressed band. These sham Orientals, with their faces blackened, carry on their shoulders a litter decorated with flowers and foliage. Hidden under a veil is a child representing the infant Jesus. On Corpus Christi Day there is another apparently carnevalistic but sincerely religious ceremony. The town musicians, accompanying what is called the "Castillet du Bon Dieu," play a flourish of the highest antiquity and exactly resembling that which Weber resuscitated and introduced into the first act of Der Freischütz, when the marksmen return from the shooting-match.

On Good Friday people bring forth from mysterious arsenals old suits of armour, antique cuirasses, and secular casques, which are donned by the inhabitants dressed up to represent the Roman soldiers charged with watching over Christ. At the various places where the procession rests, you hear the bands of the town, and then the choir strikes up the old sacred strains, which never fail to produce their due effect in the midst of these religious services, attended as they are by the whole population, piously prepared for them.

MAURICE CRISTAL.

CONSTANTINOPLE.—A new operahouse is in course of construction, and will, probably, be completed ere long.

* Extracted from "Boccherini et la Musique en Espagne," in Le Ménestrel.

Digitized by Google

PARIS SCRAPS.

(From our Parisian Scrapper.)

The performance at the Grand Opera for the benefit of the "Inondés," or sufferers by the terrible floods, proved very successful and produced a large sum. Mesdes Carvalho, Krauss, Gueymard, and M. Gailhard, whose leave of absence commenced on the 1st inst., remained in Paris on purpose to give their services. I may mention, also, that M. Brandus, in the name of the Meyerbeer family, renounced the author's rights on the occasion. Nor has the Grand Opera been alone in the good work. The other theatres have all followed suit. At the Français, some verses of circonstance, entitled "Paris et Toulouse," from the pen of M. de Bornier, were admirably recited by Mdlles Favart and Lloyd, though these ladies had studied them on the shortest possible notice.

In reply to a request from M. Albert Vizentini, the new manager of the Gaité, Mad. Dejazet wrote the following letter:—

"Dear Mr Vizentini—You have asked me to take part in a performance you are going to give for the sufferers by the Toulouse inundations. Alas! I am only just recovering from an illness and can scarcely stand, but I am bold enough to believe that my strength of heart will get the better of my weakness. When, too, so many brave people have risked their lives in the hope of diminishing the number of the victims, I may very well try my health a little to assist so many now in distress. Rely, therefore, upon me.

"30th June, 1875." "DEJAZET.

Musicians, literary men, and musical publishers have been no less eager than theatrical artists to extend a helping hand. At a meeting held on the 30th ult., the Société des Auteurs, Compositeurs, et Editeurs de Musique, unanimously resolved that the Society would forego the sums to which it might be entitled from all balls, concerts, and fêtes generally, got up exclusively for the sufferers. The committee likewise voted 1000 francs from the funds of the Society to the Subscription opened by the Maréchale MacMahon.

There is no longer any doubt of the re-establishment of the Théâtre Lyrique. The principal question now in dispute is the amount which it shall receive from the State. As to the building in which it shall be located, some persons point to the Salle Ventadour, while others, backed up by the City of Paris, would take it to its old home in the Place du Châtelet, where the scenery and dresses are still preserved. Talking of scenery, that used when the Grand Opera was temporarily housed in the Salle Ventadour, has been sold by auction. The absurdly low prices fetched reminded one of the pitiful sums paid for the fittings, etc., of the Stratford Shakspere Festival Theatre, some years since. The amount realized can scarcely have done much more than pay the expenses of the sale.

M. Offenbach, relieved of the cares of management, left Paris on the 3rd inst for Aix-les-Bains, where he intends stopping two months, in the hopes of completely recovering his health.

Under the direction of Henry Litolff, the orchestra of the Alcazar has become one of the best in Paris, and, also, one of the most popular.

Last week, the monument to Théophile Gautier, in the Montmartre Cemetery, was solemnly inaugurated in presence of his relations and a large number of literary and artistic celebrities. It is from the chisel of M. Godebaki, a son-in-law of Servais, the violoncellist, and unanimously pronounced worthy of him in whose memory it is raised.

—o—

MILAN.

(From a Correspondent.)

A new opera, I Viaggi, has been produced at the Teatro Castelli, and very much applauded on the first night, the composer, Sig. Nicola D'Arienzo, being called on, or, at any rate, coming on, some dozen times. But first night triumphs are frequently nothing more than failures decorated with laurels, and such appears to be the case in the present instance. I Viaggi, first brought out at Naples, is far more suited for the taste of the Neapolitans than for the more cultivated ear of the Milanese. It contains one or two good things, but not sufficiently good to compensate for the musical bric-à-brac in which they are embedded. The next novelty is to be a comic opera entitled Marchioness di gamb avert, the libretto, in the local dialect, by F. Fontana, the music by Enrico Bernari.

ACORNS, SLOES, AND BLACKBERRIES.

BY GIBBS GIBB GIBBS, ESQ.

No. 5.

Arthanasius Kircher, a native of Fulda, was born in the year 1601. The chief of Kircher's musical works is his "Musurgia Universalis." This is divided into ten books. In the preface the author states that he was aided in the compilation of it by Antonio Maria Abbatini, Chapelmaster of the churches of St Maria Maggiore and Pietro Heredise, in Rome, also by Kapsberger and Carissimi. In the first book he treats of the anatomy of the ear, not only in man, but in various kinds of quadrupeds and birds. From this he passes to the consideration of the voice in the human race, and also of the vocal organs in several species of animals. In the second book he speaks of the music of the Hebrews, and gives the forms of some of their instruments. He then proceeds to the music of the Greeks. The next book enters deeply into the doctrine of harmonics, explaining the several kinds of proportion and demonstrating the ratios of intervals. The fourth book is entirely on the divisions of the monochord, and the method of finding the intervals by various geometric and algebraic processes. The fifth book contains directions for the composition of music in consonance. Towards the close of the book, he speaks of that spurious kind of fugue, called fuga in nomine, and not only explains the nature of canon, but gives examples of canons, some of which are very wonderful in their contrivance. He mentions one, which he says might be sung by twelve millions two hundred thousand voices. Nearly the whole of the sixth book is taken from the Latin work of Mersennus, and gives a particular description of the great bell at Erfurt. The seventh book contains a comparison between the ancient and modern music, with some specimens of the ancient Greek musical characters, taken from Alypius. In the eighth book is inserted tables of all the possible combinations of numbers as they relate to musical intervals. In the ninth book there is a chapter "De Sympathiâ et Antipathia Sonorum Ratione," the author says that from his experiments we may probably date the invention of Musical Glasses. Kircher mentions, as a contrivance of his own, the Æolian harp, which he describes at considerable length. But although he might have been ignorant of the fact, St Dunstan is said, by Fuller, to have had one which must have been of a nature very similar to Kircher's. Kircher, in this book, gives an account of the celebrated hydraulic organ of Vitruvius, which no one has hitherto been able to comprehend. The tenth book is on the subject of analogical music, as Kircher has termed it, to demonstrate the harmony of the four elements, and of the planetary system. Kircher claims the invention of that useful instrument called by us the speaking trumpet. Of the power of this trumpet, he says that, with one of fifteen palms in length, he and some companions made themselves heard from different stations, at the distance of two, three, four, and five Italian miles. To speak in general terms of the works of Kircher, the world is under great obligations to him for instruction and entertainment relative to the principles and gradual progress of the science of music.

Thomas Anton Kunz is the inventor of a sort of organized pianoforte, called the orchestrion, which has twenty-one stops imitating almost every description of instrument. He published, in 1781, a cantata entitled, Pygmalion, also several collections of songs.

Digitized by Google

MUSICAL PRECOCITY.*

Cases of boys and of mere children possessing marvellous aptitude as musical executants are not only not as rare as is generally supposed, but are absolutely very frequent. The history of musical art contains an exceedingly large number of instances.

Concert-players, aged nine, eight, or seven, respectively, are to be counted by fifties rather than by dozens. But this is far from all.

A child named Benincori (born at Brescia, in 1779) performed a violin concerto before the Court of Parma, when he was only six and a half years old. A child named Cianchettini (born in London, of Roman parents, in 1799) performed at the Italian Operahouse a concerto of his own composing, and extemporized on themes suggested by the public, when he had not attained his sixth year. A boy named Berwald (born at Stockholm, in 1788) began learning the violin when he was three, and in thirteen months played at a public concert. Young Crotch (born at Norwich, in 1775) publicly performed on the organ the National Anthem of "God Save the King," and the then famous "Minuet de la Cour," when he was only three. A boy named André (born at Offenbach, in 1773) having commenced his studies at the age of two, was, at eight, a pianist, a violinist, a singer, and a composer. A boy named Marque (born at Paris, in 1781) was a violinist distinguished—as his biographers inform us—for the marvellous correctness of his tone, at the age of six. A boy named Kellner (born at Windsor, in 1793) performed, when he was five years and a few months old, with all the certainty of an experienced artist, the most difficult sonatas of Handel. And there are many and many more such.

In the generation of those who have now attained maturity, there are very many who possessed with extraordinarily precocious musical powers. Among these (to mention only the most famous) is Miss Wood, who was a composer at the age of five; Arriaga, Gatayes, Londicer, all of whom also composed; Herz, Liszt, Gerke, Jaell, and Geiger, pianists; Ancot, Dancla, Bott, Vieuxtemps, and Milanollo, violinists; Gouvy, harpist; Verroust, oboist; the brothers Carlo and Antonio de Kontski, and their sister, Eugenia (the first a violinist, and pianists the two others), who gave a concert at Warsaw, in 1822, when their united ages amounted only to seventeen years and six months.

After these came Brahms, St Saens, Michelangelo Russo, Carreno Lotto, Benoni, Nacciarone, Stanzieri, Merli, Neruda, the Brothers Perry, the Brothers Vianesi, and Rendano.

And, after the usual marvels have been accomplished, and the usual exclamations spoken and written, we are, at the present day awaiting the ultimate result in the case of not a few others such as the Signorita Gallone, a pianist, who, four years since, sent the Milanese into ecstacies by her playing at the Conservatory, of which she then was, and, perhaps, now is, a pupil; the Brothers Napoleone and Vittorio Fantoni, the first a pianist, and the second a violinist, who were greatly applauded in 1872, at the Teatro Apollo, Venice; Romeo Dionesi, a singer when he was only five, "A true prodigy of musical art," (wrote the New York Eco d'Italia) "who has attracted the attention of the public in many cities of Europe and of South America;" Clementino del Ponte, who, when he played at Moncalvo, three years ago, was really seventeen, but the performance was no common one; for the Vessillo d'Italia then wrote: "Del Ponte possesses a singular memory; the dexterity and certainty almost of an old artist; a delicacy of execution which causes one to feel the most refined gradations of the ideas, and of the most exquisite and recondite modulations of the passions, and most varied and effective colour, by means of which he transports one from the gentle and almost inaudible arpeggio of a distant lute to the rumbling of the thunder and the furious crashing of the storm!"

Still more recently we have had Benedetto Palmieri, of whom our friend Filippi wrote: "Little Palmieri possesses gifts which excite hopes of a future great artist; he reads well at sight; he accompanies intelligently, and executes the most astounding difficulties, so that it is quite marvellous to see him with those tiny hands of his, which, when stretched out, do not, from the thumb to the little finger, grasp five keys. In addition to good mechanism, he boasts of delicate musical feeling; he accentuates well; and colours and interprets with rare appreciation." We have, furthermore, had Cesare Augusto Lancellotti, applauded as a pianist at Rome and Florence; and the Sisters Hess, of New York, one a pianist and the other a violinist, who, in 1873, made the severe frequenters of the Gewandhaus, Leipsic, raise their eyebrows; and little Richter, who, likewise in 1873, played at Cologne with such splendid success that the Wochenblatt declared her to be no less extraordinarily and miraculously gifted than Mozart!

Mozart, we will say as though in parenthesis, stands by himself among the instances of precocious genius. No one was ever more favoured by nature; no one ever fulfilled so completely and so splendidly what he promised. The story of his childhood is in a different sphere, but not in a different degree, a repetition of the story, wonderful as it was, of Pico della Mirandola. At the age of four Mozart played the piano; when he was five he composed; and, not yet knowing how to hold a pen, dictated to his master or to his father. When he was six he gave a public specimen in Vienna of what he could do as a pianoforte player; at the age of eight, without any one knowing how or when he had studied, he was a skilful violinist, highly popular at the Court of Munich; and, six months afterwards, he was most highly applauded at the French Court as an organist. When he was eight he sent, for the first time, his compositions to the press. He extemporized for hours together, either as his fancy dictated, or upon given themes, and in the fugued style, though he had not then studied counterpoint. He executed mentally, and more rapidly than others with a pen, the most complicated arithmetical questions. He was endowed with so tenacious a memory as to be able to repeat an entire piece of music, without making a mistake in a single note, after hearing the piece only once. When he was twelve he spoke and wrote—besides German—French and Italian; wrote comedies in Latin, and composed his first melodrama, La Finta semplice.

(To be continued.)

* From the Gazzetta Musicale di Milano.

Honni soit qui mal y pense.

(Copyright.)

Je rêvai que j'entendais la belle comtesse de Salisbury chanter une romance dont la musique était d'une douceur singulière; le rithme, un peu lent, d'une charme infini et mélodieux. Le refrain "Honni soit qui mal y pense" revenait à chaque instant et avait des sons larges et pleins, vibrants, comme les chants d'église.

Honni soit qui mal y pense.

Si du roi j'ai l'amitié,
Si de sa magnificence
J'ai partagé la moitié,
Honni soit qui mal y pense!

Si d'un regard attendri
D'Edouard la préférence
Désigne Salisbury,
Honni soit qui mal y pense!

S'il admire ma beauté,
Si par sa douce présence
Je sens mon cœur transporté,
Honni soit qui mal y pense!

Si j'accepte un vain honneur,
Si ma foi dans sa constance
Est mon espoir de bonheur,
Honni soit qui mal y pense!

Si de nos liens mortels
Secouant la dépendance
J'ai cru mes droits éternels,
Honni soit qui mal y pense!

Si je le vois chaque jour,
Si rien pour moi ne compense
La gloire de son amour,
Honni soit qui mal y pense!

Si le charme de sa voix
Seul apaise ma souffrance,
Me trouble quand je le vois,
Honni soit qui mal y pense!

Si je ne puis l'oublier,
Si je pleure son absence,
Sans jamais me délier,
Honni soit qui mal y pense!

Si de ses traits enchanteurs
J'ai gardé la ressemblance
Aux instants consolateurs,
Honni soit qui mal y pense!

S'il est l'âme de mon cœur,
Si toujours vers lui s'élance
Le prestige du vainqueur,
Honni soit qui mal y pense!

Si je reçois son baiser,
Si ma plus chère espérance
Par lui seul peut se briser,
Honni soit qui mal y pense!

Si tous les fiers courtisans
Acceptent pour récompense
Les débris de ses présents,
Honni soit qui mal y pense!

Si l'ordre qu'il a créé
A mes pieds prit sa naissance
D'un bleu ruban dénoué,
Honni soit qui mal y pense!

J. F.

Digitized by Google

ROYAL ALBERT HALL.

The opera concerts given at the Albert Hall are too choice and exclusive in their nature to diminish in attractiveness, and hence the attendance last Saturday afternoon was as gay and fashionable as it has ever been upon these occasions. The programme was compiled with similar indifference to novelty as heretofore; and those who do not countenance operas at the Operahouse were regaled with opera tunes, sung by opera artists clad in every day raiment, and hence, it may be presumed, to the pure and correctly constituted mind, were quite unexceptionable. All the luminaries of Mr Mapleson's company were there, Tietjens and Nilsson being, of course, the brightest. The former sang the great scena from the Freischütz as none besides herself can now sing it. She was in splendid voice, and was called into the orchestra three several times. Madame Nilsson chose more devotional matter, and charmed all ears to the encore point by her tender rendering of "Angels, ever bright and fair;" entering subsequently upon the more showy ground of Verdi, whose brilliant aria, "Ah! fors' è lui," is one of those vocal exercises in the exhibition of which she always covers herself with glory, and fills her worshippers with admiration. Madame Marie Roze, invariably graceful and interesting, sang, with as much dramatic feeling as the separation from the stage would allow, Meyerbeer's pathetic "Roberto, o tu che adoro;" and equally satisfactory was the performance of the aria from Rigoletto, "Caro nome," by Mdlle Elena Varesi, an artist of the highest pretension and accomplishment, and as unaffected as she is clever. This lady, later in the afternoon, was set down for Donizetti's "O luce di quest' anima," which, again, was a triumph of refined singing and brilliant fioriture—a great vocal exploit, in short, and one of the best remembered incidents of the concert. Madame Trebelli was likewise in fascinating voice, and was consequently heard to every advantage in "Di tanti palpiti," which she sang with her accustomed skill and exemplary command over the best arts of vocal decoration. The selection confided to the artists of the other sex was similar in class and quality to the above. Signor Gillandi sang Donizetti's "Spirto gentil" and Verdi's "Quest' e quella"—in each case well. Still better, so far as the apparent impression on the audience went, was Signor Campanini, whose delivery of the "Cujus animam" of Rossini, and Donizetti's "Di pescator," was, in both instances, everything that could be wished, and recalls were spontaneously awarded. Other well known operatic vocalities were supplied by Signor Catalani, Signor Brignoli, and Signor Galassi; and two of the most noticeable events of the day were the "Qui sdegno," from the Zauberflöte, and the "Chi mi dira," from Marta, by that safe and effective singer, Herr Behrens. The first section of the programme closed with the pleasant trio from the Matrimonio Segreto, "Le faccio un inchino," which was sung with such playful spirit by Mdlle Tietjens, Madame Nilsson, and Madame Trebelli, as to be cordially redemanded. This, however, owing to the dispersion of the band, could not be complied with, but the compliment was the same. The concert was directed by Mr W. G. Cusins. The special orchestral performances were the overtures to Egmont and Masaniello, and the March from Tannhäuser. D. H. H.

WAIFS.

Miss Emma Busby's Matinee Musicale.—Queen's Concert Rooms, Hanover Square, on Thursday, April 22, 1858, to commence at Half-past Three o'clock precisely. Vocalists—Miss Kemble, Mr Benson, Mr Santley. Instrumentalists—pianoforte, Miss Emma Busby; violin, Herr Molique; violoncello, Signor Piatti. Conductor—Mr W. G. Cusins.

ORGAN APPOINTMENT.—Mr Arthur J. Barth, of St James's Church, E.C., Organist and Choirmaster to Christ Church, Victoria Road, Kensington, W.

We read in the Gazette Musicale de Paris, that the rumour of the Conservatoire being in possession of certain unpublished compositions by Auber is without foundation.

Miss Lillie Albrecht, the youthful pianist, played Chopin's ballade in G minor, at Signor Rocca's concert given in Chester Square (by kind permission of the Misses Sumner), on Wednesday morning, and was highly complimented by the fair and accomplished hostesses.

Sig. Schira leaves England for Milan on the 20th inst. Bon voyage à l'illustre maître!

The representations of the "Oberammergau Passion" have been forbidden by the police at Berlin.

A valuable violoncello, lately in the possession of Herr Welhelmj, has been purchased by Herr Schuberth.

Miss Emma Barnett, the youthful and accomplished pianist, joins Mdme Lemmens-Sherrington's provincial tour in September.

Miss Florence Sanders (pupil of Mr W. H. Holmes), who recently made so successful a début at her own concert, was honoured by an invitation from the Lord Bishop of London and Miss Jackson to their reception and garden party at Fulham Palace, on Saturday last, where the young pianist had the honour of playing before a large and fashionable company.

The organ of Great Yarmouth parish church, one of the largest in England, was re-opened on Tuesday after extensive alterations. By the new arrangement, the organist sits in the chancel, the great organ is placed in the north chancel aisle, and the swell and choir organs in a separate case at a distance of some fifty feet in the south chancel aisle, both facing westward. The effect of the divided organ is a great assistance to antiphonal singing. At the morning service the sermon was preached by the Very Rev. the Dean of Norwich, who gave a most eloquent exposition of the important position occupied by music as an essential of church worship. The vicar, the Rev. Geo. Venables, pronounced a blessing. Collections were made amounting to more than £80.

ALEXANDRA PALACE.—On Monday next the Licensed Victuallers' School Fête will be held at the Palace, and this will include two dramatic performances, a vocal and instrumental concert, balloon ascent, cricket match, illumination of the Palace and grounds, and a ball in the evening. On Tuesday the company of the Vaudeville Theatre will give the only morning representation of Our Boys to take place this season; and on Wednesday and Thursday there will be an Exhibition of Hounds, to which Her Majesty the Queen and all the principal masters of fox hounds in the Kingdom will contribute. On Wednesday there will be a display of fireworks on a large scale; and on Saturday the great Scottish Fête will take place, under most distinguished patronage; besides which, a popular concert will be given.

Advertisements.

THE VOICE & SINGING

BY

ADOLFO FERRARI.

THE FORMATION AND CULTIVATION OF THE VOICE FOR SINGING.
Price 12s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, REGENT STREET, W.

"The remarkable qualities of this book are the author's freedom from conventional trammels, the strong sense of his opinions, and the novelty yet evident soundness of his precepts; his work has consequently come into general use as a manual of vocal instruction."—Daily News.

THE ART OF SINGING.

New Edition, Revised and Improved, of

A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR

THE VOICE.

By T. A. WALLWORTH.

A Method as used by the Author in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which he has cultivated the voices of his Pupils, Mdlle Alwina Valleria, Miss Lucy Franklein, and other successful Vocalists.
Full Music Size, price 7s.
London: HAMMOND & Co. (late JULLIEN), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his Residence, 36, Wimpole Street.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE,

For invigorating and enriching the voice, and removing affections of the throat.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE is universally acknowledged to be the most valuable remedy for sore throat, hoarseness and relaxed throat. It should always be taken before singing or reciting, as it strengthens the vocal organs. It is most extensively prescribed by the faculty for the throat and voice. Dr Lewis of Basingstoke says he finds them most efficacious, and in Dr Copland's Dictionary of Practical Medicine (Longman & Co.), they are strongly recommended at pages 872 and 1492. They are used by all the greatest vocalists and orators in Europe, and have been established over a quarter of a century. Testimonials from Patti, Grisi, Lablache, Santley, &c. Sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d, by all Chemists throughout the United Kingdom and the Colonies.

Digitized by Google

NEW SONGS.

THE LAST FAREWELL.

New Song by J. L. HATTON.

Sung by Mdlle ALBANI, at the Floral Hall Concerts, with the greatest possible success. In C and E. Price 4s.

NEW SONGS
BY ARTHUR SULLIVAN.

SWEETHEARTS. In A♭ and B♭. Sung by E. LLOYD 4s
THE JUDGE'S SONG. From Trial by Jury. Sung by Mr. FRED SULLIVAN 4s
TENDER AND TRUE. In E♭ and F. Sung by EDITH WYNNE 4s
THE DISTANT SHORE. In E♭, F, and G 4s
THOU ART WEARY. In D minor and F minor ... 4s
THOU'RT PASSING HENCE... ... ... 4s

NEW SONGS
BY VIRGINIA GABRIEL.

CLOVELLY. Words from "Songs for Sailors." Dedicated to H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh... ... 4s
SOWING AND REAPING. Sacred Song 3s
SHE CAME LIKE A DREAM. Sung by Madame ENRIQUEZ 3s
THE WHITE DOVE 2s 6d

NEW SONGS
BY FAVOURITE COMPOSERS.

YES AND NO ... ... LOUISA GRAY 3s
MY LADYE ... ... AMY COMPTON 3s
IN THE TWILIGHT HOURS „ 3s
ELSIE'S DREAM ... JOSEPH L. ROECKEL 3s
BESIDE THE SEA ... „ „ 3s
SUMMER WINDS ... „ „ 3s
SO LONG AGO... ... GEORGE BARKER 3s
NINETTE ... ... „ „ 3s
THE ENTREATY The Lady CLARENCE PAGET 3s
GLAMOUR ... „ „ 3s
SWEET LISETTE ... ... J. L. ROECKEL 3s
THE CHILDREN IN THE WOOD „ 3s

CHAPPELL & CO.,
50, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON.

ROYAL
ITALIAN OPERA.

PRODUCTION OF WAGNER'S
'LOHENGRIN.'

The Books of Airs (in Two Books), arranged for Pianoforte, with ad. lib. accompaniments for Flute, Violin, and Violoncello, by

W. HUTCHINS CALLCOTT

PRICE.

Solos ... ... 5*s. each.*
Duets ... ... 6*s.* „
Accompaniments ... ... 1*s.* „

LONDON:
HUTCHINGS & ROMER,
9, Conduit Street, Regent Street, W.

Digitized by Google

POPULAR DANCE MUSIC,

Elegantly Illustrated.

QUADRILLES.

		s.	d.
Auber (Melodies of)	C. Godfrey	4	0
Banting	Marriott	4	0
Blue Beard	C. Coote, jun.	4	0
Bridesmaids' (very easy)	W. Crawford	3	0
Bellevue	Marriott	4	0
Chilpéric	Marriott	4	0
Caledonians	Marriott	4	0
Caledonians (with the figures)	R. Coote	3	0
Carnarvon Castle (Welsh airs)	H. S. Roberts	4	0
Comic Tunes	C. Coote	4	0
Dolly Varden	Marriott	4	0
England and Wales	Marriott	4	0
Emerald Isle	H. S. Roberts	3	0
Formosa	W. C. Levey	4	0
Figaro	C. Coote, jun.	4	0
Happy Home	Marriott	4	0
Holidays	J. Pridham	3	0
Ireland	Marriott	4	0
Italy	Marriott	4	0
Irish	Marriott	4	0
L'ancien régime (French airs)	Goodban	4	0
Lady of Lorne	Alister M'Alister	4	0
Little Folks	S. Glover	4	0
Little Children's (very easy)	A. Miolan	3	0
My Darling (ditto)	A. Miolan	3	0
Masquerade Lancers	C. Coote, jun.	4	0
Merrymaking	J. T. Stone	4	0
Nemesis	J. Fitzgerald	4	0
New Lancers	H. J. Tinney	3	0
Orpheus (Offenbach)	C. Godfrey	4	0
Oriental	Marriott	4	0
Overture	C. Coote, jun.	4	0
Pretty Bird	C. Coote, jun.	4	0
Pretty Kitty	C. Coote, jun.	4	0
Punch and Judy	H. S. Roberts	4	0
Punch and Judy Lancers	H. S. Roberts	4	0
Patchwork	E. M. Lott	4	0
Princess Louise	C. Godfrey	4	0
Princess Louise Lancers	C. Godfrey	4	0
Rage of London	C. Coote	4	0
Snapdragon	Marriott	4	0
Sambo	J. Pridham	3	0
Scotland	Marriott	4	0
Twelfth Night	C. Coote, jun.	4	0
Valentine and Orson	C. de Mazières	3	0
Versailles	Marriott	4	0
Winter Nights	Marriott	4	0
Ye Merrie Old Times Lancers	F. Godfrey	4	0

WALTZES.

		s.	d.
Angela	C. Coote, jun.	4	0
Awfully Jolly	C. Coote, jun.	4	0
An der Themse Strand	Kéler Béla	4	0
Alpine	J. Pridham	4	0
Burlesque	C. Coote, jun.	4	0
Blush Rose	C. Godfrey	4	0
Belle brunette	Marriott	4	0
Cornflower	C. Coote, jun.	4	0
Christy's Jewel	C. Coote	4	0
Damask Rose	G. Richardson	4	0
Fairy Visions	C. Coote, jun.	4	0
Gleaners	Marriott	4	0
Golden Tresses	C. Coote	4	0
Joyous Life (Randegger)	Marriott	4	0
Kate Kearney	C. Coote	4	0
Kathleen Mavourneen	Montgomery	4	0
Kiss	C. Coote, jun.	4	0
Kellogg	Arditi	4	0
L'Ardita	Arditi	4	0
Love Dreams	C. Godfrey	4	0
Lover and the Bird	C. Godfrey	4	0
Lisette	Marriott	4	0
Language of Flowers	C. Coote, jun.	4	0
Leila	C. Coote, jun.	4	0
L'Innocence	C. Coote, jun.	4	0
Lilian	C. Coote, jun.	4	0
Little Coquette	C. Coote, jun.	4	0
Moët and Chandon (Songs of the season)	C. Coote, jun.	4	0
Marie Alexandrowna	C. Godfrey	4	0
Nemesis	C. Coote	4	0
Ours	J. M. Ball	4	0
Pauline	C. Coote, jun.	4	0
Primrose	G. Richardson	4	0
Punch and Judy	Marriott	4	0
Patchwork	E. M. Lott	4	0
Princess Louise	C. Godfrey	4	0
Princess Beatrice	C. Godfrey	4	0
Queen of the Fête	C. Coote, jun.	4	0
Song of Songs	C. Coote, jun.	4	0
Spring Blossoms	C. Coote, jun.	4	0
Songs of the Wood	H. J. Tinney	4	0
Summer Flowers	H. J. Tinney	4	0
Sing, birdie, sing	Marriott	4	0
Wood Nymph	Marriott	4	0

GALOPS.

		s.	d.
Archery	C. Coote, jun.	3	0
Breakneck	C. Coote	3	0
Croquet	C. Coote	3	0
Dixey's Land	C. Coote, jun.	3	0
Droshkee	Marriott	4	0
Entre Calais et Douvres	Kéler Béla	3	0
Fun of the Ball	Marriott	4	0
Formosa	W. C. Levey	3	0
Harmony	J. King	3	0
Hue and Cry	E. M. Lott	3	0
Irrepressible	W. Calcott	4	0
Jolly Dogs	Marriott	3	0
Nemesis	J. Fitzgerald	4	0
On and Off	C. Godfrey	4	0
Outpost	C. Godfrey	4	0
Princess Louise	C. Godfrey	3	0
Patchwork	E. M. Lott	3	0
Pekin	Marriott	3	0
Punch and Judy	Marriott	3	0
Roulette	C. Coote, jun.	3	0
Royal Ascot	Marriott	4	0
Trumpeters	C. Coote, jun.	3	0
Tintamarre	C. de Mazières	3	0
Tramp	C. Godfrey	3	0
Wildfire	E. M. Lott	3	0
Wind-up	C. Godfrey	4	0

POLKAS.

Blush Rose	C. Godfrey	3	0
Butterfly's Ball	C. Coote, jun.	3	0
Bacchus	Marriott	3	0
Cremorne	Marriott	3	0
Early in the morning	C. Coote	3	0
Grecian Bend	C. Coote	3	0
Jolly Dogs	Marriott	3	0
Kingfisher	C. Coote, jun.	3	0
Organ-grinder	Marriott	3	0
Orpheus	Marriott	3	0
Punch and Judy	Marriott	3	0
Sailor Boy	Marriott	3	0

SCHOTTISCHES.

Kettle Drum	C. Godfrey	3	0
Jenny Bell	H. C. Swatton	3	0
Nelly	C. Godfrey	3	0

POLKA-MAZURKAS.

Blue Bell	Marriott	3	0
Mignonette	C. Godfrey	3	0
Trebelli	H. Roubier	3	0

VARSOVIANAS.

Les Montagnards	H. Roubier	3	0
Polly Perkins	R. Coote	3	0

Most of the above Dances are published as Duets, and Accompaniments for any Instruments (from the Orchestral parts), price SIXPENCE each, may be had to nearly all.

LONDON: ASHDOWN & PARRY, HANOVER SQUARE, W.

Digitized by Google

Printed by HENDERSON, RAFF, AND FENTON, at No. 69, Marylebone Lane, Oxford Street, in the Parish of Marylebone, in the County of Middlesex.
Published by WILLIAM DUNCAN DAVISON, at the Office, 244, Regent Street, Saturday, June 26, 1875.

The Musical World.

(REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.)

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST, 20s. PER ANNUM,
Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to DUNCAN DAVISON & CO., 244, Regent Street, London, W

VOL. 53—No. 27. SATURDAY, JULY 3, 1875. PRICE { 4d. Unstamped. 5d. Stamped.

HER MAJESTY'S OPERA, THEATRE ROYAL, DRURY LANE.

Third Appearance of Mdlle Marguerite Chapuy.

THIS EVENING (SATURDAY), July 3rd, will be performed ROSSINI'S Opera, "IL BARBIERE DI SIVIGLIA." Il Conte Almaviva, Signor Panzetta; Figaro, Signor De Reschi; Il Dottore Bartolo, Signor Zoboli; Don Basilio, Signor Costa; Fiorello, Signor Rinaldini; Ufficiale, Signor Casaboni; Berta, Mdme Demeric-Lablache; and Rosina, Mdlle Marguerite Chapuy (her first appearance in that character and third appearance in England). Director of the Music and Conductor—Sir Michael Costa.

On MONDAY Evening next, July 5 (fourth appearance of Mdlle Marguerite Chapuy)—Extra Night—"LA TRAVIATA." Alfredo, Signor Fancelli; Germont Georgio, Signor Galassi; Il Barone Duphol, Signor Zoboli; Marchese d'Obigny, Signor Casaboni; Annina, Mdlle Bauermeister; and Violetta Vallery, Mdlle Marguerite Chapuy (her fourth appearance in England).

Sixth Night of "Lohengrin."

On TUESDAY next, July 6, WAGNER'S Opera, "LOHENGRIN." Elsa di Brabante, Mdme Christine Nilsson; Lohengrin, Signor Campanini; Federico di Telramondo, Signor Galassi; Enrico, Herr Behrens; Araldo, Signor Costa; and Ortruda, Mdlle Tietjens.

On THURSDAY next, July 8—Extra Night—Fifth appearance of Mdlle Marguerite Chapuy.

On SATURDAY, July 10—Mdme Christine Nilsson (for the last time this season) —"FAUST."

Doors open at Eight o'clock. To commence at Half-past Eight, except on the occasion of the performance of "Lohengrin" on Tuesday next, July 6, when the Opera will commence at Eight o'clock. Amphitheatre stalls, 7s. and 5s.; amphitheatre, 2s. Box-office open daily from Ten till Five, under the direction of Mr Bailey.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—NATIONAL MUSIC MEETINGS. THIRD SERIES of PUBLIC COMPETITIVE PERFORMANCES, July 1 to 10, 1875. Judges—Sir J. Benedict, Signor Arditi, and Mr W. G. Cusins. Tenor Solo Singers, Public Competition, This Day (SATURDAY). For details of each day's arrangements, see daily papers.

ALEXANDRA PALACE. — THURSDAY next, July 8, GRAND ITALIAN CONCERT, by the Artists and Chorus of the Royal Italian Opera Company.

THE LAST ITALIAN CONCERT OF THE SEASON.

MDME ADELINA PATTI.	SIGNOR NICOLINI.
MDLLE SCALCHI.	SIGNOR COTOGNI.
MDME VILDA.	SIGNOR CAPPONI.
MDLLE PROCH.	SIGNOR SCOLARI.
MDLLE SMEROSCHI.	SIGNOR CIAMPI.

INCREASED ORCHESTRA.

CONDUCTORS—Sir JULIUS BENEDICT, Sig. VIANESI, and Mr H. WEIST HILL. Reserved seats, 5s. and 2s. 6d., can be secured of all the Company's Agents. Admission, Half-a-Crown, or by the Guinea Season Ticket.

MR BRINLEY RICHARDS' MATINÉE, BEETHOVEN ROOMS, Harley Street, MONDAY next, at 3·30. Selections from Weber, Mendelssohn, Chopin, and Brahms, by Lady Amateurs (Pupils of Mr Brinley Richards). Vocalists—Miss Bagnall, Miss Lizzie Evans, Mr W. Shakespeare, and Mr Wadmore. Mr Brinley Richards will play "Rondo Piacevole" (Sterndale Bennett) and other works.

THE "TALISMAN" CHORUSES.

(IN BALFE'S GRAND OPERA.)

No. 1. Chorus of Arabs.
„ 2. Salve Regina (Trio and Chorus).
„ 3. Draw your Swords (Concerted Morceau).
„ 4. Hours and Hours Roll Slowly on (Chorus of Ladies).
„ 5. Thy Kinswoman Edith (Concerted Morceau).
„ 6. Farewell, my Beloved Edith (Finale to Act 2nd.)
„ 7. A Song to Merrie England.
(Part Song—Soprano, Tenor, Alto, and Bass.)
„ 8. Glorious England (Finale).

No collection of Choruses equal in merit to the above has been published for years. The great success with which the "TALISMAN" has been received is sufficient evidence of the beauty of the entire Opera, in which the Choruses form, of course, one of the most effective features.

London: DUFF & STEWART, 147, Oxford Street.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA, COVENT GARDEN.

THIS EVENING (SATURDAY), July 3rd, MOZART'S Opera, "DON GIOVANNI." Mdme Adelina Patti, Mdme Vilda, Mdlle D'Angeri; Signori Marini, Ciampi, Tagliafico, Capponi, and M. Maurel.

MONDAY next, July 5 (first time this season), MEYERBEER'S Grand Opera, "L'ETOILE DU NORD." On this occasion the Opera will commence at Eight. Caterina, Mdme Adelina Patti; Mdlles Smeroschi, Cottino, Bianchi; Signori Naudin, Ciampi, Sabater, Capponi, Tagliafico, and M. Faure.

TUESDAY next, July 6, RICHARD WAGNER'S Romantic Opera, "LOHENGRIN." Mdlles Albani, D'Angeri; M. Maurel, Herr Seideman, Signori Capponi, Carpi.

WEDNESDAY next, July 7, ROSSINI'S celebrated Opera, "SEMIRAMIDE." Mdme Vilda, Mdlle Scalchi; Signori Pavani, Capponi, and M. Faure.

THURSDAY next, July 8 (first time these three years), BEETHOVEN'S Opera, "FIDELIO." Leonora, Mdlle D'Angeri (her first appearance in that character); Mdlle Bianchi; Signori Capponi, Cotogni, Scolara, Sabater, and Marini.

FRIDAY next, July 9, MOZART'S Opera, "LE NOZZE DI FIGARO." Mdlles Albani, Bianchi, Zaré Thalberg; Signori Graziani, Ciampi, Pavani, Tagliafico, and M. Faure.

SATURDAY, July 10, GOUNOD'S Opera, "ROMEO E GIULIETTA." Mdme Adelina Patti, Mdlle Bianchi; Signori Graziani, Cotogni, Bagagiolo, Sabater, Tagliafico, Capponi, and Nicolini.

Floral Hall Concerts.

The LAST FLORAL HALL CONCERT of the Season will take place This Day (SATURDAY), July 3.

The Opera commences at Half-past Eight.

The Box Office, under the portico of the Theatre, is open from Ten to Five. Boxes from £2 12s. 6d. to £6 6s.; stalls, £1 1s.; pit tickets, 7s.; amphitheatre stalls, 10s. 6d. and 5s.; amphitheatre, 2s. 6d.

MR G. W. HAMMOND'S MORNING CONCERT, ST JAMES'S HALL, THURSDAY, July 8th, at Half-past Two o'clock. Tickets to be obtained of Mr G. W. HAMMOND, 44, Formosa Street, Maida Vale, W.

"NORAH'S MESSAGE."

MDME ADELINA PATTI will sing the new Irish Ballad, "NORAH'S MESSAGE," composed expressly for her by Sir JULIUS BENEDICT, at the Floral Hall Concert, Royal Italian Operahouse, This Day.

ORGAN.

TO BE SOLD, the ORGAN at St Barnabas Church, Douglas, Isle of Man. Enlarged in 1862; enclosed in Gothic Case about 15 ft. high and 8 ft. wide.; Two Manuals; Great Organ—Open Diapason, Stopped ditto, Dulciana, Clarabella, Harmonic Flute, Principal, Fifteenth, Twelfth, Sesquialtra; Swell Organ, CC—Double Diapason, Open ditto, Stopped ditto, Flute, Keraulophon, Principal, Fifteenth, Hautbois, Slide prepared, Grand Bourdon; Two Octaves of Pedals; Two Couplers; Three Composition Pedals. Price £80. It can be taken at once. This advertisement will not be repeated. Apply to J. B. NICHOLSON, 1, Auckland Grove, Douglas, Isle of Man.

PIANIST.—A Young Lady desires further ENGAGEMENTS. Good Reader and Accompanist. Willing to exchange Services for Singing Lessons.—E., 80, Carlton Street, Kentish Town.

MISS MATILDA CLARKE (Professor of the Pianoforte), Certificated Pupil of Sir JULIUS BENEDICT, Receives and Attends Pupils at Home every Morning from Ten till Two. Residence—No. 14, Walpole Street, Chelsea.

MADAME ESTELLE EMRICK (Contralto), open to ENGAGEMENTS for Concerts, Oratorios, Public and Private Soirées, &c. Address—33, Montagu Place, Russell Square.

MR PAUL SEMLER (Pianist) begs to announce that he can accept engagements for Balls, Soirées, &c. His repertoire consists of all the celebrated Dance Music of the day, as well as his own compositions. Terms on application, by letter, to be addressed to the care of Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & CO., Foreign Music Warehouse, 244, Regent Street, W.

THE GUITAR.—MDME SIDNEY PRATTEN, Teacher of this elegant Instrument, is in Town for the Season. For LESSONS and Private CONCERTS, address to her residence, 22A, Dorset Street, Portman Square, W.

Digitized by Google

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Under the immediate Patronage of
Her Most Gracious Majesty the QUEEN.
His Royal Highness the Prince of WALES.
Her Royal Highness the Princess of WALES.
His Royal Highness the Duke of EDINBURGH.
Her Royal Highness the Princess CHRISTIAN.
His Royal Highness the Duke of CAMBRIDGE.
Her Royal Highness the Duchess of TECK.
His Serene Highness the Duke of TECK.
and
His Royal Highness the Prince CHRISTIAN.

President—The Right Hon. The Earl of DUDLEY.

Principal—Professor MACFARREN, Mus. D. Cantab.

The ANNUAL PRIZE CONCERT will take place at ST JAMES'S HALL, on WEDNESDAY Morning, the 21st inst., at Two o'clock, on which occasion Her Royal Highness the Princess LOUISE (Marchioness of Lorne) has kindly consented to present the Prizes.

There will be a complete Band and Chorus, formed by the Professors and the late and present Students of the Academy. Conductor—Mr WALTER MACFARREN.

Admission, One Shilling. Stalls, 5s.; family tickets, to admit four persons, 16s.; balcony, 2s. 6d.; to be had at the Musicsellers; at St James's Hall; and at the Academy.

By Order, JOHN GILL, Secretary.

Royal Academy of Music,
4, Tenterden Street, Hanover Square.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.—Her Royal Highness the Princess LOUISE (Marchioness of LORNE) has most kindly consented to present the PRIZES at the Annual Concert, on Wednesday, the 21st inst.

By Order, JOHN GILL, Secretary.

MDLLE E. TATE has the honour to announce that her CONCERT will take place on SATURDAY Evening, 24th July, 1875, at ST GEORGE'S HALL, Langham Place, Regent Street. (Mdlle E. TATE, who, by command of Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen, had the honour recently to perform at Osborne, was presented by H.R.H. the Princess Beatrice with a valuable Watch ornamented with diamonds.) Vocalists—Mdlle Victoria Bunsen, Mdlle Marie Duval, Mdme May Rolt; Mr Burleigh Tesseman, Herr G. Werrenrath, Mr Wadmore. Instrumentalists: Pianoforte—Mdlle E. Tate and Mdlle Felicia Bunsen. Violin—Herr Wiener. Violoncello—Herr Daubert. Conductors—Mr Sidney Naylor, Herr Ganz, and Herr Schuberth. Stalls, 10s. 6d.; reserved seats, 5s.; balcony, 2s. 6d.; admission, One Shilling. Tickets to be had of Stanley Lucas, Weber & Co., 84, New Bond Street; at all the principal Musicsellers; and of Mdlle E. TATE, 62, Fleming Road, Kennington Park. Concert to commence at Eight; carriages may be ordered for Ten o'clock. The Grand Pianoforte from Messrs Erard's.

MR PAUL SEMLER (Pianist) begs to announce that he can accept engagements for Balls, Soirées, &c. His repertoire consists of all the celebrated Dance Music of the day, as well as his own compositions. Terms on application, by letter, to be addressed to the care of Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., Foreign Music Warehouse, 244, Regent Street, W.

MUSIC DEGREES.—Qualified Ladies and Gentlemen desirous of obtaining the Doctor or Bachelor of Music Degree should communicate with MEDICUS, 46, King Street, Jersey, England.

PIANOFORTE BUSINESS, with the Goodwill and Stock-in-Trade, situate in a Market Town in the Eastern Counties, to be DISPOSED of, by order of the Executrix. Established and carried on by the same person for upwards of 35 years. There is a good Tuning and Hiring connection. For particulars, apply to Mr FREDERICK LUCAS, 26, Maddox Street, London, W.

MEDITATIONS FOR THE PIANOFORTE.
By IGNACE GIBSONE.
BOOK III.
(Dedicated to J. W. DAVISON)
Is Just Published, and Contains:—

Pastorale.	In the Highlands.
Les Bergères de Sorrento.	Nuit.
Shepherd Dance.	The Post.

The Book complete, price 10s. 6d.; or each Number separate, 3s.
HUTCHINGS & ROMER, 9, Conduit Street, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.
TWO SONGS.
"EVENING IN AUTUMN." Words by R. HARE, Esq. .. price 3s.
(Dedicated to Miss E. KNAPTON.)
"WAITED AND WATCHED." Words by ORLANDO WRIGHT price 3s.
(Dedicated to his friend, W. MAYBRICK, Esq.)
Composed by W. F. BANKS.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

BRIGHTON CONCERT AGENTS,
PIANOFORTE AND MUSICSELLERS,
LYON & HALL,
WARWICK MANSION.

Just Published.
"MY LADY SLEEPS."
SERENADE FOR VOICE AND PIANO.
By IGNACE GIBSONE.
DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.
"HOME, SWEET HOME."
TRANSCRIBED FOR THE HARP SOLO.
By CHARLES OBERTHUR.
Price 4s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

VOCAL EXERCISES.
Composed by FRANK MORI.
Price 4s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.
N.B.—These Vocal Exercises, as taught by FRANK MORI, are invaluable both to Students and Professors.

"WITH MOONLIGHT BEAMING."
DUET
For Equal Voices.
The Music Composed and Dedicated to
MISS HEGINBOTHAM and MISS MOWER,
By H. KUSTER.
Price 3s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"OUR DARLING."
SONG,
(in C and in E flat).
The Words by ETTY LOVELL.
The Music by J. HALLETT SHEPPARD.
Price 3s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

NORAH'S MESSAGE.

SUNG BY

MADME ADELINA PATTI

WITH DISTINGUISHED SUCCESS AT

THE FLORAL HALL.

THE POETRY BY

THE LADY JOHN MANNERS.

THE MUSIC BY

SIR JULIUS BENEDICT.

Price 4s.

"A new and pretty Irish ballad, abounding in sentiment and feeling, and precisely the kind of thing desired by the mass of amateurs, was most delightfully sung by Mdme Adelina Patti. It is called 'Norah's Message.'"—Morning Advertiser.

LONDON:
DUNCAN DAVISON & CO., 244, REGENT STREET.

Digitized by Google

THE LAST PERFORMANCE OF IL BARBIERE.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

SIR,—Weary, weary in mind and body, I reached London a few days ago for my midsummer holidays. I was in truth weary of everything and everbody, including my precious self, and, above all things, of music. Do you wonder at it? You will not, when I tell you music and I have not parted company since last summer's vacation. It has never been out of my ears; ever persecuting and worrying me, driving me at last to madness. Day after day, week after week, and month after month, I have been teaching music from early morning to protracted night; my only change of occupation, playing on a church organ. What a relief! Grandaire Tallis, instead of baby Hamilton; the see-saw of Rogers in D, substituted for Czerny's "Hundred and one;" and Gibbon's gloomy game of first-follow-first, for Stamatz's brain-softening exercises. Have I become old?—if so, it is prematurely; for I only reckon forty-five years: the present is but the junction year, when one changes carriages to commence the downward journey of life. In former seasons I was never tired of music; always ready for a wrestle with the divine muse; and, like the patriarch, never willing to let the angel go without a blessing. Then, on my arrival for my holidays, I rushed off to hear some new anthem by Goss, at St Paul's; to the Temple, to revel in the exquisite extempore playing of Hopkins; or to St Sepulchre's, to admire Cooper making the crooked fugue straight, and all the rough places of Bach plain. This year, alas! I was compelled to forswear music—to shun it altogether. I got into that bewildered state that I could not tell music from noise or noise from music. Few, perhaps you will say, ever can. If so, cannot you, Mr Editor, procure a commission to establish the limits and mark the boundaries of the opposing and antagonistic realms of noise and music? Others, as well as myself, I fancy, mistake one for the other, and need a hard and fast line of demarcation. However, in my case, all sounds were hopelessly mixed together. My baby's screaming in the nursery, and my daughter's singing in the drawing-room, were the same horrors to me; the bellow of a calf, and my son Peter's bass voice, seemed identical; and the church, with its intoning curate, surpliced choir and pealing organ, was as hideous as the cattle market at fair time. In fact, chaos fell upon my ears. I resolved, therefore, this year's trip should be spent out of doors. I would flee the church, concert-room, and opera-house, as if the plague rioted therein. Alas! my plan was folly, and my efforts were vain. I climbed to the top of the monument, and still was weary; I took the penny steamer in the morning, and returned by the underground railway in the evening, and found no relief; the water-works of the Crystal Palace failed to refresh me; the fire-works at the Alexandra sent through me no thrill of excitement; for days I rode on the top of omnibuses through the streams of humanity which rage and war in the city: yet the waters of life passed on, and left my poor shattered hulk high and dry. I tried to go up in a balloon, but they would not let me; instead of this I went to the docks with a tasting-order, and strange to say, the next morning I was more than ever depressed. All the London monuments I saw, and all the cemetries I visited, without receiving one cheerful throb. I tried the tent meetings of the arousing Christian Yankees;—why did I go, knowing that the nasal harmonium, and the more nasal singer, would grate their vulgar discords on my ear? I did better at the "Zoo." Christians may gather much of sweetness and light from the representative congregation in Regent's Park.

In this crisis of my dreariness I received a message from an old pupil, a charming creature. "Come, weary one," she said, "come sail and rest on the bosom of the waters of the upper Thames." I bought fishing tackle, borrowed an Izaak Walton, and rushed by Great Western to Marlow, where my hospitable pupil was staying with a noble relative. A hearty welcome greeted me, but the skies frowned inauspiciously. A Scotch mist, relieved by tropical down-pours, blurred the scene as if I looked upon it through tears. Too wet for boating, I posted myself, with rod and line under a bridge, to fish; until soaked by the driving rain, I felt too weary even for that ravishing excitement. The rain ceased, the clouds cleared off, and the sun shone on meadow, wood, and river, making the dripping landscape as fresh and bright as a newly painted picture, wet with varnish. Boats were soon filled: some rowed, others steered. In company of a reverend chaplain, a philosopher, a painter, and a dignitary of the law, I sailed down the winding river to Cookham, where the woods, of many tinted leaf, were mirrored in the glassy stream, like a mother's loving face reflected in the clear eye of her smiling child. We landed and roamed the woods, inhaling the pure moist air, laden with sweet odours from lime trees, and a thousand blossoming flowers. The winding paths led us now to openings which unfolded a panorama of exquisite beauty, and then brought us to a shut-in dell, where I fain would have built me a hermitage. When I re-entered the boat, I felt my soul struggling with the weariness which so long had oppressed me; through my deadened nature was throbbing a returning life. The boats glided past banks unceasingly varied in form and dress. Soon the sky was overcast, and the rain poured. Our boatman brought us beneath an over-hanging tree for shelter; then I noticed he was a young waterman of the jolly sort, and handsome type. The ladies, my pupil and her mama, evidently looked upon him with a favourable eye. He certainly had an extatic gleam in his eye that would have made the fortune of a stage tenor; lips full and very ripe, revealing, by a smile that filled his entire face, teeth both regular and brilliant. He was modest about his charms until one of the company, prompted by the evil one, asked him to sing a song; then he grinned, shambled on his seat, and gave himself the airs of an insipid school girl, and at last burst forth into song. Gloom and despair returned in tenfold force upon me, and the climax was reached when he sang "Bosom a thorn," a song I had taught daily, for years. On landing, my despair had given way to weariness; a weariness deeper, darker and heavier than I had ever before experienced, and I immediately hastened back to London. I took to pictures and did all the galleries. I sprained my spine at the National Gallery, cricked my neck at the South Kensington, got a headache at Suffolk Street, and blinded myself at the Royal Academy. Darwin must direct nature to develop in man necks as long as giraffes', or put the eyes a couple of inches higher in the head, before exhibitions will be adapted to man's capabilities. Until that time I have sworn never to visit another gallery, without the pictures be placed on rollers—such as those used in panoramas—that I may sit and gaze in comfort, whilst the miles of canvas pass before me.

"Let us go to Il Barbiere to-night," said a stranger near me in a public dining-room. I started at the proposal, thinking it made to me; finding another person was addressed, I shrugged my shoulders, smiled sardonically, lit my cigar and strolled into the teeming Strand. Still, amidst the uproar of traffic, a voice within me, as coaxing as Figaro's, said "Come." No! I certainly would not. Then memory called up the Bartolo of Jupiter Lablache; the Almaviva of Adonis Mario; and the graphic Formes's Basilio. The melodies of the opera, sounding in my ears, were as silken cords drawing me gently, though against my will, towards the Opera house. I yielded, and found myself in the gallery of Drury Lane Theatre, hot, flushed, and panting. "What wicked imp possessed me," I muttered to myself, "thus to put my head in the very jaws of my devouring foe?" From my Olympian height I gazed down on mortals. Far below the chandelier, which appeared like a constellation of stars hung in mid heaven, I saw the band assemble. Sainton took his seat, looking a little whiter, but as handsome quite; Weist Hill, Willy, and Lazarus passed to their several places amidst others entirely unknown to me. They tapped applause on their fiddle backs and desks as Sir Michael Costa entered. God bless me!—he conducted Il Barbiere when I last heard it, now twenty-five years ago. Bravo! bravissimo!—he has held well his own against "the enemy." Singers may come, and players may go; may he go on for ever. At the motion of his bâton the band dashed away at the overture, and proved every bit as vigorous, sonorous, and masterful as of yore. The music called and held my attention, and awoke in me the same kind of interest as the "pop" of a champagne cork would to a thirsty soul. The curtain rose, and the gay Almaviva serenaded his mistress; then Figaro bounded on the stage with rattling jargon, and Rosina peeped from her balcony, soon to step down to the foot lights, to sing "Una voce." Bartolo was knocked about hither and thither, and befooled as egregiously as all old fools should be. Basilio brought on his elongated hat and voice; and the roguish plotting of Figaro animated the characters, and sent them into a whirl of excitement and gay distraction.

Digitized by Google

As an unexpected reprieve and release from gaol, as a sudden restoration from sickness to health, or as the return of the glorious sun to one shipwrecked in gloomy night, so Rossini's music came upon me. The brain lost its torpor, the feelings their deadness, and the passions their insensibility. My heart throbbed, and the tingling life coursed through my veins; tears of joy flowed from my eyes, for I had been dead and was now alive again.

What wrought the cure? Was it Beaumarchais' clever story? the beauty of the mise-en-scène? the voices of the singers? or the excellence of the orchestra? No, none of these things. It was simply Rossini's genius that worked in me the change. His music assuredly has the qualities calculated to arouse the faded spirit and the weary mind. It is bright as sunshine, clear as day, refreshing as Summer showers, vivacious as youth, sparkling as nectar, lovely as flowers, sweet as the sweet south that breathes upon a bank of violets, cheerful as the best of goodly company, and inspiring as the breath of the gods. In spite of my nostrum for weariness being scouted, on account of its simplicity and age, still I venture to recommend the Barber as Doctor; and I gratefully record Figaro's last performance as a perfect cure, wrought on yours obediently,

A. Weary Musician.

THE SCHLESWIG-HOLSTEIN MUSICAL FESTIVAL.*

Concerning the compositions selected, namely, Handel's Samson, on the first day, June 27th, and—besides two grand airs by Mozart—Schumann's A minor Concerto, Bach's "Chaconne," the Oberon Overture, Mendelssohn's Walpurgisnacht, and, to conclude, his Symphony in C minor, there is no need to descant at length, as they are so well known. The programme was, evidently, drawn up with taste and intelligence. The composers of the different works who were introduced to the public are leading representatives of music. Handel's Samson is especially well calculated to attract and excite the enthusiasm of the great masses, as well as of a more refined public, and to inspire them with a lasting interest in the grand style of oratorio. The singers numbered nearly 300 sopranos and contraltos, 57 tenors, and 84 basses. The orchestra included 32 first and second violins, 12 tenors, 12 violoncellos, and 9 double-basses, with the necessary wind instruments, kettle-drums, and trumpets. From the list we learn that among the instrumentalists were many well-known music directors, Court musicians, Capellmeister, and Court and other Concertmeister. Herr J. Boie, the popular Concertmeister of Altona, who, with his brother-in-law, Herr von Königslöw, Concertmeister from Cologne, acted as leader, and rendered important service in the formation of the orchestra. He conducted, also, the Oberon Overture, and several smaller things on the second day, when Joachim appeared as a soloist, and played Bach's Chaconne. The ladies' chorus was placed above a large niche at the south end of the concert-hall; the middle of the platform was occupied by the orchestra, while behind them, in the niche, were ranged tenors and basses. In front, and visible from every side, stood Joachim, on an elevated tribune. During the rehearsals the great artist frequently expressed his astonishment and admiration at the admirable way in which the choruses had been trained. At the last rehearsal of Samson, when the audience burst out, on one occasion, into a storm of applause, he actually could not refrain from joining in it himself. The directors of the various associations who, with the members under their command, had worked so hard during the winter, now sang with the rank and file. The solo vocalists were well selected, including Henschel and Krolop, from Berlin, as Manoah and Harapha; Herr von Witt, from Dresden, as Samson; Mad. Schmitt, from Sweden, as Delilah; and Kol Kling, from Schwalbach, as Micha, who all sustained their characters, from a musical point of view, exceedingly well. Especially effective was the chorus of Israelites, "Hör', Jakob's Gott, Jehovah, hör'; Manoah's air, "Wie willig trägt mein Vaterherz;" the chorus at the overthrow of the Temple; the funeral march, which blends so wonderfully with the funeral chorus of the Israelities; and the mighty final chorus, "Laut stimme ein, du ganze Himmelschaar!" Another particularly effective piece was the air, "Kommt all ihr Seraphim," preceding the above chorus, and sung by Mad. Schmitt, with obbligato trumpet accompaniment. Such trumpeters as he who played this accompaniment are, we should fancy, scarce. It was a contest between the human voice and the trumpet to see which was the more beautiful. The feeling of satisfaction, that a great success had been achieved with the oratorio, was universal. The phrase: Holsatia non cantat, was for ever refuted. The performance of the chorus proved that the members of the latter might enter the lists with anyone. Even during the rehearsals, the admirable composition of the programme, and the decided conviction that everything would go well, filled the singers, the instrumentalists, and the public with joyous confidence. This feeling constituted the fundamental tone at the meetings held, sometimes at Bellevue, in sight of the sea, and sometimes in the garden near the Concert-Hall. To this we must add the favourable weather, with its splendid sunshine during the Festival, and the kindness of the people of Kiel, who overwhelmed us with attention, and received with warm cordiality the visitors, though, in many cases, the latter were utter strangers to them. The Kielites are ambitious. The victory achieved by Shleswig-Holstein, with her first Musical Festival, redounded to the honour of them all, though the very high prices of admission necessarily prevented many of them from taking part in the proceedings. But the reader must not suppose from this that the Festival was not well attended. People flocked in from far and wide. Of the 2,500 seats not one was vacant at the performances themselves, and the hall was certainly quite as well filled at the rehearsals, admission to which was also paid for. After the performance of Samson, a few ladies of the chorus flung Joachim some flowers, and, immediately afterwards, there was a rain of flowers from every side. This scene was repeated, with even more enthusiasm, on Monday, the 28th, when it became known it was Joachim's birthday. He was received with a perfect bombardment of flowers; and a laurel wreath, together with the most splendid bouquets, were laid upon his music-stand. The chorus had an easier task on the 28th than on the previous day. They were engaged only in the Walpurgisnacht. The rehearsal in the morning afforded the first real opportunity for Joachim to show his talent as a conductor. The C minor Symphony was again gone through with the most scrupulous care, all the necessary delicate touches of light and shade being frequently repeated two or three times. The performance began at 6 p.m., and lasted till 10. After the Oberon Overture, executed with magic beauty, the two great features were Joachim's violin-playing, and the rendering of Schumann's A minor concerto, by Madame Clara Schumann. As regards myself, I am not particularly fond of pianoforte concertos, but I must confess I never heard anything finer than this exhibition of Madame Clara Schumann's, in which full justice was done to every tone and to every note. The lady played superbly. The choruses in the Walpurgisnacht were, like those on the day before, magnificently sung, especially the final chorus: "Dein Licht, wer kann es rauben?" The whole wound up with the C minor Symphony, which evoked a perfect storm of applause. Joachim's directions were punctually carried out. All the performers seemed electrified, and, from the gentlest pianissimo to the proud and lofty song of triumph in the fourth movement, everything was executed to perfection. The festively decorated hall was now deserted by the audience, many of whom had agreed to pass the evening together. Upwards of eight hundred ladies and gentlemen sat down to supper, the meal being enlivened by numerous toasts. Among the persons who received special invitations to the Festival were the Admiral and other Officers of the American Squadron lying in Kiel harbour. The first Schleswig-Holstein Musical Festival will certainly not be the last, but no one who was present will ever forget the memorable days of the 26th, 27th, and 28th June, 1875.

* Abridged from the Schwäbischer Merkur.

Digitized by Google

JOHN HULLAH SPEAKS.

Paper read (June 17, 1875) at the Society of Arts' Rooms, before the members of the Metropolitan Schools' Choral Society, by JOHN HULLAH.

(Continued from page 467.)

Now it is not merely possible, but far from difficult, to get even very young children to utter any sound or short succession of sounds within the limits of a given scale, the whole extent of which they have travelled over, identifying each sound with the syllable by which it is called.

Further, it is not merely possible, but far from difficult, to get even very young children to give to sounds certain simple proportionate lengths, equally with the sounds themselves, at will.

I shall not stop now to show you how I should set about making them do these two things; for I have a good deal to say to you before I shall have done. I fear I must, after the manner of an eminent medical practitioner of former days, tell you, if you want to know this, to "read my book"—my new book, "Time and Tune in the Elementary School," the first twelve chapters of which are devoted to these subjects. I will only call attention, before I go further, to the fact that these powers of recognizing and distributing sound of which I have been speaking are wholly independent of musical notation, and that I think they should to some extent be acquired before the study of musical notation is attempted. Do not think lightly of these elementary accomplishments. They are elementary, but they are also all important. The child who can sound a note when it is asked for, or name it when it is sounded, and give it its due proportion as a crotchet or a minim when told to do so, or say whether of these two it is when that proportion is given to it, is already something of a musician, and has already some of that personal and inalienable possession of which I have already spoken. Eventually, of course, the scholar must study musical notation, otherwise he will remain as little self-dependent as that helpless musical voluptuary, the singer "by ear." But a good deal may be done in music itself—vocal music at least—before musical notation need be dealt with at all; I mean musical notation as it appears on paper, for I still recommend the use, and the early use, of the ladder representing the scale with which some of you are familiar, and the "manual stave," my own estimation of the use of which, after being for a time somewhat shaken, has been completely and entirely restored.

And here I take the opportunity of stating, not for the first time, my belief, strengthened by every year's experience as a teacher and as an examiner, that the difficulties of music in no way arise from, have no connection whatever with, musical notation. Those difficulties I am convinced are inseparable from music itself, the practice or production of which, beyond the most rudimentary stages, nothing ever has, nothing ever will, make easy. The unembarrassed utterance of two following sounds a tritone apart, or the accurate production of a series of syncopated notes, for instance, must be preceded by a good deal of thoughtful practice. Write, express such musical ideas as these as you will, you cannot abridge this practice, for the same student, by a minute, or diminish the necessity for its being thoughtful practice. Those who seek to facilitate the study of music by the substitution of one notation—no matter what—for another—no matter what—confound the ideas, facts, sentiments which make up music with the expression or representation of them.

But the principal matter on which I have to speak to you is still unapproached.

I have already to-night—not to say on many former occasions—declared or implied my belief in the value of sol-faing. If there be any present who were ever members of my classes in St Martin's Hall they will remember that, even in my First Upper School, I never allowed this practice to be laid aside. Every new work, and every old one that wanted revisal, was with us sol-faed before being sung. The advantages of this preliminary process are many; more indeed than I have time to specify. But the supreme advantage of sol-faing is that it obliges those who do it to give attention to what they are doing, and to do it for themselves. A member of a large chorus gifted with a good ear and a good memory may take part in twenty oratorios without ever looking at the book he holds in his hand. He can pick up from his neighbours, more skilled or more diligent than himself, bit by bit, and by ear, what he ought to make out by eye; and, doing this, he remains as much or as little "a musician," after his twentieth oratorio as he was before he took part in the first. Were he obliged to sol-fa, this would be impossible. By means of the good ear and memory with which I have credited him, he can learn, catch up—or any passage as tuneable, after one or two hearings. But if he be obliged to give to these sounds their names—on whatever system—he must look at them; and sooner or later, in spite of himself, he must learn to connect them with the sounds for which they stand. With children this connection is early and easily established; and if they begin early enough the sol-fa syllables become to them a means of appreciating, not only the relative but, more or less approximately, even the absolute pitch of sounds.

You all know that there are two ways of using the sol-fa syllables; one, by far the older, in which the tonic of every major scale and the third of every minor are called Do; the other in which the note C, in whatever scale or under whatever circumstances, is always called Do, the note D Re, and so on. I have discussed the comparative merits or advantages of these two uses at considerable length in my first Report (for 1872), and again in the preface to the book which I have already brought under your notice. I cannot do this again to-night. But I will tell you something which I did not know when I wrote that report and (much later) that preface. The organists and music-masters of our cathedral and choral schools are much more interested perhaps than any persons living in ascertaining the readiest as well as the best methods of teaching their choir boys to read music. In many of those schools, once, almost without exception, strong-holds of the movable Do, that time-honoured use of the sol-fa syllables has been lately given up, and the use of the fixed Do substituted for it. In all the principal London choirs I find this is so; at St Paul's, at Westminster Abbey, at Her Majesty's Chapel Royal, St James's, at the Temple, and at Lincoln's Inn the choir boys are taught by the fixed Do. Of the provincial choirs I have less information; but the fixed Do is certainly used at York and Ripon, and, I believe, at Lincoln, Norwich, and some others. But on this point I am not assured. The venerable organist of the last-named cathedral, Dr Buck, who, during a professional career, extending, I believe, over nearly seventy years, has been the teacher of more professional musicians than any contemporary, showed me, the last time I was at Norwich, a set of my "Large Sheets" hanging up in his class-room, from which he said he had made every generation of his boys practise something every day since he had had them, i.e., since they were first published. It is not that the learned and skilful musicians who are at the head of these choirs are ignorant of what is to be said in favour of the old system; but they find it will not work—that it will not bear the pressure which modern music puts upon it. But that the movable Do is an imperfect instrument does not prove that the fixed Do, as it has up to a recent time been used, is a perfect one. I have long had doubts on this matter, and have latterly come to regard these as certainties. I have now to explain to you—and it was chiefly with the view of doing this that I have asked you to meet me to-night—certain changes in the manner of using the fixed Do, which, I think, should remove all reasonable objections thereto, and which, being adopted, would assure to it all the advantages claimed for the older method. I shall do this most briefly by reading a few passages from the preface to the book in which these changes are worked out.

(To be continued.)

MUSIC AT SOUTH AUSTRALIA.

(From our Correspondent.)

The Allen Opera Company is playing here to fine houses. Last night Martha was the opera given, and Miss Alice May was nearly smothered with bouquets at the conclusion of "The last rose of summer." Mr Beaumont received a flattering reception on his first appearance; and now another star is about joining it—Signor Susini. At the conclusion of the season the company proceeds to Melbourne, and opens at the Operahouse on the 7th of June. There is a probability of its going to India about the time of the Prince of Wales's visit, and afterwards to China.

Adelaide, May 15, 1875.

Digitized by Google

RICHARD WAGNER, AND HIS RING OF THE NIBLUNG.

(From the "New Quarterly Magazine.")

(Continued from page 459.)

Before resuming my analysis,. scene by scene, of Wagner's drama, I will anticipate a few facts which gradually transpire in the course of the dialogue, but which I think it better for the reader to learn here. Wotan, to know the causes of his approaching doom, has descended to the mystic dwelling of Erda, whom, by the charm of his wooing love, he has compelled to disclose the future to him. Told of the danger threatening him if ever Alberich regain possession of the ring, Wotan thinks of means to defend his realm against the powers of darkness. The fruit of his and Erda's love, a beautiful maiden, hight Brynhild, with eight of their half-sisters, is chosen by Wotan, as Valkyrie, that is, "chooser of the elected." It is the duty of these maidens to excite valiant men to strife and battle, and to carry the souls of the fallen heroes up to Walhall, there to live in joy with All-father Wotan, and at the same time to protect his high hall, from the enemy's attack. Still more anxious is Wotan to regain possession of the magic ring, or at least to see it wrested from his enemies' power. Being precluded by his plighted promise from acting directly or indirectly towards this desired issue, Wotan discerns his only hope to rest in the free action of a god-inspired hero, who, guided by his own courage, and regardless of laws human or divine, would win the treasure. To create such a hero, Wotan has assumed the name of Volsung, a valorous man, and to him a human wife has born twin children, Siegmund and his sister Sieglinde. With his son he has roamed through the wild forest, both of them clad in the skins of wolves, a feature which also occurs in the Volsunga-saga, where, however, a sort of transformation into a wolfish nature seems to be indicated. Suchwise, the god prepares Siegmund for the great task assigned to him. From his mother and sister he has been separated in earliest childhood.

The orchestral introduction to the Valkyrie is of a wild stormy character. The incessant triplets in the violin are suggestive of the hail and rain beating on the leaves of tall trees, while the rolling figure in the bass seems to indicate the angry voice of the thunder. When the curtain rises we see the interior of a house roughly built of timber. A fire is burning on the hearth. In the centre of the empty room is seen the stem of a mighty ash, the foliage of which spreads above the roof. Siegmund enters in a state of exhaustion, and sinks down by the hearth. Sieglinde comes from an interior chamber, and gazes, astonished, on the stranger. Observing his exhausted state, she refreshes him with water; both look in each other's eyes with increasing though hardly conscious interest. To Siegmund's questions Sieglinde replies that he sees before him the wife of Hunding, whose arrival is soon announced by the sound of his horse's hoofs. On entering the room, Hunding at once notices the resemblance between the pair, but without remark bids his guest welcome. Siegmund is asked to tell his adventures, and, beginning with his early life, he narrates how, coming home from the forest, his father and he found their home destroyed by enemies, the mother killed, the sister carried off; how after that they lived the lives of outlaws, at war with the world, till at last his father was taken from him. Separated from him in battle, Siegmund had followed his trace everywhere, but at last finding an empty wolf-skin, his father's dress, concluded him to be slain. His last fight, Siegmund continues, has been to protect a maiden of their own kin, who wished to wed her to an unloved man. Overpowered by their number, and after his spear and shield had been broken, he had been compelled to fly and seek rest for the night in Hunding's house. "For one night," his host replies, "my house shall be thy refuge, but to-morrow see to thy weapon, for thou shalt pay with thy life for the dead." For Hunding himself is one of the tribe with whom Siegmund has fought that day.

Siegmund, left alone in the darkening room, muses over his threatening fate: without means of defence, he has fallen into the hands of his bitterest enemy. Suddenly the fire falls together, and from the sparks a sharp light is thrown on the spot in the ash-stem which Sieglinde, on being driven from the room by her husband, has pointed out with her look, and where now the hilt of a sword is seen more plainly. Soon Sieglinde reappears. Her husband, she says, lies in deepest slumber, owing to the night-drink she has mixed for him. She is come to show a weapon to her friend—a weapon destined only for the bravest of the brave. The description of her wedding to Hunding, to whom she has been sold against her will, and the account she gives of the mysterious weapon in the ash-tree, tallies almost literally with the Volsunga-saga. I therefore prefer to let the old tale speak for itself, interpreted to the English reader by the incomparable translation of Mr W. Morris and Mr Magnusson. The scene lies in Hunding's house, in the identical room in which Siegmund and Sieglinde have met:—

"The tale tells that great fires were made endlong the hall, and the great tree aforesaid stood midmost thereof; withal folk say that, where, as men sat by the fires in the evening, a certain man came into the hall unknown of all men; and such like array he had, that over him was a spotted cloak, and he was barefoot, and had linen breeches knit tight even unto the bone, and he had a sword in his hand as he went up to the Branstock, and a slouched hat upon his head: huge he was, and seeming-ancient and one-eyed.* So he drew his sword and smote it into the tree-trunk, so that it sank in up to the hilt; and all held back from greeting the man. Then he took up the sword and said: Whoso draweth this sword from this stock shall have the same as a gift from me, and shall find in good sooth that never bare he better sword in hand than this is. Therewith out went the old man from the hall, and none knew who he was or whither he went. Now men stand up, and none would fain be the last to lay hand to the sword, for they deemed that he would have the best of it who might first touch it; so all the noblest went thereto first, and then the others one after other; but none who came thereto might avail to pull it out, for in nowise would it come away howsoever they tugged at it."†

"This is the sword," Sieglinde continues (in the drama); "for none but thee was it destined." But soon these warlike thoughts give way to tenderer emotions. An irresisible power seemed to draw the pair together when first they gazed in each other's eyes. Now that they are alone together in a splendid night in spring, their hearts beat stronger and stronger; closely they stand in each other's embrace. The lyrical pathos of the situation has here given Wagner an opportunity for a song of spring and love sweeter, perhaps, than ever music and poetry combined to bring forth. Not being able to give in words an idea of the two arts united, I will at least write down the verses, availing myself of the English version, contained in Mr Alfred Forman's rendering of the Niblungen drama (printed for private circulation):—

"SIEGMUND. Winter storms have waned—at the wakening May, and mildly spreads—his splendour Spring;
he buoys himself—on bending breezes wonders wake—upon his way;
over field and forest—floats his freshness,
wide and lightening—laughs his look.
He sounds in boundless singing—of buoyant birds,
sweetening breath—his bosom swells:
from his blood are warmed and wakened—wildering blossoms,
seed and shoot—he sends from his heart.
With winsome weapons' flash—he forces the world;
winter and storm have waned—at his steadfast war:
with dint of his dreadless strokes—the stubborn doors he has dáunted, whose hindering hinge—withheld us from him.
To find his sister—he sets his flight,
'twas Love that lured the Spring;
behind our hearts—she deeply was hid;
now let her laugh to the light.
The bride and the sister—is free to the brother;
the walls are waste—that held them away;
greeting together—they shout as they go,
for Spring has lighted on Love!"

Over the further development of this marvellous love-scene we must pass rapidly. Sieglinde, reminded by the stranger's tale of the scenes of her early infancy, and struck with the resemblance of his features to her own, asks for his real name, which Siegmund

* This description of Wotan's dress, in his character as the "Wanderer," is typical in the old stories. One of his eyes he had given to the giant Mimir for a drink from the fount of wisdom, a circumstance the explanation of which I willingly leave to the expounders of the solo myth."

† See the story of Balin and Balan in our Morte d'Arthure.—ED. M W.

Digitized by Google

no more withholds from her. "If thou art Siegmund," she exclaims, "this sword has been destined for thee by our father Volsung." Whereat Siegmund, with a mighty wrench, tears the holy weapon out of the stem. But this disclosure can no more quench the thirst of their passion, and the curtain drops over the unfortunate pair. The musical structure of this duet, with its gradual rise from anxious doubt to dithyrambic passion, has been called the highest flight of Wagner's muse, and it certainly holds its own, even if compared with those other masterpieces of concerted music: the duets between Senta and the Flying Dutchman, Elsa and Lohengrin, Iseult and Tristan, or, indeed, Siegfried and Brynhild in the second part of our present work. But, however much we may be impressed by the bold and again so infinitely tender strains of this music in reading it, the real value of a conception so intensely dramatic can be defined only by an actual embodiment on the stage.

(To be continued.)

—o—

SALVINI.

(From the "Saturday Programme.")

(Continued from page 460.)

On New Year's Day, in the year 1830, Tommaso Salvini was born at Milan. The year began well with such a birth. It could not hold back its splendid gifts, but poured them out at daybreak. Following a precedent which has been quoted over and over again, it was discovered that Salvini's father, and his mother also, who played under the name of Guglielmina Zocchi, were good and popular dramatic artists. The theory is that cleverness is not hereditary; that clever parents seldom are blessed with clever children. It is not so with actors. The greatest geniuses on the stage have always had some acting blood in their veins. The exceptional talent for dramatic art is certainly hereditary, and is more or less developed in the children of actors. The young Salvini soon showed extraordinary talent. His genius burst forth as early and as ripe as that of Goëthe. He acted in the nursery, he acted at school. He was a born actor. No infant phenomenon this young Salvini, but such a genius already that he surprised his father and mother, who understood what good acting was. His father did not hesitate what to do. He placed him under the care of the famous Modena, who made him at once his favourite pupil. At the early age of thirteen Salvini's fame in boys' parts began to be talked about, and from this point he would have advanced at once, and unchecked, to the front, but he lost his affectionate father and mother before he was fifteen, and the loss so preyed on his sensitive nature that he was compelled to give up acting and commence studying again under Modena. Before 1848 we hear of Salvini for the first time in connection with the Ristori troupe, and listen to the first notes of their double triumph. In 1849 Salvini left the stage to fight for his country in the cause of Italian freedom, and gloriously distinguished himself. Those who have seen him in Othello can well understand what a warrior he must have been in the pride of his youth, strength, and beauty. His commanding officers must have expressed sincere regret when, the war over, Salvini determined to bid farewell to the tented field, and once more strode upon the stage. Peace having been declared, Salvini is seen in the theatrical company directed by Signor Cesari Dondini. He played in Nicolini's Edipo, a play written expressly for the young actor with such classical proclivities; but it was in Alfieri's Saul that he made his greatest triumph. Then it was that Italy took the young actor to her arms, and the fame of Modena was considered to have been exceeded by his distinguished pupil. The career of Salvini was now one round of triumphs. He visited Paris, and appeared as Orasmene, Orestes, Saul, and Othello, to the delight of the art world of France. On his return to Florence, by the greatest luck in the world, Salvini commenced a long and lasting friendship with Lord Normanby, then ambassador for England at the Italian Court. It was at Lord Normanby's suggestion that Salvini commenced a long and earnest study of Shakspere. They read the poet together, and the English statesman was able to give the actor some account of the traditions of the greatest Shaksperian actors he had seen. Hamlet, Othello, King Lear, and Coriolanus, were all discussed and argued over by the Italian actor and the English nobleman, and from this friendship dates Salvini's wonderful Shaksperian enthusiasm. His worship of Shakspere is profound. His house at home is full of Shaksperian pictures and relics, more or less connected with his art. In 1865, on the occasion of the sixth centenary of Dante's birthday, we find four of Italy's greatest artists appearing together in Silvio Pellico's tragedy, Francesca di Rimini. They are, of course, Salvini, Ristori, Rossi, and Mageroni. The fame of the actor advances. He is decorated by his king, and rewarded by the government of his country. He proceeds to Spain and Lisbon only to create fresh excitement, and to be rewarded afresh by the queen and king of each country. Before visiting England, it will be remembered that Salvini appeared with distinguished success in America, and gained the unanimous approval of all who most value dramatic art. The difficulty experienced by America, in that Salvini did not speak the language of the country, has not, at any rate, been felt so severely here as there. His genius has conquered everything, and each performance has gained fresh enthusiasts. Thus, then, with the unanimous approval of his native country, with the congratulations of France, Spain, Portugal, and America ringing in his ears, Tommaso Salvini stood on the stage of Drury Lane in England, in the country of Shakspere, a foreigner, a stranger, determined, if possible, to test the question of the coldness of English audiences and their indifference to art. Those who were present on the occasion of that first representation of Othello are not likely to forget it. It was a revelation. We seemed to have been dreaming all these years, and to have been embracing shadows. First the splendid presence, and then the exquisite ease; next the incomparable nature, and lastly the triumphant power. Who can forget that first performance and its effect upon the house! Othello had never been seen before, for this was as different to the English conventional Othello as daylight to darkness. The dignified repose of the address to the senate; the absorbing love of Othello for his wife; the subtle dawn of jealousy; the effort to beat back suspicion and shudder at it; the gradual poisoning of the mind; the frightful agony of the tortured man; the tiger-like ferocity of the passionate and generous nature when once disturbed; the long, beautiful love suddenly turned into the deepest hate; the intense sarcasm of the scene with Emilia; and then, to crown all, that marvellous last act, which it is the merest affectation to call overstrained. All these points have been commented on with sufficient minuteness. But they will never be forgotten. They leave such a vivid impression on the memory that it is impossible that either time or change can eradicate them.

(To be continued.)

—o—

DICKENS AND SALVINI.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

DEAR SIR,—I feel interested, with very many others, in all that relates to Charles Dickens, especially when connected with one who has recently made himself famous in this country; I would, therefore, ask where the authority is to be found for the assertion that our distinguished novelist said that Salvini "was the greatest actor in the world, after seeing him perform in Rome in the year 1859"—see "Jottings from London," in your last number. I do not find it recorded in Foster's Life, and I consider the fact is sufficiently interesting to have further prominence at the present moment.

Truly yours, T. F. D. C.

9, Pelham Place, Brompton, S. W., 12th July, 1875.

Digitized by Google

DEATH.

On July 13th, after a short illness, Mdme JULLIEN, widow of Louis Jullien, of glorious memory.

NOTICE.

To ADVERTISERS.—The Office of the MUSICAL WORLD is at Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & Co.'s, 244, Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street (First Floor). It is requested that Advertisements may be sent not later than Thursday. Payment on delivery. With this number of the MUSICAL WORLD Subscribers will receive four pages extra, and again, from TIME TO TIME, as expediency may suggest.

The Musical World,

LONDON, SATURDAY, JULY 17, 1875.

STERNDALE BENNETT.

THE autograph letter (fac-simile) from this great English musician, promised to our readers last week, will be found in the extra half-sheet which accompanies the present issue of the Musical World. The "Sonata" referred to is the now well-known Maid of Orleans; the "fair patroness" for whom it was written and to whom it was dedicated is Arabella Goddard.

THE Hon of Hungary recently published an article entitled:—"Franz Liszt at Home and in the Grand World." In one part of this article, the writer says:—

"Nothing can well be more interesting than Liszt's Diary, in which, from day to day, he regularly enters everything interesting that has happened to him in the course of the twenty-four hours. Of its contents no one has an idea, for no one was ever yet allowed to glance over its pages. Liszt keeps this Diary, already consisting of several thick volumes, even from the eyes of his most confidential friends. If one of those who have always free access to him happens to come into his study, while he is entering anything, Liszt immediately puts the book away under lock and key. The contents will, probably, not be known to the world until after his death. When, however, they are published, these pages will form a valuable and authentic record of the experiences of one who played an equally important part in the artistic and in the social world."

May that time be long postponed. We wish we could find space for the whole of the Honnish (Hunnish) article.

Mrs Shirley Brooks.

THE following letter, or we are greatly mistaken, will be read with universal interest in literary circles:—

"SIR,—I am glad to see that the Pall Mall Gazette has opened the question of Mrs Shirley Brooks's pension. I have been looking daily for the announcement that the Government had recognized the claims of the widow of a faithful worker and a good man—more especially a Conservative Government, from which one would naturally expect the grateful recognition of Conservative support. It seems to me that everyone, with or without a claim, has been pensioned but Mrs Shirley Brooks, the widow of the former editor of Punch. The widows of men of social position and private fortune, with influential friends and many helping hands; living authors and authoresses of mark and wealth; some with a repute that coins money like the mint; some with husbands in business doing a vast and lucrative trade—all these are pensioned; but Mrs Shirley Brooks, the widow of a purely literary man, left with only two hundred a-year, and two boys under age, has not been placed on the list. Yet an additional hundred would be a vital gain to her; while the hundred granted to one or two I could name represents only so much to spend in unnecessary indulgence.

"E. L. L."

No man who for a long period possessed so much influence as the late Shirley Brooks ever used it more consistently or more largely for good.

D. P.

THE season of French operas at the Gaiety comes to an end on Friday next, the 23rd inst. No more new works will be produced.

OCCASIONAL NOTE.

THE features at the last Philharmonic concert, in St James's Hall, were a violin concerto, by Vieuxtemps, splendidly executed by M. Wieniawski, and an "Idyll" to the memory of the late Sterndale Bennett, composed by his most gifted fellow-student, and successor, as "Principal," at the Royal Academy of Music—Dr G. A. Macfarren. The "Idyll" is an orchestral work, replete with genuine feeling, magnificently scored, and altogether a worthy tribute to the great English musician who has passed from among us. It was well performed, under the direction of Mr W. G. Cusins, listened to with the utmost interest, and applauded with such unanimity that Dr Macfarren felt compelled to rise from his seat and acknowledge the honour paid to him. There were two symphonies—Haydn's in E flat (No. 10 of the Saloman set), and Beethoven's in C minor. Mdlle Tietjens was the singer; and, as usual, the final concert was brought to an end with Weber's Jubilee overture.

LEEDS TOWN HALL ORGAN CONCERTS.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

SIR,—Many inaccurate statements having appeared in the musical and other journals, respecting the attendance, &c., at my Organ Concerts in the Leeds Town Hall, I shall be glad if you will permit me to say that, on the last occasion, when the average of each performance for a year was taken, the numbers on Saturday evenings (vocal music being sometimes added), were 665, and on Tuesday afternoons (3 to 4) 131.

At the last audit of accounts there was (after payment of all expenses), a small loss, amounting to rather less than one halfpenny per annum to each ratepayer of this wealthy borough! The admission charges are 1s., 6d., and 3d. on Saturdays, and 6d. and 3d. on Tuesdays; these nominal prices enabling all classes to avail themselves of the opportunity of hearing a variety of classical and popular music at a low rate. I shall be glad if other organists occupying a similar position to myself will give the public authentic information on this subject, so interesting to those who are desirous of making the large organs in our huge Town Halls both a pecuniary and artistic success.

It must be borne in mind that, with little exception, these organ recitals in the Leeds' Town Hall have been given every Tuesday afternoon, and often on Saturday evenings, by our performer, ever since the opening of the Hall, in 1858, and I am assured that the annual attendance has exceeded that of any other similar institution in England, excepting Liverpool, where a floating population of 30,000 furnishes a ready audience to see the lions, and hear some of them roar.

On some of my visits to the Albert Hall, Kensington, for organ recitals given by eminent players, I could almost count the numbers in the different parts of the building on the fingers of my hands; and I have often attended "Classical Chamber Concerts" in Leeds, and in other provincial towns, where the audiences (numbering less than 100) might indeed be termed "wretched," and which would afterwards be described in print, by friendly critics, as "a fair attendance."—Yours, faithfully,

WM SPARK.

Leeds, July 14, 1875.

PESTH.—The post of conductor, vacant at the National Theatre in consequence of the departure of Hans Richter for Vienna, has been offered to M. de Mihailovich, who declines it, the reason assigned being that he is at present engaged in composing an opera, the libretto of which has been written for him by Wagner.

LEIPSIC.—The Stadttheater will, as heretofore, be carried on by private enterprise, and not, as previously announced, by an Intendant managing it "at a fixed salary of 15,000 marks a year, with 15 per cent. on the gross receipts." Such is the resolution passed at a meeting of the Town Commissioners.

Digitized by Google

September 24
1872
38. Queensborough Terrace.
Kensington Gardens. W.

My dear I. W. D.

Have you released yourself from all the semibreves and minims consequent upon Worcester and Norwich?

I want you to listen for a moment to an old tinker of a composer whose name, if he finishes the letter will be found at the end —

(Please turn over)

Digitized by Google

I have a Sonata in hand
for my fair patroness, to whom I wish to dedicate it — Can I do so? She shall not be tied down
to play it in public, but
I offer it, purely and simply as a mark of my regard and heartfelt thanks for what has been done for me. by her

Digitized by Google

in the part—

Would you like to see some of it?* The first 3 movements are finished not worse than many the things I have done—

Ever Yours
as of old
W. Bennett

* The first 2 movements engraved—the 3rd went yesterday—the last movement, just beginning.

Digitized by Google

J. W. Davison Esq
36 Tavistock Place
Tavistock Square
W C

Digitized by Google

CONCERTS VARIOUS.

Mr Oberthür's matinée musicale took place at his residence, 14, Talbot Road, Westbourne Park, on Wednesday, June 30th, under the immediate patronage of her Grace the Duchess of Wellington. The vocalists were Miss Sophie Ferrari, Monsieur Godrant, and Signor Caravoglia. The instrumentalists were, violin, Herr Joseph Ludwig; violoncello, Signor B. Albert; harps, Miss Marion Beard, Miss Kate Dyne (pupils of Mr Oberthür), and Mr Oberthür. The following is the programme:—Grand Trio (original), F minor, for violin, violoncello, and harp (Herr J. Ludwig, Signor Albert, and Mr Oberthür)—C. Oberthür; Aria, "Non più andrai" (Signor Caravoglia)—Mozart; Solos, violin, "Notturno" (arranged by Wilhelmj), Chopin, and "Præludium" (Herr J. Ludwig)—S. Bach; Romance, "Assisa al piè d'un salice" (Miss Sophie Ferrari)—Rossini; Solo, harp, Oberon, Grand Fantaisie caracteresque (Mr Oberthür)—Parish-Alvars; Romance, "Ne parle pas Rou" (Dragons de Villars) (Monsieur Godrant)—Marllart; Duo, violoncello and harp, "Fantaisie originale" (Signor Albert and Mr Oberthür)—A. Zamara; Nocturne, for three harps (Miss M. Beard, Miss K. Dyne, and Mr Oberthür)—C. Oberthür; Solo, violoncello, "Berçeuse" (Signor Albert)—Seligmann; Song, "I know my love loves me" (Miss Sophie Ferrari)—Rosetta O'Leary Vinning; Solo, harp (with violoncello obbligato), "Fairy legend" (the violoncello part added by Signor Zamaro, of Vienna) (Mr Oberthür and Signor Albert)—C. Oberthür; Song, "She and I" (Signor Caravoglia)—Louisa Gray; Song, "A quoi sort la terre" (Monsieur Godrant)—Darcks; Solo, harp (new), English melodies of the olden time (Mr Oberthür)—C. Oberthür. The rooms—most tastefully decorated with flowers—were quite filled by a distinguished audience. The concert gave evident satisfaction. Each movement of Mr Oberthür's trio was highly appreciated, especially the scherzo and finale. Not less effective was his trio for three harps, in which Mr Oberthür and two of his clever pupils were heard to advantage. Miss Sophie Ferrari met with deserved applause in the romance from Otello, as well as Mrs O'Leary Vinning's song. Equally successful was Signor Caravoglia in Mozart's aria, and Louisa Gray's well-known song. Monsieur Godrant sang two French songs in good style. Mr Ludwig and Signor Albert played with exquisite taste on their respective instruments, and the latter pleased greatly in the violoncello obbligato part to Mr Oberthür's "Fairy legend," in which the accomplished composer's performance of the harp part was deservedly admired, as it was also in Parish-Alvars' solo fantasia, Oberon. Mr Oberthur's arrangement of "English melodies of the olden time" concluded the matinée with éclat, and the audience separated to the strain of "Home, sweet home," played in perfection by the concert-giver.

St Mary's Hall, Canonbury.—A very interesting musical performance was given on Tuesday evening, July 13th, on the occasion of a presentation to Miss Northcroft, Principal, in acknowledgment of the zeal and energy with which she has conducted the Ladies' College for a period of twenty-five years. The testimonial, from a large circle of friends and admirers, consisted of a purse containing a hundred guineas, a handsome silver salver, and an elegant silver bouquet-holder. Mrs John Macfarren and Mr Henry Holmes commenced the concert with one of Beethoven's Sonatas, for pianoforte and violin, and, later in the evening, played a Rondo, by Mozart, for the same instruments. The talented violinist also executed, in his most finished manner, the "Elegie" by Ernst, and the accomplished pianist gave a selection from the works of Schumann, Weber, Hans von Bülow, and other composers. Mr Mellish played Chopin's Impromptu in C sharp minor; and the vocal portion of the programme was contributed by Miss Edith Wynne. This musical treat was highly appreciated by a densely-crowded company. In another part of the establishment some admirable performances, chiefly by students of the college, were given, under the able direction of Mr Handel Gear.

Mdme Liebhart gave a concert, by the kind permission of Capt. and Mrs Coster), at 137, Harley Street, in aid of a charitable purpose. This is the first concert the fair artist has given since her return from America. Great praise is due to her for bringing so many artist-friends round her to help in her charitable object. Sir Julius Benedict presided over the little festival, and had the gratification to hear his charming new song, "Norah's Message," sung by Mdme Liebhart, repeated by unanimous desire. The other principal artists were Mdme Marie Roze, Mdlle Breton, Mdlle Bunsen; Signor Caravoglia, Herr Werrenrath, Mr W. Shakespeare, Herr Blume, Signor Mattei, Miss Lilly Albrecht, M. Paque, and Mr Aptommas. All these artists, so well known and appreciated, exerted themselves con amore. If we were to give a detailed account, it would fill a volume; suffice it that Mdlle Bunsen, in W. Ganz's song, "Forget-me-not," was encored. Mdlle Breton, Mdme Marie Roze, M. Paque, Mr Aptommas, Signor Mattei, and Miss Lilly Albrecht, were equally applauded, and the latter warmly applauded for her performance of Thalberg's Andante in D flat. The splendid rooms of Captain and Mrs Coster were filled with an audience of the highest rank. Sir Julius Benedict, in conjunction with Messrs Ganz, Vaschetti, and Herr S. Lehmeyer, were the conductors.

Miss Clinton Fynes, an esteemed young pianist, gave her annual matinée, at her residence in Baker Street, on Monday last. An appreciative audience filled the rooms to overflow. Miss Fynes' only solo performances were a Lied ohne Wörte by Mendelssohn, and an Impromptu by Chopin; but she played, with the composer, Mr John Thomas's admired duet for harp and pianoforte, on airs from M. Gounod's Faust, which did not, however, make the impression so brilliant a composition deserved; Wolff and Vieuxtemps' Grand Duo, on airs from Oberon, for pianoforte and violin, with Mr Carrodus, who "outshone" himself in this as he did afterwards in a "Romance e Presto, alla Tarentella," for violin solo, composed expressly for him by Mr Berthold Tours, and for which the eminent English violinist was honoured by a "recall;" and Haydn's Trio in G major, with Madame Varley Liebe and Herr Theodore Liebe. In each of these performances Miss Clinton Fynes proved herself an artist of high merit. Madame Varley Liebe, besides joining Miss Fynes in Haydn's Trio, played Molique's "Arioso" and Bach's "Bourée," for violin solo, and was deservedly applauded and recalled; and Herr Theodore Liebe played, in good style, a romance, for violoncello solo, by Mendelssohn. Miss Edith Wynne sang, with her usual excellence, Mr John Thomas's setting of "There be none of beauty's daughters," and, on being encored, "The ash grove." Miss Catherine Arnold, a young and inexperienced singer, possessing, however, a good voice, gave a serenade, with violin obbligato (Mr Carrodus); and Mr Nelson Varley sang, with effect, Blumenthal's "My queen," and a pleasing song, by Mr King Hall, entitled, "Moss roses." The matinée closed with Haydn's Trio in G. Mr King Hall was the accompanist of the vocal music.

Mr. G. W. Hammond's morning concert took place on Thursday, July 8th, at St James's Hall, Piccadilly. The following is the programme:—Sonata for pianoforte (Op. 27, No. 2), Moonlight (Mr G. W. Hammond)—Beethoven; Song, "Porgi amor" (Miss Julia Wigan)—Mozart; Sonata, for two pianofortes (Mr W. H. Holmes and Mr G. W. Hammond)—Mozart; Solo, violin, Preludio—Adagio, "Retrospect," and "Bourrée" (Mr Henry Holmes)—Holmes and Bach; Song, "Memories" (words by Mrs Baines) (Mr F. Holmes)—W. H. Holmes; Solos, pianoforte, "Nocturne" and "Idylle" (Mr G. W. Hammond)—Kalliwoda; Song, "He roamed in the forest" (Miss Annie Butterworth—by permission of the Royal Academy of Music)—O'Leary; Chamber Trio (Op. 26), for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello (Mr G. W. Hammond, Mr Henry Holmes, and Herr Lutgen)—Sir Sterndale Bennett; Quintet, in E flat (Op. 44), for pianoforte, two violins, viola, and violoncello (Mr G. W. Hammond, Mr Henry Holmes, Mr Mori, Mr A. Burnett, and Herr Lutgen)—Schumann; Song, "Mater Dolorosa" (Miss Julia Wigan)—Schumann; Variations Concertante (Op. 17), for pianoforte and violoncello (Mr G. W. Hammond and Herr Lutgen)—Mendelssohn; Canzonet, "Sailor's Song" (Mr F. Holmes)—Haydn; Solos, pianoforte, Romance Russe, "Ivanowa," "Fountain Melodies," and Polonaise, in C major (Op. 89), (Mr G. W. Hammond)—G. W. Hammond and Beethoven. Mr Hammond's performances were, as usual, those of an accomplished artist, and his reading of the works of the classical masters was marked by a thorough knowledge and appreciation of their meaning. The late Sir Sterndale Bennett's trio received ample justice from Mr Hammond and the intelligent artists who assisted him in its performance. Mr Hammond, whose compositions are numerous, only favoured his audience with two, "Romance Russe" and "Fountain Melodies," but they were both excellent of their kind. Among the vocal pieces worthy of note was a song by Mr W. H. Holmes, set to some charming words by Mrs Baines, entitled "Memories," sung con amore by Mr Frank Holmes (a son of its accomplished composer); and among the instrumental a charming violin solo, composed and played by Mr Henry Holmes, entitled "Retrospect." Mr Arthur O'Leary was conductor.

Mr John Francis Barnett gave a matinée on Wednesday, at his residence, 41, Portsdown Road, Maida Vale, which was crowded by a select and brilliant audience, to hear some of Mr Barnett's new compositions, as well as the "classical pieces" Mr Barnett included in his programme. The first piece given was Schubert's "Grand Rondo," played by Miss Emma Barnett and Mr J. F. Barnett. Miss Barnett also took the pianoforte part in her brother's elegant Trio in C minor, in conjunction with Herr Politzer (violin) and Herr Lutgen (violoncello). The fair young pianist's solo was Chopin's "Andante Spianato and Polonaise, in E flat," in which Miss Barnett's perfect phrasing and refined execution made an impression on her audience that will not easily be effaced. Mr Barnett played his admired fantasia on the melodies selected from his Ancient Mariner, as only a composer can play his own work, and, with Herr Pollitzer, the "Kreutzer" Sonata. The new "Concerto Pastorale," composed by Mr J. F. Barnett for the flute, of which we have already made favourable mention, was played to perfection by Mr G. A. Collard. Miss Katherine Poyntz sang Lotti's "Pur dicesti," Brahm's "Cradle Song," and an English ballad, and, with Miss Catherine Barnett, Weber's duet, "Come, be gay." Miss Catherine Barnett also sang Bach's aria, "My heart ever faithful" (violoncello obbligato, Herr Lutgen). Mr Thurley Beale gave Schubert's "Wanderer," and a new and clever song (words by Mr Finlay Finlayson), called "The Rock of Ages," capitally set to music by Mr J. F. Barnett. It was most warmly received, and was effectively sung. This matinée was a great success.

Mr Henry Leslie finished his twentieth season with an extra concert on the 9th of July. It attracted a crowded audience, and was one of the most successful of the season. The solo vocalists were Mr Sims Reeves (a host in himself), Miss Eva Leslie, and the Misses Allitsen. Mr Sims Reeves gave Beethoven's "Adelaida" (accompanied by Mr Charles Hallé) and Sullivan's "Once again," and also joined Miss Eva Leslie in Donizetti's duet, "Tornami a dir." It is needless to say in what magnificent style the great tenor rendered the songs which have now become associated with his name. Miss Eva Leslie, in the duet, "Tornami a dir," and in Gounod's "Ave Maria," sang with expression, and displayed to great advantage her pure contralto voice. The Misses Allitsen, who sang for the first time at St James's Hall, confirmed the favourable impression they have lately created; with every new appearance they gain confidence, and make a fresh step in the estimation of the public. In Balfe's duet, "Trust her not," and in Rossini's "Giorno d'orrore"—especially in the latter—their voices blended charmingly, and they executed the most difficult passages with such care and finish as to deserve and meet with the warmest applause. They were unanimously recalled after each duet. Miss Allitsen, in Hullah's "Three Fishers," showed advantageously her beautiful contralto voice and her artistic feeling. She was twice recalled, but could not be prevailed upon to repeat the song. Mr Charles Hallé contributed solos on the pianoforte by Schumann and Heller, and joined Mr Henry Holmes in Mozart's Sonata in A, for pianoforte and violin. Mr Holmes also played Beethoven's Romance, for the violin, in F. The singing of Mr Henry Leslie's Choir was, of course, the great feature of the evening. Mendelssohn's Psalm, "Judge me, O God," and Wesley's "In Exitu Israel." The choristers more than sustained their high reputation.

—o—

PROVINCIAL.

Brighton.—Some vocal recitals have been given lately at the Aquarium. Last week, Der Freischütz and La Sonnambula were laid under contribution, the vocalists being Miss Blanche Tersee, Miss Alice Williams, Mdme Estelle Emrick; Messrs George Perren and Fox. During the past week Miss Catherine Penna has been the vocalist. This day and evening (Saturday), Mdme Castellan, the violinist, and Master Harry Walker, the pianist, are the attractions. Mr Kuhe announces his intention of giving three subscription concerts, in which Mdme Adelina Patti, Mdlle Albani, and Mdme Nilsson are to be the prime donne.

Dublin.—The attendance recently at the promenade concerts at the Theatre Royal was scarcely as good as might be expected, although the programmes were of an attractive character. Madame Sicklemore, a very pleasing vocalist with a good soprano voice and an excellent style, made a most satisfactory impression. Mr Pearson's voice has gained in power since he was last heard in Dublin. Mr Maybrick has also done remarkably well. Among the most interesting features of the concerts have been the performances of Mdlle Claryte San Juan, the young and Spanish lady violinist, and Miss Ada Lester, the interesting young pianist from London.

Cheltenham.—A testimonial was presented to Mr J. O. Smith, late organist of Christ Church, in this town, consisting of a silver tea and coffee service of the choicest pattern (Etruscan), tastefully arranged, and a brass-bound oak chest for the same. Upon the teapot is inscribed: "This service, with a purse of fifty sovereigns, is presented to J. O. Smith, Esq., by members of Christ Church congregation and other friends, on the occasion of his leaving that Church, after a faithful discharge of his duties as organist for twenty-seven years.—Cheltenham, June 19th, 1875." Accompanying the testimonial is an address, beautifully illuminated and framed. In addition to this there was another testimonial from the professional members of Christ Church choir, and other musical friends resident in the town, which consisted of a splendid dining-room clock and barometer in black marble, with a gilt plate bearing a suitable inscription; a drawing of the organ upon which Mr Smith performed, and an address printed upon satin, in a gilt frame. The first of these was presented in the afternoon, and the second on the evening of the same day. Mr Gilding read the address which was feelingly responded to by Mr Smith. After the congratulations, an extemporised concert of sacred music took place including the songs, "If with all your hearts," and "O rest in the Lord" (Mendelssohn); the choruses, "The heavens are telling" (Haydn); "Lift up your heads," and the "Hallelujah" (Handel); after which the deputation sat down to supper.

Grantham.—A correspondent writes us word that a grand military concert was given on 6th inst., under the auspices of the Horticultural Society, at the Exchange Hall, by the 2nd Dragoon Guards, with Madame Billinie Porter as vocalist. There was a large and aristocratic assemblage, and the concert gave great satisfaction as proved by the applause and the number of encores accorded to the band and vocalist. The playing of the band, indeed, afforded a rich musical treat, and the local paper says that Madame Porter sang with charming effect the waltz, "L'Ardita," and in Pinsuti's "I love my love" she was very successful. In Weber's "Softly Sighs" and Bishop's "Bid me discourse" there was the same pleasing expression and excellence of tone. The waltz was sung with remarkable power and finish and met with enthusiastic applause. Mr H. P. Dickenson ably accompanied.

—o—

BERLIN.

(From our Correspondent.)

Herr von Hülsen, the Intendant-General of the Theatres Royal, having returned from his visit to Paris, has been stopping at Nieder-Walluf, on the Rhine. Apropos to this gentleman, he may be—though I by no means affirm that he is—the person with whom the Crown Prince had a highly interesting conversation a short time since, regarding the state of dramatic matters in Berlin. But whether he is so, or not, the person in question is closely connected with the theatres. The Prince expressed himself as viewing with very decided disfavour all the light wares which are, in various shapes, introduced, year after year, upon the German stage from France. "Never," said his Royal Highness, "will I go and see these pieces; never will I sanction, as it were, by my presence, the various specimens of such shallow stuff, be it spoken or sung, for I entirely set my face against it. This is, indeed, a sorry acquisition we have gained from France. Look" he continued, "at the company from the Meinigen Court Theatre. The members of it are certainly not all, without exception, first-class actors. But they possess artistic earnestness; they play well together; and they represent no worthless rubbish, but the works of the great masters. Offer the public something good, and they will be eager enough to receive it. As a case in point, I may mention the performances, at reduced prices of admission, of the Royal Operahouse and the Theatre Royal. There is not a place unoccupied. The better portion of the public do not fly from what is good; on the contrary, they seek it. Shall I tell you what has a fine future in Berlin? The National Theatre, out on the Weinbergsweg. Classical pieces are there performed for the people at moderate prices, and, to be frank, I myself am very fond of going there."

At a Committee which met the other day, to consider the question of the portrait-medallions that shall adorn the exterior of the Rathhaus, it was proposed to make some modifications in the existing list. It appears pretty certain that three of the portraits at present included in the list will have to give place to those of Lessing, Tieck, and Meyerbeer.

Manageresses are not so plentiful in Germany as they are in England. In fact, a Manageress in the former country is a sort of rara avis. I may, therefore, mention that Mad. Caroline Ernst, wife of the ex-stage-manager, of the Royal Operahouse here, and present manager of the Stadttheater, Cologne, has not only managed for several years past, and with gratifying success, the Stadttheater, Mayence, but has now both that Theatre and the Stadttheater, Coblenz, under her direction.

The Minister of Public Worship, Dr Falk, has recommended to all whom it may concern the Allgemeines Choralbuch für die deutsche Evangelische Kirche, by Herren Jacob and Richter.

Mdlle Angelika Dossi, a pupil of Sig. Lamperti, of Milan, has been engaged for two years, from the 1st August, at the Friedrichwilhelmstädtisches Theater.

Digitized by Google

CONCERT BY THE PRIZE WINNERS AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE.

(From a Correspondent.)

Last Saturday's concert (July 10th), was certainly one of interest to all who watch the progress of the divine art, and take pleasure in our home institutions. Except through such occasions people hardly know, or knowing, scarcely heed, what is going on in our midst, and are not aware of the advantages we possess. Those who were present on Saturday, and saw the proficiency and evidences of careful training displayed by the débutanti, must have acknowledged the fact that we have, through our excellent institutions, means of obtaining a thorough musical education, and that we do not need to seek abroad that which we can perhaps better obtain at home. Of the twenty-five chosen to compete for prizes, we understand nine were pupils of the Royal Academy of Music, three of whom were prize-winners. Much is expected of this institute, and it always keeps faith with the public by never disappointing it. Being, as it is, under the direction and tuition of some of the first professors in the land (and that is to say in the world), it has advantages that no other can claim. The programme was well rendered, under the direction of the most august Auguste Manns. The admirable choruses and bands had already won and gilded their spurs, but for most of the soloists it was a first appearance in grand concert. Each one may be pleased with his or her success. More especially so, perhaps, may be Miss Primrose—pardon—we mean Miss Butterworth—winner of the first contralto prize, who sang Henry Smart's beautiful ballad, "The Lady of the Lea," charmingly. She is a pupil in Signor Randegger's class at the Royal Academy, as is also Miss Reimer, winner of the second contralto prize, who sang, with much pathos, his exquisite "Slumber Song," accompanied by Signor Randegger and the 'cellos. Miss Agnes Larcom, winner of the first soprano prize, a pupil of Signor Garcia's, won much credit in "Casta Diva." This aria is an ordeal to old artists, and especially, taken separate from the scena, is most trying. Miss Larcom, however, won the sympathy of her audience. The prizes were distributed by our honoured artist, Mdme Lind-Goldschmidt, who had, as she always has, a word of encouragement and sympathy for each artist.

The prizes were thus awarded:—First soprano (a purse of £25), to Miss Agnes Larcom; second soprano (a purse of £10), to Miss Carrina; first contralto (a purse of £25), to Miss Annie Butterworth; second contralto (a purse of £10), to Miss Emma Reimer; first tenor (a purse of £25), to Mr George Sylvester; second tenor (a purse of £10), to Mr Lawrence Freyer; first baritone, or bass, (a purse of £25), to Mr Edward Wharton; second bass (a purse of £10 each), to Mr Henry Cross and Mr Frank Thomas. Also—to the Liverpool Representative Choir, a purse of £100, and to the band of the Carron Works, Norwich, a purse of £50.

Where are we to find new artists? We have need to ask, for the demand is urgent; and we look to our institutions to aid us, for they are the gardens in which our choicest flowers are nurtured. Ruskin says that a certain amount of genius is born every year. We cannot doubt Ruskin; but we are unfortunate, and discover but a small per-centage. We use genius only for models, to show us what perfection may be obtained.

There is but one Jenny Lind, one Patti, one Nilsson, one Tietjens; and, do our best, we cannot flood the market by a surplus. We might as well say we would have Michael Angelos and Raphaels on our walls, as to depend altogether upon geniuses. Genius is what botanists style, the breaking of the seedling tulip into high-cast colours. There is no accounting for it. We gather ten thousand flowers, but find one with the divine streak. We can only believe that it is a caprice of Mother Nature.

Let us in every way encourage these young artists (selfishly, perhaps, for we need every one of them), and also give our earnest support to the means of bringing them forward. ROMANA.

GRATZ.—Mdlle Carlotta Patti gave a concert here on the 20th ult. On the 23rd and 24th of the same month, she was to sing at Agram; on the 26th, at Baden; on the 29th, at Marienbad; on the 2nd inst., at Teplitz; on the 4th, at Prague; on the 10th, at Reichenberg; on the 12th, at Franzensbad; on the 17th, at Pilsen; on the 20th, at Ischl, on the 22nd, at Gmunden. This would be a month's work, even for a Queen's Messenger.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL.

Madame Christine Nilsson is a frequent giver of grand concerts, and, as her name is a tower of strength, there are few that are so attractive, and, it may be presumed, so lucrative. On Wednesday evening, one of these costly events came off at the Royal Albert Hall, and, notwithstanding the miserable condition of the weather, drew a large and brilliant attendance. The programme was eminently inviting in many respects, for, in addition to the distinguished bénéficiaire herself, the best names of Mr Mapleson's company were in it, the public interest being still further tempted by the promise of Mr Sims Reeves, who happily, let it be recorded, was at his post. Like all the concerts of this kind, the selection was partly composed of appropriations from the opera-house, and, as other matters which the public are never tired of hearing was mingled with them, the popular taste could not well have been more agreeably consulted. Mdlle Christine Nilsson received a golden welcome. She was in her choicest voice, and appealed with her customary success to the sympathies of the audience in Handel's showy air, "Let the bright seraphim," in which Mr Reynolds was her coadjutor on the trumpet. A new ballad by Mr Arthur Sullivan, called "Let me dream again," was the second of her solo efforts; and as the song has been written, it may be inferred, chiefly for her, and is in itself as interesting as it is sentimental, like all the compositions for household use by the same writer, it fell upon no inattentive ears, and was encored with acclamation. Mdlle Tietjens, too, was as fresh and as buoyant as if the season was only just beginning instead of just terminating, and she shows how firmly she still grasps the sceptre of executancy by her performance of the florid "Il soave, e bel contento," and how gracefully she can descend to such comparatively small matters as "Kathleen Mavourneen" and the "Last rose of summer;" and it was also shown how dearly the public still loves the two extremes. The Berceuse of Gounod ("Quand tu chantes"), and Offenbach's "C'est l'Espagne," are old favourites of Madame Trebelli, and not less so of her admirers. These were the offerings of the ever-welcome contralto upon the present occasion, and gladly were they listened to. Loudly, also, were they applauded; the prescriptive encore, as a matter of course, following the chanson. Besides the above-mentioned ladies, there was Mdme Anna de Belocca to lend further prestige to the concert, and, in the "Una voce" of Rossini, this adroit singer was heard at her best, and the best of Mdme Anna de Belocca is something very good indeed. Signor Campanini essayed newer ground, and sang, for the first time in this country, so far as we know, a love song from Verdi's unheard opera, Aida, the music of which is pleasing, and will probably be in request. Novelty, on the other hand, was not sought for by Mr Sims Reeves, who, in the first instance, contented himself, and, at the same time, his audience, by singing "Come into the garden, Maud," and subsequently the pretty song by F. Cowen, called "Aubade," which he sang, the programme informed us, "by desire," and with reason, for it was encored. The remaining vocalists were Signor Foli, Signor de Reschi, and Herr Behrens. The first gave Barri's "Shadow of the Cross," and Loder's "Diver"; the second, Stanzieri's "Io t'amero"; and the third, "The Wanderer"—each artist making his usual impression, and gathering his usual laurels. The specialty of the concert was, perhaps, the famous Preghiera from Mose in Egitto, which was sung at the commencement of the second part by all the principal singers, backed by the chorus of Her Majesty's Opera, with a grandeur of effect to which no one could be indifferent. Nothing so imposing, in spite of the absence of an orchestra, has been heard in the concert-room this year; and it is to be regretted that the opportunities of giving this broad and stately prayer, with all the necessary pomp and circumstance, so seldom occur. Another attractive vocal incident was the "Magic wove scarf," of Barnett—always a pleasant bit of concerted singing, and particularly so when the vocalists are such world-wide celebrities as Madame Christine Nilsson, Mr Sims Reeves, and Signor Foli. No orchestra, as we have intimated, was in commission, but the choristers of Her Majesty's Opera House began and ended the concert with the "Qui la selva" of Bellini, and the "Nume del ciel" of Auber, and, it will be quite understood, with their usual well practised ability. The conductors were Signor Li Calsi and Mr F. Cowen.

Digitized by Google

MUSIC PAST AND PRESENT IN IRELAND.

(Concluded from page 462.)

Another musical society of a different class, "The Philharmonic," still exists, and may it long continue to do so. This society was founded in the year 1826, and had its first meetings in the drawing-rooms of Mr Power, the music-seller, 4, Westmoreland Street. Mr Bussell was its founder and was its first leader. He afterwards became secretary and conductor. Mr Bussell has for the last two years resigned the bâton into the hands of Sir Robert Stewart, but he still acts as secretary. To this gentleman's courage, invariable attention, and ability, the society mainly owes its continuance. Other societies which seemed to have more vitality—instance the Antients—have succumbed; but the Philharmonic still holds its weekly meetings for orchestral practice, still gives its concerts for the entertainment of the members and their friends, and still it presents the instrumental works of the great masters to its audiences. Were the Philharmonic allowed to fall into abeyance we almost think it would be the death blow to artistic progress in Dublin. It keeps together a band for the weekly practice of orchestral music. Likewise through its exertions are the subscribers enabled to hear the greatest artists, both vocal and instrumental, who have shone on the continent. To ennumerate the number of musical celebrities engaged by this society since its formation would fill an entire paper. Frequently are the lovers of music here placed upon a par with the dilettanti of London by the engagements made. We must say that latterly the "Philharmonic" has not received that amount of public support and appreciation which its efforts in the cause of art have so richly deserved. Here, comparing the present with the past, we must say there is a decadence in musical taste amongst the better classes. Were the educated public alive to the elevating influences of the orchestral music of Beethoven, Mozart, and Mendelssohn, they would seek to make the band larger by the engagement of competent performers; and they would see that those difficulties in the way of the formation of a well-balanced orchestra, such as horns, bassoons, clarionet, and oboes, were well provided for. Then should we have a band in Dublin equal to high artistic requirements. What seems more exigently to be desired is a revival of that taste which formerly existed amongst amateurs for the practice of the string quartet. If the latter were in vogue in our drawing-rooms, the number of performers would increase, and, in their amalgamation at stated times, would form the nucleus of a permanent and efficient band. The wind and percussion instruments could be easily added. The University Choral Society, which was established in the year 1837, is, we are happy to say, still in existence. It was originated by Mr Joseph Robinson, who lent his talents to its direction for many years. After he resigned he was succeeded as conductor by Mr (afterwards Doctor and now Sir Robert) Stewart. Looking at the opportunities, aye and the certainties of the University Choral, for the dissemination of musical taste, it may be pronounced to be the most important to art in Ireland. The members are composed of the students at College, who, wherever they may be placed in after life, will carry with them some little of their early predilection for sweet sounds and harmony. The seed will be carried far distant to the provinces of the empire and to the colonies, and there they will fructify, spreading civilization and the principal of its refining influences—music. The society is now in a prosperous condition in weekly practice, and giving occasional concerts of much interest. To the University Choral is owing the first production in this country of Sir Michael Costa's splendid oratorio, Eli. There has lately an offshoot sprung from it, namely, the University Glee Club; the members of which cultivate quartet singing. This, while supporting the parent society, will bring the vocal part-song into the homes of the students, and those beautiful treasures of composition will ultimately become the household songs of families. Sir Robert Stewart, who is the conductor of the University Choral, is likewise organist of the two cathedrals and the chapel of Trinity College. He is also Professor of Music to the University. In his latter capacity he has manifested an amount of information on musical matters, and a dexterity in conveying it to others, seldom the gift of one individual. His lectures are the result of long and deep research, and, while they come trippingly from his tongue, interspersed with anecdote light and pleasant, they display the richly-stored mind and the stupendous memory of the lecturer. Certainly if ever the right man was in the right place, Sir Robert Stewart is. He is thoroughly devoted to his art. He by his tact awakens curiosity in its history and development, and he satisfies that curiosity by the rare resources of his highly-informed and cultivated mind. As a musician he holds a high place amongst the foremost in these kingdoms. His work, produced at the Birmingham Festival of 1870, fully attested this. His compositions are numerous, both sacred and secular, and many of them so well-known that it would be superfluous to ennumerate them. Then, as an organist, he is second to none, and in solo and accompaniment captivates. Seldom, indeed, have so many qualities of the musician been found in one man. We now bring this short series of essays to a close, and may we indulge the hope in so doing that some of the lovers of art-progress in this city have been awakened to the necessity of exertion in the cause, and that the formation of a choral society, and the means of supporting a small but efficient band, will be discussed in musical circles. In a previous essay we told of every gentleman's house in the country possessing one or two harps, and that the visitors who could play were the most welcome. This was in the past. At the present almost every house in town and country possesses a pianoforte, and most girls and some boys receive instruction in playing. That this in itself is calculated to keep musical taste alive will not be disputed. But it is a taste for ornamental not intellectual music; that phase of the art which tickles the fancy without appealing to head or heart. We might as well compare the pretty water-coloured drawings of young ladies with the paintings of Raphael and Turner as the music of the present with the past of thirty years ago. Can there be any more proof wanted than the distaste at present for the works of classical writers. Parents and pupils prefer the valse, the fantasia on airs from hackneyed operas, and the milk-and-water ballad to the compositions which awaken thought and exalt the imagination. How could it be well otherwise? There are no models to copy. The treasures of musical art are sealed up. Once a year an Italian company performs operas; and the Italian, the sensuous music of love, is admired. The music which exalts the senses to the imagination—namely, the oratorio, the choral cantata, and the symphony—is seldom or never heard, and most of our ideas of the divine art are gathered from the performances on the drawing-room pianoforte. We do not for a moment depreciate this great instrument, which so well interprets musical thought. All we desire to convey is the impossibility of cultivating a taste for the loftier inspirations of the art without frequent and adequate performances of the works of the great masters; and these are not given in Ireland.

J. C.

THE GAIETY.

At the Gaiety, Mr Hollingshead has added Victor Massé's Galathée, and Adolphe Adam's lively Postillon de Longjumeau, to his already extensive and varied repertory. These performances will terminate next week, and we reserve till then such general observations on the season as we have to make. Meanwhile, we may add that the manager of the Gaiety has given no less than eighteen operas in a very brief space of time.

SONNET.

ON HEARING THE PIANO PLAYED GORGEOUSLY.

O, play for ever! let thy fingers stroll
In fleet ethereal rapture o'er the strings,
And pour a flood of glory o'er the soul—
Such as they say unfallen angel sings!
O, dulcet music! from thine echo springs
A charm that creeps electric through the heart,
And evermore from thy vibration rings
Some hallow'd thought that love and joy impart!
Of all the sweet and heaven-descended arts
Thou art the chief. Thy ever-varying themes
Pour soothing solace o'er the soul that smarts
With rancorous care; and, like poetic dreams,
Fill'd with the halcyon images of love,
Thou reign'st in mystic power, the very voice of love.

To MARIE KREBS. ANDREW PARK.

Digitized by Google

VIENNA.

(From our Correspondent.)

A delicate compliment was paid Verdi during his recent visit to this city. His bust was sent for from Milan, and placed among the busts of other celebrated composers in the saloon of the Imperial Operahouse, where it had previously been wanting. Talking of Verdi, it appears that the two ladies who sang in his Requiem and Aïda, when he himself conducted those two works, will soon be lost to the stage, and retire into private life. Mdlle Stolz, having made a handsome fortune, intends in future to live on it; while Mdlle Waldmann is going to marry Count Masari, a rich Italian nobleman, who has long paid his addresses to her.

Herr Jauner has discovered a curious swindle, of which he, and, doubtless, the Imperial Intendants before him, were the victims. Some of the check-takers, and other subordinate officials connected with the theatre, were in the habit of selling, in the neighbouring hotels and coffee-houses, large numbers of orders, procured, no doubt, improperly. The system was pursued so openly that these persons absolutely paid with orders for what they had to eat and drink, the value of the orders being, of course, reckoned at a very low figure. Herr Jauner himself purchased fifty orders from various waiters, and then had the waiters cited before the magistrates. The waiters gave the names of the persons from whom they had obtained the tickets; and these persons—mostly, as already said, check-takers and other subordinate officials of the Operahouse—were forthwith arrested. The trial is likely to last some time, as the number of the prisoners is considerable.

At the last Liedertafel of the Academic Vocal Union, the programme included a chorus by Franz Lachner, with words by Felix Dahn: "Macte, Imperator" ("Hail to Thee, Emperor!") The chorus pleased and was encored. Some time after the concert the president of the society was summoned before the Director of Police, who read a note in which the Authorities expressed their displeasure at the choice of this Latin chorus, and disapproved more especially of the demonstrative manner in which the last strophe had been repeated. The conclusion of the last strophe runs, when translated, thus:—

> "Hail to Thee, white-haired Imperator,
> Barbablanca, Triumphator,
> Hail! Saviour of our Fatherland."

It is a remarkable fact that the Police found no fault with the same chorus when it was publicly sung, last October, by the Wiener-Sängerbund, and it seems strange they should do so now, when such a good feeling is said to reign between the Empire of Austria-Hungary and the Emperor of Germany.

—o—

PIERSON'S JERUSALEM.

By Amicus Patriæ (1852).

(Continued from page 461.)

In the treatment of his Jerusalem, Mr Pierson's first object has been that of a scholar—to look at it, words and music, as one whole, and never to sacrifice the integrity of the first, as conveying the immediate sense. In no one instance is either pronunciation, accent, or rhythm disturbed; in some cases even the accentuation of the music itself is threatened in order to avoid such an evil, only, however, I must admit, most entirely to prove the composer's ability to cope with the difficulty: in this respect, perfection is scarcely too strong a term. Neither are there any of those senseless repetitions, so destructive to the cohesion of sound and sense, and yet so almost universally overlooked as a defect; repetitions there are, but only where the impressiveness of the phrase will fully admit them, or, where the musical phrase being necessarily incomplete, the one "harmonious sister" naturally and gracefully yields for the time to the other. Bearing in mind this nice attention to the simple setting of the words, we shall next observe with what peculiar affinity the pieces grow one out of another, like links in a chain. There is no jarring of equivocal discords; no excuse to the ear as to what it must submit to in passing from key to key with each successive piece: it is led from one movement, from one region of harmony to the next, without annoyance of any description. Mr Pierson possesses a power of gradually altering the forms of his passages, so that they literally melt one into another, beyond any other composer with whom I am acquainted; he exerts this power most especially at such points, and the effect upon the ear may be compared to that of listening to one of Addison's or Burke's polished and re-polished pieces of eloquence. As an example of both the characteristics here described, I would direct attention to the very fine enharmonic change which takes place in the transition from the opening recitative of the second part, "The Lord hath accomplished," to the following solo and chorus, "A voice of wailing," and to the use of the triplet phrases at the same point; they are literally fused into the various expressions required—like molten silver in the hands of the artificer, which he compresses into the forms he needs. Another instance of a similar description may be found in the passage from the duettino, "The sons of strangers," to the following chorus, "The Eternal God," in the second part. These changes are not strictly enharmonic, as they take place at the end of one movement and the beginning of the next, but they are so in fact, and do not forfeit that character to the ear by the intrusion of the double bar. In the last named example the effect is particularly striking. The movements made use of by Mr Pierson—the artistic forms in which he has clothed his musical conceptions—combine all those in present use in oratorio composition, with one important novelty—the "Recitativo Arioso." Recitative is under all circumstances the most difficult part of a work to treat effectively, and yet, like blank verse in poetry, it is the expedient oftenest resorted to by composers not sufficiently certain of their own powers. So completely is this the case, that in plain recitative it is not easy, from the limited nature of the means employed and the quantity that has been written, to avoid plagiarism. The name of Mr Pierson's innovation explains its character, and I fancy I hear the admirers of giant Handel uttering doubts as to its action upon the declamatory force of the language. It is a bold step certainly, but one in which the composer is fully justified by the necessities of the case. His excellent taste, too, in the use of his instruments, prevents anything approaching to what is melo-dramatic in style—the danger most to be apprehended—and when tested, the "Recitativo Arioso" will be found to assist in getting rid of monotony; it seems to me to act upon the music as hills covered with herbage do in nature, by softening the rugged sameness of bare rocks. When such masses appear in the shape of plain recitative (and with Mr Pierson they emerge from the more harmonious concomitants of his landscape wherever in keeping) they stand out in bolder relief for the contrast.

(To be continued.)

PETIPACE! EN AVANT.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

Sir,—The day after the first performance of the Amber Witch (Scene—Edinburgh Castle; present—Panurge and Pantagruel), the following P.P. bets were laid, relative to Wallace's chef-d'œuvre. 1st—10 to 1 that no analytical critique would appear on the new opera on the following Saturday—2nd March; 2nd—2 to 1, ditto, ditto, on March 9th; 3rd—50 to 1, that whenever the said critique does appear it will not be an original analysis, but an unacknowledged removal; 4th—100 to 1, &c. Panurge—flushed with victory on the first two events—is more than sanguine about winning Nos. 3 and 4; and, in reply to Pantagruel's arguments per contra, simply answers—"it is the way of the World!" What sayest thou, most potent Petipace? Yieldest thou, rescue or no rescue, to this most plagiaristic averment?—or, wilt thou for one week, like a modern Atlas, support the World on thine own shoulders? An early answer will oblige the "Kings of the Castle," as well as thine, Rabelais.

[Petipace, of Winchelsea, is not an "ordinary" Atlas, but an extraordinary;—otherwise he might yield.—O. B.]

Digitized by Google

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

SIR,—Will you allow me to trespass upon the space of your influential and much-read paper, to inform, not only my friends, but the musical public in general, that I am not fulfilling an engagement at the Alhambra Theatre, and that I have never been in treaty for a position there. It seems that a gentleman has had the more than questionable taste to assume my name, and is performing there nightly, and many persons infer that it is the present writer who is thus appearing, as many of my friends have spoken to me on the subject. I have not seen the gentleman; but whatever his merits, I am undesirous that any of my professional friends should, even in thought, deprive him of the honour of any criticism that may have been passed with respect to his artistic doings. In like manner, I am jealous of my own reputation, and do not wish that any review of my performances with which you, Sir, or any other discerning writer may favour me, should be put to this gentleman's credit, through my tolerably well-known Christian name being omitted. In your current number, for instance, in noticing Madame Burrington's concert, at which I sang, you say, in effect, Mr Penna was encored in both his songs; while, had you given the Christian name of Frederic, as stated in the programme, there could have been no question as to who the singer was. With every apology for thus troubling you, and thanks for many courtesies, I am, Sir, yours, most obediently,

FREDERIC PENNA.

June 21st, 1875.

WAIFS.

There was an old artist called Beverly,
Who painted uncommonly cleverly;
He faced all at such distance,
Things seemed their existence
To lose in the haze of this Beverly.

M. Faure leaves London, for Paris, to-morrow.

Mdlle Carlotta Patti (sister of the Marquise de Caux) is making a professional tour in South Germany.

ORGAN APPOINTMENT.—Mr William Coulson, Tregarthen, organist of St John's Church, Redland, and articled pupil of Mr George Riseley, has been appointed organist to St Paul's Church, Clifton.

The Stadttheater at Leipsic will still be carried on by private enterprise—not, as was contemplated some time since, by a Government Intendant, with a fixed salary and a percentage on the receipts.

The music provided by the Prince of Wales for his garden fête, given at Chiswick last week, was entrusted to the military bands of the 2nd Life Guards, under the direction of Mr F. Godfrey, and the Scotch Fusilier Guards, directed by Mr J. P. Clarke.

At the close of the Royal Italian Opera season, Mdme Adelina Patti will go to Dieppe, whence she returns in September to sing in concerts at Brighton, Birmingham, and Manchester, under the direction of Mr Kuhe. On hearing of the destitution caused by the recent floods around Toulouse, Mdme Patti at once telegraphed to Mdme MacMahon and M. Halanzier, offering her services at a benefit performance at the Grand Opéra. It is needless to say that the aid thus tendered was gratefully accepted, and the representation will take place on October 1st. A fortnight afterwards, Mdme Patti leaves Paris to enter upon a new Russian campaign—Concordia, July 10, 1875.

The boys of the workhouse schools of London, or those who are under training apart from workhouse influences and apart from the old régime which reared the pauper child into a pauper adult, had, last week, at the Alexandra Palace, a band contest, before Colonel S. F. Fitzwygram, the officials of the Local Government Board, and a large party of ladies and gentlemen interested in the elevation of the poorer classes. The bands present were from the parish (now called district) schools of Bethnal Green, St Marylebone, St Pancras, the Strand, from the Goliath training-ship, and from the schools of combined parishes at Forest Gate. The judges were Mr Dan Godfrey, Mr H. Weist Hill, Mr S. Hughes, and Mr Howard Reynolds. The bands each played a selection from Offenbach's opera of Orphée aux Enfers, and the judges awarded to the Strand Union band a prize of £25, given by Colonel Sir Frederick Fitzwygram; to the Marylebone School the second prize (£10), given by the same donor; and to the boys of the Goliath a purse of £5, given by Mr Edward Boulnois, the Chairman of the St Marylebone Guardians, who had arranged the contest. Lady Lee presented the prizes. There was a separate contest for a "Courtois cornet," value 12 guineas, given by Mr S. A. Chpppell.—Times, July 10.

Miss Lillie Albrecht's pleasing and girlish manner left a most favourable impression on the audience at Signor Rocca's concert, and the simple and truthful manner in which she gave one of Chopin's valses was in all respects commendable.—Drawing-room Gazette.

ORGAN RECITAL.—Mr J. C. Dunster, organist of the Bavarian Ambassador's Chapel, Warwick Street, Regent Street, gave an organ recital, on Thursday, before a numerous audience. The Bavarian Chapel was at one time celebrated for sacred performances, on Sundays and holidays, by the artists of the Italian opera; but, their privileges being curtailed, they have long ceased to sing there. Mr J. C. Dunster performed a varied selection of pieces by Batiste, Mendelssohn, Mozart, Handel, Beethoven, and some of his own arrangements, all of which gave evident satisfaction to those present. It is to be hoped he will repeat the performance, and enable persons fond of the organ to pass an hour in the afternoon pleasantly.

ALEXANDRA PALACE.—On Monday the Odd Fellows will hold their fête at Muswell Hill; there will also be a swimming fête, a balloon ascent, &c. On Tuesday the Vaudeville Theatre company will perform in the Two Roses. The first of the Summer Evening Promenade Concerts will be held on Wednesday, and the second on Saturday. At these concerts Miss Rose Hersee, Signor Foli, and Signor Brignoli will appear, and the orchestra and choir will be largely augmented. In addition to a miscellaneous concert each day, selections from the works of Beethoven will be given on Wednesday; whilst on Saturday, the feature will be Irish ballads, and selections from the works of Balfe. Jullien's "British Army Quadrilles" will be revived at these performances with all their original effects. After the concert on Wednesday, there will be a grand display of fireworks; and, on Saturday, an illumination of the Palace and grounds. On Thursday there will be a pigeon-race, and Mr Sothern, by request, will give another performance of David Garrick. The first of a series of performances of standard English comedies will be given in the theatre on Saturday, when Mrs Hermann Vezin, Mrs Chippendale, Miss Caroline Hill, Mr Leathes, Mr Compton, Mr Chippendale, and other eminent artists will appear in Sheridan's School for Scandal.

Advertisements.

THE VOICE & SINGING

BY

ADOLFO FERRARI.

THE FORMATION AND CULTIVATION OF THE VOICE FOR SINGING.

Price 12s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, REGENT STREET, W.

"The remarkable qualities of this book are the author's freedom from conventional trammels, the strong sense of his opinions, and the novelty yet evident soundness of his precepts; his work has consequently come into general use as a manual of vocal instruction."—Daily News.

THE ART OF SINGING.

New Edition, Revised and Improved, of

A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR

THE VOICE.

By T. A. WALLWORTH.

A Method as used by the Author in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which he has cultivated the voices of his Pupils, Mdlle Alwina Valleria, Miss Lucy Franklein, and other successful Vocalists.

Full Music Size, price 7s.

London: HAMMOND & Co. (late JULLIEN), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his Residence, 36, Wimpole Street.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE,

For invigorating and enriching the voice, and removing affections of the throat.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE is universally acknowledged to be the most valuable remedy for sore throat, hoarseness and relaxed throat. It should always be taken before singing or reciting, as it strengthens the vocal organs. It is most extensively prescribed by the faculty for the throat and voice. Dr Lewis of Basingstoke says he finds them most efficacious, and in Dr Copland's Dictionary of Practical Medicine (Longman & Co.), they are strongly recommended at pages 872 and 1492. They are used by all the greatest vocalists and orators in Europe, and have been established over a quarter of a century. Testimonials from Patti, Grisi, Lablache, Santley, &c. Sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d. by all Chemists throughout the United Kingdom and the Colonies.

Digitized by Google

NEW SONGS.

THE LAST FAREWELL.

New Song by J. L. HATTON.

Sung by Mdlle ALBANI, at the Floral Hall Concerts, with the greatest possible success. In C and E. Price 4s.

NEW SONGS
BY ARTHUR SULLIVAN.

SWEETHEARTS. In A♭ and B♭. Sung by E. LLOYD 4s
THE JUDGE'S SONG. From Trial by Jury. Sung by Mr. FRED SULLIVAN 4s
TENDER AND TRUE. In E♭ and F. Sung by EDITH WYNNE 4s
THE DISTANT SHORE. In E♭, F, and G 4s
THOU ART WEARY. In D minor and F minor ... 4s
THOU'RT PASSING HENCE... ... ... 4s

NEW SONGS
BY VIRGINIA GABRIEL.

CLOVELLY. Words from "Songs for Sailors." Dedicated to H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh... ... 4s
SOWING AND REAPING. Sacred Song 3s
SHE CAME LIKE A DREAM. Sung by Madame ENRIQUEZ 3s
THE WHITE DOVE 2s 6d

NEW SONGS
BY FAVOURITE COMPOSERS.

YES AND NO ... ... LOUISA GRAY 3s
MY LADYE ... ... AMY COMPTON 3s
IN THE TWILIGHT HOURS „ 3s
ELSIE'S DREAM ... JOSEPH L. ROECKEL 3s
BESIDE THE SEA ... „ „ 3s
SUMMER WINDS ... „ „ 3s
SO LONG AGO... ... GEORGE BARKER 3s
NINETTE ... ... „ „ 3s
THE ENTREATY The Lady CLARENCE PAGET 3s
GLAMOUR ... „ „ 3s
SWEET LISETTE ... ... J. L. ROECKEL 3s
THE CHILDREN IN THE WOOD „ 3s

CHAPPELL & CO.,
50, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON.

ROYAL
ITALIAN OPERA.

PRODUCTION OF WAGNER'S
'LOHENGRIN.'

The Books of Airs (in Two Books), arranged for Pianoforte, with ad. lib. accompaniments for Flute, Violin, and Violoncello, by

W. HUTCHINS CALLCOTT

PRICE.

Solos ... ... 5*s. each.*
Duets ... ... 6*s.* „
Accompaniments ... ... 1*s.* „

LONDON:
HUTCHINGS & ROMER,
9, Conduit Street, Regent Street, W.

Digitized by Google

In 74 Numbers, price One Penny, or in One Volume, cloth, gilt edges, price 7s. 6d.

MOTETS FOR THE YEAR.

A COLLECTION OF OFFERTORIES,

WITH APPROPRIATE WORDS FOR EVERY SUNDAY AND DAY OF OBLIGATION DURING THE YEAR.

Edited and Dedicated (by permission) to the Right Rev. J. DANELL, D.D., Lord Bishop of Southwark, by

W. M. LUTZ,

ORGANIST OF ST. GEORGE'S CATHEDRAL, SOUTHWARK.

CONTENTS.

1	1st Sunday in Advent	Ad te levavi	Bs. Solo or Qrtt.	Webbe
2	2nd Sunday in Advent	Deus tu convertens	Qrtt. or Chorus	Henry Smart
3	3rd Sunday in Advent	Juste et pie vivamus	Duet or Chorus	Webbe
4	4th Sunday in Advent	Ave Maria	Solo or Chorus	W. M. Lutz
5	Any Sunday during Advent	Rorate	Chorus & Solo	Webbe
6	Christmas Day	Adeste Fideles	Solo & Chorus	Webbe
7	Sunday within Octave of Christmas	Attolite	Solo & Chorus	Webbe
8	Circumcision	Tui sunt coeli	Ten. So. & Chor.	A. Sullivan
9	Epiphany	Reges Tharsis	Chorus	W. M. Lutz
10	Sunday within Octave	Jubilate	Chorus	W. M. Lutz
11	Holy Name	Jesu dulcis	Qrtt. & Chorus	Beethoven
12	3rd Sunday after Epiphany	Dextera Domini	Chorus	Schumann
13	Septuagesima Sunday	Bonum est	Solo & Chorus	Benedict
14	Sexagesima Sunday	Perfice	Solo or Chorus	Webbe
15	Quinquagesima Sunday	Super flumina	Soli & Chorus	Webbe
16	1st Sunday in Lent	Ecce nunc tempus	Duet or Chorus	Webbe
17	2nd Sunday in Lent	Preces populi	Chorus	W. M. Lutz
18	3rd Sunday in Lent	Justitiæ	Chorus or Qrtt.	Mendelssohn
1	4th Sunday in Lent	Ad te levavi	Bs. Solo or Qrtt.	Webbe
19	Passion Sunday	Stabat Mater	Chorus	Webbe
20	Palm Sunday	Improperium	Chorus	André
21	Easter Sunday (Gradual)	Hæc dies	Chorus or Trio, T.T. & B.	Webbe
22	,, ,, (Offertory)	Victimæ	Chorus	Webbe
23	Low Sunday	Angelus Domini	Chorus	André
24	2nd Sunday after Easter	Deus misereatur	Chorus & Soli	Webbe
25	3rd Sunday after Easter	Landa anima	Solo or Chorus	Webbe
10	4th Sunday after Easter	Jubilate	Chorus	W. M. Lutz
26	5th Sunday after Easter	Benedicimus	Duet or Chorus	Webbe
27	Ascension Day	Ascendit Deus	Duet or Chorus	Webbe
28	Sunday within Octave of Ascension Day	Rex Gloriæ	Duet or Chorus	Webbe
29	Whit Sunday (Gradual)	Emitte / Veni sancte spiritus	Trio or Chorus / Duet or Chorus	Webbe / Webbe
30	,, ,, (Offertory)	Confirma hoc Deus	Soli or Chorus	W. M. Lutz
31	Trinity Sunday	Benedictus est	Chorus	W. M. Lutz
32	1st Sunday after Pentecost	Intende voci	Chorus	André
33	Corpus Christi (Gradual)	Lauda Sion	Duet or Chorus	Webbe
34	,, ,, (Offertory)	O sacrum convivium	Solo	Webbe
35	2nd Sunday after Pentecost	Domine convertere	Soli & Chorus	W. M. Lutz
36	3rd Sunday after Pentecost	Protector	Duet	Webbe
37	4th Sunday after Pentecost	Illumina	Solo or Chorus	W. M. Lutz
38	St Peter and St Paul	Roma felix	Duet or Chorus	Webbe
39	5th Sunday after Pentecost	Audi hymnum	Solo & Chorus	Webbe
14	6th Sunday after Pentecost	Perfice	Solo or Chorus	Webbe
40	7th Sunday after Pentecost	Sicut in holocaustis	Qrtt. or Chorus	Mozart
41	8th Sunday after Pentecost	Tu es gloria	Bass Solo	Webbe
18	9th Sunday after Pentecost	Justitiæ	Chorus or Qrtt.	Mendelssohn
1	10th Sunday after Pentecost	Ad te levavi	Solo or Quartett	Webbe
42	11th Sunday after Pentecost	Exurgat Deus	Chorus	Webbe
43	Assumption	Assumpta est	Chorus	Neukom
44	12th Sunday after Pentecost	Benedicam	Chorus	Eybler
45	13th Sunday after Pentecost	In te speravi	T. So. (& Chor. ad lib.)	W. M. Lutz
36	14th Sunday after Pentecost	Protector	Duet	Webbe
13	15th Sunday after Pentecost	Bonum est	Solo or Chorus	Benedict
46	16th Sunday after Pentecost	Domine in auxilium	Soli & Chorus	W. M. Lutz
47	17th Sunday after Pentecost	Oravi	Soli & Chorus	Dr Crookal
48	18th Sunday after Pentecost	Timebunt	Chorus	W. M. Lutz
49	19th Sunday after Pentecost	Si ambulavere	Bs. Solo (Chor. ad lib.)	W. M. Lutz
15	20th Sunday after Pentecost	Super flumina	Chorus	Webbe
50	21st Sunday after Pentecost	Vir erat hus	Chorus	W. M. Lutz
51	22nd Sunday after Pentecost	Recordare	Solo & Chorus	Führer
52	All Saints (Gradual)	Tibi omnes angeli	Chorus	Webbe
53	,, (Offertory)	Justorum	Solo	Webbe
54	23rd Sunday after Pentecost	Hæc dicit Dominus	Soli & Chorus	Webbe
55	Nativity	Beata	Chorus	W. M. Lutz
56	Holy Name	Ave Maria	Solo	Cherubini
57	Seven Dolors	Stabat Mater	Chorus	Gregorian
4	Rosary	Ave Maria	Solo or Chorus	W. M. Lutz
55	Maternity	Beata	Chorus	W. M. Lutz
58	Purity	Succurre miseris	Duet & Chorus	Webbe
4	Patronage	Ave Maria	Solo or Chorus	W. M. Lutz
59	Confessor	Ecce sacerdos	Duet	Webbe
60	Martyrs	Qui seminant	Duet & Chorus	Webbe
61	One Martyr	Justus ut palma	Qrtt. or Chorus	W. M. Lutz
62	Apostles	Gloria et honore	Qrtt. or Chorus	W. M. Lutz
63	Virgins and Holy Women	Diffusa	Qrtt. or Chorus	W. M. Lutz
64		Asperges	Chorus	Gregorian
65	In Paschal time	Vidi aquam	Duet or Chorus	Webbe
66	Prayer for the Queen	Domine salvum fac	Chorus	Martini

APPENDIX.

67	Magnificat	Soli & Chor.	Webbe
68	Alma (from 1st Sunday in Advent till the Purification)	Solo & Chor.	Webbe
69	Ave Regina (from the Purification till Maunday Thursday)	Soli & Chor.	Webbe
70	Regina Coeli (from Holy Saturday till Trinity Eve)	Soli & Chor.	Webbe
71	Salve Regina (from Trinity Eve till Advent)	Soli & Chor.	Webbe
72	O Salutaris	Chorus	Webbe
73	O sacrum convivium	Dt. or Chor.	Webbe
74	Tantum ergo	Chorus	Webbe

Also, Just Published,

SHORT MASSES FOR SMALL CHOIRS.

EDITED BY SIR J. BENEDICT.

A COLLECTION OF MASSES, FOR ONE, TWO, THREE, AND FOUR VOICES,

WITH ORGAN ACCOMPANIMENTS.

Price Sixpence each, or in One Volume, cloth, price 5s.

CONTENTS.

1	Webbe's Mass	(3 voices)	in A.
2	,, ,,	,,	in D.
3	,, ,,	,,	in B flat.
4	,, ,,	,,	in F.
5	,, ,,	,,	in C.
6	,, ,,	,,	in D minor.
7	Webbe's Mass	(4 voices)	in G.
8	Missa de Angelis	(Unison)	in D.
9	Dumont's Mass	,,	in D minor.
10	Missa in Dominicis diebus per annum	,,	in D minor.
11	Missa pro defunctis	,,	in F.
12	Wesley's Gregorian Mass	(4 voices)	in G.

These Masses are published in a cheap form, in order to meet a growing demand for simple, melodious, harmonized music. In the cases where the register has been found too high for boys' voices, supplementary notes have been inserted.

They are thus adapted as well for Chancel Choirs, as for those in which the Soprano parts are taken by female voices.

LONDON: BOOSEY & CO., 295, REGENT STREET, W.

Printed by HENDERSON, RAIT, AND FENTON, at No. 69, Marylebone Lane, Oxford Street, in the Parish of Marylebone, in the County of Middlesex.
Published by WILLIAM DUNCAN DAVISON, at the Office, 244, Regent Street, Saturday, July 17, 1875.

The Musical World.

(REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.)

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Göethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST, 20s. PER ANNUM,
Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to DUNCAN DAVISON & CO., 244, Regent Street, London, W

VOL. 53—No. 30. SATURDAY, JULY 24, 1875. PRICE { 4d. Unstamped. 5d. Stamped.

HER MAJESTY'S OPERA, THEATRE ROYAL, DRURY LANE.

Closing Performance.—"Lohengrin."

THIS EVENING (SATURDAY), July 24th, will be presented (for the Ninth and Last time) WAGNER'S Grand Romantic Opera, "LOHENGRIN." The performance will commence at Eight o'clock. Elsa di Brabante, Mdme Christine Nilsson; Lohengrin, Signor Campanini; Federico di Telramondo, Signor Galassi; Enrico, Herr Behrens; Araldo, Signor Costa; and Ortruda, Mdlle Tietjens. During the evening will be sung the National Anthem.

Amphitheatre stalls, 7s. and 5s.; amphitheatre, 2s. Box-office open from Ten till Five. Tickets also of the principal Librarians and Musicsellers.

MR SIMS REEVES has the honour to announce that, having made special arrangements, his ANNUAL BENEFIT CONCERT will take place this year at the CRYSTAL PALACE, on SATURDAY next, the 31st July, Concert commencing at Four o'clock. Artists—Mdme Christine Nilsson (her first and only appearance at the Crystal Palace this season), Mdme Patey, and Mdlle Tietjens) her last appearance before her departure for America); Signor Foli, Mr Edward Lloyd, and Mr Sims Reeves. Pianoforte — Mr Charles Hallé. Conductors—Mr August Manns and Mr Arthur Sullivan. Trumpet obbligato—Mr T. Harper. Accompanist—Mr Sidney Naylor. Numbered stalls, 7s. 6d. and 5s.; galleries, 3s.; reserved seats, 2s. 6d. Admission, One Shilling; or by Guinea Season Tickets. In the evening a great Pyrotechnic Display, with special devices, by Messrs C. T. Brock and Co. Plans of seats at concert, and places booked at Austin's Ticket Office, St James's Hall; Novello's, 1, Berners Street, W.; all Music Publishers; and at the Crystal Palace Ticket Office.

MR W. H. HOLMES'S SECOND PIANOFORTE CONCERT, by his Professional Pupils, assisted by eminent Professors (which he is permitted to announce under the patronage of their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of EDINBURGH), will take place at ST JAMES'S HALL, FRIDAY, July 30, at Two o'clock. Programmes and Tickets of Mr W. H. HOLMES, 36, Beaumont Street, W.

MDME LIEBHART will sing SIR JULIUS BENEDICT'S new Song, "NORAH'S MESSAGE," with Harp accompaniment by Mr Aptomas, at the Concert for the Benefit of the Sufferers from the Inundation in France, at Langham Hall, 43, Great Portland Street, on Tuesday, July 27th, at Eight.

MDLLE E. TATE will play Sonata, No. 5 (Beethoven), with violin; Partita (1) B Dur (Bach), (2) Scherzo in B flat minor (Chopin); Sonata, Op. 27, No. 2 (Beethoven); Rigoletto (Liszt); Trio, Op. 1, No. 2, G Dur (Beethoven)—at her Concert, To-Night, at Eight o'clock, St George's Hall, Langham Place.

MISS LILLIE ALBRECHT will play, at Langham Hall (in Aid of the Sufferers from the Inundation in the South of France), on Tuesday Evening, July 27th, KETTERER'S "GRAND OCTAVE GALOP DE CONCERT."

MDLLE JOSEPHINE MONTAGNON (Mezzo-Soprano), of Schubert Society's Concerts. For Concert ENGAGEMENTS, address—Care of C. J. BISHENDEN, Esq., 16, Newman Street, Oxford Street, London, W.

MR EMILE BERGER is re-engaged as Pianist for the Saturday Evening Concerts (Glasgow), commencing in September.

HERR WILHELMJ will be at liberty to accept ENGAGEMENTS during the months of November and December next. All communications to be addressed to Mr N. VERT, 52, New Bond Street, W.

MR PAUL SEMLER (Pianist) begs to announce that he can accept engagements for Balls, Soirées, &c. His repertoire consists of all the celebrated Dance Music of the day, as well as his own compositions. Terms on application, by letter, to be addressed to the care of Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & CO., Foreign Music Warehouse, 244, Regent Street, W.

TO PUBLISHERS.—A Young Man wishes for an ENGAGEMENT in the establishment of a Music Publisher or Librarian, either as Traveller or Assistant. Good address; is a fair Pianist.—"Scherzo," DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street.

OTTO on the VIOLIN. — New and further Enlarged Edition, published This Day, price 4s. This work is a Treatise on the Structure and Preservation of the Violin, and all other Bow Instruments, together with an account of the most celebrated Makers, and of the genuine characteristics of their Instruments. Translated from the Original, with Additions and Illustrations by JOHN BISHOP. London: ROBERT COCKS & Co., New Burlington Street.

THE LATE DR ELVEY'S PSALTER.

Eighth Edition, demy 8vo, cloth, price 5s.

THE PSALTER; or, Canticles and Psalms of David. Pointed for Chanting on a new principle. With Explanations and Directions. By the late STEPHEN ELVEY, Mus. Doc., Organist of New and St John's Colleges, and Organist and Choragus to the University of Oxford.

Also,

A Cheaper Edition (the Tenth). Fcap. 8vo, cloth limp, price 2s. 6d.
The Canticles separately (Fourteenth Edition). Fcap. 8vo, price 6d.
This Psalter is used at St George's Chapel, Windsor, and at many Cathedrals.—JAS. PARKER & Co., Oxford and London.

Just Published.

TWO SONGS.

"EVENING IN AUTUMN." Words by R. HARE, Esq. .. price 3s.
(Dedicated to Miss E. KEAPTON.)

"WAITED AND WATCHED." Words by ORLANDO WRIGHT price 3s.
(Dedicated to his friend, W. MAYBRICK, Esq.)

Composed by W. F. BANKS.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

"HOME, SWEET HOME."

TRANSCRIBED FOR THE HARP SOLO.

By CHARLES OBERTHUR.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

VOCAL EXERCISES.

Composed by FRANK MORI.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

N.B.—These Vocal Exercises, as taught by FRANK MORI, are invaluable both to Students and Professors.

"WITH MOONLIGHT BEAMING."

DUET

For Equal Voices.

The Music Composed and Dedicated to

MISS HEGINBOTHAM and MISS MOWER,

By H. KUSTER.

Price 3s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"OUR DARLING."

SONG,

(in C and in E flat).

The Words by ETTY LOVELL.

The Music by J. HALLETT SHEPPARD.

Price 3s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

BRIGHTON CONCERT AGENTS,

PIANOFORTE AND MUSICSELLERS,

LYON & HALL,

WARWICK MANSION.

Digitized by Google

NORAH'S MESSAGE.

SUNG BY

MADME ADELINA PATTI

WITH DISTINGUISHED SUCCESS AT

THE FLORAL HALL.

THE POETRY BY

THE LADY JOHN MANNERS.

THE MUSIC BY

SIR JULIUS BENEDICT.

Price 4s.

"A new and pretty Irish ballad, abounding in sentiment and feeling, and precisely the kind of thing desired by the mass of amateurs, was most delightfully sung by Mdme Adelina Patti. It is called 'Norah's Message.'"—Morning Advertiser.

LONDON:
DUNCAN DAVISON & CO., 244, REGENT STREET.

WILFORD MORGAN'S SONGS.

HER I LOVE .. .. 4s.
COULD I BUT CALL HER MINE.. .. .. 4s.
MY SWEETHEART WHEN A BOY .. .. 4s.
SWEET EVENING AIR .. .. 4s.
(N.B.—The above Songs have been sung with distinguished success by Mr WILFORD MORGAN.)
LITTLE BIRDIE, SING TO ME .. .. 4s.
(Sung by Miss EDITH WYNNE.)

ANTHEM.

IF THOU WILT FORGET ME (THE 137TH PSALM) .. .. .. 4s.
(For Tenor or Soprano Solo, with Chorus ad. lib., as sung at the Temple Church. Composed by WILFORD MORGAN.)
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

TWO DUETS
FOR
TWO PERFORMERS ON ONE PIANOFORTE,

No. 1, DUET IN G. No. 2, DUET IN F MINOR.
Price 3s. each.
Composed by HEINRICH STIEHL.
(Op. 73.)
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"CHARLIE IS MY DARLING,"
SCOTCH AIR,
AND
PORTUGUESE AIR,
("TO THE BELOVED ONE")
Transcribed for the Pianoforte.
By CHARLES E. STEPHENS.
Price 4s. each.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.
"MY LADY SLEEPS."
SERENADE FOR VOICE AND PIANO.
By IGNACE GIBSONE.
DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Two Sacred Duets (Just Published) by HENRY SMART.
"SUMMER OF THE SILENT HEART,"
AND
"BEYOND THE HILLS,"
SACRED DUETS
For Soprano and Contralto.
Composed by HENRY SMART.
Price 4s. each.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"DREAM ON,"
SONG,
Words and Music by ERNEST HOUGHTON.
Price 3s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"CUPID'S APPEAL,"
BALLAD,
And the Sequel,
"MARRIAGE BELLS,"
SONG.
Price 3s. each.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

NEW SONG,
"MID THE SCENTED CLOVER,"
Sung by
Miss EDITH WYNNE.
Composed by
LOUIS DIEHL.
Price 4s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

EVENING THOUGHTS.
FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

No. 1. "TWILIGHT." No. 3. "THE SHEPHERD'S PRAYER."
No. 2. "THE BROOK." No. 4. "WAFTED UPWARDS."

Composed by IGNACE GIBSONE.
Price 3s. each.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"ALBION AND SCOTIA,"
FANTASIA FOR THE PIANOFORTE,
On "My Love is like the Red Red Rose" and "The Lass of Richmond Hill."
Composed by WILLIAM CRAWFORD.
Price 4s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published,
ESPAGNOLIA.
BOLERO FOR THE PIANOFORTE.
BY
CHARLES OBERTHUR.
Price 4s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.
Where may be obtained, composed by C. OBERTHUR, "SI DOUX ET CHER," Poésie Musicale pour Piano, prix 3s.

"YESTERDAY."
SONG.
Written by CARIS BROOKE.
Composed by
P. A. PARISS.
Price 4s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Digitized by Google

Paris ce 3. Octobre

Mon Cher Monsieur Davison!

M. Brandus vous aura déjà dit combien j'étais peiné de ce que un engagement antérieur me privait du plaisir de me rendre à votre aimable invitation pour Lundi. Vous pouvez me dédommager de cette perte si vous voulez être assez bon & aimable de me faire l'honneur de venir dîner avec moi Mercredi Prochain, à 6 heures aux petits moulins rouges avenue d'Antin N°. 17. Vous y trouverez MM. Berlioz, Duler, Lehain & quelques autres personnes de votre connaissance. Dites Oui Cher M.r Davison Vous serez grand plaisir par là à Votre tout dévoué Meyerbeer a

Monsieur W. J. Davison Esq:
Meyerbeer
Paris

Digitized by Google

ACORNS, SLOES, AND BLACKBERRIES.

By Gibbs Gibb Gibbs, Esq.

No. 6.

Reinhard Keiser (born at Leipsic in 1673), is considered the father of German melody. When director of the Operahouse at Hamburgh, and the speculation was just on the point of failing, he saved the concern from ruin, by writing and bringing out no less than eight operas in one year. Every one of them succeeded, and their receipts released the theatre from all pecuniary difficulties.

Keiser, in conjunction with the learned Matheson, gave public concerts at Copenhagen, where he was honoured with the nomination of Chapelmaster to the King. On his return to Hamburgh, he brought out Circè, the last and most beautiful of his operas. This was first performed in 1734, and was the one hundred and eighteenth which this indefatigable artist had produced. He died in 1735. It is to be regretted that hardly any of Keiser's works are now to be procured, though a new edition of some few of them was talked of in Hamburgh about the year 1810.

Johann Caspar Kerl was a native of Saxony. He is justly esteemed one of the most celebrated organists that the world ever produced. Kerl's principal work is his "Modulatio organica super Magnificat acto tonis ecclesiasticis respondens." In a competition that he had with some Italian musicians, at the court of the Elector of Bavaria, he composed a piece for the organ so difficult that none but himself could execute it.

Michael Lambert, born in the year 1610, at Vivoune, is supposed to be the first who gave his countrymen a just notion of the graces of vocal music. His compositions, however, are not very numerous. He died at Paris in 1690.

Lamia was the most celebrated female flute-player in antiquity; her beauty, wit, and abilities in her profession, made her regarded as a prodigy. The honours she received, which are recorded by several authors, particularly by Plutarch and Athenæus, are sufficient testimonies of her great power over the passions of her hearers. Her claim to admiration, from her personal allurements, does not entirely depend, at present, upon the fidelity of historians; since an exquisite engraving of her head, upon an amethyst, with the veil and bandage of her profession, is preserved in Paris, which in some measure authenticates the accounts of her beauty. As she was a great traveller, her reputation soon became very extended. Her first journey from Athens, the place of her birth, was into Egypt, whither she was drawn by the fame of the flute-players of that country. Her person and performances were not long unnoticed at the court of Alexandria. However, in the conflict between Ptolemy Soter and Demetrius, for the island of Cyprus, about three hundred and twelve years before Christ, Ptolemy being defeated in a sea engagement, his wives, domestics, and military stores fell into the hands of Demetrius. Plutarch, in his life of this Prince, tells us that "the celebrated Lamia was among the female captives taken in this victory. She had been universally admired at first on account of her talents, for she was a wonderful performer on the flute; but afterwards her fortune became more splendid by the charms of her person, which procured her many admirers of great rank." The prince, whose captive she became, conceived a violent passion for Lamia. At her instigation he conferred such extraordinary benefits upon the Athenians, that they rendered him divine honours, and, as an acknowledgment of the influence which she had exercised in their favour, they dedicated a temple to her under the name of "Venus Lamia."

More about Lohengrin.

At length, after we have waited, with more or less anxiety, for some years, buoyed up by hope and prostrated by despair, an opportunity of hearing Herr Wagner's Lohengrin has been vouchsafed to us; and, although we are given to understand that the opera is but, as it were, milk for babes, it is the kind of food which is able to nourish us, so that, in the time to come, those who choose can feast upon the strong meat of the Music of the Future. For ourselves, we are rather inclined to resent this term. We cannot wholly and suddenly discard the idea that Beethoven was something more than a fumbler in the dark, and that Fidelio is a work which embodies the true spirit of dramatic and poetical music. It is hard at first, and when we have only heard Lohengrin once, to grasp the notion that Mozart was a student of his craft, who worked on wrong principles; indeed, so long have we trodden in the ancient ways, that we are even reluctant to write Meyerbeer down an ignorant and misguided concoctor of orchestral effects. By a very excellent authority, "Music" has been described as a "heavenly maid;" but Herr Wagner seems to draw much of his inspiration from other sources. There is, however, music and music—the "concord of sweet sounds," of which Lorenzo spoke, and the harmony which Nick Bottom described. "I have a reasonable good ear in music," the immortal weaver of Athens once asserted; "let us have the tongs and the bones;" and Herr Wagner would indignantly ask, "Why not?" When Bottom is translated, the apostle of the Music of the Future would say inharmonious elements are enjoying a temporary triumph. The tongs and bones are comparatively inharmonious, let them be played, and the dramatic requirements of the situation will be adequately fulfilled. Herr Wagner and his disciples will be charmed, because they can argue out their motives from an irreproachable premiss, and the rest of humanity will be derided as Philistines, who can only appreciate beauty when it appeals directly through the sense which Providence has bestowed upon them, and before they are convinced that argument and the stern demands of philosophy will justify them in so doing. But whatever complaints may be made against the ignorant gibes of persons in this country who are supposed to be musical, certainly no charge of neglect can be brought against Mr Gye and those who assisted him in the maiden presentation. With Mdlle Albani as Elsa, Signor Nicolini as Lohengrin, Mdlle d'Angeri as Ortrud, and M. Maurel as Frederic of Telramund, all that could be done for this musically-illustrated drama was done; while the mise-en-scène was superb. Cloth of gold, regal purple, silver armour, and robes of spotless white, were all bountifully grouped together, to give effect to tableaux and processions. Several horses were led and ridden on to the stage; and the Swan, from which Lohengrin derives his sobriquet, was a mechanical triumph. But in opera it is impossible wholly to overlook a consideration of the music, if there is any; and, of the harmonies and melodies which we have been accustomed to class as music, there are few. The work took some four hours and a half in the performance, and the score occupies some 383 pages; though it is only fair to the management to admit that two or three dozen have been excised. Out of this lengthy book, all that is agreeable to the ear could be played in some twenty minutes. The story, we may remind our readers, describes how Lohengrin was sent by his father, Sir Percival, the guardian of the Holy Grail, to champion the cause of the innocent Elsa of Brabant, who is accused of having murdered her brother, who has really been spirited away by the witchcraft of Ortrud, wife of Frederic of Telramund. Unfortunately for Herr Wagner's hearers, a great deal of the story, and, therefore, of the music (to which the poem is supposed to be inseparably wedded), deals with the craft and cruelty of this reprehensible couple, and the "heavenly maid" is employed to illustrate their dark designs. The result is chiefly crudity and incoherence. Some passages of melody are to be found at distant intervals. The phrase in which Lohengrin bids farewell to the "bel cigno gentil" is eminently graceful, and there are a few bars of delightful chorus immediately afterwards. Elsa has one or two very short passages of truthfulness; and the finale to the first act, and the celebrated Bridal Chorus, "Lieti e fedel," in the third, are musical as we understand the term. But most of Lohengrin can only be described as "sound and fury, signifying nothing." Globe.

Digitized by Google

SALVINI.

(From the "Saturday Programme.")

(Concluded from page 481.)

But a still greater triumph was in store for the artist genius. It is one thing to make a stir in the amusement loving-world, and quite another to beat down the inevitable prejudices which surround the art of any nation. Many an indifferent actor or singer has before now been made into an idol and worshipped. But to obtain the worship of the professors of art is quite another thing. Now no one would pretend for a moment to say that English actors are overriden with prejudice, or are altogether destitute of the liberal sentiments which belong to the nation. Still, it is merely human nature when some resentment is felt at the perpetual praise of rivals or the encouragement of competitors. When a beautiful woman enters a ball-room it would not be natural if all her rivals crowded round her and loaded her with praise. They are all in a measure her rivals. They desire to shine as much as she does. They would be glad enough of the praise which is showered upon her. At any rate, they have entered into an honourable competition, and do not care to be beaten out of the field. Be this as it may, there are occasions, however, when the peerlessness of beauty in woman draws, as it were, the very eye-teeth of prejudice, and compels admiration even from rivals. There are women so fair to look upon that admiration springs to the lips of their sisters. It was much the same with Salvini when he played to the dramatic profession that celebrated Monday morning at Drury Lane. There certainly had been some mutterings heard about "these foreigners." The perpetual praise of foreign art was—perhaps naturally enough—distasteful to the great majority of the profession. It galled them to be told of French plays and French players. And then, in defiance of all accepted notions of free trade, they fell back upon the old Conservative cry of the "shame of these foreigners being allowed to come over and take the bread out of our mouths." Honourably, however, let it be said that these murmurs utterly ceased at the approach of Salvini. His genius was so superior to anything that had been seen by the majority of our artists, that it was accepted with a chorus of praise. If any had come to scoff they remained to pray. And it would be difficult to quote a case in which a more flattering compliment has been paid by art to art. The excitement of that morning can never be forgotten; the acting of Salvini as Othello on that occasion has never been excelled; the effect of a performance of one actor on a large audience has never been equalled. Here, at least, was the ideal actor—a man possessing the most fascinating physical gifts—a style which is the very echo of nature—and a glorious power of execution, kept well in hand and firm as in a vice. All that actors struggled and tried to attempt was here shown to them. The day-dreams of their career was shown as in a picture, and the inevitable feeling after witnessing the performance was that further struggle was vain and ambition fruitless. They could not act that night. Their heart and spirit had left them, and the first impulse was to go about saying, "After such acting as that, what is the good of struggling any more?" All of us who are ambitious and have any respect for our callings will well understand how natural were these transitory feelings. And Salvini did not rest upon the triumph of Othello, which would well have carried him through more than a London season. In these days, when Hamlet is played for 200 nights, such an Othello might well act for a year. It was in The Gladiator that Salvini showed that he was anything but a one-part player, and, in the opinion of very competent judges, he has never shown himself such a genius as in the amphitheatre scene of this remarkable tragedy. The play, it is true, was not for the multitude. It was "caviare" to the unclassical, but it was a superb treat for the critics. There are those amongst us, thank goodness, who are not perpetually cavilling at what they choose to call dull plays, or protesting that they cannot take interest in any subject allied to a classical period. There are some of us who can enjoy a good read at Gibbon, and prefer the occupation to any perusal of the novels of the day. It was a disaster, therefore, when the general taste decided against The Gladiator, and compelled Salvini to set aside one of the best examples of the force of his genius. The mind, travelling back over the pictures this actor has given us, will rest affectionately on one pre-eminently beautiful. It is that of the rough brutalized slave and public murderer, humanized by a a woman's presence and electrified by the sudden apparition of his daughter's face. Here, in this very arena, before the eyes of Rome, in the presence of the Empress and her court, before debauched priests and debased people, this Gladiator, the favourite of the people, is appointed to slay the child he has lost and been seeking for years. The awakening of the man in the savage is one of the finest things ever seen in the whole range of dramatic art. The huge arena, the crowds of people, the hungry faces, the glitter, the pomp, and the show, are absolutely dwarfed and made insignificant by the superb majesty of the man. He towers above the scene like a giant. His despair appears to have given him the strength of a Samson and the proportions of an Anak. He towers over his child like a mountain, and his great arms seem like trees shading her dear eyes from the burning sun of the people's contempt. All these ideas are presented solely by the actor. We talk of "taking the stage." It is done by Salvini in this scene apparently in one bound. If anything finer or more dramatic has ever been seen, even on the boards of Drury Lane, we should very much like to be told of it. It is a picture of despair and of humanity which will linger on the memory so long as life lasts and remembrances are pleasant. In discussing the Hamlet it was natural enough that Englishmen should point out the inadequacy and inconsistency of the Italian version of the play; but it is erroneous to suppose that Salvini is in any way responsible for it. His duty was to interpret the text presented to him, and we are not aware that one single voice has been uplifted against his artistic method. It is not the English Hamlet, perhaps, or the German Hamlet, but it is a performance which brings out to the full extent all the refined culture of Salvini's style and all the exquisite finish and beauty of his art. The scene with Ophelio when Hamlet bids her farewell, the scene between Hamlet and his mother after the play, the frequent discourses with Horatio, and the pathetic death-scene of Hamlet, have never been equalled for the purity of their beauty. Loving tenderness to woman and beautiful affection to man here receive their most sublime expression.

And so, with this rapid and most imperfect sketch of the life and career in England of this remarkable genius, we take leave for the present of Signor Salvini. We have spoken of his career and influence as an artist: we should like to dilate on the charm of his society, the modesty of his bearing, the depth of his learning, the charm of his conversation, and the fascination of his presence. This, unfortunately, cannot be; but those who know him understand how to appreciate such rare gifts. Bound body and soul to his art, Signor Salvini is never so happy as when dilating upon it or discussing Shakspere—his idol—with the countrymen of his favourite poet. All will learn with some pride and satisfaction how Salvini loves England already, and expresses with the most sincere cordiality his delight at his short visit now drawing to a close. But with far more satisfaction will the news be spread about that England is so dear to Salvini that he will come again. As Horace mourned for the threatened loss of Mæcenas, so well might English art lament the farewell of Tommaso Salvini.

PRAGUE.—Mad. Friedrich-Materna has been singing here.

Digitized by Google

MUSICIANS WHO HAVE DIED AWAY.*

By Joseph Seiler.

III.

JOHANNES BEER.

(Continued from page 441.)

Johannes Beer is more indebted to his original writings than to his musical compositions for a place here. The said writings, musico-theoretical, historical, and æsthetico-polemical, are numerous, and mostly conceived in a perfectly original tone of satire, something between Philander of Sittenwald's Geschichte and the Kapuzinaden of Pater Abraham. Joseph Riepel, an author of a subsequent period, has the same satirical tendency; but, though more refined and becoming, he is far less original than Beer, whose sketches, for the better comprehension of musical matters in Germany during the 17th and the 18th centuries, possess, even at the present day, an especial interest. From his principal work, Musikalische Discurse, published in 1719, by P. C. Monath, at Nuremberg, I will give some extracts in corroboration of what I have said concerning his originality. In the first place, however, here is something about his life, which, materially considered, was rather uneventful.

Johannes Beer (Bähr, Bär), Concertmaster and Chamber Musician to the Duke of Weissenfels, was born in the Styrian village of St George, in 1652. In his tenth year, he went to pursue his studies in the Benedictine Abbey of Laubach, where, by the beauty of his alto voice, he soon attracted the attention of the musical pater (Regens Chori). The latter, an old and well-trained Italian, became the first singing and music master of the lively boy, thirsting for knowledge. In 1670, Beer went to the Gymnasium at Regensberg, and, some years later, to Leipsic, where, according to Gerber, he studied theology. Very soon, however, thanks to his fine voice, his talent as a violinist, and several occasional pieces, he made himself so well-known, and so popular, that he was offered the post of Concertmaster at Weissenfels. He immediately accepted it, and, having subsequently had, also, the title of High Princely Chamber Musician conferred upon him, worthily fulfilled, to the day of his death, the duties connected with it. His writings were very numerous, but only a part of them received publicity through the press. The titles of the most important are Ursus murmurat, 1697 (the sole work printed in the author's lifetime), Ursus saltat, Ursus triumphat, and Ursus vulpinatur; the last three never having been printed, though, in their time, widely circulated by means of manuscript copies. They are all directed against Gottfried Vockerodt, who, in various school programmes for 1696, had warmly censured the immoderate love manifested by Claudius, Nero, and Caligula, for the fine arts, particularly music, and had asserted that all useful arts and callings had suffered through the one-sided partiality of the Cæsars. This was wrongly interpreted in high places, it being believed that Vockerodt wished to make sovereigns abandon their predilection for music. The consequence was that Johann Christophe Lorber, Dr Johann Christophe Wentzel, and, above all, our hero, Johannes Beer, appeared against him with biting pamphlets, in which the Gotha School Director was not treated too indulgently. He considered, therefore, that he ought to explain and defend himself more at length in a larger book. It is thus that there was published in 1697, by Zunner, Frankfort, a quarto treatise of 22 sheets, under the title: Abuse of the Fine Arts, especially of Music, together with an extorted Investigation of the Question: What, according to the Opinion of Dr Luther, and other Evangelical "Theologi" and "Politici" is to be thought of Operas and Comedies? thoroughly and plainly set forth against the libels of Dr Wentzel, Herr Joh. Chr. Lorber, and a Musician of the Weissenfels Court (Johannes Beer), with an appendix, containing I. A reminder to the "censores" of this Work; II. The Programma attacked by the Pasquinaders; III. The Scruples of the Worshipful Theol. Faculty of Giessen; IV. Representation of the frivolous and strange Behaviour of the Weissenfels Pasquinader, who, instead of disproving this Work, which was yet unpublished, unread, and still less tested, prepares two fresh Pasquilla, and causes their titles, "Ursus saltat" and "Ursus triumphat," to be carried about and made known by interested Persons. Published, with gracious approbation, by Gottfried Vockerodt, Rector of the Princely Gymnasium, Gotha.

But the matter was not allowed to end here. In various other treatises and tracts, Vockerodt sacrificed to his immoderate love of wrangling, showing himself in these works, now literary rarities, a genuine pedagogue with tie-wig and ferule, so that Beer and his friends, who would never allow the dogged rector to have the last word, always boasted of the laughers on their side. Besides possessing a natural talent for satire, Beer was a Latin scholar; a logician armed with all the weapons of sophistry, and a man well exercised and ready in every kind of literary fray. The combination of his various gifts rendered him a dangerous foe for the pedagogue, who possibly afterwards felt rather sorry that he ever meddled with the music of the Weissenfels Court.

Walther relates in his Lexicon the following characteristic anecdote of our Johannes.

A certain Duke told the Organist of his Court to compose the music of a Singspiel, or piece interspersed with songs. The Organist, from whom such a thing had never before been required, said that, with God's help, he would see what he could do. From this answer as well as from the Organ Virtuoso's sketches of what he was going to do, the Duke soon remarked that he had asked for more than the man could do. He ordered some one to write for Beer. The latter arrived with all possible speed, undertook, and, in three weeks, finished the task. Being asked what was the price of his work, he said that it was 100 rix-thalers. He was offered sixty and then eighty thalers. He replied however: "Every thing that I do has, like a penny roll, its fixed tariff. I never allow haggling—I would rather serve the Duke for nothing." At length he obtained what he demanded, and was then requested to give, ere he left, a musical performance during the Duke's dinner. He consented and performed something, in which he sang an air of his own composition in his sonorous baritone voice. The Duke, still angry with him for what was considered so unreasonable a demand and the want of respect in his answer, enquired at the conclusion of the air whether it was not possible to teach a donkey to sing in the same manner. To this Beer replied: "I am not capable of such a feat. If your Serene Highness is, you are the first Chapelmaster in the world." "You are a coarse fellow," replied the Duke. "I was that before to-day," answered Beer.

As already mentioned, the Ursus murmurat alone was published during Beer's life. In the second edition of it, the author offers to publish the following other works from his pen. 1. German Moral Philosophy; 2. German Epigrammata; 3. Meditationes de huius Vitæ Vanitate; 4. The Stuck-up Secretary; 5. The highly respected Mrs Jabbergossip; 6. The honourable alehouse Catgut Scraper; 7. Atheniensium Morosophia; 8. Musical Discourses; Second Part. The first part alone was published, though not till 20 years after Beer's death—as already mentioned. Added as appendix is: The Musical War, etc., an essay which, according to Gerber (Altes Lexicon, Part I, page 97) had already been published in 1701 as a separate quarto); 9. Oratoria reformata; 10. Logica Scoti examinata; 11. The poetical Disputant; and 12. Schola phonologica.

Beer's early and unexpected death probably prevented all or most of these works from being published. At any rate, I am not in a position to say which were printed, or which were not. The Musical Discourses (Part I), however, lie printed in octavo before me. They exhibit Beer's peculiar style and the state of musical matters at that period better than the words of anyone else could ever do. For this reason, two or three extracts will not be here unacceptable. I have changed nothing. Even the orthography is untouched.* In the preface, Beer defends himself for so frequently introducing Latin flourishes:

"In case, however, any musicus reproaches one for having thrown in so much Latin, I, on the other hand, reproach him for not having learnt that language. For it is utterly impossible to avoid disputation in these Discourses, and disputations without Latin are a meal without wine or salt. It has long since been settled in the schools, that to dispute without Latin does not differ from galloping without a horse."

Now to the work itself.

(To be continued.)

* From the Neue Berliner Musikzeitung.

N.B.—Owing to a mistake in transmission, this article is misplaced. It ought to have immediately followed that on Antonio Salieri, at page 195.—Translator.

* It is, perhaps, superfluous to observe that peculiarities of spelling must generally, if not always, disappear in a translation.—Translator.

Digitized by Google

JOHN HULLAH SPEAKS.

Paper read (June 17, 1875) at the Society of Arts' Rooms, before the members of the Metropolitan Schools' Choral Society, by JOHN HULLAH.

(Concluded from page 479.)

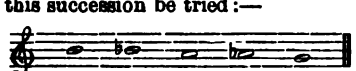
That all the sounds into which the octave can be divided should be represented by seven syllables; that one syllable should lend its name to three, and even five different sounds—Sol, for instance, to G, G♯, and G♭, nay, even to G𝄪 and G𝄫—is theoretically an absurdity which must continually present itself to the least thoughtful student; one for which I should have sought a remedy long ago had I found it to present any considerable practical difficulty. For I have never found students who understood the construction of the scales they were using in the least puzzled by the F♯ in the key of G, or the B♭ in that of F, though they called the one Fa and the other Si. On the contrary, I fear that in many cases they sang these notes, however correctly, with less consciousness that they were sharp or flat than I should have desired; and I am about to propose a mode of modifying or altering the sol-fa syllables, not in the belief that such modification will save the student trouble, but with the certainty that it will oblige him to think, and prove to his teacher that he is thinking.

A proposal to modify the sol-fa syllables is, of course, no new thing, either in respect to the movable or immovable Do. Accidentals are not inevitably indicative of modulation. The minor mode continually calls them into requisition, so does the chromatic genus. And it is often difficult, sometimes impossible (from a single part), to say to which of these they owe their introduction. I find no uniformity in the modifications of these syllables which are used to help students in sounding accidentals. Some teachers change every syllable to be applied to a sharpened note to Si (I give the average continental pronunciation* to the vowels throughout this memorandum) to a flattened note to La. Others modify every syllable by changing its vowel to I or A; thus Fa♯ becomes Fi, Do♯ Di; while Si♭ becomes Sa, Mi♭ Ma, and so on. Others have suggested or adopted altogether new names for these accidental sounds. In some schools of Germany pupils are, or were, taught to sing to the letters of the alphabet, the syllable is being added to the name of each sharpened note (accidental or essential), and the syllable es to each flattened note. The effect cannot be pleasing. Indeed, I believe the sibilation induced by it has driven it out of use.

These contrivances, like all others I have known proposed, are faulty in one and the same particular; the modifications they induce in the syllables have no proportion one to another, they have no "basis in nature." Let me explain: the vowel sounds of speech are five in number, and five only:—

(Italian) I E A O U.
(English) E A AA O OO.

Many varieties of these exist even in English, à fortiori in foreign languages; but all other (so-called) vowels are the result of modification of one, or of the blending together of more than one of these. Moreover, the order in which I have placed them is the order in which they are producible by the elongation of that portion of the "vocal mechanism" most under our control, and most open to observation. I is produced at the very back of the mouth, E in the position next to it, A in the next, O in the next, and U at its most forward extremity; I is therefore the most acute (sharpest), and U the most grave (flattest) of the vowels. I am not prepared to state the difference between them in musical terms, but my fancy deceives me greatly if it is not easier to sing a succession of sounds, each a semitone apart, to vowels placed in this order, than to any vocables chosen haphazard. Let this succession be tried:—



Or the same inverted:—

* Not that approximate instances of this are wanting in English—e.g., *d*onor, *rem*nant, *m*iracle, *f*ather, *sol*vent (*not so*lar), *laugh*ing, *s*imile.

Be this as it may, these vowels have thus much in common with musical sounds a semitone apart, that, if not as near together as vowels or sounds can be, there are no recognized modes of expressing closer relation between either. When, in ascending, we quit C we reach C♯ or D♭; when we quit I we reach E, &c.

I propose, therefore, to modify the sol-fa syllables, not as heretofore by an arbitrary, still less a uniform and therefore inconsistent rule, but by a rule based on the natural sequence of the vowel sounds, and therefore not uniform but consistent. This modification would consist in changing the vowel of each sol-fa syllable to the next above it, when the note with which it is associated is raised a semitone, and to that next below, when that note is lowered a semitone. Thus F♮ being Fa, F♯ would be Fe; B♮ being Si, B♭ would be Se. In the following table these modifications are given, with the exception of two. In the middle row of syllables is the unaltered diatonic septenary; in the upper is the same septenary altered by sharps and in the lower by flats.

Da,	Ri,		Fe,	Sal,	Le.
Do,	Re,	Mi,	Fa,	Sol,	La,	Si.
Du,	Ra,	Me,	Fo,	Sul,	Lo,	Se.

Two syllables here, Mi and Si, are left without names for the sharpened notes sung to them. They both include the sharpest vowel of the vowel series. I propose to apply to them so much of the German system to which I have alluded as to add to each the letter s. Thus Mi♯ would be Mis, and Si♯ Sis.

For general practical purposes this scheme would suffice, and indeed more than suffice. But it is still incomplete.

Every note is liable, though not often likely, to be doubly, as well as singly, sharpened or flattened. I propose to add to the already sharpened syllables an s, to the flattened an f. Thus Fa 𝄪 would be Fes, and Si𝄫 Sef. To Mis and Sis might be appended an h. Thus Mi 𝄪 would be Mish, and Si 𝄪 Sish. It need not be said that these last syllables would very rarely indeed be called into requisition. For all practical purposes, I repeat, all the syllables needed for sol-faing vocal music of the highest order may be found in the foregoing table.

The modifications here proposed of the time honoured sol-fa syllables would, of course, be introduced to beginners one at a time, as the necessity for each arose. When a student was first made acquainted with the scales of F or G, he would be simply told to call B♭ no longer Si but Se, F♯ no longer Fa but Fe, and so on. And in doing so he would show that he was conscious of the alteration, and knew what key he was singing in.

I invite teachers to give a fair trial to the plan I have here laid before them. Though most largely applicable to, and suggested by the shortcomings of, the fixed Do principle, it is still applicable to the movable Do principle. It entails no necessity for new books or exercises, and can be used in the practice of vocal music of every kind.

J. H.

BERLIN.

(From an Occasional Correspondent.)

Herr von Hülsen, Intendant-General of the Theatres Royal, will visit Switzerland before his return from Niederwalluf to this capital. He will make a short stay at Bayreuth, for the purpose of studying the arrangements in R. Wagner's Model Theatre. He is expected here about the middle of August.

The minor theatres are making hay, while the Royal Opera-house is closed, and the crop promises to be more than respectable. Kroll's Theater is still very well attended. Herr Fessler, from the Ducal Theatre, Gotha, has made a hit as the Count, in Il Trovatore. He possesses a well-trained baritone, of good quality, and is far from bad as an actor. The tenor, also, Herr Staubesandt, is exceedingly popular. At the Friedrich-Wilhelmstädtisches Theater, Offenbach's Mdme l'Archiduc has been brought out under the title of Mdme Herzog, Mdlle Geistinger sustaining the part of Mariette to the great satisfaction of the public. The Woltersdorff Theater was opened, on the 3rd inst., for comedies, farces, and operettas, by a new manager, Herr Thomas, a low comedian.

EISENACH.—A successful performance of Bach's Johannes-Passion was recently given here, in aid of the funds for the Bach Memorial. The principal vocal artists were Herren von Milde, Borchers, and Mdlle von Milde, from Weimar.

Digitized by Google

RICHARD WAGNER, AND HIS RING OF THE NIBLUNG.

(From the "New Quarterly Magazine.")

(Continued from page 480.)

A few words ought to be added in explanation of an episode at first sight so strange, not to say shocking, to our modern feeling, as the one just mentioned. The illicit love between Siegmund and Sieglinde is an important—nay, vital—ingredient of the whole story, because Siegfried, the offspring of their union, must have the unmixed blood of Volsung—that is, of Wotan the God—in his veins, in order to fulfil his mission. Thus, being unable to leave out the incident altogether, Wagner, we think, has acted rightly in treating it in the simple, open, and therefore chaste, spirit of the old Northern myth itself. The law which debars blood relations from mutual passion is essentially founded on the idea of the family. Animal nature knows of no such obstacle, and all the Cosmogonies which, like the Pentateuch, derive the procreation of the human race from one couple, imply intermarriages of brothers and sisters. The tragic guilt of Sieglinde, therefore, does not lie in the love for her brother, but in the breach of her marriage vow. The punishment of this guilt is now approaching rapidly.

The second act introduces us to Brynhild, Wotan's favourite daughter, among the Valkyries. The god bids her assist his son Siegmund in the impending combat with Hunding, and she joyfully assents to his command, when suddenly Fricka's chariot, drawn by two wethers, approaches, and the Valkyrie leaves her father to abide the brunt of his wife's indignation. The following scene reminds one somewhat of the domestic quarrels of the gods in Homer, but for its higher tone of tragic pathos. Fricka bitterly complains of the injury done to her, the protectress of marriage, by Siegmund and his sister. Firmly she demands of Wotan the punishment of his children. In vain the god pleads the power of love in favour of the culprits; in vain he reminds Fricka that, only compelled by force, Sieglinde became the wife of an unloved husband. Not even the hope of the gods' own preservation founded on Siegmund is of avail against the wrath of the goddess, and at last Wotan, in bitterest grief, has to bow down to established law, and seal his own doom, by relinquishing his chosen hero. "The curse of the gold is heavy on him; he complains to Brynhild; Alberich's son, begotten without love by the enemy of love, will conquer the gods; and his own son, who alone could have averted the fate, is now to be sacrificed to Fricka's jealousy."

Brynhild, at Wotan's command, unwillingly descends to where Siegmund and Sieglinde are resting on their flight. The horn of the pursuing Hunding is heard in the distance; Sieglinde lies swooning in her brother's arms, when the shield-maiden greets the hero with the message of his approaching end, telling him at the same time that the joys of Walhall are awaiting him. But Siegmund will hear of no joy that would separate him from his love; rather than leave her he will die with her, and is on the point of piercing her unconscious bosom with his sword, when the Valkyrie, moved by the ardour of his love, promises him the victory even against the will of All-father. The ensuing battle-scene is conceived in the grandest dramatic spirit. Siegmund and Hunding rush towards each other on the height of a steep mountain nearly covered by dark thunder-clouds. In the intervals of the storm, Sieglinde's tremulous voice is heard calling for her lover. At last the two warriors meet, and Siegmund, encouraged by Brynhild's voice, is lifting his arm for a deadly stroke, when in a flash of lightning Wotan is discovered standing over Hunding, and protecting him with the spear into which the laws of the universe are cut in eternal runes. Siegmund's sword breaks on the outstretched spear, and Hunding pierces his defenceless breast—but not to enjoy his victory; for he also sinks dead to the ground before the contemptuous wave of Wotan's hand, to bring to Fricka the message of her triumph. Brynhild has lifted Sieglinde on her horse, and disappears with her amongst the clouds. But the wrath of the disobeyed god pursues her.

In vain she spurs her horse, Grane, to the utmost speed; in vain she implores the protection of her sister-Valkyries. Wotan's voice is heard nearer and nearer, nothing can shield her from his revenge. At last she resolves to save only the helpless woman under her protection. She shows Sieglinde the way to a dense forest, there to seek shelter, and, giving her the pieces of Siegmund's sword, she bids her keep them for the child in her bosom; after which she stands firmly, though tremblingly, abiding her fate. Wotan's fury is at first boundless. He threatens to bind Brynhild in magic slumber, and lay her by the wayside unprotected, and bare of her godhood, to become the slave of the first comer. But when the maid sinks at his feet imploring his forgiveness, and appealing to the voice in his own bosom, which spoke for Siegmund, the god's wrath begins to subside. He cannot revoke his sentence, but he can and will protect his favourite child from dishonour. As he closes Brynhild's eyes with his kiss, he describes with his spear a circle round the rock where they stand, and at his summons Loge, returned to his primary form, shoots up in a mighty wall of flickering flame surrounding the bed of the sleeping maiden. Only he who dares to stride through the fire, only the best and bravest, shall possess Brynhild. Wotan's leave-taking of the Valkyrie and the breaking forth of the flames, are illustrated musically by one of those marvellous effects of graphically-decorative writing which prove Wagner's vocation as a dramatic composer quite as clearly as the higher strains of his tender or passionate imaginings.

(To be continued.)

One at Last.*

I met my love in spring-time,
When all was fresh and young,
When buds with joy were bursting,
While sweet the skylark sung;
New thoughts, new joys, new feelings,
Did then the bosom move:
It was the happy spring-time
When first I met my love.

I met my love in summer,
When earth was gemm'd with flowers,
Then in unclouded brightness
Flew on the gladsome hours;
No broodings of to-morrow,
No trouble, no alloy,
There was no room for sorrow
When hearts were full of joy.

I met my love in autumn,
Of many-changing hue,
And sadly marked those changes—
Could love be changing too?
Would he prove false and fickle?
Change as an April day?
Could he e'er think to leave us
When we would have him stay?

I met my love in winter;
The leaves were sere and dead,
The winds awoke from slumber,
And dark the sky o'er-head;
But love withstood the changes,
And cared not for the blast,
He drew our hearts more closely,
And made us one at last. S. P. P.

* Copyright.

CARL ROSA OPERA COMPANY.

(First London season of two months opens Saturday, September 11, at the Princess's Theatre.)

The opening opera is likely to be Mozart's Marriage of Figaro, to be followed by Balfe's Siege of Rochelle, Balfe's Bohemian Girl (with the additional music composed for the French version played at Paris), Cherubini's Water Carrier (Les deux Journées), and other important works, including a new opera by Cagnoni, founded on The Porter's Knot. Miss Rose Hersee is engaged as prima donna assoluta, and the primo baritono is Mr Santley, who will sustain the leading character in an opera by Cagnoni. Mr Carrodus is first violin, and the orchestra includes Mr Betjemann (second), Mr Zerbini (viola), Mr Edward Howell (violoncello), Mr Reynolds (double bass), Mr Svendsen (flute), and other eminent artists. The corps de ballet is to be directed by M. Espinosa, and Mr Arthur Howell will be stage-manager.—(Communicated.)

Digitized by Google

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

The twenty-ninth season of the Covent Garden Opera came to an end on Saturday night, in presence of a crowded and brilliant audience. The opera selected for the occasion was Meyerbeer's Etoile du Nord, with Madame Adelina Patti as Catherine and M. Faure as Peter. The two leading characters thus represented would alone suffice to attract the public. A more picturesque delineation of the romantic heroine, who wins the heart and subsequently becomes the wife of Peter "the Great," than that of Madame Patti has not been witnessed, and, indeed, could hardly be imagined. But we have so often dwelt upon its many remarkable traits that it would be superfluous to describe it again. Enough that Madame Patti was never more emphatically the Catherine of Catherines. Her performance was more than ever brilliant, and impressed the audience as vividly as of yore. No Peter could be better matched with such a Catherine than the Peter of that greatest of all French lyric comedians, M. Faure—a singer no less than an actor, fitted to rank with the highest. This, however, has long been unanimously recognized; and what we have said is merely the reiteration of an old story. The other characters were sustained as before; Signor Vianesi conducting the orchestra with his accustomed promptitude and skill. The royal box was occupied by the Prince and Princess of Wales and the two young Princes, Victor and George, who remained till the conclusion of the second act. The National Anthem was given at the end of the opera, the solo part being taken by Madame Patti, who, as she well deserved, was cheered with enthusiasm.

The remainder of the week was chiefly devoted to "benefit" nights, the "beneficiaires" (to employ the accepted term) being Mdlle Zaré Thalberg, Madame Adelina Patti, and Mdlle Emma Albani—a trio of operatic "stars" not easy to rival, and of which Mr Gye has fair reason to be proud. The first chose Don Giovanni, the second La Traviata, the third Faust; and, as the Zerlina of Mdlle Thalberg, the Violetta of Mdme Patti, and the Marguerite of Mdlle Albani are familiar to all opera-goers, a mere record of the fact will suffice. We reserve for a future occasion our general observations on the season—one of the most uniformly successful in the history of the Royal Italian Opera.

HER MAJESTY'S OPERA.

With the exception of Mignon—one performance of which, with so poetical and charming a Mignon as Madame Christine Nilsson in the theatre, would at least be looked forward to—there have been only repetitions since our last reference to Mr Mapleson's theatre. We need not again discuss the merits of this opera, which many amateurs regard as the best of its composer's, and which in any case is one of the worthiest additions to the repertory of the Paris Opéra Comique, already enriched by the masterpieces of Boieldieu, Hérold, Donizetti, Adolphe Adam, Meyerbeer, and Auber. We may say, nevertheless, that the genial and sparkling music of M. Ambroise Thomas pleased as much as ever, and the embodiment of Goethe's innocent child heroine, by Madame Nilsson, more than ever. No wonder, for nothing in its way could be more perfect. Mdlle Singelli's Filina, too, is precisely what it ought to be. The music suits her flexible voice to admiration, and with what natural vivacity she acts her part need not be said. The performance of Don Giovanni deserves a passing word, if only on account of the Elvira of Madame Nilsson, one of the most highly-finished assumptions to be remembered. The deserted spouse, as portrayed by this gifted artist, is always a personage of conspicuous interest. Her by-play alone, when Leporello (Herr Behrens), in "Madamina, il catalogo," tells the story of Don Giovanni's conquests, is an exhibition of mimetic art for which we have few parallels. Madame Nilsson does not stand, as is too often the case, listless and indifferent, while the unscrupulous slave of a profligate master dwells with studied contemptuousness upon her wrongs. On the contrary, she is no lay figure, but a sensitive and outraged woman, upon whom each sarcastic sentence produces its effect. Her execution of the florid air, "Mi tradi quell' alma ingrata"—which, by the way, does not belong to the original score when Don Giovanni was composed for Prague—is remarkable alike for ease and dramatic significance. In short, if we speak of a "model Elvira," we can only refer to the Elvira of Mdme Nilsson. About the superb Donna Anna of Mdlle Tietjens, and her magnificent vocal declamation in the great scena, ending with the "bravura," "Or sai che l'indegno," there is nothing to be added to what has been written over and over again. How she was applauded may well be understood. Mdlle Varesi, by her Zerlina, has added another to her successes. The Don Giovanni was Signor de Reschi; Signor Gillandi played Don Ottavio, retaining, as every Don Ottavio should retain, the melodious soliloquy, "Dalla sua pace;" Signor Zoboli was a good Masetto, and Signor Costa, an excellent Commendatore. That the overture and all the orchestral accompaniments were admirably played, under the direction of Sir Michael Costa, may be taken for granted.

On Saturday night the Barbiere di Siviglia was repeated, with Mdlle Chapuy as Rosina, the reception of the clever French singer being even warmer than before. In the Lesson Scene, besides the "Arragonaise," from Le Domino Noir, she interpolated the waltz from M. Gounod's Mireille, which last she was compelled to repeat. This lady is an unquestionably valuable acquisition to Mr Mapleson's company. Extra performances have been given during the current week:—the Huguenots—with Madame Nilsson as Valentine for the only time this season (Monday night); Lucrezia Borgia—for the "benefit" of Mdlle Tietjens (Tuesday night); Lohengrin—eighth time (Wednesday); Lucia di Lammermoor—with Mdlle Varesi (Thursday); and the Nozze di Figaro—with Mdlle Anna de Belocca as Cherubino (Friday). The last performance of the season is to be given this evening, the opera selected being Lohengrin.

QUE NE SUIS-JE LA FLEUR.*

MÉLODIE.

Que ne suis-je la fleur qui croît au bord de l'onde
Et ne souffrit jamais des feux brûlants du jour,
Que le courant rapide emporte loin du monde
Dans un autre séjour.

Que ne suis-je la fleur qui naît sur la montagne
Et ne doit respirer que l'air vivifiant;
Se tenant près du ciel et que l'aigle accompagne
D'un vol édifiant.

Que ne suis-je la fleur du rocher solitaire,
Au milieu de la mer toujours battu des flots,
Chemin inaccessible aux enfants de la terre
Et même aux matelots.

Que ne suis-je la fleur de toute solitude,
Pour naître et pour mourir sous le regard de Dieu
Après avoir vécu, loin de la multitude,
Dans un modeste lieu.

Que ne suis-je la fleur inconnue, ignorée,
Dont la beauté se donne aux sables du désert,
Dont tout parfum se livre à la brise éplorée
Dans le sol entr'ouvert.

Que ne suis-je la fleur au fond du précipice—
Où jamais le courroux de tous les éléments
Ne peut déraciner; à l'abri du caprice,
Des brusques mouvements.

Que ne suis-je la fleur de la forêt immense
Où l'arbre toujours vert tempère les rayons
D'un splendide soleil, quand le jour recommence,
Que sous lui nous ployons.

Que ne suis-je la fleur qui naît au fond des mers,
Antres mystérieux, où la vague en furie
Ne peut avoir accès, où jamais les hivers
Portent l'intempérie.

J. F.

* Copyright.

WIESBADEN.—A short time since, Herr Theodor Wachtel signed an engagement with Herr Neuendorff, manager of the Stadt-und Germania Theater, New York, agreeing to sing in that city from the 1st October next, to the 15th June, 1876, as well as in Philadelphia during the Grand International Exhibition. He is to receive half the gross nightly receipts, and will first appear at the Academy of Music, which holds 5,000 spectators, and, when full, produces 9,000 dollars. Herr Emil Drenker, the theatrical agent here, who arranged the terms of this engagement, is also charged with the task of forming an operatic company to sing with Herr Wachtel.

Digitized by Google

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

CHARLES MOTTLE PINK.—The last published Sonata of Beethoven was the C minor (Op. 111).

DR HEDGE.—The best authorities are Sir Suppinabeles and Mr Cuningham Boosey. The "Lay" about King Mark was composed by Sir Dinadam.

DR SMOOD.—No. Schubert was in his 31st year when he died, Mozart in his 37th, and Mendelssohn in his 39th. With reference to Steibelt Dr Smood is all abroad.

NOTICE.

To ADVERTISERS.—The Office of the MUSICAL WORLD is at Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & CO.'S, 244, Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street (First Floor). It is requested that Advertisements may be sent not later than Thursday. Payment on delivery. With this number of the MUSICAL WORLD Subscribers will receive four pages extra, and again, from TIME TO TIME, as expediency may suggest.

The Musical World,

LONDON, SATURDAY, JULY 24, 1875.

MEYERBEER.

WE merely call attention to an autograph (fac-simile) letter from this celebrated composer, which will be found in another page. It contains nothing of artistic moment; but the fact of its being Meyerbeer's will suffice to interest all our readers.

In next number a letter from the late M. W. Balfe will appear, under similar conditions; in the number following, one from Hector Berlioz—and so on.

The Tri-logical Tetralogy at Bayreuth.

THE rehearsals of Wagner's Nibelungen-Tetralogie have at length begun in earnest. Herr Unger, the tenor selected as the temporary representative of Siegfried, has been here for some time studying his part. Herr Albert Niemann, Mesdes Friederike Grün, and Friedrich-Materna will have arrived before these lines appear in print. Herr Brandt, the celebrated stage machinist, from the Grand-Ducal Theatre, Darmstadt, is busily engaged putting up the machinery. The musicians will not arrive until wanted for the general orchestral rehearsals, which are fixed for the beginning of August. Those gentlemen will receive a daily sum of 5 florins. Some of the inhabitants lodge them gratuitously, in return for the privilege of attending, in due time, the grand general rehearsals, on the same moderate terms. A matter of great moment was settled a short time since. This was the weighty subject of costume. Professor Döpler, of Berlin, brought the principal sketches—the Figurinen, as they are termed—executed in colour, for all the characters in the four musical dramas. Wagner was delighted with the manner in which his poetical conceptions have been carried out; for the task was one beset with difficulty. The glittering forms of the Rhine Nymphs, in their long, flowing garments, with the reeds, water-lilies, and other strange productions of the mysterious river-depths, surround the Wallkyres, with their winged helmets, whence their blonde locks flow down, and their formidable equipment. Then, too, we have Wotan, armed cap-à-pié, with his runic spear, and, under his armour, a blue mantle, allegorically representing the canopy of heaven; Siegfried, the young hero; and Alberich, the odious dwarf. All are in especially characteristic costumes, of which, so to speak, every inch and every touch are scrupulously exact. Wagner may esteem himself fortunate in meeting with such an interpreter of the creatures of his imagination. Besides supplying the sketches, Döpler will himself see that they are truthfully carried out. The greater part will be made in Berlin. A small number, however, will be prepared at Meiningen, where, thanks to the Duke's taste, ingenious costumiers abound, especially for the imitation of antique weapons, metal vessels, and ornaments. But there is a question apart—namely, that of lodging some 2,000 visitors, exclusive of those professionally engaged, expected next year. Bayreuth is not a large town, and just now would experience considerable difficulty in finding accommodation for such an addition to its regular population. It has, therefore, been proposed to erect a grand hotel, at the estimated cost of 220,000 florins, or £22,000. The Corporation have offered to subscribe one-half of this sum; and, if the remainder can be raised in shares, or even only guaranteed, building operations will commence immediately. The Bayreuth Palaces are to be prepared for Princely visitors. Gifford Scoop.

Bayreuth, July 16.

DR HANSLICK ON THE GRAND OPERA, PARIS.

IN the Vienna Neue freie Presse, Dr Edward Hanslick, the celebrated Austrian critic, gives a bright and animated description of that absurdly pompous monstrosity, the new Grand Operahouse in Paris. We quote the first half of his letter—reserving the continuation till our next issue:—

I have reserved to the last my opinion of the Grand Opera. I wanted to wait until I was a little less dazzled by its magnificence and a little more edified by its performances. I found, however, small inducements to visit it often. You might live five months in Paris, and yet see, in exactly five evenings, the entire repertory of the New Operahouse. Since it was opened on the 5th January, 1875 (the anniversary of the bombardment of Paris), only five operas have been produced: La Juive, Guillaume Tell, Hamlet, La Favorite, and, to wind up the list, Les Huguenots. Independent ballets, filling the entire evening, are no longer given, but Donizetti's Favorite, on account of its shortness, has often two acts of an old ballet, La Source, tacked to it. The "majestic slowness" which, from time immemorial, always distinguished the Paris Grand Opera, like some indelible characteristic, or like a kind of priestly consecration, is now greater than ever, thanks to the necessity of new scenery. Our own Imperial Operahouse in Vienna produced, during the first five months of its existence, three times as many operas as the Grand Operahouse, Paris, in the same period, and that, too, with a company employed (alternately in the old and new house) every day. There are only four performances a week at the Paris Operahouse, three of them being included in the subscription. That the management does not make up its mind to give at least a fifth, is something surprising, as the public flock in an extraordinary manner to the performances, and every place is taken a week in advance. But those who purchase a box or a stall are guaranteed only a particular evening, and not a particular opera. It is the new house and not the performance which, for the present, attracts all attention. Let M. Halanzier give what he chooses, his theatre, provided there is some brilliantly lighted music between the acts, will be filled to the ceiling—golden days for a manager. A regular take of 19,000 francs, which rises, when the subscription list is suspended, to 21 or 22,000; and, in addition to this, an annual State grant of nearly a million! With the opening of the new house, however, the French Government adopted the sensible plan of regulating this grant according to a sliding scale; the grant is cut down immediately the receipts exceed a certain sum.

The architecture of the new Operahouse, and the mode in which the edifice has been decorated inside with frescoes, statues, and mosaics, has often been described at length. A description of all this may the more properly be omitted here, as I am not competent to speak authoritatively on such matters, and can do no more than record the impression made on myself individually. The new theatre is a magnificent structure, of which the Parisians have just cause to be proud. It was fourteen years building, or double the time required for the erection of the Vienna Opera-house. The brilliancy of the internal arrangements eclipses the effect of the edifice itself, the principal front of which appears rather crushed and pinched up, though the repeated contemplation of it continually reveals fresh beauties. The only objects that struck me as objectionable were the two gigantic golden genii on the attica, each of which raises one arm and both wings perpendicularly towards the sky; and, with its outlines, totally deficient in repose, and visible from a great distance, pursues the spectator in all directions. Directly he enters, the visitor is struck by one of the principal beauties of the new theatre: the large dimensions of all the localities attached to the auditorium, among them being the spacious grand vestibule, with the statues, in a sitting posture, of celebrated composers; the imposing crush room, supported on columns; and the entrance to the pay-places, where the attendants, decked out in massy official chains, preside with the dignity of judges over all who come in or go out. As with us in Vienna, the magnificent staircase, with its broad flights of steps, constitutes the gem of the building, and after this comes the foyer, or saloon. The latter is far larger and more brilliant than the one in Vienna, and so lofty that the visitor dislocates his neck in the vain attempt to make out, on the ceiling painted by Baudry, the connection between the various figures tumbling and sprawling over each other. You fancy you will be blinded by the walls streaming with gold, the chandeliers sparkling with their hundred lights, and the gigantic mirrors, which indefinitely reflect all the gorgeousness of the confused mass. Cloyed with this glittering magnificence, you turn from the grand saloon into the Avant-Foyer. The walls of this are decorated with mythological pictures executed in costly mosaic; it seems as though a piece of the Byzantine splendour of St Mark's had been mislaid and found its way here. Mosaic is the special fancy of Garnier, the architect of the theatre. He was obliged to send for workmen from Venice, as there were none in Paris who understood this branch of art. Though marvellously carried out, these mosaics strike one in their present situation as a motiveless improvisation. Indeed, the whole, generally, is, to my taste, too luxurious, too heavy with gold, and, in a word, too loud in colour, especially for a theatre, in which the accessory portions, though beautiful and convenient, should not be the principal consideration, and attract everyone's entire attention. Such decoration strikes me as greatly overstepping the limits of artistic beauty, and as suggesting the swagger of the spendthrift. We think first of the millionaire and only afterwards of the artist. The staircase of the Vienna Operahouse, with its white marble and fine architectural proportions, and our foyer, with its cheerful elegance, and its highly poetical frescoes, are not so dazzling in their effect, but they are more stately and noble. The mural paintings of our never-to-be-forgotten Schwind illustrate well-known scenes from the most celebrated operas which have made their mark in Vienna. It is something of this kind, something historical, which I grievously miss in the pictorial decoration of the Paris Operahouse. Mythology, nothing save mythology, reigns there. From the Muses (reduced to eight because funds for the ninth were forgotten) to the large ceiling-pictures of "Harmony and Melody" "Apollo's Victory over Marsyas," etc., naught but allegorical and mythological figures! There would have been plenty of room left for these, even if one hall, or one saloon, had been devoted to the great and important persons and events in whom and in which the history of French opera is richer than any other. Heavy magnificence, bristling with gold, characterises, also, the auditorium, especially the proscenium and the stage-boxes. Such a number of massive gold relievi, gold lyres, gold trump-blowing genii, etc., produces an effect which oppresses the spectator, while it diverts his attention. Much of this, may, though in time, be diminished, partly from the force of habit among the public, and partly by the gradual softening down of all the glitter itself.

Digitized by Google

Dr Hanslick has been staying for some time in Paris, and his correspondence to the Presse (like all he writes) is well worth perusal.

Christine Nilsson's Concert.

AT a meeting of the committee, on Tuesday, July 16th, held at the Westminster Training School and Home for Nurses, 8, Broad Sanctuary, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:—

"Resolved, that the best thanks of the committee be given to Madame Christine Nilsson for her generous exertions in favour of the Westminster Nurses Training School and Home, and that His Grace the Duke of Westminster, as the chairman of the committee, be requested, in acknowledging her cheque for £960 17s. 6d., to convey this expression of their gratitude."

June 23rd. "Westminster."

CHRISTINE NILSSON'S VALENTINE.

(From the "Daily Telegraph.")

Although Mdlle Tietjens has a sort of property in the rôle of Valentine (Les Huguenots), at Her Majesty's Opera, it has been the custom for a year or two past to put forward Madame Nilsson as an occasional representative of the hapless heroine. This was done again on Monday night, and, as usual, excited a great deal of interest among those who have marked the various stages of Madame Nilsson's progress as what is technically called a dramatic soprano. For reasons obvious enough, the part of Valentine has come to be regarded as the touchstone of aspirants to a certain position on the lyric stage. During many seasons Mdlle Tietjens, at the one house, and Madame Lucca at the other, held it as their own, unchallenged by rivals, since when, however, Madame Patti has added it to her varied répertoire, Madame Nilsson following in her steps. Why not? It is wholly a mistake to suppose that Valentine must needs have a representative of the robust school, for though one act makes great demands upon the artist's powers of endurance, they are not more, as we have often seen, than a woman of average, nay slight physique, can satisfy. Anyhow, we are glad to have experience now and then of the Valentine of Madame Patti, and not less pleased when, as on Monday night, we once more meet with that of Madame Nilsson. Respecting the general performances of Les Huguenots there is little need to speak at length. It was not a good performance, but rather one of those haphazard affairs to which Meyerbeer's chef d'œuvre seems condemned, in consequence, perhaps, of its own unmanageable greatness. * * * The star of the occasion—need it be said?—was Madame Nilsson, and she shone brilliantly enough to make up for whatever was deficient in the light of others. At no previous time has the Swedish artist so well asserted her genius, or her claim to assume the character of Meyerbeer's heroine. The embodiment stood forward definite as to conception, clear as to outline, and as to details most skilfully elaborate. During the scene of the conspiracy, every facial expression and movement was a study, revealing careful thought, with strict subordination to the general idea of the part. Madame Nilsson's Valentine is naturally gentle and affectionate, ill-fitted to move amid the scenes of a St Bartholomew; but firm as a rock and bold as a lioness when love controls the springs of action. The change, therefore, from the shrinking witness of the plot to the resolute heroine of the great scene with Raoul was most marked and impressive; while throughout the whole of that splendid finale Madame Nilsson showed consummate judgment and sense of climax. Abandoning herself, apparently, to the natural emotions of the situation, she never forgot the highest art, and it was almost with a sense of relief to strained nerves and over-excited feelings that the audience saw the curtain fall. A nobler performance—we say it emphatically—the lyric stage rarely shows. As Madame Nilsson sang not less well than she acted, it may be imagined how profuse were the audience in marks of sympathy and admiration. Call after call, amid ringing cheers from every part of the house, asserted the artist's triumph to be one of no ordinary character, as indeed it was. With the laurel of this great success upon her brow, Madame Nilsson, though she plays twice more in Lohengrin, took a formal farewell till next year.

MDLLE ALBANI left London at the end of the season, in order to fulfil a five weeks' engagement at Venice. She returns to England for the Norwich Festival in September, after which she joins the troupe of Sir J. Benedict, who intends to have an opera season in the provinces, lasting until Christmas.

Digitized by Google

ROYAL ALBERT HALL.

The opera concerts at the Albert Hall, which have been among the leading incidents of the now waning musical season, came to an end on Saturday afternoon last, and, like its predecessors, was entirely supported by the artists of Mr Mapleson's company. The first section of the programme had the independent distinction of being wholly confined to morceaux from Lohengrin, and though nothing of an operatic kind so ill bears transference from the stage to the concert-room as a work of this peculiar school, the specimens given were listened to, it may be presumed, with a natural deference by those who had not visited the theatre, and probably with a special interest, as being exemplifications of the new forms of dramatic music, which are to prevail in future—if the creed of Wagner is adopted. The extracts were the best, no doubt, that could have been chosen, and they could not possibly have been heard under more favourable circumstances, for, with but one exception, they were executed by the same principals who have been concerned in the work at Her Majesty's Opera—the same chorus singers and the same instrumentalists; and our readers well know with what exemplary perfection these various artists executed their superlatively difficult task upon the stage, and, consequently, how satisfactory would their efforts necessarily be in the Albert Hall. The selection consisted of the solo and chorus when Lohengrin comes in his boat drawn by the swan, and the effective quintet, "O sommo dio," from the first act; the duet between Ortrud and Elsa, and the chorus of nobles and retainers, from the second act; and the Bridal Chorus from the third. Little need is there to say how efficiently these several pieces were rendered. Mdme Tietjens, Signor Campanini, Signor Galassi, and Herr Behrens resumed, so to speak, their original characters, the only change being in that of Elsa, in which Madame Christine Nilsson was superseded by Mdlle Pernini, and it may be added with no material disadvantage to the general result. The finale to the first act was placed at the close of the selection, as being, probably, from its breadth and effectiveness, a more suitable climax to what had gone before than either of the other finales. The chorus singers discharged their multiplex and intractable duties with a precision and vigour that cannot be too highly praised; and the instrumentalists, too, under the direction of Mr W. G. Cusins, were entitled to a similar measure of approbation, for their close and masterly playing throughout, and notably of the introductions to the first and third acts—evincing an excellence, as in the case of the chorus singers, that could only come from the most intimate acquaintance with the strange and untoward characteristics of the music. This passing taste of Lohengrin gave, no doubt, some pleasure to the large and gaily dressed company assembled to hear it; but it could not but be observed that it touched but few sympathies, and that what applause was vouchsafed was reserved chiefly for the end, though what proportion of it was intended for the singers, and what for the music, must for ever remain unknown quantities. The second part of the programme awakened a more visible interest, much of it dealt with matters by no means cast in the Wagner mould. Madame Christine Nilsson, who had not before appeared, released the pent-up enthusiasm of the audience by her admirable executancy of Verdi's "Tacea la notte," and, subsequently, "Voi che sapete," in the former of which she was loudly encored, as was also the case in the inevitable and never-failing "Teco il serba," from Il Talismano, which she sang with Signor Campanini. Her great contemporary, Mdlle Tietjens, was called and recalled after her splendid performance of the waltz of Arditi; and in the course of the morning the accomplished Mdlle Varesi, who has now so deservedly become one of the public's best favourites, sang the bolero from the Vespri Gicolvani with her usual attractive skill. That the goatherd's song from Dinorah should be given by Mdme Trebelli-Bettini in a way that might fairly be termed faultless, would, doubtless, be conceded by every one who had the privilege of hearing her. No indistinct success, on the other hand, befell Signor Fancelli in Flotow's "M' appari," which he rendered with such remarkable taste and expression, with such unexpected excellence, in short, as to exact a determined mandate of repetition; and in the same sentence may be placed Signor Gillandi, in whose hands Mozart's effeminate aria, "Il mio tesoro," fared something more than prettily. Signor Catalani and Signor Castelmary were likewise in the programme, the one singing "Largo al factotum," the other the aria from La Juive, "Sa il rigor." The contributions of the orchestra to the miscellaneous act were Nicolai's overture to the Merry Wives of Windsor and Mendelssohn's Wedding March. D. W. H.

BRIGHTON.

(From a Correspondent).

We are now at the very antipodes of the season; yet this queen of watering-places is tolerably well filled with people, but not with the people; for though Brighton has two or three periods of the year when different classes of individuals resort to it, there is but one period which is styled the season. Consequently I have but little to report that will interest the readers of the Musical World. Those very clever mimics and exposers of some of the things needing to be held up to ridicule—the Wardropers—are here. The concerts at the Aquarium draw good audiences, and there is at present a singer of whom, if you have not already heard, you will doubtless hear in the course of the autumn. The conoscenti in this town speak loudly of the beauty and the freshness of her voice, her fine execution, and her musicianly skill, which is said to be à merveille. It is Miss Catherine Penna, and it is said that she has just come from the sunny south. But it must be something different from blue sky and clear atmosphere that makes a musician or a singer: it must be natural aptitude and good training, else all students from Italy would be artists. The air does not make a vocalist any more than good pens make a good writer. This reminds me of an anecdote almost good enough to belong to the category "Se non è vero è ben trovato." I can vouch for its truth. A director of a public company, possessed of a clerk whose writing resembled "copper-plate," was looking over the ledger kept by the skilful individual, and, being wonderfully struck by the beauty of the writing, said, "Pray, Mr —— what pens do you use?" "Why, Sir," was the reply, "they are some I buy in Bermondsey, ten a penny." "Oh, indeed!—as it would be very inconvenient to me just now to go to Bermondsey, would you kindly give me a few of them?"

Leaving this digression, I ought to say that, having heard Miss Catherine Penna, I can fully endorse what the people say, and am of opinion that she is indebted less to climate than to natural aptitude for the unquestionable gifts that she possesses. Sir Michael Costa and Sir Julius Benedict have heard her, and, I have been given to understand, have both pronounced a very high estimate of her abilities.

We are looking forward here for the summer, which is very late in coming, or, if come, has very soon departed. Bathing-machine proprietors are not doing well; and boatmen stand about with their hands lost in the depths of their large trouser-pockets, and if asked why they stand idle, would, I am persuaded, plead an answer very well known,—"Because no man hath hired us." Nor, if this weather continue, is it very likely that they will have a prosperous season. People seem to prefer brisk walking, and, in some cases, a seat at the fireside with a novel in their hand, to water enjoyment, though it is the middle of July. One gentleman, wrapped in his great coat, a day or two since met a friend, and, to be relieved of a doubt he had in his mind, said—"Is this last winter or next winter?" "It's neither one nor the other," replied the friend, "it's this winter."

During my stay here I hope to be able to find topics for writing about more acceptable than that of the weather, and my only excuse for introducing the subject now is its seemingly perverse conduct: otherwise I fancy you would exclaim—"I've heard speak of the weather before." If, however, its perversity extend itself to the other side of the globe, and in consequence, or even in despite of it, induce a certain lady there, known as the "Empress of the Keys," to return from those regions, and to let us once more hear those perfect strings of pearly-sounds, the remembrance of which still hangs upon the sensitive ear like a "thing of beauty" which is a "joy for ever," I shall smile again, plunge into the "cold, cold sea" with delight, and make an inward vow (or "wow" as my German friend will persistently call it) never to object to the frolics of the weather again. A. B.

Old Ship Hotel, 14th July.

FRANKFORT-ON-THE-MAINE.—Mad. Mallinger has appeared at the Stadttheater as Rosa, in Der Verschwender.

Digitized by Google

MUSICAL PRECOCITY.*

(Continued from page 471.)

The above cases of precocity are scarcely a tenth of those with which we have met in our studies, and which we might have cited. And who knows how many we have missed? How many, too, were missed by the historians and the writers whom we have consulted? †

Having established thus much, the conclusion to which we come is that: taken one by one, the cases of which we are treating cannot fail to excite our wonder, but that, when studied in history where we come across them at every page, and where they are nearly continuous, our wonder entirely ceases, and it does so to make way for a very different feeling.

With history in hand, then, what really surprises us is not the abundance and excellence of the natural tendencies, nor their precocious development, but the fact of their bearing such mediocre and meagre fruit, and of their finally resulting nearly always in nothing.

This is a most appropriate place for observing that anyone who studies the history of music is struck no less frequently and no less strongly by cases of an opposite kind, namely, cases in which he finds musicians, not simply capable and enjoying a fair reputation, but illustrious and truly great, princes of art, and, as they are called, geniuses, whose gifts and natural aptitude remained as though latent, all through their childhood and youth, and even longer.

Grétry, for instance, now considered one of the fathers of French comic opera, and whose works, Richard, Zémire et Azor, and L'Ami de la Maison, are universally esteemed masterpieces, entered as a boy the choir of the cathedral at Liége, and was sent away almost immediately, as possessing no aptitude for the study of music. When he entered Casali's school at Rome, some years afterwards, the same sentence was again pronounced on him.

A sentence in no way differing from this was that uttered by Rey on another prince of French comic opera, Berton, composer of Aline, Françoise de Foix, and Montano et Stéphanie.

Of Pietro Guglielmi (the father), when he was a pupil at the Conservatory of the Madonna di Loretto at Naples, it was said for some time by his fellow-students, and occasionally by some of his masters as well, that he had the ears of an ass! Yet Pietro Guglielmi, author of a hundred operas, of which forty, or more, were highly popular, was the competitor and emulator of Paisiello and Cimarosa.

In Beethoven, as a pupil and a boy, no sign or indication of natural aptitude at all unusual was perceived by Van der Eden, Neefa, Haydn, Salieri, or Albrechtsberger.

Besides Bérésowsy and Onslow, each of whom gained for himself a celebrated name, Rameau, Handel, and Gluck were slow in developing their talent. They were not the grand artists and composers whom we now so much admire until the appearance of works which they wrote at a mature age, Rameau, when he was forty-nine; Handel, when he was forty; and Gluck, when he was fifty-seven.

How shall we explain these anomalies and results, so contrary to all promises and expectations?

In our opinion (but we are ready to retract if proved to be wrong), they can be explained only in one manner, which is by putting forward the fact that, in order to judge a person's natural gifts and aptitude for music, we start, in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, from an erroneous and superlatively false principle.

By the public (and as to the public, they are not so much to blame), by musicians, and even by teachers, by directors of Conservatories and schools, attention is paid only to the material and mechanical part of art. Of the other elements, which we will call æsthetic, people do not even speak.

To cultivate the art of music we all agree in considering that a good ear; a proper appreciation of rhythm; a quick and tenacious memory; and, according to the particular case, active hands, or a robust, well-sounding voice of extensive compass, are absolutely necessary qualities, and that, without them, no one can become anything, no matter what he may do, or how he may study.

But, when this has been said, recognized, and admitted, we must further say, recognize, and admit that all the above qualities put together do not possess the slightest artistic value unless they are accompanied, fertilized, and rendered valuable by the æsthetic faculties; by a noble and elevated mind; by a lively and just sentiment of the Beautiful; by warmth of feeling; by a fervid imagination; and by a fondness for poetry.

From our not noticing how different is the nature of the mechanical from that of the æsthetic faculties, and from our not troubling ourselves about the latter, while we foster the former, there results the exceedingly frequent appearance of precocious children, and, notwithstanding this, the continually increasing infertility of the schools; the scarcity, likewise continually on the increase, of real artists, and the crowd, so numerous and compact, so restless, so hurtful to art, and yet deserving our pity, of the unsuccessful, the mediocre, and the incapable.

We have gone through the twenty or thirty plans put forth, these last few years, for the re-organization and reform of our Conservatories, but we have never found a word nor a hint referring to the necessity of distinguishing one kind of aptitude from another. When their ear, their memory, their hands, and their voice have been tried, the candidates are admitted without more ado.

To convince ourselves of the artistic worthlessness of mechanical aptitude, when, as we have already said, it is alone, we need merely observe that it may very well be found, and that it actually is found—as proved by countless examples—in persons who are really born antagonistic to the muses; persons who do not feel, who do not understand, and who do not like either music or any other fine art—and that it may be, and is, found in persons devoid of the most common and vulgar mental gifts, and even, we are inclined to say, in idiots and cretins; such was the case with the Boy Tom, who was blind into the bargain, and who, some few years ago, created such a sensation in Paris, London, and the principal cities of America.*

There is, too, this fact to be added: in everything relating to musical mechanism, persons of mediocre and vulgar minds make frequently great and rapid progress, of which their masters are often as proud as they are. But, on observing closely, we find that all this great progress is due to the fact that their attention is not diverted by their own feelings and ideas, that they are not pre-occupied by inward aspirations, and that they feel always most certain of and contented with themselves, because they do not see and do not measure the height of art.

With persons possessing minds endowed with æsthetic faculties, things often take an opposite course. Such persons perceive the height of art; they feel its nobleness; they are perpetually agitated and moved by the visions of the imagination and of the heart; by the tumult of ideas and aspirations; they endeavour, not to copy or imitate, but to make evident, to bring out, and to render in notes what they feel within their own breast. It is easy to understand that, with such a state of things, purely mechanical processes are found to be tiresome, nay, sometimes insupportable or even odious.

To this and this alone must be attributed, according to our view of the subject, the cases of tardy development cited above.

G. A. Biaggi.

---

* From the Gazzetta Musicale di Milano.

† If we consider the question carefully, we shall find that the abominable traffic in boys from Calabria and the Abruzzi, which, during recent times, so moved the civilized world, and is now said to have ceased, had, as its starting point, the precocious development of the musical faculties. The poor boys knew nothing of music or of anything else; but they possessed ears; they tuned their rude instruments most admirably; their fingers displayed great agility; they duly observed measure and rhythm; and, when they sang, they sang in tune, and phrased agreeably.

* The Boy Tom, there is no doubt, after hearing a cabaletta, a polka, or a mazurka only once, could repeat it without making a mistake in a single note, either of the melody or of the accompaniment. But the instinct of imitating and repeating all he heard was in him so powerful, while his reason was so limited and weak that, for instance, it was utterly impossible to make him comprehend that, in theatres and concert-rooms, though he was to repeat the music played over to him, he was not to repeat the applause with which the public rewarded him after he had done so. This he could never understand. No sooner had he left off playing, than he arose from the piano, clapping his hands, stamping, and shouting: "Bravo," like the public.

Digitized by Google

"CANTILENA ROLANDI," "CHANSON ROLAND," "ROLAND'S SONG."

One of the most celebrated songs recounting the glorious exploits of an ancient hero, and which maintained its popularity for a lengthened period, namely, during the time of Charles the Great, and long after his death was the so-called "Roland's Song," "Chanson Roland," "Cantilena Rolandi."

It is not exactly known who Roland was, because his narrative was often selected as a subject for poets of his epoch and mixed up with so many fables, that we are not able to separate the fiction from the truth. But this much we know of him, that he was a valiant hero, one of Charlemagne's captains, and renowned for his warlike exploits. This is confirmed by many historical circumstances of which we entertain no doubt. The song we give an account of was made upon this hero when he, with his companions in arms, were slain in the valleys of Ronceval. Many are of opinion that Charlemagne was himself the composer of this song; but, whoever it may have been, of this we are assured, that this song was a favourite with many nations and supplanted all others which were sung at that epoch; like the "Marseillaise," at a later period, in France.

The Roland's song stood in such high estimation, that it was considered one of the greatest honours if a warrior were chosen to sing it before an army previous to the commencement of the battle. Du Conge, in his "Glossarium med. et inf. Latinit. voc Cantilena Rolandi," gives us the following citations. The first is taken from an old romance by Wace, named "Rou d'Angleterre," from which we learn that a "Nobleman of Normandy, Taillefer," sang this song with such force and energy at the battle of Hastings, that he created a general impression and an enthusiasm throughout the whole army, and William the Conquerer, as a reward for his spirited performance, honoured him with permission to make the first attack upon the enemy. The following is the description in French verse:—

Taillefer qui moult bien chantoit,
Sus un cheval qui tost alloit,
Devant eus alloit chantant,
De l'Allemangue et de Rollant,
Et d'Olivier, et de Vassaux,
Qui moururent en Rainschevaux.

The second citation is from William of Malmesbury's "De gestis regum Anglorum," and is as follows:—

Tunc Cantilena Rolandi inchoata, ut Martium viri exemplum pugnatores accenderet, inclamataque Dei auxilis, praelium consertum, bellatumque acriter. Lib. 3, at annum 1066.

The next citation of Du Cange, taken from Hector Boethius "Hist. Scotor.," Lib. 15, will show how long the Song of Roland has been popular.

King John of France, who was unfortunate in war, and made a prisoner at Poitiers, in 1356, reproached his soldiers for singing the song, as there were no Rolands in existence. One of his soldiers gave him this spirited answer: "If there were only a Charlemagne upon the throne, there would be no lack of Rolands to fight his battles." The Latin text is as follows:—

"Soanni Francorum Regi conquerenti, nullos modo se Rolandos out Gavinos reperire, unos ex majoribus cajus aliquando virtus in juventa clamerat, respondit: non defuturos Rolandos, si at sint Caroli."

Notwithstanding Roland's Song was sung until the middle of the 14th century, as we have shown, it has not been preserved to the present time. The Marquis de Paulmy has discovered relics of it in some old romances, which he has collected and embellished, and also composed new strophes, imitating the style in which they were written, and has presented us with such a beautiful piece of poetry, that, should the ancient Roland Song have resembled his, we cannot be astonished at the enormous effect it created at that time. Count Tressau, another nobleman, also searched for some remains of this song, but not the least trace could he meet with. He thought that, perhaps, he might get some information from the peasantry in the Pyrenean Mountains, as Roland must have died there—so Turpin relates, in his mythical accounts of him. However, the Song of Roland has been composed after his death, to memorize his grand deeds, and has been sung by soldiers all over Europe, so that we cannot find any reason why this song should have been preserved longer on the Pyrenean mountains than anywhere else. But Count Tressau declares that he received some remnants of this song from the Marquis Viviers Lansac, which family held estates in the Pyrenean Mountains over 600 years. A portion of the original song, which was sung by the mountaineers, and translated into modern French, is as follows:—

O Roland! honneur de la France,
Qui par toi mon bras soit vainquer!
Dirige le fer de ma lance
A percer le front, ou le cœur
Du fier ennemi qui s'avance.
Que son sang coulant a grand flots
De ces flancs, ou de sa visiere,
Bouillone encore sur sa poussiere,
En baignant les pieds des chevaux.

These fragments may be considered very beautiful, but they are only relics from which the Marquis de Paulmy has formed his more recent Song of Roland. His poetry is in reality sublime, and we doubt whether the old and lost one could have been more effective, more powerful, or more instructive to the soldier. We give it to its fullest extent. The melody is very fine, and conveys to us the superiority of the ballad-music of the fourteenth century, but we are unable to name the composer notwithstanding our minutest researches.*

CHANSON ROLAND.

Soldats François, chanton Roland,
De son pays il fut la Gloire,
Le nom d'un Guerrier si vaillant
Est le signal de la victoire,
Roland etant petit Garçon,
Faisoit souvent pleurer sa mere:
Il etoit vif et polison—
Tant mieux disoit Monsieur son père—
A la force il joint la valeur,
Nous en feront un militair.
Mauvais tête avec bon cœur,
C'est pour reussir à la guerre.
Soldats François, &c.

Le père pensoit justement,
Cas dès que Roland fut en age,
On vit avec etonnement
Briller sa force et son courage;
Perçant escadrons, battaillons,
Renversant tout dans la melée,
Il faisoit tourner les talons,
Lui tout seul a tout une armée.
Soldats François, &c.

Dans le combat particulier,
Il n'etoit pas moins redoutable,
Qu'on fut geant, qu'on fut forcier,
Que l'on fut monstre, ou que l'on fut
Rien jamais n'arretoit son bras, [diable.
Il se battoit toujours sans crainte,
Et s'il ne donnoit le trepas,
Il portoit quelque rude atteinte.
Soldats François, &c.

Quand il falloit donner l'assaut,
Lui même il appliquoit l'echelle;
Il etoit le premier en haut,
Amis, prenez le pour modèle.
Il passoit la nuit au bivac,
L'esprit gaillard, l'ame contente;
Ou dormoit sous un avresac,
Mieux qu'un general sous sa tente.
Soldats François, &c.

Pour l'ennemi qui resistoit
Reservant toute son audace,
A celui qui se soumettoit
Il accordoit toujours sa grace.
L'humanité dans son grand cœur
Renaissoit, apres la victoire;
Et le soir même le vanqueur
A vaincu proposoit à boire.
Soldats François, &c.

Quant on lui demandoit pourquoi
Les François etoient en campagne,
Il repondit de bon foi,
C'est par l'ordre de Charlemagne
Ses ministres, ses favoris
Ont raisonné sur cette affaire;
Pour nous, battons ses ennemis,
C'est ce que nous avons a faire,
Soldats François, &c.

Roland vivoit en bon Chretien,
Il entendoit souvent la messe,
Donnoit aux pauvres de son bien
Et même il alloit au confesse;
Mais de son confesseur Turpin
Il tenoit que c'est œuvre pie
De battre, et de mener grand train
Les ennemis de sa patrie.
Soldats François, &c.

Roland à la table etoit charmant,
Buvoit du vin avec delice
Mais il en usoit sobrement
Les jours de garde et d'exercice;
Pour le service il observoit
De conserver sa tête entiere,
Ne buvant que quand il n'avoit
Ce jour-la rienmieux a faire.
Soldats François, &c.

Il corrigeoit avec rigeur
Tous ceux qui lui cherchoient querelle,
Bon camerade, ami fidèle:
L'ennemie seul dans les combats
Trembloit, voyant briller sa lance,
Et pour le dernier des Soldats
Il se seroit mis dans la flamme.
Soldats François, &c.

Roland amoit le cotillon
"On ne peu guere s'en defendre":
Et pour une reine, dit-on,
Il eut le cœur un peu trop tendre:
Elle l'abandonne un bon jour
Et lui fait tourner la cervelle:
Aux combats, mais non en amour:
Que Roland soit notre modèle.
Soldats François, &c.

Roland fut d'abord officier,
Car il etoit bon gentilhomme;
Il eut un regiment entier
De son oncle, Empreur de Rome.
Il fut Comte, il fut General,
Mais vivant comme à la chambrée
Il traitoit de frere, et d'égal
Chaque brave homme de l'armée.
Soldats François, &c.

DR FERDINAND RAHLES,
Professor of and Lecturer on Music.
Malvern House, Grove Street Road, South Hackney, June, 1875.

* The melody of this song, to which Sir Henry Bishop has composed an accompaniment for the pianoforte, was published many years ago by Lonsdale. Dr Rahles has lately again harmonized this fine melody, and will with pleasure forward a manuscript copy, on application, to those who take interest in it.

Digitized by Google

THE AMERICAN REVIVALISTS.

On Monday, the 12th inst., a farewell meeting was held in the Mildmay Hall, North London, avowedly convened for the purpose, after "praise and thanksgiving," of receiving from any minister of religion, either orally or by letter, "testimony to blessings received either by himself or his congregation during the time Mr Moody has been in Great Britain." In other words, Mr Moody, having come to revive religion in England, wished to know how far he had succeeded. It will be observed that only those ministers who could give evidence in favour of the revival were invited. The gathering, however, was significant both as a summing-up of results and as showing with what tact Mr Moody can drive the nail home. Some men would have considered their work finished with the meetings which came to an end last week. Mr Moody has a keener insight into the fitness of things. He must not only himself be satisfied of his success; he must leave it on the record of the Churches, and from the mouths of their ministers, that his satisfaction was no chimera, but an attested fact. His shrewdness, or foresight, or whatever we may call it, was fully justified by the meeting. The hall was crowded in every part, and the audience (about 1,500 in all) comprised, perhaps, about 300 ministers of religion, who in the main seemed friends, and many of whom were demonstrative admirers of the revivalists. Mr Moody himself was altogether quiet and undemonstrative. He opened the meeting by stating that during four months of incessant work in London they had not had one accident, nor had any of the workers in the revival suffered in health. For this great mercy and for all other mercies let the glory, he said, be given to God. He begged the speakers who followed him to remember this, and say as little as possible of human agency.

The Chairman of the London Committee told a wonderful story in a like undemonstrative manner. The Committee, he said, had been formed months ago to prepare the way for Mr Moody. It was composed of members of many different Churches, and its arrangements had included such gigantic operations as the building of two new halls (in Camberwell and Bow), besides the renting of the Agricultural Hall and the Opera House. Yet the money had flowed in as fast as they wanted it, and, more extraordinary still, they never had had one instance of difference of opinion, nor even the necessity of taking a vote, as to their operations. There had been not merely peace, but actual unanimity on all points. Choirs (think of choirs never disputing), stewards, ministers, every one concerned had been cordial and kind and had worked for unity. The members of the Committee never had asked each other as to their respective Churches; in fact, they knew nothing of Churches, but simply aimed to make the people acquainted with Christ. An aged minister from Glasgow (Mr or Dr Potter as we caught the name) testified to the Revival in Scotland, and especially in Glasgow. It was calculated, he said, that not fewer than 7,000 persons had been gathered into the Churches of that city within a year, and he reminded his hearers that in Scotland, unlike England, they had a certain way of testing their figures in these particulars by referring to the very names of the new admissions to their Churches. There was no doubt whatever among the ministers whom he represented that the figures he had given did not exaggerate the fact. As many as a hundred persons had been added to his own congregation, and now they had preaching tents all over Glasgow and daily conversions in such numbers that next year they would, he trusted, be able to show still greater results. They secured unity, not by talking about union, but simply by asking no questions about differences. A clergyman (Mr Billings), from the South of London, spoke in glowing terms of what the revival had done in his parish, and of the pleasure he had enjoyed in welcoming and working with the revivalists. Hundreds had been added to the South London Churches, and he heartily endorsed all that had been said as to the value of merging minor differences to carry out the one simple aim which had been set before them by Mr Moody. A Baptist minister, Mr Brown (a student from Mr Spurgeon's College, we believe), gave like testimony as to Stepney. Religious stagnation had been swept away. Prayers such as some months ago no one ever heard at the East-end of London were now common. The people even rose early to attend worship. Bow Road at 6 o'clock in the morning was now worth seeing. In fact, Mr Moody and Mr Sankey had shown that, after all these centuries and with all that modern times could produce, there was still no attraction like the gospel of Christ preached in simplicity and with directness of purpose, and resting on a personal Christ. No philosophy ever had reached the masses as this gospel was now reaching the East-end masses in London.

(To be continued.)

PENNY READINGS.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

What ingenious torturer of the musical portion of mankind was first struck with the thought of inflicting upon a confiding public that purgatorial species of entertainment denominated "Penny Readings?"—and why, having conceived the idea, did not the inventor thereof hide the terrible suggestion in the most secret recesses of his own bosom? But no, it is broached; and the epidemic spreads with lightning rapidity.

We enter a room in which one of these delectable evenings is being spent, and behold six or eight persons, male and female, perched upon a kind of platform, looking as uncomfortable and out of place as possible. An elderly gentleman is muttering something in a muffled monotone, inaudible to any but a few occupying the front row of seats; and even these do not appear to be in the entranced condition usual upon such occasions. This elocutionist now retires, and is succeeded by a young lady, who bends in recognition of the applause which greets her, and in a soprano that might have reduced an infuriated cockatoo to quiescence, proceeds to inform the listeners that "It was a dream." From her agonized expression we can only infer that the vision bore a close resemblance to nightmare. Having concluded with a scream, she regains her seat, and is succeeded by two other ladies, who knock the overture to Semiramide out of time, until, at length, the approbation of the audience proclaims them victorious. A youth in a bright blue tie now favours the assembly with an imitation of some popular "comique;"—but we can stand no more, and rush from the place with the determination never to attend another "penny performance," fervently hoping that the "kismet" of the originator may be a succession of them upon the brain.

WESTON S. JACKSON.

AUS HALNEY COTCH.

(By a Confirmed Maniac.)

Dr Johnson, who was connected with The Rambler (or was The Rambler connected with Dr J.?), said things, concerning other things, the like of which has not been yet; or peradventure, fortuitously, will be. But not a word either in Dr Johnson's outpourings of Balfe or Il Talismano. But we digress. Johannes, of Bristol, was enamoured of Phenicopters (or Phœnicopters, or Phenœcopters, as the case may be, the occasion providing), as men are of that which is beyond their grasp. Natheless, for numismatic considerations, J. of B. affected the fullest knowledge of, and acquaintance with, the plumed two-stalker. But more of this subsequently. Will Mefisto answer?

And still another Johannes, of the Castle, Edinburgh—perennially and pluvially under a cloud with silver (and copper, though rarely gold) lining—of whom Pantagruel spake well, and 's hand be-shook. Though Rabelais be no more, yet Pan. lives free, and Panurge, too, for the matter of that, of which no matter.

But to resume:—A dog has a long tail—provided the fates have been gracious and knives be-blunted. This acknowledged, ergo—or argal, as Bill Shak. was wont to say, in his antic mood (O! Rainbow Tavern!)—every dog has a fine tail, if not otherwise apportioned by destiny. Wagner, who is no dog, and, therefore, points not our remarks, has a long tale about the Future of music. Salvini, who barks not, has an elongated narrative about the present of the drama.

Here we hasten to revert to J. S. Bach, who put the Clavier in a Good Temper, was no Good Templar (as Lionelius Broughius would, or would not, remark, according to events, or elsewise); Handel goes down to posterity without a handle to his name; Arthur Sullivan wakes sweet i' the ear, and gives us pretty music. For whom (and which) "Silence in the court!" Is not Mefisto bestaggered?

PHITTHILL-THE-RIG.

[The writer of the foregoing was evidently in vino, when with pen in hand, and must be understood cum grano—without salt.—A.S.S.]

Digitized by Google

PIERSON'S JERUSALEM.

By Amicus Patriæ (1852).

(Continued from page 491.)

There are in the oratorio forty-seven numbers, as they are technically called, twenty-one of which are choral, one quintet, one duettino, two terzettos, five ariosos, two plain recitatives, and eighteen songs or arie. These, with the overture and a symphony expressive of the march of the Roman army against Jerusalem, make up the total. The larger proportion, by far, are choruses or solos, by which it is inferred that the composer prefers to wield the force of his whole orchestra, or to make use of the one obedient organ; which is tantamount to saying that he makes his effects, with the greatest willingness, simple and broad. So it is. Not, I would explain, that his simplicity is that of leaving to a beautiful voice a canvass to paint upon, or his breadth mere body of sound. Without any real disparagement of executive art, Mr Pierson considers voices merely as a part, though the superior part, of the one vast power by which he declares his conceptions to the world as a creative artist, and they are as plastic in his hands as are the stringed and metal subordinates of his orchestra. I much question whether a single note of ornament, comparatively, can be introduced into his music without such a violation of good taste, as few singers would hazard; but what is far better, his songs, in common parlance, sing themselves. An anecdote will illustrate this. At one of the private parties given in this city for the purpose of trying portions of the Jerusalem, a desire was expressed that the soprano air, "Ho! ho! come forth," should be gone through. After a pause of doubt as to who would attempt the performance of this very peculiar song, a little fellow who is educating for musical purposes, said very modestly to the composer—"Sir, if you like, I think I could sing it if you would let me try it." "Indeed!" was the reply, "then I should like to hear it very much." The air was sung without failure of a note; all its fresh resonant beauty came forth in the young voice; the effect upon the adult hearers was perfect. Thus the child had interpreted the man without effort, without preparation, and nothing could afford a more complete proof of the adaptation of the music to its purpose. Such is the character of all the solos without reserve. Difficulty is certainly rather courted than shunned, simply for this reason, that Mr Pierson sees and feels everything regarding music in a strong light, and never allows a supposition of inadequacy as to means to cross his mind; a free use of chromatic intervals, unexpected modulations, and wide reaching distances, marks his style, but these effect his purpose—they say and sing what he wishes, and this is all he requires. But it is not all he does; some of the most exquisite melodies will be found in the Jerusalem that ever flowed from the heart of a Poet of Sound.* A blind musician, known to the writer, once listened to a beautiful strain from one of the old masters with which he was newly made acquainted. "To that," said the old man, devoutly folding his hands, "to that I can say my prayers." I feel sure that many will repeat this in their hearts as they listen to the recitative and solo for the tenor and soprano in the third part, beginning "What are these arrayed in white robes?" it is by such efforts that art proves its best power—the power to "purify our affections." The tenor air, "For a small moment have I forsaken thee," partakes largely of the same character, and those for the bass, "Woe to Ariel! the city where David dwelt," and "I saw a great white throne," are effective in a manner that it is scarcely possible to describe, without the aid of the musical colours that make them palpable. Among the ariose, one which peculiarly brings out the distinctions of Mr Pierson's style, is that for the soprano in the second part, "O Israel, thou hast destroyed thyself; but in me is thy help," and perhaps beyond anything else in the work does the setting of this deeply yet simply dramatic sentence prove that he acknowledges poetry to be the foundation of all art. Its grandeur, its stately reproach—from the remarkable boldness of the distances used—is most impressive, and the heart-appealing change that is effected by the simple transition from a minor to a major key, seems like the relief of tears after sorrow and suffering have long dried their fountains. Mr Pierson has composed much, in his short career, for the stage, and it is alike an evidence of his fine taste and strong will, that such a temptation as the powerful contrast contained in these words afford, should have been so entirely resisted.

(To be continued.)

* Tondichter. German.

COME BACK, MY LOVE.

(Copyright.)

Come back, my love, come back to me,—
Oh! would I had a carrier dove
To take this message o'er the sea,
And homewards hasten my true love.
Come back, my love, come back to me;
Oh! with my pray'r, sweet love, comply,
And hasten home from o'er the sea,
Before I break my heart, and die.
For I would have my dear one nigh,
To say, "Farewell, my love, good bye.
Forgive me, love, farewell, good bye."

I vow'd, when we were forc'd to part,
That I should ever faithful be,
And sacred keep my hand and heart,
Until you claim'd, or set me free.
But now my father, mother, too,
And, still more strange, your sister Kate,
Would have me, love, prove false to you,
Forget and leave you to your fate;
To break your heart, perhaps, and die,
And never hear me say, "Good bye.
Forgive me, love, farewell, good bye."

They say he's rich, and fond of me;
That you are poor; if this be true,
The greater, then, your need must be
That I should keep my heart for you.
The rich man does not need my heart;
'Tis no great prize, but wealth can't buy;
'Twas pledg'd to you when we did part,
And yours it shall be till I die.
Come back, my love, the hour is nigh,
When I must say, "Farewell, good bye.
Forgive me, love, farewell, good bye."

Edmund Falconer.

YORK MINSTER ORGAN.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

Sir,—Will you permit me to correct an error which appeared in the letter signed "Palmam qui meruit ferat." Referring to the "electors," mentioned by the musical man of *, I stated that "there was no one present at any of the organ performances who was qualified to act as umpire." The public have been solicited by the Dean to subscribe for the renovation of the * organ; but what renovation is required, or who is to have such an important task, is not stated. £1,200 or £1,500 was asked for, and, I believe, is already subscribed by all classes, without knowing how the money is to be expended. With such liberal, easily-pleased friends, well may the Dean and Chapter have all their own way. Your correspondent, "Musicus," is quite right as to what an organist ought to be. In the Church of the Madeleine, of Paris, in Cologne Cathedral, in St Gudule, Brussels, &c., &c., their are choir-directors, who have all the drilling of the choir, the organist having his own department to himself. I ask, in the name of common sense—Why spend thousands on the organ, when the talent of the performer is of secondary importance? I should have thought some one with a world-wide fame ought to have filled the organ seat of * *. We have as fine organists in England as you can hear anywhere; need I mention such men as Weasley, Hopkins, G. Cooper, Rogers, Best, McKorkill, Chipp, Rea, Monk, &c.? These are not men of mere Cathedral routine. Let any one read the anthems and services of Wesley, poor Walmesley (late of Cambridge), Hopkins (of the Temple)—such men as these the wiseacres of * and other cathedrals would employ in drilling their half-dozen choir-boys and decrepid "lay vicars;" yea, and even subject them to be examined for appointment by some influential canon's wife! This really did happen once upon a time. I must now leave this subject in the hands of the profession, in the hope that they will so influence public opinion that they may have justice even from the dignitaries of the Church of England. Yours truly, Palmam qui meruit ferat.

Digitized by Google

VIENNA.

(From a Correspondent.)

The oft-mooted plan of combining the resources of the Burgtheater and those of the Royal Operahouse in a series of special performances is at length destined to become an established fact. The two managers, Herren Dingelstädt and Jauner, have agreed on producing, next winter, Sophocles' Antigone and Œdipus in Colonos, with Mendelssohn's music, the artists being taken from both houses, and the pieces being mounted in strict accordance with the Greek model. These pieces are to be followed by Shakspere's Tempest, Midsummer Night's Dream, and others.

It is reported that, in consideration of the gracious reception accorded him in high places, and the marks of favour showered on him during his recent stay in this capital, Verdi has promised the Emperor of Austria that he will compose a grand work to be first represented at the Imperial Operahouse. The Neue Freie Presse says this report is unfounded, and that Verdi has merely promised to come next season and conduct the first performance of Don Carlos. D.

A SILVER WEDDING.

(From a Correspondent.)

The Silver Wedding—celebrated on the 2nd inst.—of our Capellmeister, Herr Carl Krebs and his wife, Mad. Krebs, formerly Madlle Aloyee Michalesi, afforded a most convincing proof of the lasting affection and high esteem entertained for them both here and elsewhere. While the leading notabilities in art, and members of all classes in Dresden, came forward to congratulate the amiable couple, and overwhelm them with absolute floral mountains of the most magnificent bouquets, Hamburgh, where their praiseworthy efforts are unforgotten, was represented by rich presents. We may especially mention a silver salver with tankards, the profusely decorated lids of the latter having engraved on them the names of the operas in which Mad. Krebs established her fame, and which her husband conducted. In addition to these there were the beginnings of songs, and themes from masses, cantatas, etc., of Herr Krebs's composition—a gift as significant as it was costly. On the salver is the inscription: "To the universally celebrated Pair, in honour of their Silver Wedding, etc., from Friends and Admirers in Hamburgh." Telegrams and letters were received from the musical centres of Germany. The press, too, which honours in Herr Krebs a man of determined character as well as a highly gifted and amiable artist of the old stamp, while it unfortunately is compelled to admit, that the place of Mad. Krebs has not yet been, and, probably, will not be, for some time to come, filled up here, offered its congratulations. The Royal Chapel sent a particularly flattering letter to Herr Krebs, while the vases, salvers, flower-tables, albums, and silver wreaths, interwoven with gold leaves, in anticipation of the Golden Wedding, were so numerous that they could scarcely be counted. The good-humoured, unconstrained tone usual in the Krebs family reigned, also, on the present occasion, and the wonderfully fagrant bowl of fresh pine-apple punch, brewed by the hand of the Capellmeister himself, proved that in this respect, as in others, the author of so many beautiful songs is no novice. The inmates of the house speak in terms of rapture of a morning greeting offered by Herr Hühler, with the celebrated horn quartet of the Royal Chapel, together with the members of the Chorus at the Theatre Royal, under the direction of Tempesta. Mary Krebs, who brought her parents the most welcome congratulations from London—in the shape of the renewed expression on the part of the most competent judges of her talent—might, perchance, have been prevailed on to give the guests a few chords on the piano; but where was the piano? where was the sofa? where were the tables and the chairs? The apartment kept getting more and more crowded with flowers and beautiful women, and ——well, the piano may have been hidden beneath yonder heap of lilies and roses, but we cannot see it, and is is time to shake the respected couple by the hand, with every good wish for their welfare, bearing in mind the saying: "He who sows love cannot reap hatred, for love strikes deeper root than hatred can ever strike."

Dresden, July 6.

COPENHAGEN.

(From a Correspondent.)

The Danish papers frequently contain articles upon "the Copenhagen which is disappearing," and they find ample materials for reflection in the grand transformations now being effected in the town itself and the suburbs, by the opening of new thoroughfares, the demolition of old buildings, and the erection of new ones. The last well-known edifice about to disappear is the theatre in the Westabro suburb. It was built no further back than 1830. In 1837 it was occupied by a German operatic company, whose performances were largely patronized by the more refined portion of the public. The principal member of the company was a tenor, of the name of Georg Seest, still living, there is reason to believe, in the town of Schleswig. The site of the theatre has, within the last ten years, so increased in value as to be now worth a fabulous amount; yet, when it was at first put up for sale, no one bade for it.

F. W. S.

"'TIS THE LAST ROSE OF SUMMER."

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

Sir,—Mr Brinley Richards, in a letter which appears in your last number, relative to the above melody being an ancient Irish one, gives as his authority Mrs S. C. Hall. We might as well accept her fairy legends, and fabulous tracts and stories of the Irish peasantry, as historic facts, as to imagine she is any authority on the ancient music of Ireland. The melody was written, at the latter part of the last century, to an Anglo-Irish burlesque song, called "Castle Hyde," in a style anything but characteristic of the ancient Irish music. The absurdity of the words, so unfitted to the beautiful melody, induced Richard Adare Millikin to write "The Groves of Blarney," which soon rivalled its predecessor, "Castle Hyde," and continued long a favourite. Sir John Stevenson pointed out to Thomas Moore the beauty of the melody. Moore wrote his words to it, cutting out a portion of the melody to suit the ballad-mongers of the time. Neither Mrs S. C. Hall nor Mr Brinley Richards can point out any copy of the air earlier than Millikin's "Groves of Blarney." Moore's words popularized it, whilst Millikin's Anglo-Irish are now hardly, if ever, heard. The Village Bard, who wrote and composed "Castle Hyde"—Brian Tierney, a chimney-sweeper—was turned out of "Castle Hyde," by order of the master, and the watch-dogs set at him, for stringing together such words as the following:—

"'Tis there is handy,
Both beer and brandy,
With sugar-candy," &c.

Mr Tierney—whose practice it was to make songs upon the various gentlemen's houses, the chimneys of which he swept, and all to the same melody—celebrated the bounty of a family residing at Uskean, Tipperary, to the air on which "'Tis the last rose" is founded:—

"The thread of hope
Becomes a rope
Within the scope
Of Uskean's shade."

At the singing and recital of the Bard's poem and song, Father Tom McCormick, finding fault with the construction of a sentence, was settled by the following reply of the chimney-sweeper:—

"What is grammer?
I say, damn her."

Brian Tierney died in 1809, in his ninetieth year, and is buried in the country church-yard of Coolamore. His name is found on a small tombstone, where he is described, in the Irish language, as a worthy man, a bard, and a chimney-sweeper. Such was he who composed the melody of "'Tis the last rose of summer." Mr B. Richards is a good authority on the music of his native land, and great on the history of the "Scottish Snap," and the old story extracted from Burney and Hawkins' histories of music, of how Scotch tunes were manufactured from the scale of the black keys on the pianoforte, all of which he delivers and makes interesting to his Welsh auditors; but, when touching on the ancient music of Ireland, he had better be coached up in Walker's "Irish Bards," Hardman's "Minstrelsy," and other works.

A Visitor at Mr B. Richards' last Lecture on National Music.

Moscow.—Mad. Artôt and Señor Padilla are engaged for next season at the Imperial Italian Opera.

Digitized by Google

BENEFIT OF MDLLE TIETJENS.

Last night it was the turn of Mdlle Tietjens to meet her friends, who, we are sorry to say, did not crowd the house, as they should have done. This result, however, must not be explained by referring to a supposed indifference of the public about a great artist and faithful servant. Rather is it to be accounted for by a decidedly unfortunate choice of opera. That Mdlle Tietjens wears the mantle of Grisi, when she plays the terrible Duchess of Ferrara, is true enough; but she has done it so often, and Donizetti's music has become so hackneyed, to say nothing of its undramatic character—a fault which amateurs are becoming more and more able to appreciate—that Lucrezia Borgia appealed neither to curiosity nor taste. None the less, however, did those who looked only to a display of vocal and dramatic power on the part of the bénéficiaire enjoy the performance. Mdlle Tietjens was grander than ever in her part, more terrible in her revenge, more pathetic in her grief. We need not dwell upon the great features of her performance, hastening to say rather that the audience, mindful, perhaps, of the fact that she is about to leave us for a time, were demonstrative in the highest degree. At the close of each act Mdlle Tietjens had again and again to come forward, amid a rain of flowers, laurel wreaths, and other appropriate offerings. No "ovation" could have been more satisfactory, and, without doubt, none was ever more deserved. The other leading parts were sustained by Mdlle Trebelli (Maffio Orsini), Signor Fancelli (Gennaro,) and Herr Behrens (the Duke Alphonso.)—Daily Telegraph, July 21.

GAIETY THEATRE.

The performances of French comic opera came to an end last night, with a concert and the Fille du Regiment of Donizetti. A series of English operatic performances, under the direction of Miss Blanche Cole, will commence on Saturday next.

MUSIC AT BOULOGNE-SUR-MER.

(From a Correspondent.)

Si j'étais Roi! Robert le Diable, La Favorite, La Juive, La Dame Blanche, Lucie de Lammermoor, Haydée, Le Chalet, Les Noces de Jeanette, and the comedy, Le Serment d'Horace, have been placed on the boards of the Salle Monsigny by M. Lemaitre. His troupe of artists seem to have taken heart, and do not find that the public who frequent the theatre at Boulogne are so difficult to please after all. M. Charelli, who appeared in the rôles of Zephoris in Si j'étais Roi! Leopold in La Juive, and Georges in La Dame Blanche, met, as usual, with hearty applause. M. Rohani is a "robust tenor:" he is fort in every way, an enormous man, with an enormous voice, of good compass, but with a metallic quality decidedly not pleasant. Mdme Soustelle, who played Rachel in La Juive, and Léonore in La Favorite, possesses a good soprano voice, but does not understand how to use it. Mdlle Emma Nelly—1re chanteuse légère—has had a great deal to do since she joined the troupe, and we begin to appreciate her neat acting and her charming voice. Her Jeanette in Les Noces de Jeanette, and Eudoxie in La Juive, alike give satisfaction. M. Desuiten (bass) and M. Rey (baritone) also win approbation. Under the auspices of M. le Maire, the subscriptions for the "inundated" had, on Monday, reached the total of 38,000 fr. At a recent performance in the theatre a subscription was made; and, in less than ten minutes, 311 francs 60 cents was collected. The receipt at the doors was over 800 francs.—X. T. R.

A concert takes place on Friday, July 30, at the Etablissement des Bains, with Sinico, Demeric-Lablache, Campobello, and Bettini. The programme is good; and I advise all amateurs of good music, now the London season is over, to stay a few days in the queen of French watering places, on their way to Germany or the Alps. If Alpine or watering aspirants will linger among the hills and valleys of Boulogne, and patronize the concert on Aug. 9th, got up by Mdlle C. Patti and M. C. Ritter, I do not think they will regret their stay here. Many fêtes are being organized; one for the inauguration of the Skating Rink, to take place in the first week in August. Of course there is a concert, at which I have no doubt the "Skating Rink Polka"—yesterday in a conspicuous position at a music publisher's window—will be played. Opera always the same. Concerts at Etablissement also.

July 20, 1875. X. T. R.

WAIFS.

Tamberlik is in Paris.

Faure left London for Paris on Sunday.

Mr John Boosey and Mr W. Duncan Davison are in Paris.

Mr Santley and Mr Charles Lyall have gone to the Lago Maggiore.

Mr Lovell Phillips has returned to England, after two years at Lisbon.

Sig. Salvini has returned to Italy—crowned with laurels, never more nobly earned.

Mr Josiah Pittman, of the Royal Italian Opera, has gone to Venice, with Mdlle Emma Albani.

Mr Ashdown, of the esteemed firm of Ashdown and Parry, Hanover Square, has returned from a tour through the United States and Canada.

Mdlle Marguerite Chapuy left London for Paris on Monday. Her success in London has been so great that she will doubtless visit us next season.

Mdlle Zaré Thalberg has gone to Barcelona, with Señor and Mad d'Abella (Mad. Angri of old times). She comes back (happily) to England for Mr Gye's tour, with Mdlle Albani.

MUNICH.—The Theatre Royal is closed till the 1st August.

MANNHEIM.—The eighth musical festival of the Lower Rhine came off here on the 4th and 5th inst. The principal works in the programme were Mendelssohn's St Paul, the second part of Schumann's Faust, and the Ninth Symphony. The performers numbered 940, of whom 140 were in the orchestra, and 800 in the chorus.

ST PETERSBURGH.—M. Cronier, the manager of several theatres in the French provinces, is at present endeavouring to obtain permission to erect a Théâtre Comique. As he is highly recommended, it is supposed he will be successful. A petition from the German inhabitants to build a German theatre in the Wassili-Ostrowosch Quarter has, on the contrary, again been rejected, though the necessary funds, both to erect and maintain the theatre, were subscribed by the German mercantile community ten years ago.

Advertisements.

THE VOICE & SINGING

BY

ADOLFO FERRARI.

THE FORMATION AND CULTIVATION OF THE VOICE FOR SINGING

Price 12s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, REGENT STREET, W.

"The remarkable qualities of this book are the author's freedom from conventional trammels, the strong sense of his opinions, and the novelty yet evident soundness of his precepts; his work has consequently come into general use as a manual of vocal instruction."—Daily News.

THE ART OF SINGING.

New Edition, Revised and Improved, of

A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR

THE VOICE.

By T. A. WALLWORTH.

A Method as used by the Author in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which he has cultivated the voices of his Pupils, Mdlle Alwina Valleria, Miss Lucy Franklein, and other successful Vocalists.

Full Music Size, price 7s.

London: HAMMOND & Co. (late JULLIEN), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his Residence, 36, Wimpole Street.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE,

For invigorating and enriching the voice, and removing affections of the throat.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE is universally acknowledged to be the most valuable remedy for sore throat, hoarseness and relaxed throat. It should always be taken before singing or reciting, as it strengthens the vocal organs. It is most extensively prescribed by the faculty for the throat and voice. Dr Lewis of Basingstoke says he finds them most efficacious, and in Dr Copland's Dictionary of Practical Medicine (Longman & Co.), they are strongly recommended at pages 872 and 1492. They are used by all the greatest vocalists and orators in Europe, and have been established over a quarter of a century. Testimonials from Patti, Grisi, Lablache, Santley, &c. Sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d. by all Chemists throughout the United Kingdom and the Colonies.

Digitized by Google

NEW SONGS.

THE LAST FAREWELL.

New Song by J. L. HATTON.

Sung by Mdlle ALBANI, at the Floral Hall Concerts, with the greatest possible success. In C and E. Price 4s.

NEW SONGS
BY ARTHUR SULLIVAN.

SWEETHEARTS. In A♭ and B♭. Sung by E. LLOYD 4s
THE JUDGE'S SONG. From Trial by Jury. Sung by Mr. FRED SULLIVAN 4s
TENDER AND TRUE. In E♭ and F. Sung by EDITH WYNNE 4s
THE DISTANT SHORE. In E♭, F, and G 4s
THOU ART WEARY. In D minor and F minor ... 4s
THOU'RT PASSING HENCE... ... ... 4s

NEW SONGS
BY VIRGINIA GABRIEL.

CLOVELLY. Words from "Songs for Sailors." Dedicated to H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh... ... 4s
SOWING AND REAPING. Sacred Song 3s
SHE CAME LIKE A DREAM. Sung by Madame ENRIQUEZ 3s
THE WHITE DOVE 2s 6d

NEW SONGS
BY FAVOURITE COMPOSERS.

YES AND NO ... ... LOUISA GRAY 3s
MY LADYE ... ... AMY COMPTON 3s
IN THE TWILIGHT HOURS „ 3s
ELSIE'S DREAM ... JOSEPH L. ROECKEL 3s
BESIDE THE SEA ... „ „ 3s
SUMMER WINDS ... „ „ 3s
SO LONG AGO... ... ... GEORGE BARKER 3s
NINETTE ... ... „ „ 3s
THE ENTREATY The Lady CLARENCE PAGET 3s
GLAMOUR ... „ „ 3s
SWEET LISETTE ... ... J. L. ROECKEL 3s
THE CHILDREN IN THE WOOD „ 3s

CHAPPELL & CO.,
50, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON.

ROYAL
ITALIAN OPERA.

PRODUCTION OF WAGNER'S
'LOHENGRIN.'

The Books of Airs (in Two Books), arranged for Pianoforte, with ad. lib. accompaniments for Flute, Violin, and Violoncello, by

W. HUTCHINS CALLCOTT

PRICE.

Solos ... ... 5*s. each.*
Duets ... ... 6*s.* „
Accompaniments ... ... 1*s.* „

LONDON:
HUTCHINGS & ROMER,
9, Conduit Street, Regent Street, W.

Digitized by Google

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

CHILLINGFORD SPOOL.—We really cannot say—and, we may add, we really do not care—whether or no the gentleman you mention did or did not receive one hundred pounds for singing two songs at a party given by Baron Rothschild. If you are so very anxious for information on the point, you had better write to the gentleman himself.

DR DOT.—The word signifies simply a "Finder," as we have had occasion to inform more than one correspondent already. Listen to what an Italian author says on the subject :—

"Quasi in igual tempo impresero pure a scriver i Provenzali nel loro dialetto, così in verso che in prosa, rendendosi celebri per la prontezza della loro dizione. Questi eran tenuti in grande considerazione alle corti de' Principi, ed erano conosciuti sotto il nome di Troubaduri (Trovatori) per la facilità con que trovavano improvvisando le rime."

BASKETHILT.—The first lady to sing Rossini's music in Germany was Signora Borgondio, who appeared, in 1816, at Munich, in Tancredi and L'Italiana in Algeri. After visiting most of the Continental Capitals, she came, in 1823, to London. She did not make a very favourable impression. Her voice had suffered considerably in her prolonged wanderings, for travelling then, we need scarcely remind you, was not such an easy task as it is now, and she had voyaged both to Moscow and St Petersburg. But why: Baskethilt?

FIX-UND-FERTIG.—We should not advise you to attempt the task, though there certainly is such a thing as an English Hexameter. Lines of this description, as the learned Mr Walsh has shown, may be made, for instance, by a fresh distribution of the verses on Sir John Moore. Thus :—

"Not a drum was
Heard, not a funeral note, as his corpse to the rampart we hurried,
Not a soldier dis-
Charg'd his farewell shot o'er the grave where our hero was buried.
"We buried him
Darkly at dead of night, the sods with our bayonets turning;
By the struggling
Moonbeams' misty light, and the lantern dimly burning.
"Lightly they'll
Talk of the spirit that's gone, and o'er his cold ashes upbraid him;
But little he'll
Reck if they let him sleep on, in the grave where a Briton has laid him."
&c., &c.

English Hexameters, like "A view of Bolton Abbey in the Olden Time," executed in worsted work, are very well as curiosities, but will never become general with us. The fact that our system of Prosody is based upon stress or rhythm, and not upon quantity, in the classical sense, is dead against them.

ERRATUM.—In an article upon the Gaiety, which appeared in our last number, the following sentence occurs :—

"For the same reason that Satanella is less frequently heard than the Bohemian Girl, Lurline is less frequently heard than Maritana—the latter work in each instance being more elaborate than its predecessor," &c.

For "latter" read later, Satanella having been written after the Bohemian Girl, and Lurline after Maritana.

DEATHS.

On August 8th, at Walthamstow, WILLIAM BENNETT, Esq., for many years Secretary of the Drury Lane Theatrical Fund.

On April 14th, drowned by the capsizing of the Stewart Hahneman, ARCHIBALD GORDON, third son of Mr C. W. Doyle, late of Jermyn Street.

NOTICE.

To ADVERTISERS.—The Office of the MUSICAL WORLD is at Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & CO.'S, 244, Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street (First Floor). It is requested that Advertisements may be sent not later than Thursday. Payment on delivery. Owing to press of matter, "Music in Boulogne," and various other articles, are unavoidably postponed till our next number.

The Musical World,

LONDON, SATURDAY, AUGUST 14, 1875.

IN another column will be found an autograph (fac-simile) card of the late Jules Janin, the Emperor of feuilletonistes, the world-renowned "J. J." of the Journal des Débats.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL WORLD.

SIR,—Now that the two Operahouses have closed their doors; now that the multinational host of artists, prime donne, assolute and comprimarie; tenors, robust and lyric; and basses, more or less profound, have taken their departure for fresh fields, and sea-breezes, or, if more intent on gain than on health, to stages new, elsewhere than in Bow Street and Drury Lane, you may have a little more space to spare than you had during the Season. Should this be the case, you will not, perhaps, refuse to let me raise, or, more correctly speaking, write a column in memory of one who, though in his day tolerably well-known among those connected with the world of music, has long since been forgotten save by a few, like myself, who think that facts, like wine and gothic cathedrals, are vastly improved by age.

At every epoch, we find individuals without number who attach themselves to men of genius, in the hope of mounting with them to the seventh heaven of fame. But, somehow or other, they rarely attain their object. May be, the men of genius, to whose coat-tails they would fain, metaphorically cling, pursue—also, metaphorically—the plan which Maworm determined to adopt on the occasion of his apotheosis, and prefer jackets or jerkins to claw-hammer or steel-pen coats. I grant that there may be a few exceptional cases. In fact, there are. Such a one was that of Antoine Schindler, who is principally indebted for his fly-in-amber notoriety to the effrontery with which he described himself upon his visiting cards, as the "ami de Beethoven." Everyone, however, is not blessed with the impudence and rhinoceros-like imperviousness to ridicule, of Herr Anton Schindler; and, as a rule, those who bask in the light reflected from the celebrity achieved by men of genius, are left more and more in the shade, till at last they are involved in total obscurity, in proportion as their idols, and the aureola surrounding the latter, rise higher and higher above the level of common humanity.

Baron Carl von Bagge belonged to the class to which I have referred, and was by no means a bad specimen of it. Yet how many persons now-a-days have eaten, drunk, and been merry without caring a fillip about Baron Carl von Bagge; nay, how many have duly figured in the papers under the three heads of Births, Marriages, and Deaths, without even hearing of Baron Carl von Bagge! Allow me to place a small sprig of immortelle upon his neglected tomb.

Baron Carl von Bagge, in so far resembled Voltaire that he was a Chamberlain at the Prussian Court. With this, however, to the best of my knowledge, the likeness between the two ends. He did not reside at Berlin, but in Paris, and was devotedly fond of music. He considered, also, that he was a first-rate instrumentalist. One day, the Emperor Joseph II.,—of Austria, naturally, for where else do we find emperors of that Biblical name?—one day, I repeat, the Emperor Joseph II. said to him:

"My dear Baron, I never heard anyone play the violin like you!"

There is every reason to believe that the Emperor was speaking the exact truth, but in a sense diametrically opposed to that attributed to his words by the Baronial musicophilist, who became more than ever persuaded of his great skill as an executant, and more than ever devoted to his favourite instrument. He practised indomitably for hours together; played out of tune with a self-satisfied gusto which proved that he might have possessed with advantage a more delicate ear; and received with affable complacency the compliments and bravos which were the breath of his nostrils; as necessary to his existence as resin was to his bow. He took care never to be without an audience. He gathered round him the most celebrated artists. He did more. He offered to act as their master. When they refused, he would observe: "You had better take lessons of me. They will benefit you, I assure you, and, as I am rich, I will charge you nothing." Shakspere says:

Digitized by Google

> "How oft the sight of means to do ill deeds > Makes ill deeds done?"

Is it surprising that some of the Baron's visitors could not withstand the temptation of earning a dishonest franc or two? Accordingly, like the wily beings they were, they would reply:

"We do not, in the least, deny the probability of our deriving benefit from your instruction—on the contrary. The fact, too, that you would instruct us for nothing renders your offer doubly attractive. But we are not rich men, and are obliged to employ our time in gaining our daily bread. With us time is money."

"Do not let that stop you!" the Baron would exclaim. "Since you are not well off, while I am, I will not do things by halves. Come and take lessons, and, instead of your paying me, I will pay you."

Is it surprising, once more, that the classes of the most successful "Coach" who now prepares young gentlemen for the Army, Navy, and Learned Professions, are not more popular than were those of the Baron von Bagge with certain musicians of that period? What was Mecænas, Horace's "Præsidium et dulce decus," to the Baron von Bagge!

But there is one fact which especially redounds to the Baron's credit. It was he who first introduced Boccherini to a Paris public. When Boccherini, accompanied by his friend and artistic colleague, F. Manfredi, visited the French capital, previously to settling in Spain, at the invitation of the Infanta, Don Luis, it was in the salons of the Baron von Bagge that the two friends made their début, to the great delight of those who heard them. My hero deserves to be rescued from oblivion if only for his patronage of Boccherini.

Despite all his eccentricities—among which I include the bad ear he possessed for music—the King of Prussia's Chamberlain composed an eight-part Symphony, which might, I must confess, have been better, just as it might have been worse. He wrote, also, a Concerto, which Kreutzer, then very young, for I am speaking of 1773, performed with great success, though I am not aware he took lessons of its composer.

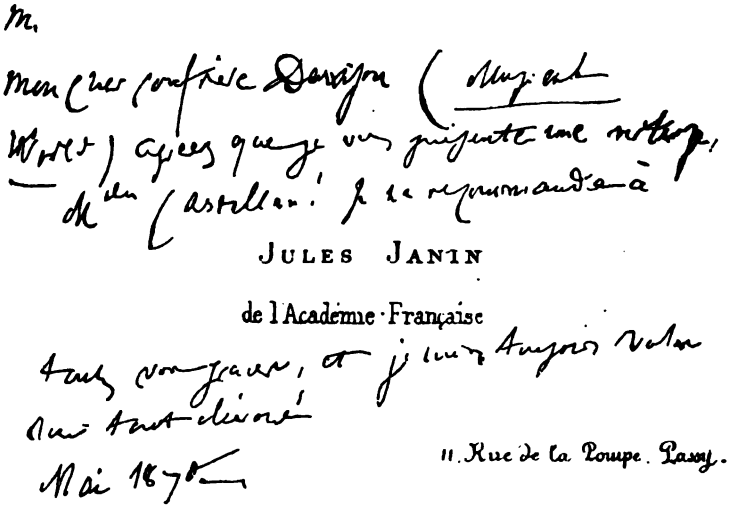
Many are the musicians who, but for Bagge, would have lived and died unknown. Whenever he saw a struggling young man of talent, he invariably stretched out a helping hand towards him. For musicians, his house and his purse were alike open. If it were only because some of those most deeply indebted to his bounty were most active in ridiculing his weaknesses, I should esteem it, in a certain degree a duty, as I consider it a pleasure, to devote these few lines to the memory of a kindly, liberal patron of artists, and a sincerely enthusiastic lover of art.

N. V. N.

—o—

MR HOLLINGSHEAD, of the Gaiety, has hit upon an entertainment which seems to take firm hold upon the public. Many must remember the palmy days of French Opéra-Comique, when the late Mr John Mitchell was director of the St James's Theatre, and the Chartons, Marie Cabels, Coudercs, Chabeaufortis, with other lyric comedians of repute, were successively introduced to English audiences, a series of the most generally accepted works being given, one after another, in a style to attract general attention. Since then, we have had nothing of the kind to compare with this, until now, when the spirited manager of the Gaiety is doing his best to follow the example set by his predecessor, in a theatre which, during the period referred to, whether operatic or purely dramatic entertainments were presented, stood high among the fashionable resorts of London. We have not, it is true, the chief performers from the Paris Opéra-Comique, as of old; but M. Coulon, Mr Hollingshead's chief agent, provided him with a company so generally efficient as to enable him to offer a constant succession of operas, carefully rehearsed, and presenting an "ensemble," all that, under the circumstances, could have been looked for. The chorus was numerous enough, well acquainted with the repertory, and, therefore, effective; the orchestra, some forty strong, was excellent; and last, not least, the conductor, M. Hasselmanns, showed himself to be a musician of experience, familiar with the task he had in hand. With first and second ladies, tenors, and baritone-basses, &c., the "troop" was amply provided: and, though none of its members could fairly be placed in the highest rank of singers, they were most of them beyond—some, far beyond—the average; and —no small advantage—they were, with scarcely an exception, actors of merit, conversant with the business of the stage.

At all events, the performances at the Gaiety were kept up with unflagging spirit. Since our brief allusion to the opening, with Halévy's Mousquetaires de la Reine, various works, more or less well known, were produced, and for the greater part in a manner fully accounting for the vogue which they enjoyed. Among them may be named the Dame Blanche of Boïeldieu; Les Diamans de la Couronne, Domino Noir, Haydée, and Fra Diavolo of Auber; Zampa and the Pré-aux-Clercs of Hérold; the Fille du Régiment of Donizetti, &c., together with others of less importance. These were the means of bringing under notice several artists who were favourably received, and the public, comparatively indifferent at the outset, in the end took a strong liking to the performances—a sure sign that they were of sterling merit. It is to be hoped that Mr Hollingshead may bring over another French operatic company next year. Every amateur of sterling and characteristic national music will thank him for the boon.



Digitized by Google

OCCASIONAL NOTES.

ONCE a year, we learn from the Neue Freie Presse of Vienna, the Sultan, Abdul-Aziz, honours the Italian Opera at Constantinople with his presence. This year, on the usual day, the Manager received due notice to prepare everything for the reception of the illustrious visitor. The latter was to arrive at six and remain until one o'clock the next morning. The artists were to sing fragments from all the operas in vogue, but the fragments were to be as short as possible. As the entertainment was to last so long, it is not surprising that soon after the notification of the Sultan's pleasure to the Manager, a long train of beasts of burden reached the Theatre, laden with provisions and accompanied by all the culinary utensils and cooks necessary for cooking them. They likewise brought a considerable quantity of the Imperial wearing apparel, as it is the custom for the Sultan to change his clothes several times during the course of the performance. Thus, when Abdul-Aziz entered the theatre, everything was in readiness. The entertainment began at once with the second act of the Barbiere di Siviglia. But, after listening for a few minutes, the Commander of the Faithful, saying that he knew the music, seized the opportunity to hold a council in the box with his Ministers. The Council had not ended when the curtain fell. An act of Crispino e la Comare followed, and the Ministers were dismissed in order that their Imperial Master might the better enjoy the music. But the opera of the brothers Ricci did not please him any more than Il Barbiere, and, as he lay upon his cushions, smoking his chibouque, he eased his feelings by venting his dissatisfaction on the Director of his Musical Establishment. At length there was an act of Ernani. This gave rise to a regular catastrophe. When they came to the chorus in praise of Charles V., the artists, thinking they were paying an agreeable compliment, shouted: "Long live Abdul-Aziz!" Hereupon, the Sultan, who hates all such manifestations, left the Theatre in a towering passion. Next day, Constantinople heard with dismay that the Chief of the Imperial Musical Establishment was ignominiously dismissed. The Neue Freie Presse does not inform us whether the offending artists were bowstrung.

ENGLISH journalists are not disinclined, now and then, to dilate complacently upon the superior promptitude of the English over the French Press in the matter of news. That this superiority does not always exist is proved by the fact that the following story—of course well authenticated—has been published in the Moniteur, and republished by Continental journals innumerable, without having, up to this moment, appeared in a single Daily or Weekly printed within the boundaries of the United Kingdom. Yet it is fearfully interesting. The reader must know that, ten years ago, an English actor, Mr Walter Hastings, dining one day at a London club, in company with a Peer of the Realm, expressed an opinion that solitary imprisonment in a dark cell was not so severe a punishment as people generally imagined. In reply to this observation, the Peer, whose name, by the way, is not given in full, but simply represented by an initial S. and a dash, said that, being rather curious on this head, and entertaining his doubts about it, he would pay his companion ten thousand pounds if that companion would consent to try the experiment for ten years. The proposal was accepted, and a neat little cell, fifteen feet by ten, from which daylight was totally excluded, prepared in his lordship's own mansion. The prisoner was to have candles or lamps, books, writing materials, and abundant food. He was to be waited on, however, by an invisible servant. These conditions having been accepted, were rigorously carried into execution. Mr Walter Hastings remained shut up alone for ten years in the cell. He left it only a short time since; in fact, on the 15th of June, for the Moniteur is so well served by its correspondents as to be able to give the exact date. It is needless to say that the captive was paid the ten thousand pounds he had so well earned. It is also, perhaps, needless to state that he is not quite so well as he could wish to be, for his captivity has told upon him considerably. Though he is scarcely five and thirty, he looks sixty. He stoops very much; he walks with an unsteady gait; his face is deadly pale; his beard and hair are perfectly white; and he experiences serious difficulty in articulating. We should say, however, that his brain has been more affected than aught else, if, as the Moniteur asserts—and who can doubt the Moniteur?—Mr Walter Hastings, despite all the physical infirmities above enumerated, and the handsome income he must derive from the ten thousand pounds paid him by Lord S——, still expresses an intention of resuming his histrionic career.

PROMENADE CONCERTS AT COVENT GARDEN THEATRE.

(From the "Daily Telegraph.")

When autumn begins to lay a fiery finger on the leaves, and unseen hands are at work tearing down that tapestry of flowers with which summer had festooned her orchestra of birds in the hedges, other leaves and other tapestries become unfolded in town. Printed programmes come forth with the cheering promise of a reviving time of melody for all who love sweet music none the less that they must listen to it in London; and the skilful decorators, Messrs Dayes and Caney, throw a gay canopy of the lightest fabrics and the brightest colours over the tuneful throng flocking at this season into the region of Covent Garden, making us even cease to regret the nights are lengthening during their stay. That there will be no lack of listeners to these strains of harmony may be safely inferred from the presence of that vast audience which on Saturday evening filled every portion of Covent Garden Theatre, when Messrs A. and S. Gatti commenced another season of promenade concerts. In all essential respects the arrangements are similar to those of last year; and it will be observed that the decorations are, as heretofore, tastefully designed in hues harmoniously blended. Thickly carpeted throughout, the promenade at the back of the orchestra has once more its picturesque nooks and corners; while the illuminated recesses are made lyrically suggestive by such groups as Faust, Margaret, and Mephistopheles, or agreeable to the imagination by trickling waterfalls splashing over rock-work amidst ferns and water-lilies. A notable feature of the present season is the circumstance that Signor Arditi has been appointed conductor. The orchestral force at his command is composed of about a hundred instrumentalists, many of whom have achieved considerable individual distinction. The vocalists are also of established reputation. At an early period of the evening the delight of the vast auditory found enthusiastic expression when Mdlle Bianchi rendered the "Shadow Song" from Dinorah, and afterwards gave Ganz's ballad, "A damsel fair was singing," in her most effective manner. Mdlle Cristino, who, accredited from the principal opera-houses of Italy and Germany, made her first appearance in England, gained rounds of plaudits, added to a cordial reception, in recognition of her skilful execution of the cavatina, "Robert, toi que j'aime," and her tasteful and spirited rendering of a charming composition by Arditi, new to the public; while Signor V. Fabrini won no less admiration by his artistic treatment of Flotow's romanza, "M'appari," and Balfe's familiar ballad, "Then you'll remember me." Solo performances of high merit were, besides, given on the violoncello by M. Jules de Swert, and on the piano by Signor Rendano, who are both débutants at these concerts. The excellence of the band and the ability of the conductor received forcible illustration in the overtures to William Tell and Zampa, and the first part of the programme was brought to an effective close by a grand selection from Wagner's Lohengrin, arranged by Signor Arditi for the full orchestra and band of the Coldstream Guards. In this remarkable composition the solos of Mr Young on the flute, Mr Horton on the oboe, Mr Lazarus and Mr Tyler on clarionets, Mr Maycock on the bass clarionet, Mr Wotton on the bassoon, and Mr H. Reynolds on the cornet, proved exceedingly effective. There is no occasion to dwell on the details of a programme which will be varied almost nightly; but mention must be made of Arditi's quick step, "I Bersaglieri," and Harper's post-horn galop, "Down the road," as likely to preserve for some time a fixity of position. Conducted with such energy and enterprise as the Messrs Gatti displayed in their first year, there can be little doubt that the present series of Promenade Concerts, so auspiciously commenced, will have an equally prosperous issue.

BRUSSELS.—An organ is now being constructed in the workshops of M. Schyven for the use of the Organ Class at the Royal Conservatory. It will be solemnly inaugurated next October, when the pupils will celebrate the 35th anniversary of the foundation of the class by Girschner, in 1840. Christian Girschner was the master of M. Lemmens and, also, of M. Alphonse Mailly, the present professor of the class.

Digitized by Google

TWO TSIGAN VOCALISTS.*

To be a musician and to possess musical feeling are two different things. A man becomes a musician by study; but study, however intense, cannot innoculate him with musical feeling though it may perfect it. How many musicians are deficient in this quality? and, on the other hand, how many persons possess musical instinct and taste without ever having put a finger on any instrument and without knowing a single note? I have just found a proof of this while turning over a few pages of my reminiscences.

In 1813, I was making a forced stay, as a prisoner of war, at the small Russian town of Mizelinski, situated in the government of Orembourg, on the banks of the Kama. The province was inhabited by different hordes of Calmucks, Tartars, and Baschkirs, besides being traversed, from time to time, by bands of the extraordinary people called Tsigans,† with whom no one will have anything to do, and who are yet found spread over every part of the world. Even in South America have I met members of this Indian caste, driven forth from their native land, and distinguished from the other tribes of India by a name signifying: thief. The Tsigans draw near the towns on the occasion of festivals and large gatherings. When they do, the owners of horses and poultry have to be on their guard. Everything is fish that comes to the net of these wanderers, who are so clever in taking what people decline to give them, that the object lost is far away before anyone has perceived it has disappeared.

In the month of February, which was the epoch of the fair of Mizelinski, several of these Bohemians came and established themselves in the suburbs. Everyone was made aware of their arrival by the care the inhabitants took in shutting their stables, clogging their horses, and shutting up their cocks and hens.

I had been assured that, among these vagrants, some of the females were very remarkable vocal extemporists. I felt a great desire to hear them, and said so to one of the large landed proprietors of the place. One morning, I received an invitation to go and take tea with him.

On the appointed day I went to his house. In the courtyard, I found two small bands of Tsigans, who had come from two opposite directions. One was from the country of the Khirgises, and the other from the neighbourhood of Tobolsk. I remarked that they all had the same features and almost the same articles of apparel. The women resembled generally the women of India. They wore enormous caps ornamented with ribbons, and their foreheads were covered with a large number of small pieces of silver. Their necklaces also, and ear-rings consisted of similar pieces.

At the invitation of the master of the house, a group of Tsigans, male and female, began dancing to the sound of the voice, accompanied by a violent clapping of the hands. They broke out, at intervals, in cries and short exclamations, of a very expressive kind, corresponding to the gestures and turns of the dance. The women carried in their hands a handkerchief, with which they draped themselves in very becoming postures. The dance, though frequently highly licentious in its movements and indecent in its gestures, is exceedingly graceful. It is a kind of dishevelled chahut, or cachucha, in which the dancer expresses his joy and his desires by cries and contortions, moaning with tenderness or howling with rage. Thus we French have invented nothing, not even the can-can.

After the dancing came singing. A tall handsome girl, with a complexion of bronze, at first declared she could not sing, assigning as a reason that she did not know any air. Our host was not to be satisfied with such a reason. He sent for something, namely: brandy, warranted to loosen the most refractory tongue, and, after the girl had taken a copious libation, he invited her to extemporize something instead of singing any known air. A male member of the band took a two-stringed guitar, called, I think a Balalaïka, and struck a chord. The girl half closed her eyes, and began, in a sharp falsetto, a strain possible only for anyone capable of reaching with purity so high a register. She had a sweet and agreeable though somewhat tremulous voice. She played with it as though it had been a bauble sparkling with spangles, which she liked to see glisten. The sounds seemed to come down from the sky, and then to keep continually ascending and descending, in turns. From the heights where she appeared to be hovering, the singer poured forth showers of dazzling and gracefully undulating melodies, and then suddenly a magnificent point d'orgue, resembling a meteor, would be lost in silence. After a pause of a few seconds, which scarcely gave us time to breathe, she resumed with splendid audacity the motive she had left off. The perfect art with which this girl, who did not know a single note of music, and sang entirely from inspiration, managed the modulations was something even more astonishing than her shakes and flourishes.

Such was my astonishment and admiration, that some difficulty was experienced in awakening me from my state of ecstacy, in order that I might partake of the refreshments which our host had had served up with the ostentation and profusion usual in every noble Russian household.

After some moments of repose, our host proposed that we should hear another girl. He called one, and enquired whether she consented to sing. She at first refused, saying that she had scarcely left her home, situated in a distant country, on the Chinese frontier, and that she was ignorant of everything. "Come, come; that is not the reason of your refusal," observed our host. "You are afraid to venture, because you feel your inferiority. There, take courage; we know your ignorance, but, to inspirit you, swallow this glass of punch." The girl rose, drew a deep breath, and emitted a tremulous, feeble, and unequal sound. It did not seem to issue from her chest, but to come from outside and be flung among the audience. It had a singular effect upon them. A second sound, firmer and more prolonged, was emitted. It resembled a harmonic chord vigorously attacked, and then allowed to vibrate freely. This was succeeded by a third sound, finer, fuller, and firmer. The girl then brightened up, and her song displayed more warmth and volume. The melody was eminently sorrowful in its character. We had been for a moment anxious, but we were soon re-assured, and breathed freely. The velvety gracefulness of the intonations and the nice gradations of light and shade were all that could be desired. There was something timid and slightly jerky about the young, fresh voice; an accent of suffering which at first was hurtful to one's feelings. But deep sentiment and true passion were soon manifested in it. Youth, power, sweetness, and a charming carelessness seemed all mixed up with some acute sorrow. A soul full of warm feeling re-echoed in the voice, which went straight to one's heart, causing all its chords to vibrate with emotion. Under the force of inspiration the melody grew and rose higher and higher, its ecstacy overpowering the singer, who delivered herself up entirely to its voluptuous delight. There was no longer any trembling in the voice. A shudder certainly sometimes ran through the latter, but it was a gentle, communicative shudder, caused in the soul by passion. We were all palpitating under the charm and the weight of these sensations, when the singer ended with a sharp note of extreme delicacy and extraordinary purity, as though Heaven had gradually withdrawn from her her angel's voice.

No one said a word; no one moved. Everyone appeared to be awaiting the return of the voice thus lost in the sky.

AD. DE PONTÉCOULANT.

* From L'Art Musical.

† Tsigans is evidently another form of the German: Zigeuner, and the Italian: Zingari, i.e., Gipsies.—TRANSLATOR.

MR BAYLE BERNARD.—We regret having to announce the death of this gentleman, which occurred, a few days since, at Brighton. Mr Bernard had been suffering for some time from ill health, but had profited greatly since he went down to the seaside. A reaction, however, supervened, and was quickly followed by a fatal result. Mr Bernard was by birth an American, having first seen the light at Boston, U.S., in 1808, but he had lived in this country, which he made his home, since his boyhood. As a dramatic writer, he contributed some hundred works to the British Stage, several of these still being popular stock-pieces. As a critic, he displayed considerable knowledge of our older dramatic literature, as well as with the productions of a more modern date, and his criticisms, while conscientious, were always conceived in a kind and good-natured spirit. Last year he published a Life of Samuel Lover, and, when death overtook him, was preparing for the press his own Reminiscences of the Stage. He leaves a wife and daughter to deplore his loss. In private life, Mr Bayle Bernard was a genial, kind-hearted man, highly esteemed by his friends and respected by all who knew him.

Digitized by Google

BERLIN.

(From a Correspondent.)

The Royal Operahouse re-opens on the 7th inst., but for ballet only. The operatic season does not commence until the 12th, after these lines will have been posted. Several of the leading artists, however, have already arrived. Among those still absent is Miss Minnie Hauck, and absent she is likely to be for some little time, since, before entering upon the fulfilment of her engagement at the Royal Operahouse here, she will play a round of characters at the Royal German National Theatre in Prague. A few weeks ago, she was stopping, for the benefit of the waters, at Marienbad. I believe she has now gone to make a short stay at one of the watering places in the north of Spain.

At Kroll's Theatre, Herr Nachbaur has followed up his success in Le Postillon de Longjumeau and Il Troratore, by appearing as Arnold, in Guillaume Tell and Raoul in Les Huguenots. His popularity seems, if possible, greater than ever, for not even the tremendously hot weather prevents the public from flocking to see and hear him whenever he sings.

A novelty, in the shape of a three-act romantico-comic opera, has been produced at the same house. It is entitled Ekkehard, the author of the libretto being Herr Ludwig Bussler, and the composer, Herr Moritz Jaffé. The work has been carefully rehearsed and well put upon the stage, but is not likely to achieve a lasting success, though, on the first night, the composer was called on after the first and after the third acts. But one, two, or even—in Italy—twenty recalls do not constitute a genuine success, any more than one swallow makes a summer; one flower, a wreath; or one bush, a quickset hedge. Herr Moritz Jaffé must be considered a clever amateur rather than a regular musician, and it is, therefore, not to be regretted, perhaps, that he favours his hearers with more numerous reminiscences of Meyerbeer, Verdi, and others, than would be pardonable were he judged by a strictly professional standard. Even if he possessed greater powers, natural and acquired, than he does possess, he could not have made much of the libretto, in which a 'prentice hand is painfully evident. Among the really original things—alas! too few and far between—may be mentioned the Monks' Chorus, at the beginning of the first act, and the finale at the end; an air sung by Ekkehard; and the description of Hadwig's dream. The different artists acquitted themselves more than creditably of a task which was sometimes less than pleasant. Mdlle Parsch was as excellent as the part would allow her to be as Hadwig. She was ably seconded by Herr Grisa, as Ekkehard. Mdlle André did all that was to be done with the character of Praxedis; while Herren Baumann and Ziehmann were respectively respectable as Spazzo and Rudiman, two characters supposed to be comic, but in which, to make a fearful joke, the Rudimans of comicality are wanting. Great praise is due to Herr Prcumayr, for the manner in which he got up and conducted the work.

After appearing thirty times successively, and successfully, as the heroine of Offenbach's Mdme l'Archiduc, at the Wilhemstädtisches Theater, Mdlle Marie Geistinger has left Berlin. The next novelties at this theatre will be, according to report, Cagliostro and Die Königin Indigo, both by Herr Johann Strauss.

Following the example set by Herr von Hülsen, at the Royal Operahouse and the Theatre Royal, the Intendants and less aristocratic managers, as the case may be, of the Theatres Royal, Grand-Ducal, Ducal, or Municipal, at Munich, Weimar, Brunswick, Coburg, Hamburg, Basle, Chemnitz, and elsewhere, have adopted the electro-pneumatic gas-lighting apparatus invented by Herr C. Barrot, of Vienna.

A short time since, Herr Emil Breslaur, a master in the New Academy of Music, dedicated to George, Duke of Saxe Meiningen, a work called Technische Grundlage des Clavierspiels, which has been most favourably noticed by the majority of the German papers. His Highness, in return, has created the author a "Professor." Herr A. Haupt, who is already a Professor, has been appointed Director of the Royal Academical Institute for Sacred Music. Mdlle Thoma Börs, daughter of Herr Börs, the pianoforte maker in Hamburgh, is also about to change her style, and assume the title of Princess, which, with his heart, has been offered her by Prince von Lichtenstein. This young lady, who was brought up for the lyric stage, has been staying for a considerable period in Italy and the South of Germany.

OPÉRA-COMIQUE.

The moral once attached to the celebrated anecdote in which the words "toujours perdrix" played a conspicuous part seems to be a thing of the past. At any rate, it does not apply to that musical phenomenon Madame Angot, which, after attracting such crowds for so long, has now broken out in a fresh place. That M. Lecocq's work is still attractive would be sufficiently proved—were all other proof wanting—by the mere fact that so experienced a manager as Mr Charles Morton believes in it as much as ever, and, acting upon that belief, opened the above theatre with it on Saturday night. Mad. Pauline Rita assumed, on the occasion, the part of Clairette for the first time, and proved herself one of the best of the many representatives, yet heard, of the part. She was frequently and deservedly applauded. The other characters were thus cast: Mdlle Lange (her original character), Mdlle Cornélie d'Anka; Ange Pitou, Mr E. D. Beverly; and Pomponnet, Mr J. F. Brian. Judging from the applause throughout the performance on Saturday night, as well as on subsequent nights, and the appearance of the house, which not even the hot weather prevents being well attended, it is rather difficult to give even an approximate guess when the career of Mad. Angot will be brought to a close. The programme included, also, a performance by M. de Furtado Coelho on his new instrument, called the "Copophone," and a new farce: Backing the Favourite, the two principal characters in which were cleverly sustained by Mr J. B. Rae and Mr E. Marshall.

CRICKET MATCH.

A match between the M.C.C., with 4 Professionals, and 15 (Orpheus Amateurs) of the Music Trade, was played at Lord's Cricket Ground on the 11th inst., and ended in a draw in favour of the M.C.C. The Club acquitted themselves well, as did also Messrs McKewan, Boyd, Darville, and C. Boosey, of the Orpheus Club. The players batted extremely well. The following was the score:—

ORPHEUS.

	FIRST INNINGS.		SECOND INNINGS.
Mr W. McKewan, c Clamp, b Hearne	24	b Clamp	1
Mr A. Boyd, c and b Clamp	8	c G. Hearne (s.) b Hearne	33
Mr C. Boosey, b Hearne	22	c G. Hearne (s.) b Hearne	44
Mr J. Wood, b Clamp	2	not out	2
Mr A. Boosey, c Vansittart (s.) b Hearne	0	b Hearne	0
Mr C. Darville, b Hearne	27
Mr R Jonas, c Gaye, b Hearne	4
Mr S. Hayes, b Hearne	2
Mr R. Newcomen, c Gaye, b Clamp	7
Mr G Barron, b Clamp	6
Mr A. Ashdown, b Clamp	3
Mr H. Griffiths, b Clamp	0
Mr E. Lewis, not out	3
Mr J. Hardy, run out	0
Mr W. Joy, b Clamp	0
B 6, l-b 2	8	B 2, w 3	5
Total	116	Total	85

M. C. C.—First Innings.

H. Baron-Dickerson, b Darville	0
Mr A. P. Vansittart, l b w b Darville	16
Mr W. Garth, c Ashdown, b C. Boosey	1
Hearne, b C. Boosey	29
Mr R. E. Gaye, b Darville	0
Clamp, c Hayes, b Boyd	49
Capt. Pilleau, b Walker	11
Mr E. H. Fishbourne, b Boosey	9
G. F. Hearne, not out	34
Mr C. W. Beauclerk, b Boyd	2
Hunt, run out	10
B 6, l-b 3, w 6	15
Total	176

Umpires—Nixon and Farranda. Scorers—Randon and Davey.

Constantinople.—A new Theatre, intended exclusively for Italian opera, is being erected upon the site of the Alhambra. It will have three tiers of boxes, and be very richly decorated. It is to be opened in November.

Digitized by Google

"'TIS THE LAST ROSE OF SUMMER."

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

SIR,—Your correspondent, who has done me the honour to allude to my "Lecture on National Music," objects to the authority I quoted, in reference to "The Last Rose of Summer," and suggests that I should consult "Walker's Irish Bards." It may be presumption on my part, but I cannot accept "Walker's History" as a safe guide in musical matters. The following extracts from that work will explain my reasons :—

"The Welsh are indebted both for their music and instruments to Ireland."

"The crwth (violin) was brought from Ireland to Wales, by Prince Gruffydd ab Cynan. The Welsh only invented the bow." (Query —How did the Irish play it without the bow?)

"The Irish had a slight knowledge of counterpoint from the Greeks."

"The scale of music the same in all countries!"

"The Irish word 'Teadhloin,' the origin of 'Teylin,' a word which has no etymon in the Welsh language!"

"The inhabitants of the Isle of Lewis were great lovers of music. They gave an account of eighteen men who could play on the violin pretty well without being taught!"

"The Keivnine was the Kannun of the Persians—a species of Dulcimer Harp or—Sackbut!"

Very truly yours, BRINLEY RICHARDS.

Belle Vue Hotel, Aberystwith, August 7th.

—o—

TYPOGRAPHICAL ERROR IN A SONG BY FRANZ SCHUBERT.*

The heading, "Auf der Brücke"† to a song of Schubert's (Op. 93), with words by Ernst Schulze, is wrong, and should be replaced by: "Auf der Bruck."‡

The "Bruck" is a hilly, well-wooded spot, a favourite resort of excursionists and pleasure-seekers, near Göttingen, like the Plesse, Gleichen, etc. The proof of this is to be found in Ernst Schulze's work called "Poetisches Tagebuch," which contains the above song, "Auf der Bruck," beginning with the words :—

"Frisch trabe sonder Ruh' und Rast, Mein gutes Ross, durch Nacht und Regen;"§

the second song: "Im Walde," in Op. 93; and "Ueber Wildemann,," in Op. 108. In Schulze's original verses the title runs "Im Walde" with the addition "hinter Falkenhagen"‖ (a village not far from Göttingen). Wildemann is a little town in the Harz.

May I beg that, in a new edition you will kindly remember this rectification? A QUANTZ.

Göttingen, July, 1875.

There was an old pianist called Schuloff,
Who played music of every known school off
Without any book,
And, by hook or by crook,
It was scrambled through somehow by Schuloff.
Jonathan Swift.

PRAGUE.—Herr Lebatt, from the Imperial Operahouse, Vienna, has been fulfilling a short but successful engagement here. He has appeared as Raoul, Tannhäuser, and Vasco de Gama.

LEMBERG.—Mad. Emilie Pohlmann-Kressner, the once popular singer, who divided public favour with such an artist as Henriette Sontag, died here on the 28th ult., at the ripe age of 75.

GENEVA.—The grand organ built, for the Church of St Gervais, by M. Joseph Merklin, was to be inaugurated on the 12th inst., by M. Edouard Batiste, and the principal organists of Switzerland.

MADRID.—The following artists are engaged for the next season at the Italian Opera: Signore Pozzoni, Fossa, Cortes, Signori Tamberlik, Stagno, Anastasi, Boccolini, Roudil, David, Ordinas, and Fiorini.

* Addressed to the editor of the Berlin Echo.
† "On the Bridge."
‡ "On the Bruck."
§ "Trot bravely on, nor stop to rest,
My trusty Steed, through night and rainpour."
‖ "Behind Falkenhagen."

WAIFS.

Miss Lydia Thompson leaves England for the United States next April.

Miss Rose Massey is fulfilling an enagagement at Union Square Theatre, New York.

Mr Albery is working on a comedy for the Court Theatre, and on another for Mr Sothern.

Madame Schneider, it is reported, will re-appear at the Variétés in La Boulangère a des Ecus.

The next novelty at the Alhambra will be a spectacular dream-drama, constructed by Mr J. Cave and Mr R. Reece, called Spectre-sheim.

London is to have still another Theatre. The new building will be erected on a site near the Strand, and Mr Robinson is to be the architect.

Sig. Mario Gigliucci, who married, a short time since, Miss Mozley, is a son of the Countess di Gigliucci, better known in England as Clara Novello.

There is a report current in Paris that M. Gounod is engaged on a grand opera entitled Jane Grey, to be produced at Mr Mapleson's new Operahouse.

Mr Brinley Richards has accepted an invitation to attend the Eisteddfod held at Rhayaden on the 19th inst., and that held at Haverfordwest on the 26th.

The Dieppe papers announce the arrival in that town of the Marquis and Marchioness de Caux, where the Marquis has hired a charming cottage close to the sea.

M. Offenbach has returned, in excellent health, from Aix to St Germains, where he is working hard at the various pieces he has undertaken to furnish by the winter.

Mr Edmund Yates has been compelled, by the amount of other literary work on his hands, to discontinue his clever and spirited contributions to the New York Herald.

Madlle d'Obigny Derval, daughter of M. Derval, of the Gymnase, has been engaged by M. Halanzier, and will shortly make her first appearance as Mathilde in Guillaume Tell.

Mr Charles Matthews intends visiting India. Before he does so, however, he will appear at the Gaiety Theatre for a season of eight weeks, commencing on the 13th of September.

Mr J. L. Toole will make his first appearance in London, since his return from America, at the Gaiety Theatre, on Monday, November 8th. His engagement will extend till next Easter.

It is reported that the winners of the solo prizes at the National Music Meetings intend to form a concert party, for the purpose of making a tour in the autumn through the provinces.

The Baroness Willy de Rothschild, author of the well-known songs bearing her name, which are sung so successfully by Madame Patti and Madame Christine Nilsson, is stopping at Tréport.

Madlle Sangalli has left Paris, but will return before next February, when she is to "create" the principal part in Silvia, the new ballet, by MM. Jules Barbier and Léo Delibes, at the Grand Opera.

Mr William Bennett, for many years connected with the two Patent Theatres, died this week. For a considerable time past he filled the post of Secretary to the Drury Lane Theatrical Fund.

Drury Lane Theatre will be opened for the regular dramatic season on September 4th, with Mr Dion Boucicault's drama of The Shaughraun. Mr Boucicault will sustain his original character of Conn.

It is said the Minister of Public Instruction in Italy intends to publish a notice strictly forbidding professors in the Royal Conservatories of Music from giving paid private lessons to their pupils.

The King of Spain has just created M. François Bazin, Professor of Composition at the Paris Conservatory, and M. Danhauser, also a Professor in the same institution, Commanders of the Order of Charles III.

The success of the Tour du Monde, in Paris, continues as great as ever, although above 300 performances have already been given. The receipts amount to between three and four thousand francs every night.

A new picture gallery has been opened at Melbourne. The walls will give a superficial area of over 26,000 square feet. The cost of the building is about £8,000. On the opening day the new gallery was visited by 6,525 persons.

Mr George Rignold has been playing for a short time at the Queen's Theatre in Mr Tom Taylor's drama of Clancarty, Mr Watts Phillips's Amos Clark, and Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet. He was supported by Mrs Charles Calvert as Lady Clancarty, and Miss Ada Cavendish as Juliet.

Digitized by Google

Mr F. B. Carpenter has completed a full length portrait of President Lincoln, for Albany, U. S.

Admiral Tom Trump (Jean Hannema), who will appear at the Royal North Woolwich Gardens next week, is the smallest man in the world, his height being only 26 inches, which is six inches less than Tom Thumb. He is 36 years old, and was born at Franeker, Friesland, Holland, 23rd April, 1839; his weight is only 26lbs. He speaks five languages fluently, viz., English, French, Dutch, German, and Italian.

All the grants for the national theatres and the Conservatory of Music, amounting to a total of 1,616,000 francs, have been voted by the French National Assembly without discussion. Nothing was said concerning the balance of 97,000 francs remaining from last year, owing to the non-application of it to the Théâtre Lyrique, and the Minister will consequently be able to carry out his promise of adding the above sum to this year's grant of 100,000 for the same theatre.

Hans Christian Andersen was buried on the 11th inst., at Copenhagen, with great solemnity. The funeral procession was very numerous, comprising the King, with his suite, the Crown Prince of Denmark and Prince Hans, the British, Swedish, German, and American Ministers, the chief military and civic authorities, deputations from the common councils of Copenhagen and Odensee (birthplace of the deceased), representatives of art and science, and many citizen associations. The Queen placed a crown of laurel interwoven with lilies upon the coffin, and wreaths were also sent by the Princesses.

Mdlle Elise Jansen.—This young lady, who will be remembered as the accomplished harpist formerly of Her Majesty's Opera, Drury Lane, is at present engaged at Pawlowsk, near St Petersburgh, where Herr Bilse and his orchestra are giving concerts every evening at "Vauxhall." Mdlle E. Jansen has already proved herself a harpist of the first order. We may particularly notice her splendid success at Herr Bilse's benefit concert, where she played C. Oberthür's grand fantasia "Souvenir de Londres," with such brilliancy as to call forth the most enthusiastic ovations. With an equally satisfactory result she played, at a previous concert, the same composer's harp solo, entitled, "Meditation," with all the grace and expression which this musical poem demands. Mdlle Jansen will certainly make the instrument of her predilection more favourably known here than ever it was before.—A. B.

Alexandra Palace.—On Monday next there will be another display of fireworks, with the great set piece representing "The Fairy Grove of Palms." On Tuesday and Wednesday the August Race Meeting will be held, when the added money will amount to £1,000. From the number and character of the entries, a most successful meeting is anticipated. On Thursday the Moore and Burgess Minstrels will give a special entertainment, with their new programme; and after dusk there will be an illumination of the great lake and water village, and a procession of boats with coloured lights and other novel effects. On Saturday afternoon the popular burlesque, Nemesis, will be performed in the theatre by the Strand company; and in the evening there will be a concert, in which the national airs of all countries will be given by an enlarged orchestra, military bands, and the company's choir. The Jackley troupe of Russian gymnasts will repeat their marvellous performances every day during the week.

"The impression I derived from Mr Irving's acting in the adaptation of Erckmann-Chatrian's ghastly melodrama, in Mr Wills's play, and in his other appearances, was that he distinctly belonged to the class of artists of talent. He struck me as an actor who would produce much effect at the Porte Saint-Martin or at the Ambigu Comique; who possessed plenty of power of action, a good knowledge of telling attitudes, and a really artistic anxiety never to flag in the character he might be sustaining, but to 'look' the part from one end to the other. By the side of these qualities, he seemed to me to exhibit some serious defects; he lacked culture and refinement; his style of elocution was trivial, and he was addicted to that singing and unreasonable dropping of the voice from a higher octave to a lower one which is common to untutored players. Some may think that all this was no reason why Mr Irving should not succeed as Hamlet: I thought otherwise, and I sincerely believe that all reasonable critics who had attentively observed Mr Irving thought so too, though they may have hesitated, out of commendable reluctance to discourage an honest and praiseworthy effort, to say so too openly. We all know what a tremendous strain of power the part of Hamlet involves. We all know that if the artist who undertakes it has not the rapid and facile power of elocution used in comedy, blended with a deep power of bitter humour, he fails to render the most conspicuous feature of Hamlet's mind; and no one will venture to say that Mr Irving possesses this."—Gentleman's Magazine,

La Mandragore, a new opera by Henry Litolff, will shortly be produced at the Théâtre des Galeries, Brussels.

A collection of letters, mostly unpublished, by Donizetti, has been advertised to appear ere long by a bookseller at Bergamo.

Mr Richard Smith of Hull, the well known composer and arranger of brass and military band music, has arrived in London, on his way to Paris and Germany, seeking novelty in the military music line for his popular journal.

The little Théâtre de la Tour d'Auvergne, Paris, has been taken by M. Guérin, formerly conductor at the Theatre in Rio Janeiro. The new manager proposes giving comedies, vaudevilles, and operettas by young authors.

M. Courbet's appeal has been rejected, and he stands condemned to pay the sum of about thirty-two thousand pounds sterling for the expense of rebuilding the Column in the Place Vendôme. Thirty-two thousand pounds sterling cannot, under any circumstances, be considered a trifle, but it appears positively fearful when expressed in French currency, thus: 800,000 francs!

The Cloud.

A cloud lay cradled near the setting sun,
A gleam of crimson tinged its braided snow;
Long had I watched the glory moving on,
O'er the still radiance of the lake below:
Tranquil its spirit seemed, and floated slow,
E'en in its very motion there was rest,
While every breath of eve that chanced to blow
Wafted the traveller to the beauteous west.
Emblem, methought, of the departed soul,
To whose white robe the gleam of bliss is given,
And by the breath of mercy made to roll
Right onward to the golden gates of heaven,
While to the eye of faith it peaceful lies,
And tells to man his glorious destinies.

Advertisements.

THE VOICE & SINGING.

BY

ADOLFO FERRARI.

THE FORMATION AND CULTIVATION OF THE VOICE FOR SINGING.

Price 12s.

London: Duncan Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"The remarkable qualities of this book are the author's freedom from conventio na trammels, the strong sense of his opinions, and the novelty yet evident soundness of his precepts; his work has consequently come into general use as a manual of vocal instruction."—Daily News.

THE ART OF SINGING.

New Edition, Revised and Improved, of

A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR

THE VOICE.

By T. A. WALLWORTH.

A Method as used by the Author in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which he has cultivated the voices of his Pupils, Mdlle Alwina Valleria, Miss Lucy Franklein, and other successful Vocalists.

Full Music Size, price 7s.

London: Hammond & Co. (late Jullien), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his Residence, 36, Wimpole Street.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE,

For invigorating and enriching the voice, and removing affections of the throat.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE is universally acknowledged to be the most valuable remedy for sore throat, hoarseness and relaxed throat. It should always be taken before singing or reciting, as it strengthens the vocal organs. It is most extensively prescribed by the faculty for the throat and voice. Dr Lewis of Basingstoke says he finds them most efficacious, and in Dr Copland's Dictionary of Practical Medicine (Longman & Co.), they are strongly recommended at pages 872 and 1492. They are used by all the greatest vocalists and orators in Europe, and have been established over a quarter of a century. Testimonials from Patti, Grisi, Lablache, Santley, &c. Sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d. by all Chemists throughout the United Kingdom and the Colonies.

Digitized by Google

NEW SONGS.

THE LAST FAREWELL.

New Song by J. L. HATTON.

Sung by Mdlle ALBANI, at the Floral Hall Concerts, with the greatest possible success. In C and E. Price 4s.

NEW SONGS
BY ARTHUR SULLIVAN.

SWEETHEARTS. In A♭ and B♭. Sung by E. LLOYD 4s
THE JUDGE'S SONG. From Trial by Jury. Sung by Mr. FRED SULLIVAN 4s
TENDER AND TRUE. In E♭ and F. Sung by EDITH WYNNE 4s
THE DISTANT SHORE. In E♭, F, and G 4s
THOU ART WEARY. In D minor and F minor ... 4s
THOU'RT PASSING HENCE... ... ... 4s

NEW SONGS
BY VIRGINIA GABRIEL.

CLOVELLY. Words from "Songs for Sailors." Dedicated to H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh... ... 4s
SOWING AND REAPING. Sacred Song 3s
SHE CAME LIKE A DREAM. Sung by Madame ENRIQUEZ 3s
THE WHITE DOVE 2s 6d

NEW SONGS
BY FAVOURITE COMPOSERS.

YES AND NO ... ... LOUISA GRAY 3s
MY LADYE ... ... AMY COMPTON 3s
IN THE TWILIGHT HOURS „ 3s
ELSIE'S DREAM ... JOSEPH L. ROECKEL 3s
BESIDE THE SEA ... „ „ 3s
SUMMER WINDS ... „ „ 3s
SO LONG AGO... ... GEORGE BARKER 3s
NINETTE ... ... „ „ 3s
THE ENTREATY The Lady CLARENCE PAGET 3s
GLAMOUR ... „ „ 3s
SWEET LISETTE ... ... J. L. ROECKEL 3s
THE CHILDREN IN THE WOOD „ 3s

CHAPPELL & CO.,
50, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON.

ROYAL
ITALIAN OPERA.

PRODUCTION OF WAGNER'S
'LOHENGRIN.'

The Books of Airs (in Two Books), arranged for Pianoforte, with ad. lib. accompaniments for Flute, Violin, and Violoncello, by

W. HUTCHINS CALLCOTT

PRICE.

Solos ... ... 5*s. each.*
Duets ... ... 6*s.* „
Accompaniments ... ... 1*s.* „

LONDON:
HUTCHINGS & ROMER,
9, Conduit Street, Regent Street, W.

Digitized by Google

In 74 Numbers, price One Penny, or in One Volume, cloth, gilt edges, price 7s. 6d.

MOTETS FOR THE YEAR.

A COLLECTION OF OFFERTORIES,

WITH APPROPRIATE WORDS FOR EVERY SUNDAY AND DAY OF OBLIGATION DURING THE YEAR.

Edited and Dedicated (by permission) to the Right Rev. J. DANELL, D.D., Lord Bishop of Southwark, by

W. M. LUTZ,

ORGANIST OF ST. GEORGE'S CATHEDRAL, SOUTHWARK.

CONTENTS.

1	1st Sunday in Advent	Ad te levavi	Ps. Solo or Qrtt.	Webbe
2	2nd Sunday in Advent	Deus tu convertens	Qrtt. or Chorus	Henry Smart
3	3rd Sunday in Advent	Juste et pie vivamus	Duet or Chorus	Webbe
4	4th Sunday in Advent	Ave Maria	Solo or Chorus	W. M. Lutz
5	Any Sunday during Advent	Rorate	Chorus & Solo	Webbe
6	Christmas Day	Adeste Fideles	Solo & Chorus	Webbe
7	Sunday within Octave of Christmas	Attolite	Solo & Chorus	Webbe
8	Circumcision	Tui sunt cœli	Ten. So. & Chor.	A. Sullivan
9	Epiphany	Reges Tharsis	Chorus	W. M. Lutz
10	Sunday within Octave	Jubilate	Chorus	W. M. Lutz
11	Holy Name	Jesu dulcis	Qrtt. & Chorus	Beethoven
12	3rd Sunday after Epiphany	Dextera Domini	Chorus	Schumann
13	Septuagesima Sunday	Bonum est	Solo & Chorus	Benedict
14	Sexagesima Sunday	Perfice	Solo or Chorus	Webbe
15	Quinquagesima Sunday	Super flumina	Soli & Chorus	Webbe
16	1st Sunday in Lent	Ecce nunc tempus	Duet or Chorus	Webbe
17	2nd Sunday in Lent	Preces populi	Chorus	Webbe
18	3rd Sunday in Lent	Justitiæ	Chorus or Qrtt.	Mendelssohn
1	4th Sunday in Lent	Ad te levavi	Bs. Solo or Qrtt.	Webbe
19	Passion Sunday	Stabat Mater	Chorus	Webbe
20	Palm Sunday	Improperium	Chorus	André
21	Easter Sunday (Gradual)	Hæc dies	Chorus or Trio. T.T. & B.	Webbe
22	,, ,, (Offertory)	Victimæ	Chorus	Webbe
23	Low Sunday	Angelus Domini	Chorus	André
24	2nd Sunday after Easter	Deus misereatur	Chorus & Soli	Webbe
25	3rd Sunday after Easter	Lauda anima	Solo or Chorus	Webbe
10	4th Sunday after Easter	Jubilate	Chorus	W. M. Lutz
26	5th Sunday after Easter	Benedicimus	Duet or Chorus	Webbe
27	Ascension Day	Ascendit Deus	Duet or Chorus	Webbe
28	Sunday within Octave of Ascension Day	Rex Gloriæ	Duet or Chorus	Webbe
29	Whit Sunday (Gradual)	Emitte / Veni sancte spiritus	Trio or Chorus / Duet or Chorus	Webbe
30	,, ,, (Offertory)	Confirma hoc Deus	Soli or Chorus	W. M. Lutz
31	Trinity Sunday	Benedictus est	Chorus	W. M. Lutz
32	1st Sunday after Pentecost	Intende voci	Chorus	André
33	Corpus Christi (Gradual)	Lauda Sion	Duet or Chorus	Webbe
34	,, ,, (Offertory)	O sacrum convivium	Solo	Webbe
35	2nd Sunday after Pentecost	Domine convertere	Soli & Chorus	W. M. Lutz
36	3rd Sunday after Pentecost	Protector	Duet	Webbe
37	4th Sunday after Pentecost	Illumina	Solo or Chorus	W. M. Lutz
38	St Peter and St Paul	Roma felix	Duet or Chorus	Webbe
39	5th Sunday after Pentecost	Audi hymnum	Solo & Chorus	Webbe
14	6th Sunday after Pentecost	Perfice	Solo or Chorus	Webbe
40	7th Sunday after Pentecost	Sicut in holocaustis	Qrtt. or Chorus	Mozart
41	8th Sunday after Pentecost	Tu es gloria	Bass Solo	Webbe
18	9th Sunday after Pentecost	Justitiæ	Chorus or Qrtt.	Mendelssohn
1	10th Sunday after Pentecost	Ad te levavi	Solo or Quartett	Webbe
42	11th Sunday after Pentecost	Exurgat Deus	Chorus	Webbe
43	Assumption	Assumpta est	Chorus	Neukom
44	12th Sunday after Pentecost	Benedicam	Chorus	Eybler
45	13th Sunday after Pentecost	In te speravi	T. So. (& Chor. ad lib.)	W. M. Lutz
36	14th Sunday after Pentecost	Protector	Duet	Webbe
13	15th Sunday after Pentecost	Bonum est	Solo or Chorus	Benedict
46	16th Sunday after Pentecost	Domine in auxilium	Soli & Chorus	W. M. Lutz
47	17th Sunday after Pentecost	Oravi	Soli & Chorus	Dr Crookal
48	18th Sunday after Pentecost	Timebunt	Chorus	W. M. Lutz
49	19th Sunday after Pentecost	Si ambulavero	Bs. Solo (Chor. ad lib.)	W. M. Lutz
15	20th Sunday after Pentecost	Super flumina	Chorus	Webbe
50	21st Sunday after Pentecost	Vir erat hus	Chorus	W. M. Lutz
51	22nd Sunday after Pentecost	Recordare	Solo & Chorus	Führer
52	All Saints (Gradual)	Tibi omnes angeli	Chorus	Webbe
53	,, (Offertory)	Justorum	Solo	Webbe
54	23rd Sunday after Pentecost	Hæc dicit Dominus	Soli & Chorus	Webbe
55	Nativity	Beata	Chorus	W. M. Lutz
56	Holy Name	Ave Maria	Solo	Cherubini
57	Seven Dolors	Stabat Mater	Chorus	Gregorian
4	Rosary	Ave Maria	Solo or Chorus	W. M. Lutz
55	Maternity	Beata	Chorus	W. M. Lutz
58	Purity	Succurre miseris	Duet & Chorus	Webbe
4	Patronage	Ave Maria	Solo or Chorus	W. M. Lutz
59	Confessor	Ecce sacerdos	Duet	Webbe
60	Martyrs	Qui seminant	Duet & Chorus	Webbe
61	One Martyr	Justus ut palma	Qrtt. or Chorus	W. M. Lutz
62	Apostles	Gloria et honore	Qrtt. or Chorus	W. M. Lutz
63	Virgins and Holy Women	Diffusa	Qrtt. or Chorus	W. M. Lutz
64		Asperges	Chorus	Gregorian
65	In Paschal time	Vidi aquam	Duet or Chorus	Webbe
66	Prayer for the Queen	Domine salvum fac	Chorus	Martini

APPENDIX.

67	Magnificat	Soli & Chor.	Webbe
68	Alma (from 1st Sunday in Advent till the Purification)	Solo & Chor.	Webbe
69	Ave Regina (from the Purification till Maunday Thursday)	Soli & Chor.	Webbe
70	Regina Cœli (from Holy Saturday till Trinity Eve)	Soli & Chor.	Webbe
71	Salve Regina (from Trinity Eve till Advent)	Soli & Chor.	Webbe
72	O Salutaris	Chorus	Webbe
73	O sacrum convivium	Dt. or Chor.	Webbe
74	Tantum ergo	Chorus	Webbe

Also, Just Published,

SHORT MASSES FOR SMALL CHOIRS.

EDITED BY SIR J. BENEDICT.

A COLLECTION OF MASSES, FOR ONE, TWO, THREE, AND FOUR VOICES,

WITH ORGAN ACCOMPANIMENTS.

Price Sixpence each, or in One Volume, cloth, price 5s.

CONTENTS.

1	Webbe's Mass	(3 voices)	in A.
2	,, ,,	,,	in D.
3	,, ,,	,,	in B flat.
4	,, ,,	,,	in F.
5	,, ,,	,,	in C.
6	,, ,,	,,	in D minor.
7	Webbe's Mass	(4 voices)	in G.
8	Missa de Angelis	(Unison)	in D.
9	Dumont's Mass	,,	in D minor.
10	Missa in Dominicis diebus per annum	,,	in D minor.
11	Missa pro defunctis	,,	in F.
12	Wesley's Gregorian Mass	(4 voices)	in G.

These Masses are published in a cheap form, in order to meet a growing demand for simple, melodious, harmonized music. In the cases where the register has been found too high for boys' voices, supplementary notes have been inserted.

They are thus adapted as well for Chancel Choirs, as for those in which the Soprano parts are taken by female voices.

LONDON: BOOSEY & CO., 295, REGENT STREET, W.

Digitized by Google

Printed by HENDERSON, RAIT, AND FENTON, at No. 69, Marylebone Lane, Oxford Street, in the Parish of Marylebone, in the County of Middlesex. Published by WILLIAM DUNCAN DAVISON, at the Office, 244, Regent Street, Saturday, Aug. 14, 1875.

The Musical World.

(REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.)

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST, 20s. PER ANNUM,
Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to DUNCAN DAVISON & CO., 244, Regent Street, London, W

VOL. 53—No. 34. SATURDAY, AUGUST 21, 1875. PRICE { 4d. Unstamped. 5d. Stamped.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

Institute 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Under the immediate Patronage of
Her Most Gracious Majesty the QUEEN.
His Royal Highness the Prince of WALES.
Her Royal Highness the Princess of WALES.
His Royal Highness the Duke of EDINBURGH.
Her Royal Highness the Princess CHRISTIAN.
His Royal Highness the Duke of CAMBRIDGE.
Her Royal Highness the Duchess of TECK.
His Serene Highness the Duke of TECK.
and
His Royal Highness the Prince CHRISTIAN.

President—The Right Hon. The Earl of DUDLEY.

Principal—Professor MACFARREN, Mus. D. Cantab.

The MICHAELMAS TERM will Commence on MONDAY, the 20th September, and will Terminate on SATURDAY, the 18th of December. Candidates for admission can be examined at the Institution on Thursday, the 16th September, at Eleven o'clock, and every succeeding Thursday at the same hour.

By Order, JOHN GILL, Secretary.

Royal Academy of Music,
4, Tenterden Street, Hanover Square.

"ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?"

MR PEARSON will sing This Evening (by general desire), and during the week, ASCHER'S celebrated and popular Romance, "ALICE WHERE ART THOU?" at the Royal Italian Opera Concerts.

MR SHAKESPEARE (Tenor), having returned from Italy, all letters respecting ENGAGEMENTS for Concerts or Oratorios may be addressed to him at Messrs CRAMER & CO.'S, 201, Regent Street, W.

MR PAUL SEMLER (Pianist) begs to announce that he can accept engagements for Balls, Soirées, &c. His repertoire consists of all the celebrated Dance Music of the day, as well as his own compositions. Terms on application, by letter, to be addressed to the care of Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & CO., Foreign Music Warehouse, 244, Regent Street, W.

A FIRST BOOK on the THEORY of MUSIC. By LOUISA GIBSON. Adopted by the Council of the Plymouth High School, and highly recommended by the leading London and Provincial Musicians. "May be safely recommended as an authority."—G. A. MACFARREN, Esq., Principal, R.A.M. "The rules, being clearly expressed, facilitate the task of both professors and pupils."—Sir J. BENEDICT. "I am perfectly charmed with the book, and shall recommend it as a duty."—BENNETT GILBERT, Esq., R.A.M. "I think so highly of it, that I would advise every young student beginning music to study your book."—F. B. JEWSON, Esq., Prof., R.A.M. MOFFATT, PAIGE & CO., 6, Paternoster Buildings, E.C., London.

MR FREDERIC ARCHER (Organist of the Alexandra Palace, &c.) has a Vacancy for a gentlemanly, well-educated Youth, having musical aptitude, as RESIDENT ARTICLED PUPIL. Unusual advantages can be offered.—Alexandra Palace, Muswell Hill, N.

MUSIC and SINGING.—A Gentleman, with a high-class connection in the North, is desirous, from domestic reasons, to Remove, and is willing to negotiate for the TRANSFER of his Business. A Professor of the Pianoforte, or a Violinist with a thorough knowledge of the Pianoforte, would find it a desirable opening. The highest references required. Address—A.Z., 45, Smith Street, Chelsea, London, S.W.

VICTORIA. The New National Song. Written by W. CLARK RUSSELL. Music by HENRY SMART. In two keys, G and B. 3s. each; free by post, 18 stamps each. "It is a bright, manly song, with a good chorus."—Vide Overland Mail. The part song, 4 stamps. This favourite song will be sung by the Choir on the 21st instant at the Alexandra Palace. London: Published by ROBERT COCKS & CO., New Burlington Street.

BRIGHTON CONCERT AGENTS,
PIANOFORTE AND MUSICSELLERS,
LYON & HALL,
WARWICK MANSION.

THE LONDON ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

ST. GEORGE'S HALL. Established 1861.

Principal—Professor WYLDE, Mus. Doc. Cantab.

Professors—Sir Julius Benedict (Examiner); Signori Garcia, Schira, and Lablache; Herren Ganz and Henseler; Signori Traventi, Scuderi, and Tartaglioni; Messrs C. K. Salaman and J. Francis Barnett; Herren Lehmeyer, Barth, and Marlois; Messrs J. Barnett, Handel Gear, and Mann; MM. Oberthur and T. H. Wright; Herren Pollitzer and Ludwig; M. Paque.

The Academy is for Amateur as well as Professional Students. The year is divided into Three Terms. The Fee, Five Guineas per Term, includes instruction in three branches of musical education. Students can select their principal teachers from the above list. Those residing at a distance can receive all their lessons on one day in the week.

The Next TERM commences FRIDAY, Oct. 1. New Students are required to attend for examination on Monday, Sept. 27, or Tuesday, September 28, between the hours of 11 and 4.

Prospectuses at the Office, St George's Hall, Langham Place.

G. R. WILKINSON, Secretary.

ROYAL IRISH ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

36, WESTLAND ROW, DUBLIN.

Patron—Her Majesty the QUEEN.
President—H.R.H. the Duke of EDINBURGH.

The Council of the Royal Irish Academy of Music hereby give Notice that the following Professorships are vacant:—

PIANOFORTE (German School), Senior Classes.
SINGING (Italian School), Senior Classes.

Candidates must be fully qualified to give the most advanced instruction in Pianoforte and Singing, and will, with their applications, transmit copies of Testimonials.

For information as to Salaries and other particulars, application to be made to the Honorary Secretaries.

MISS ROSE FERSEE begs that all communications may be sent to her new address—4, Park Village West, Regent's Park, N.W.

"L'INCONTRO."

VALSE.

Sung by MDLLE CRISTINO

with great success nightly at the Promenade Concerts, Theatre Royal, Covent Garden.

The Music composed by Signor A. DITI.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & CO., 244, Regent Street, W.

WILFORD MORGAN'S SONGS.

HER I LOVE .. .. 4s.
COULD I BUT CALL HER MINE.. .. .. 4s.
MY SWEETHEART WHEN A BOY .. .. 4s.
WEET EVENING AIR .. .. 4s.
OH! I WOULD BE A BOY AGAIN. Words by ADA ESTER .. 4s.
(N.B.—The above Songs have been sung with distinguished success by Mr WILFORD MORGAN.)
LITTLE BIRDIE, SING TO ME .. .. 4s.
(Sung by Miss EDITH WYNNE.)

ANTHEM.

IF THOU WILT FORGET ME (THE 13TH PSALM) .. .. .. 4s.
(For Tenor or Soprano Solo, with Chorus ad. lib., as sung at the Temple Church. Composed by WILFORD MORGAN.)

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & CO., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

THREE SONGS.

"QUEEN OF THE ROSES." Words by WHYTE MELVILLE .. 4s.
(Respectfully inscribed to NELSIE BROOK, Southport.)
"THE HAPPIEST LAND." Words by LONGFELLOW.. .. .. 4s.
(Inscribed to O. MILWARD, Esq., Worcester.)
"AN ANGEL'S SONG." Words by WHYTE MELVILLE .. .. 4s.

Composed by FREDERICK F. ROGERS.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & CO., 244, Regent Street, W.

Digitized by Google

Just Published.

TWO SONGS.

"EVENING IN AUTUMN." Words by R. HARE, Esq. .. price 3s.
(Dedicated to Miss E. KNAPTON.)

"WAITED AND WATCHED." Words by ORLANDO WRIGHT price 3s.
(Dedicated to his friend, W. MAYBRICK, Esq.)

Composed by W. F. BANKS.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

"MY LADY SLEEPS."

SERENADE FOR VOICE AND PIANO.

By IGNACE GIBSONE.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

"HOME, SWEET HOME."

TRANSCRIBED FOR THE HARP SOLO.

By CHARLES OBERTHUR.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"WITH MOONLIGHT BEAMING."

DUET

For Equal Voices.

The Music Composed and Dedicated to

MISS HEGINBOTHAM and MISS MOWER,

By H. KUSTER.

Price 3s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"DREAM ON,"

SONG,

Words and Music by ERNEST HOUGHTON.

Price 3s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

NORAH'S MESSAGE.

SUNG BY

MADME ADELINA PATTI

WITH DISTINGUISHED SUCCESS AT

THE FLORAL HALL.

THE POETRY BY

THE LADY JOHN MANNERS.

THE MUSIC BY

SIR JULIUS BENEDICT.

Price 4s.

A new and pretty Irish ballad, abounding in sentiment and feeling, and precisely the kind of thing desired by the mass of amateurs, was most delightfully sung by Mdme Adelina Patti. It is called 'Norah's Message.'"—Morning Advertiser.

LONDON:

DUNCAN DAVISON & CO., 244, REGENT STREET.

ACORNS, SLOES, AND BLACKBERRIES.

By GIBBS GIBB GIBBS, Esq.

No. 10.

Dr Martin Luther, the celebrated reformer and professor, was born at Isleben, in Saxony, in 1483. His "Eulogium on Music" has been published by Dr Forkel, in the second volume of his "History of Music." Luther also wrote several choral melodies. Johann Walther, in his epistle, speaks with particular praise concerning the hymns, "Das grosse Glauben," also of "Jesaia dem Propheten," especially as to the manner in which Luther has adapted the notes to the text. In the fifteen century no difficulty was made in introducing the melodies of profane songs in churches. The music of some of these is attributed to Luther. Luther's psalm-book was at first very small, and in 1524 contained only three sheets. They together contained eight psalms, but with only three melodies. Of these, are yet sung in Germany, No. 1, "Nun freut euch, liebe Christen" ("Now Christians, fill your hearts with joy"), but much altered, and "Es ist das Heil uns kommen her" ("Salvation now is come to us"). The melody of the eleventh Psalm, "Salvum me fac," &c., is likewise in the first edition of Luther, as the psalm is yet found in German choral books. The songs in that collection, "Ach Gott von Himmel sieh" ("O God from Heaven look"), "Es spricht der Unweisen Mund wol" ("The lips of fools will speak"), and "Aus tiefer Noth schrey ich zu dir" ("I call to Thee in deep distress"), must be sung to this same melody of the eleventh Psalm. After Luther's first edition, the number of hymns increased yearly, because he not only wrote thirty more songs for the collection, but other divines did the same. The first edition of the enlarged hymn-book was edited by George Rhau, Joh. Walther, and Babst, in Leipsic, also some later editions, Dresden in 1593, Pommern, 1593, and Eissleben, 1598. Luther was equally fond of figurate descant, which he endeavoured also to promote in the church. This appears from a printed collection of motets, with a preface by him which well deserves to be made public in some musical periodical work. The title is, "Symphoniæ jucundæ 4 vocum, seu Motettæ 52, cum præfatione Mart. Lutheri," Wittenberg, 1538. In the fourth year of the Leipz. Mus. Zeit., p. 497, is to be found an arrangement of Luther's interesting thoughts on music and science in general; also his remarkable letter to Ludu Seufel, translated from the Latin into German.

J. A. Maresch, born in Bohemia in 1719, was the inventor of the hunting music performed on horns, which has been brought to such perfection in Russia. These horns were all of different lengths and curvatures, each of them meant to produce only a single tone. To execute the most simple piece of harmony, or even a melody, at least twenty musicians are necessary; but the execution is not complete without at least forty performers, often many more being employed. Each of them had only to think of his single tone and to blow it in precise time, and with a force and shading proper to give effect to the passage. This music more resembles the sound of a large organ than any other instrument. In a calm and fine night, it has often been distinctly heard at above four English miles distant.

Marie Martin Martel, Viscomte de Marin, of the family of the Marini, some of which were doges of the republic of Genoa, was born at Saint Jean de Luz, near Bayonne, in 1769. He learned music from his father from the early age of four, and at seven composed a sonata for the piano. He studied the harp under Hosbruker, and it is generally acknowledged that he was soon without an equal on that instrument.

Digitized by Google

RICHARD WAGNER.

(From the "Times.")

The long dream of Richard Wagner's life seems now on the point of being realized. When, some thirty years ago, he produced Rienzi at Dresden, where, through the influence, it is said, chiefly of Meyerbeer, he had been appointed Kapellmeister, he simply gave birth to a showy and pompous reflection of the style of that early friend and model. This was before the Communication to his Friends, which forms an introduction to the published poems of Der Fliegende Holländer, Tannhäuser, and Lohengrin—before, according to his own confession, Wagner became "a poet;" before he had laid down the theory which attributed the want of emotional impulse in "the present" to a prevalent zeal for the "monumental;" and, in his famous treatise, Das Kunstwerk der Zukunft, explained to his friends that the true artist could only unfold himself in a purely dramatic sense in conformity to the possible life of the "future." He, thereupon, had recourse to the mythos as his medium of expression; and the result appeared successively in the three above-named works. Not absolutely satisfied, however, with these, at least in regard to their alliance with music, Wagner strove more fully to exemplify his doctrine by the aid of still remoter myths, and the outcome of this new endeavour appeared in Tristan und Isolde (or Iseult, the "Belle Isonde" of our own Mort d'Arthur), Rheingold, and the trilogy of the Nibelungen. These, the last offspring of Wagner's genius, were imagined and developed in so unaccustomed and colossal a form that the difficulty of getting them represented in accordance with his preconceived notions seemed at first insurmountable. Wagner was well aware of the fact, though not by any means dismayed. How incessantly, and with what astonishing energy, he has written and laboured for the accomplishment of an object upon the attainment of which he believed, and believes, conscientiously no doubt, depends the resuscitation of German art, in the shape through which alone, he protests, it ought to be exhibited, we need hardly say. His own literary works, backed up by those of his many enthusiastic disciples, have for a long period absorbed the attention of the reading musical public. Not to pay heed to them was barely possible, their vigorous eloquence and acuteness of investigation being in a great measure irresistible. A more uncompromising and self-satisfied preacher than Wagner could scarcely be cited from the records of art-controversy, or a stauncher and more resolute set of followers than those who advocate his cause. Whatever arguments may be brought forward in antagonism to his one fixed idea, it cannot be denied that he has succeeded in fascinating and winning a large number of earnest thinkers, who preach Wagnerism as an art-religion, and stand by him resolutely for weal or for woe. These proselytes, it should be understood, thoroughly acquainted with his revolutionary projects and his habitually emphatic manner of supporting them, insist upon Wagner, the whole Wagner, and nothing but Wagner. As obstinate as their master, they are wise in their consistency; for, to accept Wagner by halves, or, indeed, with any special reservation, would be equivalent to not accepting him at all. He, in fact, tolerates no modification in his theory, no variation in his method of carrying it out, regarding it (to employ the quaint phrase of Shelley, in Julian and Maddalo) as "refutation-tight." He has told us in his preface to the Ring der Nibelungen that the German operatic theatre, as it exists and has existed, is "the worst public institute"—a branch of art that has hitherto degraded instead of elevating. The purifying and converting power of his Lohengrin, he adds, referring to its first performance in Vienna, produced an entire revulsion of taste, and emboldened Herr Eckert, the conductor ("a man of artistic mind") to revive serious works which had long disappeared before the enervated judgment of the public. Nevertheless, according to Edward Hanslick, the well-known Viennese critic, the "serious works" which immediately followed Lohengrin, as novelties, were simply the Reine Topaz (Massé), the Rose of Castile (Balfe), Diana von Solonge (Duke Ernest), the Trovatore, and Rigoletto. Whether Lohengrin this year in London exercised the same influence with which Wagner credits it at Vienna has yet to be proved. The work was successful beyond dispute, but its success in no way damaged the popularity of operas by other composers—from Mozart to Rossini and Auber, from Beethoven to Donizetti and Bellini. Nor can we understand why, because Lohengrin raised a certain degree of excitement, that it should act thus prejudicially on art-works of a very different calibre.

But to leave speculative digression: as has already been suggested, the realization of Wagner's poetic and artistic dream seems near at hand; that is, in so far as a series of model performances, aided by advantages not very likely to be of frequent occurrence, may help towards it. Tristan und Isolde, which, by the way, was composed ibetween the second and third parts of the Nibelungen—an episode as t were—had already been tried and found practicable; and this notwithstanding the formidable difficulties which, except under unusually favourable circumstances, must always militate against a perfect representation of the drama and a perfect execution of the music. But now comes the Ring of the Nibelungen, "a dramatic festival play," (Buhnen Festspiel) "for three days and a preliminary evening.'' This extraordinary production, as the same Hanslick, with a slight touch of exaggeration, says, "holds the same position relatively to Lohengrin as the Falls of Niagara to a glass of water." A performance of the Ring der Nibelungen, on the grandest scale, is to come off in the summer of 1876 at the new theatre which the composer, with assiduous perseverance, has contrived to get erected at Bayreuth, where, with a view, it may be surmised, to the eventful occasion, he has for some time taken up his abode and built himself a house. The preparatory rehearsals—preparatory because it is understood that the months of June and July next year will be exclusively devoted to rehearsals of the work in its integrity—have been going on at Bayreuth, under Wagner's immediate supervision, since the middle of last month. The Ring der Nibelungen consists of a so-called "trilogy," ushered in (descending from great things to small) by a "prologue," like Donizetti's Lucrezia Borgia. Unlike Lucrezia Borgia, however, the Ring exacts four days in performance, being divided into four plays, or dramas, the one growing sequently out of the other. The ancient Germanic legend, derived from the Icelandic "Sagas," and known to those versed in literary lore as the Nibelungenlied, was a theme only possible to a bold and original thinker, to a man of inventive genius, and to a true-born poet. Even the fiercest opponents of his musical theories, who stand up for music as an independent art, and protest against the dogmatic assertion in Oper und Drama that "music is a woman" ("Die Musik ist ein Weib"), and, therefore, dependent upon man ("the poet"), will hardly question the fact that Richard Wagner is all these. Many of his sincerest admirers declare that his poetical dramas want no music to complete them—that, in fact, they are complete in themselves; and for this dictum, if not ample justification, at least a fair show of reason may be adduced. It might also be suggested that the "Weib," when, by espousing the poet, she fulfils the object of her existence, becomes somewhat garrulous, often noisy, occasionally a veritable Xantippe, if the quantity and quality of the music with which Wagner illustrates his dramas be taken into consideration. Thus much admitted, however, the Nibelungenring, after the manner in which he has handled the subject, is a creation standing apart from ordinary art work. Here the rules laid down by Wagner as those by which the future destinies of the operatic drama should and must be guided are adhered to with uncompromising severity. To select excerpts, with the object of making stock in trade of this or that especial passage, is out of the power of the most experienced manufacturer of "variations," &c., for the pianoforte or any other instrument. We must take the whole, or leave it untouched. The four parts of which the drama is composed are alike safe from depredations of the kind. Rheingold (the preamble), the Walküre, Siegfried, and Götterdämmerung are one and all of a piece. Of this any amateur or musician may convince himself by a perusal of the vocal scores with pianoforte accompaniment, which are now published and accessible. True, Wagner carries out "to the bitter end" his avowed disdain for the traditional laws of "tone-families," which govern the relations of keys to each other; and this, which to many would appear equivalent to doing away with the relations of colours to each other in a sister art, alone suffices to arouse the jealousy of a large majority, who have been used to look at art from quite another point of view. It also encourages a wide-spreading belief that he is a far greater dramatic poet than he is a musician. On the other hand, the nature of his themes, and his peculiar way of developing them, are such that Wagner may put forward a more or less reasonable plea on his own behalf. According to a zealous disciple, he has selected, for his modern art work, these legends, wrapped in clouds of darkness, inasmuch as they represent "the pure symbol of primeval forces, while we are the compounds of successive generations." This, nevertheless, in one who avowedly aims at pourtraying, through dramatic agency, the probable life of the "future" appears somewhat inexplicable. Admitting that the "present," apart from the "monumental," is chiefly "fashion," sham, and barrenness; that everything achieved up to this time is more or less faulty, the greater portion worse than faulty: how can Wagner, who holds that with the advance of time and change of epochs we have become worse and worse, reckon upon his cherished "future" for better things—and these brought about materially through the scenic apparition, accompanied by unearthly music of the gods, demi-gods, goddesses, gnomes, and heroes of a mystic past? Is he a prophet? One would be inclined to think so.

Digitized by Google

THE FELIX MENDELSSOHN-BARTHOLDY MEMORIAL.

The Association founded in 1868 for the purpose of erecting a Monument to Felix Mendelssohn-Bartholdy, in Leipsic, have determined to resume their operations, which were interrupted by the war and other circumstances. They now begin by informing the public that, for the object in view, the sum total of 6051 marks has been subscribed up to the present time. This amount, which at interest has gradually increased to 8700 marks, is invested in the four per cent. Preference Shares of the Leipsic Dresden Railway Loan of 1866. Moreover, the Leipsic Concert Committee, as far back as the 11th March 1868, in grateful acknowledgment of the important services rendered by Felix Mendelssohn-Bartholdy to the institution of the Gewandhaus Concerts and to the cause of music generally in Leipsic, voted a capital of 3000 Marks for the Monument, binding themselves to pay the Association this sum together with the interest therefrom accruing, "as soon as the Monument was taken in hand." Thus, at the present moment, there are about 12,600 marks available for the project. Since, however, this is not sufficient for the erection of a Monument worthy of, and corresponding to, the importance of so great a composer, the undersigned Association hereby once more call upon all Friends, Admirers, and Pupils of Felix Mendelssohn-Bartholdy, to assist the project by subscriptions, and other suitable means. All Concert-Societies and Vocal Associations, in Germany and abroad, are especially requested to get up performances for the above purpose, and forward the receipts to the Association.

The special list of the subscriptions already received may be seen on application to the treasurer of the Association, Herr Alderman Raymund Härtel, (of the firm of Breitkopf and Härtel), in this town, and it is requested that all further contributions to the Monument may be forwarded to that gentleman.

THE ASSOCIATION FOR THE ERECTION OF A MENDELSSOHN MONUMENT IN LEIPSIC.

Leipsic, July, 1875.

THE third and last of the subscription concerts, arranged by Mr W. Haynes, was held, by kind permission of the Rev. A. Faber, in the large hall at the College, Malvern. The programme included three songs by Mr E. Lloyd. He was encored in two of them. He also took part in a duet with Miss Katherine Poyntz. Mdme Thaddeus Wells (piano) and Mr Nicholson (flute) played two duets. Mr Nicholson played a flute obbligato with one of Mdme Thaddeus Wells's songs. Signor Federici sang well, both in his solos and in the concerted pieces. The other vocalists, Miss Katherine Poyntz and Miss Alice Fairman did good service in the harmonized pieces. Mr A. C. Nicholson was conductor and pianist.

BERLIN.

(From a Correspondent.)

One of the novelties this season at the Royal Operahouse is to be Tristan und Isolde. During his recent visit to Bayreuth Herr von Hülsen, the Intendant-General, requested Herr Wagner to conduct the first performance himself, and Herr Wagner promised that he would do so. It is to be hoped that the members of the Hofcapelle of his Majesty, Wilhelm, King of Prussia and Emperor of Germany, are less recalcitrant and more sensible than their colleagues, the members of the orchestra at the Grand Opera, Paris, who recently refused to follow the beat of M. Gounod's bâton, when one of that gentleman's works was performed for the benefit of the Inondés. But there is not much fear. The German instrumentalists are made of different stuff to their French brethren in sweet sounds, and, if they were not, Prussian discipline extends beyond the barrack-yard and parade-ground.

Apropos of Bayreuth, Herr Niemann has left that now celebrated town rather sooner than was expected. He has been here since the 1st inst., though his Urlaub, or leave of absence, does not expire until September the 1st. "But how about the rehearsals of the Ring der Nibelungen?" the reader will naturally enquire. To this I make answer that the rehearsals must take care of themselves, as far as Herr Niemann is concerned. He packed up his trunks and was off at a moment's notice, having previously sent back his part. The cause of his abrupt exodus is said to be a misunderstanding with Mad. Wagner. Who will replace him? At present this is not known, but some vocal Marcus Curtius will no doubt fling himself into the gap. It will be interesting to read what Herr Wagner says in his next "Communication" to his "Friends," and the public at large, regarding the fugitive tenor.

Herr Taglioni, Royal ballet director, will celebrate, on the 4th of next November, the fiftieth anniversary of his connection with the Royal Operahouse. There are to be grand doings in honour of the event. Talking of anniversaries reminds me of one kept on the 3rd of this month, by Herr G. Reichardt, who is at present a resident here, to celebrate the day on which, half a century ago, his setting of Arndt's verses beginning: "Was ist das deutsche Vaterland?" was sung for the first time. A military band played a number of pieces under his window, early in the morning, while congratulations, oral and written, succeeded each other all day. The Liedertafel of Hanover sent the Anniversarian—allow me to coin a much needed word—a beautifully written diploma of honorary membership.

At Kroll's Theater Herr Nachbaur has added the character of Masaniello in Auber's opera of La Muette, to the other characters sustained by him during his present engagement. I have not been able to see him in the part, but all the persons who have spoken to me on the subject, and the majority of the papers, praise him highly. The Echo, however, is of a different opinion, which it expresses thus:

"Herr Nachbaur, Royal Bavarian Chamber Singer, was the Masaniello. We must repeat what we have already said, namely: that, on this occasion, he does not come up to his great reputation, since he has scarcely appeared once without being indisposed. Whether the enthusiastic notices of the critics in other parts of Germany, concerning the natural gifts of Herr Nachbaur, and what he did, were formerly justified, is a question we will not attempt to decide. Leaving his singing entirely out of consideration, we do not like the coarse realism with which he incarnates the character of Masaniello, so different from the ideality with which Theodor Formes, an artist in many respects never to be forgotten, raised, when in his prime, with perfect æsthetic and dramatic propriety, the folk's hero above his actual social sphere. Such a mode of conceiving and carrying out the part is altogether foreign to the Bavarian singer, in whom we can praise only the decorational sharpness of the outlines with which he sketches and then fills in the part. We may add that the tone-colour of his powerful voice agrees with the plump reality of his impersonation. His pronunciation of the text was exemplary; his intonation not undeserving blame; and his manner of singing naturalistic rather than artistic."

Variety, they say, is charming, but the observations of the Echo may, perhaps, when compared with the utterances of the other papers, strike Herr Nachbaur as an exception to this apothegm.

BARCELONA.—I Promessi Sposi, by Sig. Ponchielli, is announced for the 26th inst., at the Novedades.

Digitized by Google

Anna Bishop.

(From the "Daily Evening Post.")

"England," said Mendelssohn, sententiously, "has given three great singers to Italy, Clara Novello, Catherine Hayes, and Anna Bishop." The writer, then a wee lad—for this was in those old days of the early "forties," when gold had not been found in California, and the first of the pioneers had not started for the new El Dorado—pricked up his ear and catching the amiable great man by the elbow, some minutes afterward, when the guests were gone, and no one left in the room but the musician, the piano, and the then innocent individual who pens these lines, said, "Who is Anna Bishop? Miss Hayes I heard when I was in Ireland, and mamma took me to hear Clara Novello in Sappho, a long time ago, but I have not heard Anna Bishop," and the musician, the Gentlest and most kind of men, a child at heart himself, and a lover of children to his dying day, sat at his piano, and in mock recitative, with full chords (where the hyphens come hereafter), said: "Anna Bishop is the great composer's 'pretty Jane'—that is, his wife—and if you are good you shall hear her in Tancredi." The impatient hearer was contented with the promise, but he was fated not to hear Madam in Tancredi for years, not, in fact, until he was familiar with every note of her wonderful voice in everything else that she did sing. They were a grand trio—women with the staunch, lasting English physique, plus the glorious Italian training, a combination that makes extraordinary singers. These three upheld their supremacy when there was no lack of prima-donnas, and when the singers who now command

One thousand dollars per night would have had to be content with that per month. The first, Clara Novello, belonged to a family who were all talented, all good, and all devoted to the cause of artistic truth. Her eldest sister, Mary Cowden Clarke, is the author of the Concordance to Shakspere, and the editor of the best literary edition of the poet's works known to the world—that published by Appleton & Co., of New York, in 1863. Clara Novello had a noble voice, rich, smooth, velvety, and perfectly trained. She was hardly impassioned enough for opera, but just fervent enough for oratorio; her style was intensely devotional and her singing of "I know that my Redeemer liveth" was like the rapt expression of a saint's faith. She retired finally in 1860, being then barely 40 years of age, and in the fullest possession of all her glorious powers. Poor Catherine Hayes, who died prematurely in 1862, at the early age of thirty-six, had travelled the world over, and had carried her sweet voice and innocent manner unchanged through all triumphs and trials. She was so excessively nervous that she seldom did herself real justice, for the least contretemps would make her quite unfit to tread the stage, and though invariably mistress of her part, and of her unequalled voice, she felt any displeasure that was expressed concerning her fellow artists as keenly as if she had been fated to be hissed, which indeed she never was. She was possessed of a singularly pure, light soprano voice, and of a refined dramatic style that rendered her the best exponent of her day of such characters as Lucia and Amina, and probably of the present day also; for, in spite of the writer's penchant for the exquisite Lucia of Nilsson, the first notes of the lovely solo where the Scottish beauty awaits her lover, brings back the memory of twenty-five years ago, and of a slender figure with pale face and hair of fair gold, whose melting tones brought silence among even the gabblers of Fope' Alley, as the lounge under the pit boxes of the old Italian opera used to be called. Ah! how distant those times seem now.

Clara Novello

is living among the Palaces of Florence, star of a society that numbered once amongst its bright galaxy the Brownings, Landor, and others great in poesy. Catherine Hayes has "gone over to the majority," and sleeps in Kensal Green, and Anna Bishop remains the last of that great school of vocalists which began with Storace nearly a hundred years ago. Oh, the memories that come with that neat figure as it trips on to the stage! The recollections of triumphs won when Grisi and Viardot, Alboni and Cruvelli, Lind and Persiani were acknowledged queens of song! Of tales of adventure and travel, of peril by flood and field, of wreck, robbery and danger! Of all these and more survived and conquered, until admiration of pluck and endurance grows until it would almost forgive vocal deficiencies did they exist.

Madam Anna Bishop's Singing is a thing to be watched and studied. The secret of her success is in her method. No voice, however naturally beautiful, can last if it be badly trained or badly managed, and if any ambitious young lady wishes to preserve her voice for a whole lifetime, she must do as Madam Bishop does; that is, open her mouth and let the sound come clear from the larynx, without affectation or hindrance. Even Madam's companions hardly appreciate this truth, and Mr Gottschalk, especially, keeps his magnificent voice rumbling in the back of his throat, or in the region of his palate, being apparently afraid to let his mouth look wider than a teaspoon. Madam has been singing in public ever since 1837, and her method is as good now as it was then. Her voice is a little tired. She probably overtaxes herself, but otherwise there is no change since these twenty years. Dejazet, who is seventy-seven years of age, still sings as well as she ever did, though her voice is thin; and so, if she choose to remain on the stage so long, will Anna Bishop. Madam was born in 1814, and married in 1831 Sir Henry Bishop, composer of "The Chough and Crow," "Tramp Chorus," "Pretty Jane," "Pilgrim of Love," "Home, Sweet Home," and countless glees, songs, and ballads. In 1837 she began her public appearances at the provincial musical festivals in England. In 1845 she reigned supreme as an opera queen; in 1848 she first tried her luck in America, and now, after

Five-and-twenty Years of Travel and good fortune, she elects to begin her farewell trip here. Her mezzo-voce singing is still superb; her upper notes clear, sweet, and resonant; her scales and shakes brilliant and facile, and her figure, gestures, attitudes and expression exactly, precisely, and entirely like what they were when first she made her bow in America. If this be really what we hope it is not—her farewell trip—we can only counsel every one who wishes to know what good singing is to go and hear her.

A PASTORAL.

A little rill beneath my feet,
An oak on either side me,
The setting sun, in golden sheet,
Just showed a path to guide me.

A vista opening 'tween the trees,
Where lambs did sportive play,
The murmuring hum of laden bees,
The scent of new-mown hay.

The honeysuckle, eglantine,
The sweet clematis flower,
Together here did all combine
To make this sweetest bower.

I laid me down beside the brook,
And watched the rippling bubbles,
My thoughts from out the world I took,
Its cares and all its troubles.

The brook seemed thus a thought to shape,
As ever on and gliding,
The wavelets seemed a voice to make,
As if they would be chiding.

Oh, busy town! they seemed to say,
Far from your noise and "hum"
I wander on in sportive play,
While to the sea I run.

Through park and meadow on I go;
My time it passes gaily;
Neither fast nor yet too slow,
My music making daily.

O learn a lesson, mortals, do!
Waste not your time in strife;
Be only to yourselves but true,
And learn the music of my life.

I. G.

THE BRIGHTON ROYAL AQUARIUM.—At the afternoon concert on Saturday last Miss Maudsley sang "It was a dream" and "The Erl King," and also joined Signor Adelma-Wilrington in the duet, "Una notte a Venezia." Signor Adelma-Wilrington sang "The Shades of Evening" and "Vive tu te ne sconguiro." Further variety was afforded by some solos on the violin by Mr J. Niedzielski, and on the piano by Signor Romano; while, under Mr Reyloff's skilful conductorship, the band of the establishment contributed its full share to the pleasures of the concert. In the evening the same artistes again appeared, and gained successes equal to those of the afternoon. Every evening this week, and yesterday afternoon, Mdme Pettit has been achieving fresh laurels by her skilful use of the charming soprano voice with which she is gifted. Her songs, too, have been judiciously chosen, and, altogether, her engagement must be pronounced a success.—Brighton Gazette, Thursday, 12th August.

Digitized by Google

THE AMERICAN REVIVALISTS.

(Concluded from page 550.)

Surely the wisest and ablest religious teacher among us need not be above inquiring into the causes of the success (call it "success in the low sense," if he please) of these two, in most senses, untaught men? It may sound well to say that large congregations are not the great end of preaching, as undoubtedly they are not, but a congregation of some kind is the first preliminary of preaching; you must have people to preach to, and, granted other conditions, the larger the congregation the better, we should say. There is much in the proceedings which must ever be abhorrent to the feeling of many persons distinguished at once for piety and refinement of taste. There will not long be much sympathy, we hope, on this side of the Atlantic with several of the circumstances of this Revivalism. We must censure alike the theatrical act of sinners standing up to be viewed at once by the saints and by the greater sinners who have not arrived at the point of exhibiting themselves as reprobates; those sudden conversions; and those (to our view) most obnoxious "Inquiry Rooms," at the doors of which stand smirking men, asking the outgoing people if "Christ is precious to them" (we heard one such man ask this very question of two or three little girls, who knew no more what he meant than if he had spoken Greek). Nor do we reprobate less the scattering about broadcast of the photographs of the Revivalists. It is hard, indeed, to know on what ground a man like Mr Moody can allow this to pass without stern reproof, especially when he preaches of the meek Moses, and remembers that of the Great Master we have no acknowledged portrait. Whatever may be said to the contrary, the photographs have been used as advertisements on a large scale, and with an effect altogether unhealthy. Mr Moody ought to give this up, as a sin of pride into which he has unwittingly fallen. There is much, we say, to condemn in these services, much that, as time goes on, even the most ardent admirers of the Revivalists among reasonable people will condemn. Perhaps before Mr Moody and his friend reach home a reaction will have set in to the extent of a disapproval of much in their manner of teaching. It will come to be remembered that the preacher, even when most fervid, laid less stress on purity of life, on "holiness before the Lord," on that grand duty which some think embodies all others, the duty of Sacrifice, upon honesty, upon integrity, than upon some charm he finds in such words as "Come unto Me," &c. We do not mean that Mr Moody does not hold up and exemplify these Christian virtues. He does the former, and may do the latter. We do say that the effect of his teaching is to push the Christian virtues to the background, that all attention may be directed to his central fact that "faith in Christ can be had this moment," and "can this moment save the worst sinner" and make of him a saint. Mr Moody's friends will not dispute this. They do not want, any more than the old Covenanters wanted, "Mere morality sermons." It is pleasant to them to feel, as Cromwell is said (after much struggling) to have felt at last, that, "once in grace, it is impossible to fall away." "I know that I was in grace once," the dying hero is reported to have said. Bunyan, however, had greater difficulty than our Revivalists. He had Bulls of Bashan, and worse bulls, to fight before the question was settled for him; and so will it be while men remain on earth. Let us do Mr Moody the justice here to admit, and we admit it with pleasure, that, so far as we can see, he has owed little to the "terrors of the law." The gospel he preaches is one of "glad tidings." His Christ is "waiting to be gracious." His theme in the main is the boundless compassion of the Saviour, not the terror of hell. It will, however, be for religious teachers themselves to draw a moral from what they have seen, and, after they have disapproved much, we think they will find much to learn. There cannot be a doubt that the Revivalists have scattered truths where truths are few and falsehoods powerful. It is an error to say that they have not reached the lower strata of the life of London and of our large towns generally. It is no opinion, but a fact that they have done so. Can we bring ourselves actually to say that harm has been done, if depraved men or women, rich or poor, have been led even to think of a higher life? The men have gone into all manner of places, have invited the rich, have pleaded with the poor, have blundered as to ticket arrangements, and have made "the right and the wrong" to blend in a unity which, as a fact in human life, may be either approved or disapproved, contemned or criticized, but which cannot be ignored. We hope Mr Moody will not become vain of what he has done, and of his large meetings and his great numbers of supporters. If he escape that, he may yet (he is quite a young man) do much good. Faith and singleness of purpose can never be other than of value. But to be fêted and caressed is to face a greater danger than that of being told to give up all attempts to make a speech. Mr Moody has overcome the second, the lesser danger; but when we look at his photographs in the shop windows and hear of his confident assertions, we are not at all sure that he is likely to escape the first, the greater. We hope he will learn in time that much of what he says would not stand any test of criticism. He classes as sin much that is innocent, and as saints many who would hardly make a heaven upon earth. But, on the other hand, and looking at the movement as a whole, if he can bring people, whether from crowded alleys or elsewhere to live useful lives, we, at all events, should not care to say him nay.

—o—

JOHN HULLAH SPEAKS.*

(Concluded from page 550.)

The difficulties of the musical instructors in the training colleges arising from the want of preparatory training of students are, as I have already stated, great. They are largely increased from another cause—the varieties of ways in which those having any musical skill on entry have been trained. I have been surprised to find that the teachers have in some cases allowed students to continue practising on methods not approved by themselves or sanctioned by the college authorities. It would be hard to say whether such a course of proceeding was likely to be more injurious to the music of a training school, as throwing difficulty in the way of the teacher, or to its morale, as fostering conceit in the pupils. Whatever be the method of instruction in a training college, the students should be required during their term of studentship to adopt it; first for the sake of discipline, which the student surely must conform to before he can enforce; and, secondly, because the method which the teacher thinks the best is the best for him, simply because he believes in it and is most familiar with it.

The results of my individual examinations of students in practical skill are exhibited in an appendix.

I am unwilling to bring this report to an end without some reference to a matter inseparably, though indirectly, connected with it—the inspection of the work for which students in training colleges are continually in preparation, the teaching of music in elementary schools. It is well ascertained that there is hardly a school in Great Britain wherein singing, of some kind, does not now "form part of the course of instruction"—evidence, at least, of the estimate of the subject on the part of school managers, as a means of moral discipline. That your Lordships concur in this estimate has been recently and markedly shown in the New Code, wherein the grant for musical instruction is made contingent on singing being "satisfactorily taught"—a condition which will assuredly be heartily welcomed by all interested in the subject.

Hitherto, singing "by ear" has been accepted as "singing," and the preparation of twelve songs as "teaching singing." It is to be hoped that this obviously provisional, and for a time inevitable, condition of things will soon be brought to an end. Whatever its value as "a means of moral discipline," singing "by ear," regarded from a musical point of view, is simply worthless. That the possession of ninety-nine songs got "by ear," will not enable the possessor to add another to the number by any independent effort of his own is obvious. The process of learning them in this way adds nothing to the power of the learner. It is absolutely sterile, and ends with itself. On the other hand, the least skill in reading music, and the least acquaintance with musical science—and some of both may be given to every child who remains even a year at school—might easily, with subsequent opportunity, be developed, and has often been developed into a means of innocent and even ennobling recreation.

* Report, for the year 1874, by John Hullah, Esq., Inspector of Music, on the examination in music of the students of training colleges in Great Britain.

Digitized by Google

The natives of some parts of Great Britain—e.g., of Lancashire, the West Riding of Yorkshire, and South Wales—have shown that musical skill and science are not unattainable by those whose means and whose leisure are alike limited. What is even more satisfactory, is the fact that this skill is, as a rule, brought to bear on the noblest music—the concerted music of Handel, Haydn, Mozart, Mendelssohn—uniformly illustrative of and connected with the noblest themes.

Teaching songs "by ear," whatever it may be, is not teaching music. On the contrary, it is a serious hindrance to doing so, both as respects scholars and school. As respects the former, experience shows that those who have been longest in the habit of singing by ear are the slowest to apply themselves to singing by note; while, as respects the latter, the preparation thus of any considerable number of songs, absorbing, as it often will, the whole time available for music in a given school, leaves none for dealing with the subject thoroughly.

I very earnestly and respectfully pray your Lordships to take into consideration the pressing and increasing need there is for the inspection of such teaching—not of songs, but—of music as is already carried on in many elementary schools, and which, if recognized, would soon make its way into many more. The machinery available for such inspection is already considerable. By turning it to account for the application of some uniform practical tests, like those to be applied next Christmas to the candidates for admission to training colleges, a fair estimate would be arrived at of what is being done for music in elementary schools throughout the country, and a stimulus be given to the subject which would prove of inestimable value to the people.

I have the honour to be, &c., JOHN HULLAH.

To the Right Honourable
The Lords of the Committee of Council on Education.

MUSIC AT BOULOGNE-SUR-MER.*

(From a Correspondent.)

The concert given at the Etablissement on Friday by Sinico, Demeric-Lablache, Campobello, and Bettini, was, of course, a great success. That it was so is a fact; but a rumour had been abroad that these great artists were so "used up" by their efforts during the London season, that it would be a great extra effort on their part to please the fastidious and critical public of Boulogne-sur-Mer. They gave a second concert on Sunday, at the same building, in the afternoon, which was well attended. It would be useless for me to say anything about the singing of these well-known artists or of the well-known morceaux they selected to delight their crowded audiences on each occasion. Suffice it only to add that it was a great treat for the Boulonnais to hear well-known pieces given by such artists, who are better known in other towns than Boulogne-sur-Mer. Mdlle Boulanger has played once at the Etablissement, and received great applause for her performance of a difficult fantasia on airs from La Juive. This really talented and young violinist seems to have made great progress since last year; and I trust she may meet with as much applause when she appears in London—I hear, she soon will at the Covent Garden Concerts—as she has already here. She gives a concert here on the 16th inst., which I am sure will be well attended.

The season begins to make visitors of every sort and kind flock to our shores. One can judge so by the crowded audiences at the theatre to listen to such operas as La Favorite, Les Huguenots, Faust (three representations), Le Barbier, Trouvère, Guillaume Tell, which have been played during the last fortnight to crowded houses. M. Lemaître seems happier in his mind, in consequence, and is sanguine of the success he well deserves. Of his artists, I would mention with special praise Mdlle Nelly, who is now quite at home among us, and is a most useful and graceful member of his troupe. The Barbier went especially well, thanks to her acting, and that of M. Benaben, who undertook the title rôle. He is not unknown to us, having sung here four years ago, and also for a short time last year. He is a good actor, as well as an accurate singer—combined necessary acquirements for this rôle. M. Charelli also, as Almaviva, gave entire satisfaction. Mdme Soustelle, in Le Trouvère, was excellent; being a forte chanteuse, she played the part, and sang the music allotted to the character of Azucena, with force and ability. Her impersonation of Marguerite in Faust left something to be desired.

The concerts at the Etablissement Kioske attract crowds from 8 to 9 p.m. three times a week. M. Lefebure, the able conductor, seems to have improved his band this year, and he himself has composed several eccentric pieces, which are generally given at the end of the programme. One is an especial favourite; it is entitled Le Polka du Bébé, and consists of an ordinary polka, into which are introduced, at intervals, those charming (?) cries of an infant, so well known to good husbands about 3 a.m., and to neighbours all day long, when possibly a little administration of a small doze of Dill-water and patting on the back, or Mr ———'s soothing-syrup would do more good than anything else. Whether they hire a real live infant for the occasion, hide it in the orchestra, and pinch it when required to speak, or whether the reed instrumentalists perform on their reeds without their instruments, at proper times, I do not know.

The Skating Rink is finished, and soon the band of the Société Musicale will perform three times a week, in a newly-erected kioske. I dare say the favourite air will be the celebrated valse from La Fille de Mdme Angot, "Tournez Tournez," which will encourage the patineurs to cut figures of 3 and 8, and otherwise display their agility. So great is the attraction of the Rink, that a new French verb has been created, and universally adopted: "Rinker"—"Je rinke, Tu rinkes, Il rinke, Nous rinkous," &c. A song àpropos, "Voulez-vous rinker, Mdlle?" is said to be soon forthcoming, arranged to a well-known old tune alluding to Terpsichorian performances.

A Monster Fête took place at the Tintilleries Gardens on Sunday evening last, at which some thousands of people assisted, including many of our compatriots. It was very brilliant and amusing.

Prospective events:—the Patti Concert, on Monday, Aug. 9th, at the Etablissement. At the theatre, La Fille du Regiment, on Saturday; La Reine de Chypre in rehearsal; Maillart's Dragons de Villars to morrow.

First verse of song alluded to, wet from the press, and "copyright:"—

"Who rocked me in his arms to sleep?
And walked the room awake to keep?
Although my mother's sleep was deep—
My father."

4th August, 1875. X. T. R.

I must write you just a line this week to assure you of the great success of the concert given last night at the Etablissement by Mdlle Carlotta Patti avec le concours de Mdlle Elena Sanz (contralto du San Carlo, de Naples), MM. Theodore Ritter et Alexandre Batta. Mdlle Patti sang with even more than her usual good taste. Her sweet rendering of the songs and parts she took in duos electrified the crowd of Boulonnais who came to hear her. M. Theodore Ritter also made a great impression, and elicited hearty applause for his excellent performances on the pianoforte. I need hardly add that both these artists had several recalls and encores. Mdlle Sanz, whose fine contralto voice told well in our beautiful temple dedicated to the Muses, and M. Batta's executions on the violoncello, contributed much to the success of the evening.

10*th August*, 1875. X. T. R.

MAD. WAGNER AND HERR NIEMANN.

(Extract from a private Letter.)

. . . . . Mad. Cosimo, wife of R. Wagner, has had a difference with Herr Niemann, the tenor, and Herr Betz. She insisted on correcting these artists and ordering them about the stage. The former declared he would not obey anyone save the maestro. As Mad. Cosimo still persevered in giving her objectionable commands, Herr Niemann left the stage, went to his hotel, packed up his trunks, and started for Berlin. There has been a quarrel, also, with the costumier, who said to Herr Wagner: "You will have to take the costumes in hand yourself, for I will not make them, if I am continually interfered with." As he was continually interfered with, he likewise left, and Herr R. Wagner is, for the moment, his own costumier.

HALLE.—The Singakademie, assisted by Mdlle Krienitz, from Gotha, lately gave a very successful performance of the oratorio of Belshazzar, by Halle's illustrious son, Handel.

* Through press of matter, the above letter from our esteemed correspondent was unavoidably "crowded out" last week.

Digitized by Google

NOTICE.

To ADVERTISERS.—The Office of the MUSICAL WORLD is at Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & CO.'S, 244, Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street (First Floor). It is requested that Advertisements may be sent not later than Thursday. Payment on delivery.

The Musical World,

LONDON, SATURDAY, AUGUST 21, 1875.

UP to a period not only within the memory of the present generation, but within the memory of the very juvenile section of that generation, Bayreuth was not a place known to the general public. But it has, so to speak, now awoke and found itself famous. Not long since it was by no means unusual to meet with persons beyond the magic pale of the Royal Geographical Society, though in very good society for all that, entertaining a vague, dreamy notion that Bayreuth was in the East, and once bombarded by Admiral Sir Charles Napier, or some other British admiral. Bayreuth, however, is quickly but surely emerging from obscurity. Ere this globe of ours has again reached the place it now occupies in the Ecliptic, those enterprising guides of modern travel, Messrs Cook and Gaze, will have taken Bayreuth under their patronage, and then it will bask in the glare of concentrated publicity. And to whom is all this due? To Herr Richard Wagner, who has selected a site in the old town for the erection of his Grand-National-Festival-Stage-Play Theatre, where his Nibelungen-Trilogy, with a Preparatory Evening, is to be enacted next August.

Twelve years ago, we published a translation of an article upon the subject, from the talented pen of Dr Hanslick. The article might almost have been written yesterday. As we think it may interest our Readers, we subjoin it in extenso:—

RICHARD WAGNER'S NIBELUNGEN.*

A short time since, when, referring to the ceremony of laying the first stone of the new Operahouse here, in Vienna, we suggested that there should be an extraordinary performance supported by the most eminent singers to be found all over Germany, we did not suspect that we agreed in this pet idea of ours with no less a personage than Richard Wagner. That gentleman, like ourselves, urges a grand congress of all the vocal celebrities of Germany, though, it is true, he and we have a somewhat different object in view; we desire to witness a model performance of the best classical operas, while Wagner, on the other hand, wishes to have such a one of his Nibelungen.

A small book, newly published, and as elegant in its thickness as a book of 443 pages can be, supplies us with detailed information on this head. The book is called Der Ring der Nibelungen; ein Buhnen-Festspiel für drei Tage und einen Vorabend, von Richard Wagner. (The Ring of the Nibelungen; a Grand Stage Play for three Days and a Preparatory Evening, by Richard Wagner.) Published by J. J. Weber, Leipsic. An opera which lasts nearly half a week is no everyday matter, and we must therefore feel thankful to the author for himself enlightening the world, by means of a long preface, on so comprehensive a production. The four pieces composing this huge dramatic series are entitled: 1. Das Rheingold; 2. Die Walküre; 3. Siegfried; 4. Götterdämmerung. The music to Das Rheingold (The Rhine Gold) is completed, printed and published; long fragments from the other parts have been performed at Wagner's concerts. We cannot quite understand why, at the end of the preface, Wagner frightens his reader with the assertion that he hardly hopes to have enough leisure and inclination left to finish the composition of the music, for, in the face of this, he has already assured us, in the first page, that he is convinced "of the possibility of a complete musical and dramatic performance of the work, and of the actual success of the undertaking." For this the completion of the music is, at any rate, indispensable, and consequently, we look forward to it with a reassured mind. Let us now see how the author has conceived his work, and how he would like to have it performed. Thank heavens, he says very plainly what he means, so that we cannot anywhere misinterpret his words. Two fundamental truths proudly stalk, side by side, through the preface from beginning to end. Firstly, that everything generally known under the name of "German Opera" is fit only to perish; and secondly, that Wagner's Nibelungenring is an extraordinary work, for the representation of which no trouble and no sacrifice can be too great. Wagner sits enthroned in the preface like the Almighty on the day of Judgment; on his right hand he places the Wagnerian operas, as the sole good ones; on his left, all others, for the sulphurous pit. He calls opera, without more ado, "the worst public art-institute" existing, "An art-institute which deeply compromises and ruins the musical taste of the Germans." "With the *complete stillessness of German opera," he goes on to say, "and the almost grotesque incorrectness of its efforts, we cannot entertain the hope of meeting corporatively at a principal theatre art resources trained to higher tasks than usual; the author who thinks of carrying out, in this most neglected department of public art, anything with a serious purpose and of more than ordinary value, finds nothing to support him except the real talent of individual singers, who, taught, however, in no school, and guided by no style in their performance, are to be found only here and there, seldom—for, on the whole, the talent of the Germans is, in this respect, but insignificant—and completely left to themselves." Consequently, for "something more than ordinary value," like the Nibelungen, there is no other plan available than to collect, at one point, the best singers from all German theatres, to study and perform Wagner's last work.

The extraordinary blessings which must result from such a monster performance for the whole system of the cultivation of music in Germany, are depicted by Wagner with convincing eloquence. In the first place, how advantageous it would be for the artists, "to have for a certain period to occupy themselves only with one thing, and not be interrupted in their studies by any of their usual operatic labours, diverting them therefrom." "The result of this concentration of their mental faculties on one style, and one object is, of itself, not to be estimated highly enough." Nothing can be more obvious. Up to the present time, artists, when studying Wagner's operas, have always been "interrupted" and "diverted," by the interpolation of works by Mozart, Beethoven, Weber, and such-like "usual operatic labours." To sing for a certain period nothing but Wagner's music must necessarily produce all the more salutary effect upon our wretched German vocalists, as this "certain period" would evidently prove a very long period. If the best singers are compelled to take all the trouble in the world for months together to learn by heart the three-act Tristan, it is not in a short time that they will study perfectly an opera of the same style, requiring four nights for its performance. When Wagner praises the artistic advantage attendant on this concentration of all the artists' "mental faculties," he does not go far enough. The physical advantage, also, which the continuous rehearsal and performance of a four-days' opera would have for the vocal powers can be no trifling one. We cannot imagine anything more strengthening and more healthy for a tenor or a prima donna than the act of singing for three successive evenings the part of Siegfried or that of Brunhild. If our singers are at present half killed after only one performance of a Wagnerian work, the sole reason of this is the system hitherto pursued of frittering away their powers by degrees.

Wagner wants a theatre built expressly for his Nibelungen. "It is only in this manner that the scenic and decorative representation could be well and appropriately carried out," while an opportunity would be at last afforded the scene-painter and machinist "of dis-

* Translated from the Neiderrheinische Musik-Zeitung, by J. V. Bridgeman, expressly for the Musical World.

* If it be objected that "stillessness" is not English, we reply, what then? We know it is not English, but it is an equivalent for Herr Wagner's word, "Stillosikeit," which is not German, and for this reason we coined "Stillessness." Indeed, we may as well warn our readers at once that, if they want pure English, they will not find it in our translation of Herr Wagner's prose or verse. To give a faithful version of what proceeds from the pen of the great Prophet of the Future, we are compelled, as everyone acquainted with the German original knows, to indulge only too often in strange neologisms and barbarous phraseology.—TRANSLATOR.

Digitized by Google

playing their art as real art." This second advantage, also, is obvious. When painter and machinist shall have actually executed all the scenic trifles which Wagner wishes to have worked out in the four parts of the Nibelungen, they will have proved their art to be not only "real art," but downright magic. Not one of them can possibly fail to obtain his diploma as "real Royal operatic necromancer."

For the orchestra, too, Wagner has imagined a beneficial measure of reform in his Nibelungen. The "movements of the musicians affect him," it appears, "nearly quite as *woefully as the cords and ropes of the scenery." The "invisibility of the orchestra" constitutes one of the principal advantages of the "theatre constructed especially for the occasion." The proposal must meet with the approval of every reasonable being; to witness the noise of Wagner's opera is indeed "woeful;" the instrumentation hurts the eyes. But now comes the greatest gain of all, advantage No. 4, namely, the impression the Nibelungen opera must produce upon the public. On the latter, who "have hitherto been accustomed to seek a source of thoughtless amusement in the exceedingly doubtful exhibitions of this ambiguous branch of art," there would "dawn a comprehension"† to which they have, up to the present time, been strangers, nay, which has been absolutely impossible. The spectator will now "arrive at the beneficial feeling of the facile activity of a hitherto unknown power of conception, filling him with novel warmth, and illuminating the light by which he plainly perceives things of which he has previously had no suspicion." Wagner here again says rather too little than too much, since it is not the actual Nibelungen performance, but the mere perusal of the "preface" which illuminates lights and displays things of which we have previously had no suspicion. "The effects produced upon the general mass," Wagner goes on to observe in reference to his projected operatic performances, "cannot be estimated too highly." "The assurance has frequently been given to me personally that the fact of listening to an especially good performance of my Lohengrin has produced in an individual a complete revulsion of taste and tendency, and that the then director of the Imperial Operahouse, Vienna, a man of an artistic mind (Herr Eckert), was emboldened by the successful career of this opera to produce, with a chance of also being successful, serious works, of a more significant character than usual, belonging to the department of opera, and which had long disappeared before the enervated taste of the public."

No one will dare to doubt an assertion of Herr Wagner; but yet, for the sake of shameless opponents, it would not have been undesirable for Wagner to have corroborated the second sentence of his Lohengrin apology by a few valid proofs. In our very exact notices we have not been able to discover a single classical opera which had "long disappeared before the enervated taste of the public," and the revival of which in Vienna was, in the most remote degree, connected with Wagner's Lohengrin. Wagner, when praising, with especial reference to Vienna, the purifying and "converting" power of his Lohengrin, meant, perhaps, to say that the influence exerted by that work was immediately apparent in the character of the novelties subsequently produced by Eckert. The novelties produced under that gentleman's direction after Lohengrin (19th August, 1858) were:—La Reine Topaz, by Massé; The Rose of Castile, by Balfe; Diana von Solange, by Duke Ernest; and Il Trovatore, by Verdi; followed immediately after Eckert's retirement, by Rigoletto. There is no documentary evidence to prove any other kind of influence exerted by Lohengrin upon the Vienna repertory. But how does this slight historical error of Wagner vanish before the irrefutable truth of his prophecies! Who, for instance, can doubt that, after an exclusively Nibelungen season, such as is projected by Wagner, "It would be impossible for our performers to fall entirely back into the groove of their former habits," or that the "artistic governing-bodies and artists" who flocked in from all countries must receive an impression which "could not possibly remain completely without influence upon their own subsequent artistic efforts." We should, in fact, arrive most speedily at that happy epoch when all singers would sing Wagnerially; all dramatists write Wagnerially; all composers compose Wagnerially; and all managers manage their theatres Wagnerially. Could there be any sacrifice so great which we would not joyfully make to obtain so universal a blessing! That, indeed, it would not be possible without trouble and expense to erect a new theatre for the Nibelungen, as, likewise, to obtain the best singers and instrumentalists in all Germany, and keep them together until they had studied and performed the four-evening opera, is a fact that Wagner readily admits. But he immediately suggests the means by which these difficulties are to be overcome. He perceives two ways open to him. The first is "an association of monied men and women with a love of art, for the purpose of obtaining the requisite funds." But, with the "petty" sentiments of the Germans, no success is, in Wagner's opinion, to be expected from such an appeal. And why not? It strikes us that the person whose sentiments are here "petty" is the master himself. With the converting power which he says is possessed by his Lohengrin, the number of the "converted" must be even more than sufficient to collect a few hundred thousand florins for a work which holds the same position relatively to Lohengrin that the Falls of Niagara hold to a glass of water! The second way would be for a German Prince to devote to the monster-performance of the Nibelungen the sum "which he has previously applied for the support of the worst public art-institute existing, namely, his operatic theatre, which so deeply compromises and ruins the musical taste of the Germans." "After I had shown him" (the Prince) continues Wagner, "what a most extraordinary influence he would thus be enabled to exert upon the morality of a branch of art which has hitherto degraded us, and what a creation of most peculiarly German art he could advantage, he would put aside the sum devoted to the support of opera in his capital, and, by so doing, found an institution which would gain for him an incalculable influence on German taste in art, on the development of German genius for art, and on the formation of a true and not obscure national spirit, while it would win for his name an undying reputation." This means that the Court of Vienna, Berlin, or Dresden should (for about a year, since no person competent to form an opinion can suppose the projected performance could be got up in a shorter period) close its operahouse and devote the sum usually set aside for the latter to a representation of the Nibelungen. Nothing could be more simple. But we must remind the reader that, according to Wagner's proposal, the best singers are to be collected from all the German theatres, so that the weight of the sacrifice would not rest exclusively upon the shoulders of any one Prince alone. Then again, the average sum a single "German Prince" allows annually for opera could not possibly suffice to build a new Nibelungen theatre, supply the most unheard-of machinery and scenery needed for it, and engage for ten or twelve months all the most eminent artists in Germany. However, this could offer no real difficulty. If the theatres were closed simultaneously in Vienna, Berlin, Munich, Dresden and Stuttgart, for one year, with the pecuniary and artistic resources thus available, Wagner's Nibelungenring might, probably, be produced upon the stage, and the German people would willingly make up their mind not to hear, for the period just named, a note of Gluck, Mozart, Beethoven, Weber, Spohr, Cherubini, or any others of those who have propagated existing opera, which "is so gross an insult to all feeling for music as well as for drama." We are convinced that the only thing which stands in the way of convening the Nibelungen delegates is the non-completion of the Wagnerian score. Fortunately, all Wagner's opera-books are, as everyone knows, perfect dramatic poems even without the music, and can and should without more ado be performed as tragedies by actors. Consequently Richard Wagner has begun by presenting the public with a portion of his Nibelungen, that portion being: "The word, that is to say, most properly speaking, the word, without tone, nay, without sound, but merely the word put forth by types;" he offers: "to book-reading publicity a more dramatic poem, a poetical literary production."

We feel ourselves too weak and unworthy to pronounce an opinion on this wonderful drama. Let the task be reserved for those who are better qualified to execute it.

Were the Bayreuth art-horizon free from clouds, we should say to the young aspirants of both sexes for the honours of the German lyric stage: Study zealously during the next twelve months; be ready by August,

* "Wehsam" in the original. "Woefully" thus employed is Wagnerian for "painfully."—TRANSLATOR.

† The reader is respectfully requested by the victim of a despotic Editor—who threatens the writer of this appeal that he will have the whole of the Nibelungen Anglicised—to refer to the latter part of the note on the word, 'Stillessness."—TRANSLATOR.

Digitized by Google

1876; because, if nothing prevents the Nibelungen performances at Bayreuth, there will then be a grand opening for you. You will all be wanted. To employ the style of Mincing Lane and the parts thereto adjacent: There will be a brisk demand for sopranos and contraltos; tenors will fetch any price; and basses will rule very firm. And all this, thanks to Herr Richard Wagner!

But ——

Herr Niemann, who was to have played one of the principal parts, has already, as they say in German, einen Strich durch die Rechnung gemacht. He has left Bayreuth in a huff. Others may follow his example, and then —— will Der Ring der Nibelungen be performed even in 1876? R. K.

OCCASIONAL NOTES.

SPEAKING of the Ghent Festival, the Leipsic Illustrirte Zeitung informs its readers that among the larger works executed were The Seasons by Haydn and the oratorio of L'Escaut, by——Beethoven! How about M. Peter Benoit?

THE manager of a French provincial theatre lately announced a performance in favour of the sufferers by the late inundations. The receipts were very large, but that manager only handed 20 per cent. of them to the Relief Fund. He evidently believes in the proverb which says that Charity begins at home.

IN the eleventh volume of his Correspondence, published by Lacroix and Co., Paris, M. Proudhon expresses the following opinion concerning the subjects of King Leopold II.:—

"I consider that the atmosphere of Belgium renders the imagination sluggish, but that, at the same time, it develops in the inhabitants an aptitude for music. In a humid atmosphere the human voice is more tuneful and more sonorous; it invites one to sing."

Is M. Proudhon right? Is M. Proudhon wrong? Quien sabe?

A REALLY precious work was lately found at an old bookseller's—that is, a seller of old books—in Florence. It was the first libretto of the very first opera ever written. Previously to writing Euridice, Ottavio Rinuccini wrote, in 1594, Dafne, though it was not till 1600 that Giorgio Marescotti published it in Florence. Both librettos, set to music by Peri, are exceedingly uncommon. The libretto now found is doubly valuable, first, as being so rare, and, secondly, as being mentioned by the Accademia della Crusca.

DURING the composer's last stay in Berlin, one of Wagner's friends, so it is reported, endeavoured to get him a post there. The Musician of the Future was delighted. Meanwhile, he received an invitation from the Baroness von S—— to meet Prince Bismarck at her house. On being introduced to the famous Chancellor, Wagner made a deep bow, and said, "I regret exceedingly that fate has not placed me where I could live with the greatest statesman of the century." "I regret it, too," replied Bismarck; "but, as I have no chance of being summoned to Munich, things must remain unchanged." It is, perhaps, superfluous to add that the Prince is not a Wagnerite.

IN future, Mdlle Ilma de Murska will, no doubt, be more careful in seeing that her dumb favourites are properly secured, before she goes upon the stage. A short time since, she was announced to sing, at a concert in San Francisco, the mad scene from Lucia di Lammermoor. On she came, in the most airy and elegant of summer toilets, and began the air. She was just executing certain staccato passages and chromatic runs, especially calculated to pourtray madness, when her two pet lap-dogs suddenly appeared unsummoned, and, after gambolling about for a short time, ensconced themselves comfortably on her train. The public at first smiled and then laughed outright. At length the lady perceived there was something wrong, and, looking round, caught a glimpse of her two—and too—faithful favourites. Suddenly stopping a series of marvellous shakes, she left the platform, followed by the dogs, who barked joyously as they made their exeunt. After having had them properly secured under lock and key, the fair artist returned, and proceeded to go mad again incontinently.

THE KREUZSCHULE AT OBERAMMERGAU.

While the audacious mystification of the public lately attempted by a strolling company who went about Germany performing what they wanted to palm off as the Oberammergau Passion-Play, was properly prohibited by the authorities in the Protestant capital of the German Empire, the inhabitants of Oberammergau itself, who were not in the remotest degree connected with the speculation just mentioned, have long been busy preparing for another religious theatrical exhibition. They desired to revive the once usual performances of the Kreuzschule, or School of the Cross, a variety of the grand Passion-Play. They were more especially induced to take this step by the present which the King of Bavaria made them, not long ago, of a colossal cross, destined to adorn one of the eminences surrounding the place. In the Kreuzschule the relative importance of the dramatic portion and of the tableaux vivants is the reverse of what it is in the Passionsspiel, or Passion-Play. While, in the latter, the real dramatic action is based upon our Lord's passion, the subject selected for dramatic treatment in the Kreuzschule is taken from the Old Testament. The typical events of the Old Covenant constitute the drama, and the separate acts are illustrated by tableaux vivants pourtraying the Passion. In the last century, the Kreuzschule was usually performed two years before the Passion-Play, properly so called, to which it served as a preparatory course. It was subsequently transferred to the middle of the decennium separating one performance of the Passionsspiel from another. The same rule has been observed in the present instance, the summer of 1875 being selected for the revival. According to the original plan, the performances were to have commenced several weeks ago, but they had to be postponed as the consent of the Government had not arrived for them to take place. Doubts were probably entertained whether the performance of the Kreuzschule would not be an evasion of the legal regulation that the Passionsspiel should not be represented more than once in ten years, since in the Kreuzschule, as in the Passionsspiel, our Saviour is the principal figure, though, it is true, only of the tableaux vivants. At last the first performance, announced to the people of the neighbouring districts as the "grand rehearsal," came off on Sunday, the 11th June. The grand Passion-Play lasts from eight o'clock in the morning till five in the afternoon, but the performances of the Kreuzschule begin at 1 p.m., and do not last longer than an ordinary theatrical representation. The Passion-Play Theatre is contracted for the Kreuzschule to about a quarter of its usual size, so that both the actors and the audience are under cover. The text of the old Kreuzschule, represented for the last time in 1825, has been judiciously altered for the present occasion by the Rev. Herr Deisenberger, formerly priest of the place, who did so much for the Passion-Play.—Berlin Echo.

"WHEN YEARS AGO."*

When, years ago, a happy boy,
Straying on yonder shore,
With what delight, young, awed delight,
I'd list the wild waves roar.
And still the restless waters bound,
And dark their foam and spray,
The same, the same, unchanged in all,
As in my boyhood's day.

But I—ah! what to me is left
Of life's fresh feelings now—
The peaceful mind, the buoyant heart,
The calm, untroubled brow?
What now remains, ah! what remains
Of all I treasured then?
One vanished hope of that long past
Will ne'er revive again.

Ah! happy days, ah! happy days
Of bright, unclouded joy;
Could yon vast sea but tide me back
The feelings of a boy.
Yes, still thy wondrous waters bound,
And still I love their roar;
But never can they charm me back
The dreams I dreamed of yore.

ADA LESTER.

* Copyright.

Digitized by Google

TWO LETTERS FROM BEETHOVEN.*

I.

To Breitkopf and Härtel, Leipsic.

Baden, 23rd September.

For a considerable time past I have been expecting a letter from you, but in vain. On the 1st August, they wrote to me from Leipsic saying you were not in town: since the epoch, however, when I wrote you that fearfully long letter of mine, I have had no answer, yet have one I must. I have not yet been able to forward you the songs forming part of the 2nd Issue, not knowing myself, in consequence of my eagerness for you to get them, which are those I have already sent. Of the 3rd Issue, I have nothing more than the Grand Characteristic Sonata, and the Italian Songs, which are at your service. I am, therefore, impatiently awaiting a satisfactory reply from you, as our post-office is managed quite as badly as in other countries, may I request that you will write, besides my address, the following address on a special envelope. "To be given to Herr von Oliva, at Ofenheim and Herz's, Countrymen's Market-Place," as in summer and in autumn, I am rarely in Vienna, this will be the safest way, I hope soon to receive a few lines from you. Yours very truly,

BEETHOVEN.

The above letter was written in 1810. "The songs forming part of the Second Issue" can be no others than those published in 1811, under Op. 83. The Grand Characteristic Sonata is that bearing the Opus Number 81. The Italian Airs appeared in 1811, as Op. 82.

II.

To C. T. Peters, Leipsic.

My very dear Sir,—I deplore the loss your family has just experienced, and I participate, with all my heart, in your sorrow, may time diminish its bitterness. I beg to inform you, as to what concerns us two, that there left here last Saturday three airs, six bagatelles, and a tattoo, instead of a march, you will forgive me the delay, and I venture to hope you will not accuse me of having committed a bad action deliberately, to-day I confided to the post the two tattooes that were still wanting, and the fourth grand march, it struck me that it would be better for me to send you instead of four marches, one march and three tattooes, the more especially as the latter will do for marches, the heads of the military bands are the best judges of that matter, arrangements, too, may be made for the piano. To what an extent I behave like an artist, you will see by the airs, one of them is accompanied by two clarinett,† a cor, alto, and violoncello, and is sung, either without the piano, with the accompaniment of these instruments, or with the piano and without these instruments. The second air has an accompaniment of two clarinett, of two horns, and of two bassoons, and is sung similarly with an accompaniment of these instruments or of the piano alone, the two airs are with choruses, and the third is an arietta tolerably developed with accompaniment of the piano alone; I hope you are now easy, and I should regret extremely if these delays were imputed to my unwillingness or fault. But the hour, for the post, presses, till Wednesday next I will write to you at greater length about the quartet for piano and violin. I will also write to you about the mass, I beg you, also, with respect to the two trifles which you have received besides, to send the order for 16 fl., as heretofore, to myself, I can send to Herr Meissel, being extremely overburdened with work and still always indisposed, till Wednesday. May Heaven aid you to support your sorrow, who has not suffered similar poignant losses, and who does not like to bewail them?

With all my heart, I embrace you. Yours very truly,

BEETHOVEN.

The airs to which reference is made in the above letter are Op. 121*b*, Op. 122, and the Ariette entitled "The Kiss." Beethoven subsequently modified the instrumentation of Op. 121. The six Trifles bear the No. 126 in the master's works. Of the three Tattooes, one only has been engraved. The March (in D major) is still in existence, arranged for the piano and two hands, and was published at Cappi and Czerny's, Vienna. As for the Piano Quartet and other works mentioned in the letter, it is not known what has become of them. Let all possessors of manuscripts bear this fact in mind.

According to a manuscript note of Peters, this letter was written in 1823.

* From the Guide Musical. † Sic.

These letters are translated as literally as possible, and the punctuation is exactly the same as in the German. It is to be regretted that we cannot reproduce in the translation the orthographic faults of the original, for there are such faults, and very picturesque ones into the bargain.

A MODEST MUSICIAN.

(To the Editor of "The Daily Telegraph.")

SIR,—There has been great indignation aroused by the notice of my violin recital, which appeared in yours of yesterday. As an old stager, I can afford to laugh at such criticism; however, it is not so with the general public. The entire paragraph is an Artistic Libel, intended to be personally and commercially injurious to me! Now, as a man and an artist, who can count his friends and admirers by the thousands, I am not going to submit tamely and bow my head! Your reporter confesses to a "Serious feeling of disappointment" at the performance. Now, Mr Editor, how can that be? Lord Harrington, a great connaisseur! was present, and expressed himself most thouroughly delighted with the entire programme! Mr Cocks, the well-known music publisher was present, and said that since Paganini he had heard nothing like it. A gentleman who had known and heard Paganini also stated that in his opinion I was a GREATER artist!! And last, and certainly HIGHEST of all, Mr G. A. Macfarren!! the English Beethoven, was present!! and said, that for thirty years!! he had not enjoyed such a wonderful musical treat!!! Now, this will be sufficient at present to show you that The Telegraph has made a mistake. It can be proved by great witnesses that I am a most extraordinary and finished artist on the violin. I can bring all the people I have mentioned to "back up," this statement in a Law Court. Sir Julius Benedict, Mons. Rivière, and such men would come forward and assert that I can hold my own with any violinist that ever lived!! So!! make me an amende honorable! in your paper either to-morrow (Saturday) or Monday! and we will shake hands over the matter! if not! my friends have promised to subscribe £500 for me at twenty-four hours' notice! to proceed against you, when overwhelming evidence could be brought to show that the paragraph in question was not a fair criticism. I would employ the best man in the country to carry the matter through; and, as The Telegraph has such immense influence, I would lay my damages at 5,000 pounds. I am an old newspaper hand myself—so I imagine perhaps that you may not even have seen the notice—look it over!! and do as I ask you—for it would be ridiculous to let the papers suffer for the stupid spleen of the scurvy animal that you sent to disgrace us both!—Yours truly,

PAGANINI REDIVIVUS.

[The writer treats the whole matter so exhaustively that we cannot refuse him the advantage of publicity.—ED. D. T.]

SWEET NIGHTINGALE.*

Sweet nightingale, thy soothing notes awaken
Thoughts of the past, when life was young and fair,
When light, as blossom on the greensward shaken,
The heart was buoyant and undimmed by care;
Untravelled then the world which some find hollow,
Unseen the future by the curious eye,
Unknown the path of life that one would follow,
Unfelt the anguish, and unheard the sigh.

In those young days the golden hues of morning
O'er life's bright scenes their radiant glory cast;
No gloomy sibyl with prophetic warning
Foretold that those bright visions would not last;
But as we watch the evening shadows banish
The last faint glimmer of expiring day:
So one by one our earthly prospects vanish,
And while we strive to grasp them melt away.

But, bird, thou singest when all else is dreary,
And charm'st the woodlands through night's darksome hours;
Thy voice is welcome to the spirit weary,
Yea, welcome art thou as the breath of flowers.
My bird of birds, sing on, and I will listen,
Will steal the hours that should be spent in sleep;—
What though thy numbers make the eyelids glisten,
My bird of beauty, eyes were made to weep!

* Copyright.

Digitized by Google

PARIS SCRAPS.

(From our Parisian Scrapper.)

The weather here has been very hot, but not hot enough to prevent the Grand Opera from being full every time its doors are open. What matters it that the thermometer stands at ever so many degrees in the shade, and that the regular patrons of the establishment are doing the sea-side, or otherwise spending their villeggiatura? There are always plenty of Provincials and Foreigners eager to take their place. Among the Foreigners who have lately visited the theatre over which M. Halanzier presides, and with which, for the present, at least, Sig. Verdi respectfully declines having anything to do, may be mentioned a very illustrious specimen of the class. This is no less a personage than his Imperial Highness the Russian Grand-Duke and Grand-Admiral, rolled into one, Constantine. Like a naval officer related to him by marriage, in the British service, he is a great lover and patron of music. He went to hear Les Huguenots, and was present, two days afterwards, in M. Halanzier's private box, to witness a performance of M. Ambroise Thomas's Hamlet. Mdlle de Reszké, who studied at the Imperial Conservatory of Music, St Petersburgh, was the Ophelia, and Mdlle Bloch, the Queen. His Imperial Highness was by no means chary of his applause.

The list of works to be produced at the Opera this season includes M. Mermet's Jeanne d'Arc. Don Juan is to be given at the end of September, or, at any rate, early in October, with Mdlle Krauss as Donna Anna. The other parts will be cast thus: Don Juan, M. Faure; Leporello, M. Gailhard; Don Ottavio, M. Vergnet; Mazetto, M. Caron; the Commendatore, M. Bataille; Donna Elvira, Mad. Gueymard; and Zerlina, Mad. Carvalho.

The truth of the proverb: There is many a slip between the cup and the lip, has just received a striking illustration. The Ventadour, which was to have served as a new home for the Théâtre-Lyrique, is lost to M. Arsène Houssaye, who appeared almost certain of it. It has been secured by M. Léon Escudier, who will open it in April with Verdi's Aida, interpreted by Signore Stolz, Waldmann, Signori Masini, Pandolfini, and Medini. Sig. Muzio is named as conductor.

M. Arsène Houssaye is naturally somewhat discouraged by the turn affairs have taken, but he has not, as some papers assert, sent in his resignation as manager, because he has never been officially appointed to the post.

> "The Spanish fleet thou canst not see, because > It is not yet in sight."

He cannot resign what he never possessed. So sure, however, was he of mounting the managerial throne, and obtaining the Ventadour, that he lately had Gluck's Armide put in rehearsal at the Conservatory, the use of which was kindly granted him by the proper authorities. He had, also, engaged Mr Henry Litolff as his conductor. What he will now do is not known.

Some persons have proposed that he should rent the Ventadour till it opens next April, with Aida. By that time, they say, a new Théâtre-Lyrique might be erected by a joint-stock company on some convenient spot between the Place de la Concorde and the Champs Elysées. So it might, but it would first be necessary to catch your limited liability company, and six months are scarcely sufficient to do this and build a first class theatre as well.

The artists of Paris came forward nobly in aid of the sufferers by the late inundations, and still continue their kindly exertions. Among the many performances recently given by them was one at the Théâtre de la Porte-Saint-Martin. One of the attractions in the programme was a tombola, or lottery, the first prize being a fine picture, "Sous Bois," for which the painter, Diaz, had refused 6,000 francs. It was gained by a gentleman of the ouvrier persuasion, who was up in the gallery, and was pleased to express himself gratified at his good fortune. A collection made in the house produced 440 francs, 70 centimes. Altogether the receipts amounted to between three and four thousand francs.

The Dramatic Authors' Society have just published their balance sheet for the year 1874-75. It appears that the total amount received was 2,304,526 francs. Of this sum, Paris contributed, 1,652,014; the suburbs (Banlieue), 68,547; the Departments and the Colonies, 488,681; Cafés-Concerts, 31,136; and Foreign Countries, 64,198 francs. During the last ten years, Paris yielded 13,000,000 francs, while 4,000,000 only were derived from the Departments, the Colonies, and abroad. We are also informed that France possesses 542 theatres. Of these, 37 belong to Paris (intra muros); 13 to Paris (extra muros); 31 to Cafés-Chantants; and 461 to the Departments and the Colonies.

—o—

THE STAGE AND THE PRESS AT BERLIN IN DAYS GONE BY.*

On the 26th April, 1803, in the name of himself and the actors under him, Iffland presented to Count Haugwitz, Privy Councillor and Minister of State, a petition, begging him no longer to allow criticisms on the performances at the Royal National Theatre to appear in the weekly Berlin papers, but only in literary periodicals better suited for them. As a reason for this step, the petitioners mention emphatically the exceedingly one-sided criticisms, full of nothing but personalities, of Spener's Journal, which "is always trying to be witty, but which never instructs—which inflicts great and constantly-increasing injury, not merely on the individual members of the company, but on the art itself, as well as on all zeal displayed for it and all satisfaction taken in it." Nearly every newspaper, the petitioners assert, is a proof of what they say. "We are praised, blamed, made, as a rule, the butt of small jokes, bantered, and rendered ridiculous in the eyes of the entire public, just as it pleases a scribbler, who does nothing but try all he can to see things in a laughable light, and who indulges in petty jokes at our expense. This is the more insulting for us, as the wretched writer cannot disguise the party spirit of one who calculates, lengthens, shortens, or breaks off the standard of judgment governing his criticisms, which embrace and ridicule everything, in obedience to certain notorious relations, considerations, and specious reasons. Praised to day, blamed to-morrow; overwhelmed with small witticisms, which degenerate among the lower classes into nicknames, and exaggerations of all sorts, we at last do not know how to behave, how to get up and play our parts," etc.

To this a reply was returned on the 13th May, to the effect that the entire prohibition of theatrical criticisms in the Berlin papers was incompatible with the freedom of the Press existing in Prussia. But, for the satisfaction of the complaining actors, the publishers of newspapers were expressly enjoined, on pain of official reproof, to refrain for the future in their notices from all insulting attacks, bitter remarks, and degrading observations.

How, a few years previously, a theatrical manager handled a critic who did not please him may be seen from the following letter:—

"Mister (I cannot call you: Professor) Newspaper-Scribe!—In Voss's Paper of to-day, you have attacked me, my management, and my Theatre in the most unworthy and the most unjustifiable manner. I am too old to allow myself to be annoyed by an atrabilious being like you. I have suffered too long as a martyr for art. Who first produced Minna von Barnhelm? Döbelin! Who first brought out, and in manuscript too, Emilia Galotti? Döbelin, in Brunswick. Who was the German who had the courage to reproduce Nathan der Weise, in a manner worthy of such a work, with new scenery and dresses? The same D——, whom you have so unjustifiably attacked.

"For Heaven's sake, learn to know me better, or you will go too far, and then cease to write notices and play the criticaster.

"May God —— me, if you obtain the free pass which young Herr Voss tried to get for you from me.

"Farewell, and reform. Such is the wish of one whom you have mortally insulted, and whom you have endeavoured to rob of his bread. "DOEBELIN."

"Berlin, the 16th November, 1784."

FLORENCE.—Sig. Emanuele Biletta's opera, Rosa di Firenze, already successfully represented in Paris, will be produced this autumn at the Teatro Principe Umberto.

MAYENCE.—The National Hungarian Orchestra, under the direction of M. Josef Barres, have been giving concerts in the "Bierhalle zum Heiligen Geiste," formerly a church dating from the 15th century. Their repertory comprises 150 pieces, all which they play without music. After leaving here, they will visit Frankfort, Leipsic, Dresden, Berlin, Cologne, Brussels, Paris, and London. They will reach the British capital about December.

---

* From the Theater-Chronik.

Digitized by Google

WAIFS.

What wine is both food and drink?—Port with a crust.

Mad. Marie Sass has given two concerts at the Casino, Vichy.

Mr and Mrs Jewson are sojourning in Ramsgate for the season.

Nash & Nash, husband and wife, are attorneys in Columbia, U.S.

Miss Ada Swanborough has been suffering from rheumatism in the eye, which produces paralysis of the lid.

The Brussels Museum of Pictures, which had long been closed for repairs, is now again opened to the public.

Mr Alexander Reichardt arrived in London, from Boulogne, on Monday last, to attend the funeral of a friend.

Mr Harvey, the celebrated solo trombone player, has been appointed principal trombonist for next season at the Italian Opera.

Mdlle Samary, who gained the grand prize for comedy at the Conservatoire of Paris this year, has been engaged at the Théâtre-Français.

Three Orange, Conn., Irishmen stretched out in line measure 18 feet 9 inches, an average of 6 feet 3 inches each. The tallest wears No. 14 boots.

Mad. Parmentier (Teresa Milanollo) took part in a concert given at Bourbonne-les-Bains, for the benefit of the sufferers by the inundations in France.

M. Couturier, who gained the prize for operatic singing at the last examination at the Conservatory of Music, has just been engaged at the Grand Opera, Paris.

Amongst the objects of antique art lately discovered in Crete is a statue of Roman sculpture, believed to represent Metellus, the Roman general who conquered the island.

It was on the 25th Aug., 1830, that Auber's Muette de Portici was first produced at Brussels. The performance tended very considerably to precipitate the Belgian Revolution.

Portraits of Hannah More, George Stephenson, and Jeremy Bentham have been added to the National Portrait Gallery. They were bought at the recent sale of Mr Pickersgill's pictures.

The vacancy in the organistship of St Saviour's Church, Falkner Square, Liverpool, caused by the death of Mr Osmond, has been filled by the appointment of Mr James J. Monk to the post.

No one can deny that ladies now-a-days appear extremely musical, whatever they may be in reality, for they are frequently seen with their dresses covered with bugles and a brass band round their waist.

The French journals state that the band of the Life Guards are going to Paris in a few days, and, under the conduct of Mr Godfrey, the composer of the Mabel waltz, will give two concerts in aid of the inundated.

Buffalo Bill, as an aristocratic Southerner, created fearful havoc among the ladies of Long Branch. When his true character was discovered, the dear creatures looked right through him without seeing him.

A lady correspondent, who assumes to know how boys ought to be trained, writes as follows: "Oh, mothers! hunt out the soft, tender, genial side of your boys' nature." Mothers often do, with an old shoe.

There is not a proclamation of Napoleon to his soldiers in which glory is not mentioned, and duty forgotten; there is not an order of Wellington to his troops in which duty is not inculcated, nor one in which glory is alluded to.

Mr Barlow is at work upon the engraving of Mr Sant's portrait of the Queen and some of her children. His plate of John Phillip's great picture "La Gloria"—a Spanish wake—is, says the Academy, now in a somewhat advanced state.

Judge Fullerton, we learn from an American paper, is fishing on his Virginia estate. The American editor's moral on the fact is, that Judge Fullerton's lines are laid in pleasanter places than they were, even if the fish are not as big as formerly.

Sir Julius Benedict will open, with the Royal Italian Opera Company, the new Southminster Theatre at Edinburgh. The troupe will comprise Mdlles Albani and Thalberg. It is expected that the new theatre will be ready for opening early in November.

Pasquale Altavilla, the celebrated Neapolitan Pulcinella, or Punchinello, died on the 3rd inst., aged sixty-one. He was not only a most excellent low comedian, but also a most fertile comic author. In his work entitled Italie est-elle la Terre des Morts? and also in the article contributed by him to the Tour du Monde, M. Marc Monnier speaks of Altavilla with genuine enthusiasm, and does not hesitate comparing him to Molière himself.

The four largest libraries in the United States are:—The library of Congress, containing 274,000 volumes; the Boston public library, 274,000; Harvard University library, 198,000; and the New York Mercantile Library, of 155,120 volumes.

The proposal of M. Falguière, the sculptor, for the assistance of his unfortunate fellow-citizens at Toulouse, has been liberally responded to. Over 400 works of art, signed by some of the most eminent names, will shortly be offered to public competition.

Verdi's Vêpres Siciliennes appears to have become very popular lately. It has been given within the last few months at several large French provincial theatres; it has re-appeared on the Italian stage; and it was revived, the other day, at Barcelona, with Signora Mantilla, Signori Ugolini and Parboni in the principal parts.

The death of Samuel Priestly Taylor, one of the oldest organists in America, is reported in the New York Sun. Mr Taylor was born at London in 1779, and was the eldest son of the Rev. James Taylor, a well-known clergyman in the latter part of the eighteenth century. He was taught music by Whittaker, and Dr Russell of Oxford, and, before he was seven years old, sang in the choir in Surrey Chapel.

Lanigan, of the New York World, in a poem on a plumber, depicts the hero's mildest act thus:

"Would," said he, as he drew the bill,
"My father were alive!
10lb. of solder at 10c.,
$1.75."

Schubert's Mass in G, which has been for some time in rehearsal by the Choral Society meeting at 48, Oxford Street, Liverpool, under the conductorship of Mr James J. Monk, has given place to Mendelssohn's Lorely; and it is said the choristers intend shortly to take in hand Sullivan's humorous cantata, Trial by Jury, and Hiles's cantata, The Crusaders. The axiom anent variety is evidently respected by the society.

HAMILTON'S DIORAMA.—To any one desirous of an autumn tour, on strictly economical principles, an opportunity is presented of a "run to America and back," by the Messrs Hamilton, at present located at St James's Hall. Many of the pleasantest spots "over the water" are reproduced in a most artistic manner; and, under the genial guidance of Mr Arthur Matthison, a pleasant and profitable trip may be enjoyed, without the discomforts of a sea voyage.

Sig. Boucheron, Chapel Master of the Cathedral, Milan, proposes publishing the catalogue of all the musical works preserved in the archives of the sacred edifice. The catalogue will form a sort of musical history of the metropolitan chapel of Milan, a history which deserves to be written, as was that of the Chapel of St Mark, Venice, by Sig. Francesco Caffi. There is no want of documents, and the sacred compositions of the musicians who, from the time of Franchino Gafforio, have directed the music of the Milan Cathedral, are full of interest. At Milan, nearly all these musicians have been Italians, while, in most of the other musical towns throughout the Peninsula, during the 15th and the 16th century, recourse was generally had to the Flemings.

The people of Florence are preparing for the celebration of the 400th anniversary of the birth of their illustrious citizen, Michael Angelo Buonarotti. The festival is to be held on the 12th, 13th, and 14th of next month. On Sunday, the 12th, the citizens and rural inhabitants of Tuscany, by their representatives, will meet in the cloisters of Santa Croce to do homage at the tomb of the great artist; after which a visit will be paid to the house of Buonarotti, where he was born, followed by the inauguration of a monument in a square to bear his name. On Monday will take place the inauguration of the tribune of the "David," and the exhibition of the works of Michael Angelo in the Academy of Fine Arts, when a concert, vocal and instrumental, will be given. On Tuesday the fête will close with a meeting of Academicians in the Senate hall.

The late ex-Emperor, Ferdinand of Austria, taking shelter one day, in a Styrian farmer's, from a storm, found the farmer's wife just putting on the table a good dinner of dumplings, made of rather coarse flour. The Emperor was invited to partake, which he not only did heartily, to the horror of his attendants, but insisted ever afterwards on having similar dumplings of coarse flour brought up to his own table. His physicians prohibited this, and he was told he should not and could not have these dumplings, to which he replied that in that case the machinery of State must stand still, for nothing should be done until he received his dumplings. Again, at a council of Ministers, when a long report of great moment was being read, the Emperor, who was sitting at an open window, appeared to give the most earnest attention for hours, but, when the minister had at length finished, he only said, "Four hundred and twenty-five fiacres, and one hundred and eighty omnibuses have passed through the Hofburg during the last two hours."

Digitized by Google

All the places for the concert to be given at Dieppe by Mad. Adelina Patti for the benefit of the sufferers by the inundations in Normandy, and for the widows of Dieppe sailors, have been taken in advance, at 20 francs each.

In reference to the estate of the late Thomas Worrallo Kelly, of 33, Beaumont Street, Portland Square, who died a widower without any known relations, Mr E. Baggallay applied in the Court of Probate a short time since, for letters of administration to be granted to the Solicitor of the Treasury. The will was dated the 25th of September, 1849, and the codicil, which was duly attested, was written on the same paper, and bears date October, 1857. It was as follows:—

"I, having neither kith nor kin,
Bequeath the whole I've named herein
To Harriet, my dearest wife,
To have and hold as hers for life;
While in good health and sound in mind,
This codicil I've undersigned.
"Thos. Worrallo Kelly."

His Lordship granted the letters of administration to Mr Stephenson, as asked.

Alexandra Palace.—The great feature of next week's attractions will be the fête on Monday next, in aid of the Railway Provident Societies, which will be supported by excursions of railway officials and servants from all parts of the country. The entertainments on this occasion will be numerous and varied. The Jackley troupe of Russian gymnasts, Mackney, Howard Paul, the Payne family, the Clown Cricketers, and others, will contribute to the day's enjoyment. Wrestling, sword exercise, and boxing will be practised in the circus; Denayrouze's diving apparatus, and Holden's marionettes will tempt many of the visitors; in the afternoon their will be a balloon ascent, and in the evening a grand display of fireworks. Music will receive its due share of attention, and, in the course of two grand concerts, several military bands will reinforce those of the company. On Tuesday and Wednesday the Metropolitan Floral Society will hold a show of autumn cut flowers; and, on Tuesday, Mr Oxenford's popular drama, The Two Orphans, will be performed in the theatre, with the principal artists in their original characters. On Thursday, Maccabe, the popular ventriloquist, mimic, and character delineator, will give his new entertainment. On Saturday Offenbach's opera bouffe, La Fille de Madame Angot, will be performed by the company of the Opéra Comique, and in the evening, in consequence of its great success, the selection from the works of Handel, by the Company's band and choir, will be repeated. There will also be a final performance of Jullien's "British Army Quadrille," with the aid of the bands of the household troops.

One matter is deserving of notice. We have no less than six newspapers in London devoted exclusively to the musical art, and though some of these papers take weekly extracts from the Figaro upon all sorts of subjects, not one has dared to mention a word for the poor players. The reason is obvious; they live as the sycophants of high-placed masters, they dare not offend the conductors. This fact discloses a state of things perfectly stupendous; a general newspaper is compelled to take up a brief which the leaders of musical opinion, from motives of false fear, timidly refuse. Musical men can draw their own conclusions from this. If from motives of fear or of pecuniary loss, these so-called musical journals pass over a crying evil, their opinions are of no weight whatever. I would gladly refer a case, for the full discussion of which I have not sufficient space, to a paper devoted to the art, but these precious journals are afraid. For myself, I have a rich reward. While I am received coldly by the people I have exposed, while I am subjected to petty snubs and insults from high quarters, every letter I receive, thanking me for my outspokenness in the cause of British and foreign artists, every communication I have from the poor starving instrumentalists, is more precious to me and more gratifying to an honourable man than all the little favours which the "guinea-pigs" can offer. I have no fears from them; they in their turn have to answer to a higher tribunal than their sweet selves and their much cherished pockets; they stand in virtuous awe of public opinion as expressed by the outspoken utterances of a free and independent press, and, if their employés be but firm, must eventually give way. When they do so, it will be better for themselves and for the art the cause of which they are never weary of vaunting.

Dr Hermann Härtel.—We regret to state that this gentleman died, after long suffering, on the 4th inst. For forty years he had been a partner in the renowned musical publishing firm of Breitkopf and Härtel, in Leipsic. His brother, Herr Raimund Härtel, is now the sole surviving representative of the firm, the Breitkopf family having been long extinct.

VIENNA.

The Imperial Operahouse re-opened on the 8th inst., with Don Juan. Among the novelties to be produced this season is Herr Kretschmar's opera, Die Folkunger.

A statement has been going the round of the press, to the effect that Herr Jauner, manager of the Imperial Operahouse, has concluded with Wagner an engagement by which the composer undertakes to put all his operas on the stage himself, and conduct them personally. For this purpose he will come here on the 1st of November next, and reside here some months every succeeding year. Instead of a fixed remuneration of 1,500 or 2,000 florins, which he would otherwise have received, he will be entitled to 7 per cent. of the receipts arising from each performance, and this per centage will be continued to his heirs. It is not said whether the total or the net receipts are meant, nor for how long the per centage is to be enjoyed by his legatees.

M. Offenbach has written to say that the score of the new operetta, Die Kreolin, will soon be finished, and that the management of the Theater an der Wien may rely on having it by the commencement of autumn. It will not, however, be produced before December, for which month Mdlle Geistinger, who plays the heroine, is engaged.

Herr Adalbert Michna, a member of the orchestra at the Imperial Operahouse, has had a two-act comic opera from his pen accepted by the manager of the German Landes-Theater, Prague. Its title is Der Hauptmann von der Schaarwache. It is founded on the French piece known as Le Chevalier du Guet, which has figured in the London playbills as The Captain of the Watch. Herr Michna is the second member of the orchestra at the Imperial Operahouse whose work will have been first produced at Prague, Das Landhaus in Meudon, by his colleague, Herr Kässmeyer, having originally been brought out there some years ago.

Mannheim.—Herr Karl Freund, formerly a popular operatic bass singer, died a short time since, in the public Lunatic Asylum. The body was given to the Heidelberg School of Anatomy for dissection.

Advertisements.

THE VOICE & SINGING.

BY

ADOLFO FERRARI.

THE FORMATION AND CULTIVATION OF THE VOICE FOR SINGING.

Price 12s.

London: Duncan Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"The remarkable qualities of this book are the author's freedom from conventional trammels, the strong sense of his opinions, and the novelty yet evident soundness of his precepts; his work has consequently come into general use as a manual of vocal instruction."—Daily News.

THE ART OF SINGING.

New Edition, Revised and Improved, of

A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR

THE VOICE.

By T. A. WALLWORTH.

A Method as used by the Author in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which he has cultivated the voices of his Pupils, Mdlle Alwina Valleria, Miss Lucy Franklein, and other successful Vocalists.

Full Music Size, price 7s.

London: Hammond & Co. (late Jullien), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his Residence, 36, Wimpole Street.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE,

For invigorating and enriching the voice, and removing affections o the throat.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE is universally acknowledged to be the most valuable remedy for sore throat, hoarseness and relaxed throat. It should always be taken before singing or reciting, as it strengthens the vocal organs. It is most extensively prescribed by the faculty for the throat and voice. Dr Lewis of Basingstoke says he finds them most efficacious, and in Dr Copland's Dictionary of Practical Medicine (Longman & Co.), they are strongly recommended at pages 872 and 1492. They are used by all the greatest vocalists and orators in Europe, and have been established over a quarter of a century. Testimonials from Patti, Grisi, Lablache, Santley, &c. Sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d. by all Chemists throughout the United Kingdom and the Colonies.

Digitized by Google

NEW SONGS.

THE LAST FAREWELL.

New Song by J. L. HATTON.

Sung by Mdlle ALBANI, at the Floral Hall Concerts, with the greatest possible success. In C and E. Price 4s.

NEW SONGS BY ARTHUR SULLIVAN.

SWEETHEARTS. In A♭ and B♭. Sung by E. LLOYD 4s
THE JUDGE'S SONG. From Trial by Jury. Sung by Mr. FRED SULLIVAN 4s
TENDER AND TRUE. In E♭ and F. Sung by EDITH WYNNE 4s
THE DISTANT SHORE. In E♭, F, and G 4s
THOU ART WEARY. In D minor and F minor ... 4s
THOU'RT PASSING HENCE... ... ... 4s

NEW SONGS BY VIRGINIA GABRIEL.

CLOVELLY. Words from "Songs for Sailors." Dedicated to H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh... ... 4s
SOWING AND REAPING. Sacred Song 3s
SHE CAME LIKE A DREAM. Sung by Madame ENRIQUEZ 3s
THE WHITE DOVE 2s 6d

NEW SONGS BY FAVOURITE COMPOSERS.

YES AND NO ... ... LOUISA GRAY 3s
MY LADYE ... ... AMY COMPTON 3s
IN THE TWILIGHT HOURS „ 3s
ELSIE'S DREAM ... JOSEPH L. ROECKEL 3s
BESIDE THE SEA ... „ „ 3s
SUMMER WINDS ... „ „ 3s
SO LONG AGO... ... GEORGE BARKER 3s
NINETTE ... ... „ „ 3s
THE ENTREATY The Lady CLARENCE PAGET 3s
GLAMOUR ... „ „ 3s
SWEET LISETTE ... ... J. L. ROECKEL 3s
THE CHILDREN IN THE WOOD „ 3s

CHAPPELL & CO.,
50, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

PRODUCTION OF WAGNER'S 'LOHENGRIN.'

The Books of Airs (in Two Books), arranged for Pianoforte, with ad. lib. accompaniments for Flute, Violin, and Violoncello, by

W. HUTCHINS CALLCOTT

PRICE.

Solos ... ... 5*s. each.*
Duets ... ... 6*s.* „
Accompaniments ... ... 1*s.* „

LONDON:
HUTCHINGS & ROMER,
9, Conduit Street, Regent Street, W.

Digitized by Google

SYDNEY SMITH'S
FOUR NEW PIECES.

"UNDINE."

Played by the Composer at his last recital with unprecedented success.

Price FOUR SHILLINGS.

"CHANT DU SAVOYARD."

ESQUISSE.

Price FOUR SHILLINGS.

"LES DIAMANTS DE LA COURONNE."

FANTASIA ON AUBER'S OPERA.

Price FOUR SHILLINGS.

ROSSINI'S "LA CARITA."

TRANSCRIPTION.

Price FOUR SHILLINGS.

SYDNEY SMITH'S FIVE NEW PIANO DUETS.

DON PASQUALE.	Fantasia on Donizetti's Opera	6s. 0d.
LA DANZA.	Rossini's Celebrated Tarantella	5s. 0d.
GOUNOD'S SERENADE		5s. 0d.
GOUNOD'S OÙ VOULEZ VOUS ALLER?		5s. 0d.
EN ROUTE.	Grand Brilliant Military March	5s. 0d.

LONDON: ASHDOWN & PARRY, HANOVER SQUARE, W.

Printed by HENDERSON, RAFF, AND FENTON, at No. 73 & 74, Marylebone Lane, Oxford Street, in the Parish of Marylebone, in the County of Middlesex.
Published by WILLIAM DUNCAN DAVISON, at the Office, 244, Regent Street, Saturday, Aug. 21, 1875.

Digitized by Google

The Musical World.

(REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.)

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST, 20s. PER ANNUM,
Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to DUNCAN DAVISON & CO., 244, Regent Street, London, W.

VOL. 53—No. 35. SATURDAY, AUGUST 28, 1875. PRICE { 4d. Unstamped. 5d. Stamped.

THEATRE ROYAL, COVENT GARDEN.—PROMENADE CONCERTS. Under the direction of Messrs A. and S. GATTI. Every Evening at Eight. The following Artists will appear during the week:—Mdlles Bianchi and Cristino; Messrs Pearson and Federici; Mons. de Swert; Messrs J. H. Young, Hughes, Howard, Reynolds, and the celebrated Composer of Dance Music, Herr Josef Gungl. Band of 100 Performers. Band of the Coldstream Guards. Conductor—Signor ARDITI. Splendid decorations by Dayes and Caney. Roskin's miniature landscape, cascades of real water, &c. Perfect ventilation. Promenade, One Shilling. Manager—Mr JOHN RUSSELL.

PROMENADE CONCERTS, COVENT GARDEN THEATRE. JOSEF GUNG'L, the celebrated Dance Music Composer and Conductor, will appear, for the first time this season, This (SATURDAY) Evening, and conduct his "Amoretten Tanze" and "Dreams on the Ocean" Waltzes, "Marietta Polka," and "Blue Violets Polka-Mazurka." Herr GUNGL'S Compositions are published by A. HAMMOND & Co., 5, Vigo Street, where Catalogues may be had gratis.

"MY SWEETHEART WHEN A BOY."

MR WILFORD MORGAN, having been enthusiastically encored in his popular Ballad, "MY SWEETHEART WHEN A BOY," at the Alexandra Palace, on Saturday last, will sing it there again on the 31st.

"MY SWEETHEART WHEN A BOY."

MR WILFORD MORGAN will sing his popular Song, "MY SWEETHEART WHEN A BOY," and "HOW LONG WILT THOU FORGET ME," at Ramsgate, September 3rd.

MADAME ESTELLE EMRICK (Contralto) has Removed to 27, Percy Street, Bedford Square. Open to ENGAGEMENTS for Concerts, Oratorios, Soirées, &c.

MISS ROSE HERSEE begs that all communications may be sent to her new address—4, Park Village West, Regent's Park, N.W.

MR SHAKESPEARE (Tenor), having returned from Italy, all letters respecting ENGAGEMENTS for Concerts or Oratorios may be addressed to him at Messrs CRAMER & Co.'s, 201, Regent Street, W.

MR PAUL SEMLER (Pianist) begs to announce that he can accept engagements for Balls, Soirées, &c. His repertoire consists of all the celebrated Dance Music of the day, as well as his own compositions. Terms on application, by letter, to be addressed to the care of Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., Foreign Music Warehouse, 244, Regent Street, W.

A FIRST BOOK on the THEORY of MUSIC. By LOUISA GIBSON. Adopted by the Council of the Plymouth High School, and highly recommended by the leading London and Provincial Musicians. "May be safely recommended as an authority."—G. A. MACFARREN, Esq., Principal, R.A.M. "The rules, being clearly expressed, facilitate the task of both professors and pupils."—Sir J. BENEDICT. "I am perfectly charmed with the book, and shall recommend it as a duty."—BENNETT GILBERT, Esq., R.A.M. "I think so highly of it, that I would advise every young student beginning music to study your book."—F. B. JEWSON, Esq., Prof., R.A.M. MOFFATT, PAIGE & Co., 6, Paternoster Buildings, E.C., London.

MUSIC and SINGING.—A Gentleman, with a high-class connection in the North, is desirous, from domestic reasons, to Remove, and is willing to negotiate for the TRANSFER of his Business. A Professor of the Pianoforte, or a Violinist with a thorough knowledge of the Pianoforte, would find it a desirable opening. The highest references required. Address—A.Z., 45, Smith Street, Chelsea, London, S.W.

TO the MUSICAL PROFESSION and AMATEURS, Gratis and Postage Free.—A SELECTED LIST of MUSICAL WORKS, edited, translated, enlarged, arranged, or written by JOHN BISHOP, of Cheltenham, for his Publishers, Messrs ROBERT COCKS & Co., New Burlington Street.

RUBINI'S NEW DANCES FOR THE PIANOFORTE, with finely Illustrated Titles, performed by the Buxton Band, conducted by Mr Julian Adams.

Bonne Nuit Waltz. 4s.
Figaro Quadrille. 4s.
The Polo Quadrille. 4s.
L'Oncle Sam Polka. 3s.
Les Filles d'Albion Waltz. 4s.
Bonne Nuit Waltz for Orchestra, 2s. nett.
Small Orchestra, 1s. 4d. nett.

London: Sole Publishers, ROBERT COCKS & Co., New Burlington Street. Order everywhere.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Under the immediate Patronage of
Her Most Gracious Majesty the QUEEN.
His Royal Highness the Prince of WALES.
Her Royal Highness the Princess of WALES.
His Royal Highness the Duke of EDINBURGH.
Her Royal Highness the Princess CHRISTIAN.
His Royal Highness the Duke of CAMBRIDGE.
Her Royal Highness the Duchess of TECK.
His Serene Highness the Duke of TECK.
and
His Royal Highness the Prince CHRISTIAN.

President—The Right Hon. The Earl of DUDLEY.

Principal—Professor MACFARREN, Mus. D. Cantab.

The MICHAELMAS TERM will Commence on MONDAY, the 20th September, and will Terminate on SATURDAY, the 18th of December. Candidates for admission can be examined at the Institution on Thursday, the 16th September, at Eleven o'clock, and every succeeding Thursday at the same hour.

By Order, JOHN GILL, Secretary.

Royal Academy of Music,
4, Tenterden Street, Hanover Square.

THE LONDON ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

ST. GEORGE'S HALL. Established 1861.

Principal—Professor WYLDE, Mus. Doc. Cantab.

Professors—Sir Julius Benedict (Examiner); Signori Garcia, Schira, and Lablache; Herren Ganz and Henseler; Signori Traventi, Scuderi, and Tartaglioni; Messrs C. K. Salaman and J. Francis Barnett; Herren Lehmeyer, Barth, and Marlois; Messrs J. Barnett, Handel Gear, and Mann; MM. Oberthur and T. H. Wright; Herren Pollitzer and Ludwig; M. Paque.

The Academy is for Amateur as well as Professional Students. The year is divided into Three Terms. The Fee, Five Guineas per Term, includes instruction in three branches of musical education. Students can select their principal teachers from the above list. Those residing at a distance can receive all their lessons on one day in the week.

The Next TERM Commences FRIDAY, Oct. 1. New Students are required to attend for examination on Monday, Sept. 27, or Tuesday, September 28, between the hours of 11 and 4.

Prospectuses at the Office, St George's Hall, Langham Place.

G. R. WILKINSON, Secretary.

Just Published.

TWO SONGS.

"EVENING IN AUTUMN." Words by R. HARE, Esq. .. price 3s.
(Dedicated to Miss E. KNAPTON.)

"WAITED AND WATCHED." Words by ORLANDO WRIGHT price 3s.
(Dedicated to his friend, W. MAYBRICK, Esq.)

Composed by W. F. BANKS.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

THREE SONGS.

"QUEEN OF THE ROSES." Words by WHYTE MELVILLE .. 4s.
(Respectfully inscribed to NELSIE BROOK, Southport.)

"THE HAPPIEST LAND." Words by LONGFELLOW.. .. .. 4s.
(Inscribed to O. MILWARD, Esq., Worcester.)

"AN ANGEL'S SONG." Words by WHYTE MELVILLE .. .. 4s.

Composed by FREDERICK F. ROGERS.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

BRIGHTON CONCERT AGENTS,
PIANOFORTE AND MUSICSELLERS,
LYON & HALL,
WARWICK MANSION.

Digitized by Google

"L'INCONTRO."

VALSE.

Sung by MDLLE CRISTINO

with great success nightly at the Promenade Concerts, Theatre Royal, Covent Garden.

The Music composed by Signor ARDITI.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

WILFORD MORGAN'S SONGS.

HER I LOVE .. .. 4s.
COULD I BUT CALL HER MINE.. .. .. 4s.
MY SWEETHEART WHEN A BOY .. .. 4s.
SWEET EVENING AIR .. .. 4s.
OH! I WOULD BE A BOY AGAIN. Words by ADA LESTER .. 4s.
(N.B.—The above Songs have been sung with distinguished success by Mr WILFORD MORGAN.)
LITTLE BIRDIE, SING TO ME .. .. 4s.
(Sung by Miss EDITH WYNNE.)

ANTHEM.

IF THOU WILT FORGET ME (THE 13TH PSALM) .. .. .. 4s.
(For Tenor or Soprano Solo, with Chorus ad. lib., as sung at the Temple Church. Composed by WILFORD MORGAN.)
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

"MY LADY SLEEPS."

SERENADE FOR VOICE AND PIANO.

By IGNACE GIBSONE.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

"HOME, SWEET HOME."

TRANSCRIBED FOR THE HARP SOLO.

By CHARLES OBERTHUR.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"WITH MOONLIGHT BEAMING."

DUET

For Equal Voices.

The Music Composed and Dedicated to

MISS HEGINBOTHAM and MISS MOWER,

By H. KUSTER.

Price 3s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"DREAM ON,"

SONG,

Words and Music by ERNEST HOUGHTON.

Price 3s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"ALBION AND SCOTIA,"

FANTASIA FOR THE PIANOFORTE,

On "My Love is like the Red Red Rose" and "The Lass of Richmond Hill."

Composed by WILLIAM CRAWFORD.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published,

ESPAGNOLIA.

BOLERO FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

BY

CHARLES OBERTHUR.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Where may be obtained, composed by C. OBERTHUR, "SI DOUX ET CHER," Poésie Musicale pour Piano, prix 3s.

"YESTERDAY."

SONG.

Written by CARIS BROOKE.

Composed by

P. A. PARISS.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Two Sacred Duets (Just Published) by HENRY SMART.

"SUMMER OF THE SILENT HEART,"

AND

"BEYOND THE HILLS,"

SACRED DUETS

For Soprano and Contralto.

Composed by HENRY SMART.

Price 4s. each.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

VOCAL EXERCISES.

Composed by FRANK MORI.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

N.B.—These Vocal Exercises, as taught by FRANK MORI, are invaluable both to Students and Professors.

NEW SONG,

"MID THE SCENTED CLOVER,"

Sung by

Miss EDITH WYNNE.

Composed by

LOUIS DIEHL.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

TWO DUETS

FOR

TWO PERFORMERS ON ONE PIANOFORTE.

No. 1, DUET IN G. No. 2, DUET IN F MINOR.

Price 3s. each.

Composed by HEINRICH STIEHL.

(Op. 13.)

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

NORAH'S MESSAGE.

SUNG BY

MADME ADELINA PATTI

WITH DISTINGUISHED SUCCESS AT

THE FLORAL HALL.

THE POETRY BY

THE LADY JOHN MANNERS.

THE MUSIC BY

SIR JULIUS BENEDICT.

Price 4s.

A new and pretty Irish ballad, abounding in sentiment and feeling, and precisely the kind of thing desired by the mass of amateurs, was most delightfully sung by Mdme Adelina Patti. It is called 'Norah's Message.'"—Morning Advertiser.

LONDON:

DUNCAN DAVISON & CO., 244, REGENT STREET.

Digitized by Google

SINGERS AND SINNERS.

The Very Reverend the Dean of Worcester is a mighty dignitary, and has prevailed over an ancient custom and the social forces which backed it, both of town and county; his cathedral, this year, will not be desecrated by the voices of ungodly singing men and women. Admiration for this divine instinct of knowing the good from the bad, and wonder at the godlike power exercised by him, in this world of doubts, of separating the sheep from the goats, divert the mind from inquiring whence cometh this infallibility. Little recks it whether his reverence inherits it by virtue of apostolical succession, or has secured it, with his twelve hundred a-year deanery, by the grace of the Right Honourable B. Disraeli; in any case the conviction must be general that Mr Dean is right. Singers are ungodly; at any rate from his standpoint.

Singing has never been advanced by terrestrial artists as a saintly profession. True it is poets have dubbed music the divine art; but what vice or folly have not those delightful sycophants decorated or sublimated? When Scripture foils the grim tempter of mankind, the poets may supply him with apt and plausible quotations. Singers have the rare modesty of claiming only worldly merits and rewards. They pretend to form no holy order or religious sect; in fact theological science is utter foolishness to them. They stand in no need of reading the Bible in Hebrew, or the Testament in Greek; nor do they see any absolute necessity of mastering the rudiments of their native tongue. For the practice of their craft they have not to subscribe to any Thirty-Nine Articles, nor to wrestle with the mysteries of the Church Catechism. Although fulsome critics try to establish a relationship between them and the celestial choir, yet they know full well such a claim will not hold good in any court of law, human or divine, and feel perfectly aware that they have nothing more in common with angels than the rest of mankind, excepting the collateral occupation of crying "Hallelujahs."

Between the singers and the public there is a perfect, though tacit, understanding. They acknowledge no other authority than the latter. Kings and princes, nobles and rulers, prelates and clergy, managers and critics, they heed not, if they only bask in the smiles and favours of that bran new shoddy potentate—the Public. The singer's duties to his patron are to amuse, instruct, and edify. The first above all. If the singer be not interesting, though pure as an angel and wise as Solomon, the agreement is broken, and he is dismissed. In feudal times a fool was kept to say words of wisdom through the entertaining medium of folly. In these days singers are kept to express the loftiest ideas by melody of voice and the raptures of musical accent. To simulate passion and feeling, and to express them through inflections of the voice, are the powers demanded of the vocal artist. To fly on the wings of dramatic instinct to the extreme limits of the soul's flight; to cast away his individuality; to throw his whole personal nature from him, and allow it to be tossed helplessly to and fro, now in ecstasies to the heavens, and now in sorrows to the depths of despair; to open wide the flood-gates of his soul, that the streams of sentiment and the torrent of passion may flow through them without let or hindrance; and to guide and control these varied conditions and forces by the magic power of his art, so that they may move, excite, and influence those beneath his sway: these are the deeds of witchcraft expected of the singer.

The British public are not remarkably ethereal in their nature: they are seldom given to restless, heavenly journeyings, like the angels seen by Jacob in a dream. Instead of saying, with the fairies and other celestial beings, "Let us fly," they invariably mutter, "Let us sit;" and, it cannot be denied, they have heavy capacities for their favourite sedate occupation. Still, occasionally they like to travel a little outside their usual dismal sphere; to see a world beyond their shops, and snatch breath of an atmosphere purer than their counting-houses; to escape far from themselves, and their dull and sordid surroundings, into a fairer region and more ecstatic state. To realize this happiness for some brief moments they hire the singer for a guide; they hold on to the skirts of his musical garments, whilst carried by him on the wings of melody to a point whence they obtain a glimpse of another world and the kingdoms thereof. Singers, who can accomplish this feat on subjects so corporeal and material, are generally regarded with great favour and leniency. If, upon inspection, the Englishman discovers the wings of his angels to be soiled, and their pinions torn and besmeared with theatrical tinsel, he still will value them according to their merits. The soprano, who had quickened his faith by singing "I know that my Redeemer liveth," will not be despised when found to be a scheming and grasping lady. The contralto, who consoled him by murmuring, "O rest in the Lord," will not be contemned if proved to be vain and vulgar. The tenor, who quickened his soul with religious ardour whilst declaiming, "Sound an alarm," will not be despised if he be only an ordinary mortal; and the emphatic utterances of the basso will not lose their sublimity because they happen to be delivered by means of breath heavily laden with the fumes of tobacco and beer. John Bull knows full well that singers, in frailties and vices, are like the rest of men and women, but unlike them in their public and artistic assumptions of holiness. In oratorio, the singer, perhaps a frail woman, becomes an angel, the timid man, a hero, seizing upon the mantle of Elijah; and a poor erring creature, changed into an inspired being, uttering forth mandates of the Almighty. The artist, however, is never heard to say, "Ladies and gentlemen, there is no deception;" but rather, like Snug the joiner, with half his face seen through the lion's neck, he will declare, "I am a man as other men are."

The singer's voice is never so potent as when heard in oratorio performed in a cathedral. It then appears to be pitched in the very key-note of holy mysteries; it can call forth to the mind images, dimly conceived, of another world; it can soothe and hallow earthly sufferings; it can throw a ray of hope amidst the approaching shadows of death, and embody the triumphant hallelujah of the blessed in Heaven. This artistic luxury, this year, the Dean of Worcester denies the public. No musical festival, in the old established form, will he permit to be celebrated in his church. Ecclesiastical music, services and anthems, are to be substituted for oratorios. If there be one quality in which John Bull excels, it is tact in going to the best market for all things; and he certainly will not go to the priests for his music, any more than to the singer for his religion. His instincts and experience tell him that music may produce doubtful morals, but that the best of morals generally bring forth only dreadful music. Religion and art are often divorced. He acknowledges learning and piety in the clergy, but at the same time contends they are, to a man, bad singers and worse musicians. Is it any wonder that respect is denied the church in matters musical? During the past London season the two English Archbishops were invited by the future "Defender of the Faith" to say something in furtherance of the cause of music; and the only thing they could say was: they know nothing whatever about it. It is to be deplored that our prelates should not see the importance of understanding the principles of an art so much employed in the services of the Church, and by means of which Christians express their praise, thanksgiving, and adoration; and it is to be regretted their example is followed by the clergy who, with very rare exceptions, are utterly ignorant of the simplest rudiments of music, though often moved with envy at the power it has upon their congregations. If they pursued its study, and made themselves musicians, then perhaps the scandal they attach to the art would be removed, and musical performances would not be left to the mercies of singers and sinners.

JONATHAN JONES, Jun., Musical Student.

A LASTING IMPRESSION.

To hear again that scream! that strain!
That trill! fair maid, which thou indentest;
I only know one place to go,
'Tis where you're rivalled—chez my dentist. S.

PARMA.—La Regina di Castiglia, a new opera by Sig. Guindani, will most probably be produced here next Carnival.

TRIESTE.—The coming autumn season at the Teatro Communale bids fair to be a very interesting one. The manager, Sig. Brunelli, who is also manager of the Scala, Milan, purposes including in his repertory Donizetti's Lucia di Lammermoor, Verdi's Aida, and Sig. Ponchielli's Lituani. His company will comprise—Signore Stolz, Sang, Valleria, Mariani; Signori Patierno, Pantaleoni, and Maini. Verdi's Requiem, also, will be performed, under the direction of the celebrated conductor, Sig. Faccio.

Digitized by Google

ACORNS, SLOES, AND BLACKBERRIES.

By Gibbs Gibb Gibbs, Esq.

No. 11.

Jean Baptiste Lully was born of obscure parents at Florence, in the year 1634. Having, whilst a child, showed great taste for music, a cordelier, from no other consideration than from the hope of his some time becoming eminent in the art, undertook to teach him the guitar. While under the tuition of this benevolent ecclesiastic, the chevalier Guise, then on his travels, arrived at Florence, and engaged Lully as a page for Mdlle de Montpensier, a niece of Louis XIV., who directed that a master should be employed to teach him the violin; and in the course of a few months he became so great a proficient that he was elevated to the rank of court-musician, and gained admission into the King's band of violins. In a little time he began to compose. Some of his airs having been noticed by the King, the author was sent for, and his performance of them was thought so excellent, that a new band was formed, called les Petits Violins, and he was placed at the head of it. Under his direction they soon passed the famous band of twenty-four, till that time so much celebrated throughout Europe. This was about the year 1660, at which time the favourite entertainments at the French court were dramatic representations called ballets. These consisted of dancing intermixed with singing and speaking in recitative; and to many of them Lully was employed to compose the music. In 1669 Louis wished to have an academy in France to excel the one established in Venice for the performance of operas. He granted to the Abbé Perrin, Master of the Ceremonies to the Duke of Orleans, a privilege for the conducting of an opera after the model of that of Venice, but to be performed in the French language. Cambert, the organist of St Honoré's, was engaged to compose the music; but after a little while Lully contrived to get him to be removed, and himself to be appointed in his stead. Possessing now the situation of composer and joint-director of the Opera, he instituted a band of his own, and formed the design of building a new theatre near the Luxemburg palace, which was opened in November, 1670. At the time when Lully was placed at the head of les Petits Violins, not half the musicians in France were able to play at sight; and, with respect to composition, nothing can be conceived more inartificial than most of the sonatas and airs for violins at that time. The combination of sounds then allowed were too few to admit of sufficient variety; and the art of preparing and resolving discords was a secret confined to few. Lully contributed greatly to the improvement of French music. It is somewhat difficult to characterise his style. It seems, however, to have been completely original. He is said to have been the inventor of that species of composition, the overture; and more particularly that spirited movement, the largo, which is the general introduction to the fugue; for, though it may be said that the symphonies or preludes of Carissimi, Colonna, and others, are in effect overtures, yet the difference between them and those of Lully is very evident; the former were compositions of a mild and placid kind, the latter are animated and full of energy. In his overtures he introduced fugues, and was the first who, in the choruses, made use of the side and kettle drums. In the year 1686, the King was seized with an indisposition that threatened his life; but, recovering from it, Lully was required to compose a Te Deum. Accordingly he wrote one, which was not more remarkable for its excellence than the unhappy accident with which its performance was attended. Nothing had been neglected; to demonstrate his zeal, he himself beat the time. With the cane he used for this purpose, in the heat of action (from the difficulty of keeping the band together), he struck his foot, which caused such considerable inflammation, that his physician soon advised him to have his little toe taken off; and, after a delay of some days, his foot; and at length the whole limb. At this juncture, an empiric offered to perform a cure without amputation. Two thousand pistoles (£1,700) were promised him if he should accomplish it; but all his efforts were in vain. Lully died in 1687, and was interred in the Church of the Discalceat Augustins, at Paris, where an elegant monument has been erected to his memory. A singular story of a conversation betwixt Lully and his confessor in his last illness is related, which exposes the weakness and folly of the priest. Having been, for many years, in the habit of composing for the Opera, the priest, as a testimony of his sincere repentance, and the conditions of his absolution, required of him to throw the last of his compositions into the fire. Lully, after some excuses, at length acquiesced, and, pointing to a drawer in which the rough draft of Achilles and Polixines was deposited, it was taken out and burnt, and the confessor went away satisfied. Lully grew better and was thought out of danger, when one of the young princes came to visit him. "What, Baptiste," says he to him, "have you thrown your opera into the fire? you were a fool for thus giving credit to a gloomy Jansenist, and burning good music." "Hush! hush! my lord," answered Lully in a whisper, "I knew well what I was about, I have another copy of it." Unhappily this ill-timed pleasantry was followed by a relapse; the gangrene increased, and the prospect of inevitable death threw him into such pangs of remorse, that he submitted to be laid on a heap of ashes with a cord round his neck, and in this situation he expressed a deep sense of his late transgression. On being replaced in his bed he became composed, and died shortly afterwards.

MUSIC AT THE ANTIPODES.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

Sir,—The great event of the month has been the re-appearance of Miss Alice May here, after nearly two years' absence. Mr Lyster's company of Opera Buffa having left the town to open the new Academy of Music at Ballarat (the first stone of which was laid by Mdme Goddard), Mr Allen took the Opera House for his company, and crowded houses show how much it is appreciated. Miss May received such a welcome as only a great artist can obtain. She is now performing a round of operas that only the most versatile could play—Satanella, Drogan, Marguerite, Bohemian Girl, Grand Duchess, &c., &c.—and the papers scarcely know which to admire most. Unfortunately for Melbourne, this is to be her farewell visit, as, on the conclusion of the present season, the company goes to India, China, Japan, &c., &c. The manager of the Corinthian company, in Calcutta, has been sent over expressly to engage Mr Allen's company, and Mr Maguire, of California, has also sent to endeavour to obtain its services; so the probability is, the tour will begin in Bombay and terminate in San Francisco. It is needless to add that this final season is likely to prove the best ever given in Melbourne. On Saturday, crowds were unable to gain admission. The admirable way in which the company works under Mr Allen's conductorship is the talk of the town. In his opera, Castle Grim, two débutantes made a successful appearance on Friday last—Miss Emily Thompson and Miss Maggie Liddle. Mr Hallam has made great advances in his profession, and is now really a most capable actor as well as singer. The success of the Company in India is certain, and Miss Alice May's triumph is assured.

Your own Correspondent.

Melbourne, June 15th, 1875.

Digitized by Google

SECULAR OR GREGORIAN MUSIC.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

Sir,—Man feels, and has ever felt, strong emotions in his soul—grief, sorrow, indignation; love, sympathy, and joy; and these he expresses, on all occasions, in strains that strike a corresponding chord in our nature. If speech is the medium of his emotion, or if song conveys it to us, there is that faithful and essential harmony between his emotion and ours, that, if he would touch our heart, he must strike the chord which is in unison with ours. Otherwise he fails to give satisfaction or pleasure.

Now, the question is—whether the emotions of the soul are better expressed in one form of music than in another—in Secular or Gregorian music. I must claim your indulgence while I treat of this question, for it appears there are writers to be met with who have a preference for Gregorian music, and especially there is one, a member of the church to which I have the honour to belong, to whom I would particularly direct my observations. In reaching him I believe I shall reach all other writers who are robbing the Church—Catholic or Protestant—of soul-stirring and delightful music. If I am more favourable to my own church service than to the Protestant service, it is my faith; and I may be excused this pardonable liberty.

Since music is only an accompaniment to our emotions, and since there is no restriction to our emotions, there can be no restriction placed to the music which accompanies them. But writers argue that one form of music is preferable to another. Here is an attempt to limit the accompanying strains in which we give utterance to our emotions; and we cannot allow that the emotions have any circumscribed song to express them. That being so, there must be definite and incontrovertible reasons given why Gregorian, and not secular, music should accompany our services. This form of music must be shown to be universal in point of time and place; that it is devotionally and musically better; and that its construction is superior. It is not sufficient to make an assertion; proof is necessary before we accept Gregorian music as suitable to our emotions. Writers have not descended to proof; and, what is more, they cannot; for Gregorian music will not bear any test, either as to universality, adaptability, or construction. They take safer ground in generalities, and leave the specialities of Gregorian music alone. We must commend their foresight; for it is easier to offer a general remark, than to show the excellences of the one and the deficiencies of the other—to show where Gregorian is universal, is superior in construction, or better adapted to our emotional feelings than secular music. Not in time or in place, in suitableness or in construction, is Gregorian music comparable to secular music. That Gregorian is essentially church music is no reason why it surpasses, either devotionally or musically, secular music; or that it expresses equally the emotions of the soul. It is characteristic music—not so much of the emotions as of the church; and herein consists its real value. Secular music, on the other hand, is particularly adapted for expressing the emotions. It is a form of music universal in point of time and place. We are accustomed to secular music from the time of our infancy. All the world over we accompany our sorrow, our love, our joy, our sympathy, or indignation, with this pleasing strain, which is in unison with sacred feelings in our hearts. What more natural, then, than that that form of music which satisfies our highest feelings, with which our ears have become familiar, should accompany our emotions when expressed to God in His church?

The gist of the matter lies here. If we are accustomed to music, which is fully recognized as adequate, to express our emotions, why shall we seek a strange form of music, which is not adequate or in harmony with them? Is it simply because it is church music? There is no other reason. But the same reasoning would show (I speak as a Catholic, and my words will apply to those Protestant churchmen who copy our Church in this and other matters) that we might adopt Latin in our prayers, and not our mother tongue, because Latin is the language of the Church. Gregorian advocates may say this is no parallel. It is an exact parallel to their reasoning. Protestant churchmen may say, what applies to Catholics does not apply to them; but, inasmuch as they copy our Church, and for the same reason—to make their music characteristic of the Church—it applies to them equally. The Church adopts Latin for her own use; she also adopts a Gregorian form of music; not because God is praised more in Latin than in English, nor that Gregorian music is more devotional than secular music; but because she requires distinguishing features of her own. Therefore, on this solitary reason on which they rely, Gregorian advocates are upset.

I will meet them in another way. If Gregorian music were the best adapted to emotions, the Church could not encourage secular musical art; and she does. Justly so; for what she requires is that the heart should pour forth every joy and sorrow in a free, natural, and unrestrained manner. The Church is not more catholic in religion than she is in promoting every happiness and pleasure which bring gratification and satisfaction to her children—and music is a real happiness in weal or woe. I suppose the Protestant would lay claim to this also. Catholics have enjoyed this wise and salutary encouragement in all ages, and hence the grand ceremonial and joyful music which work on our emotions and rejoice the heart. The Catholic Church leads her children in a natural way. She does not dispossess them of aught that gladdens the heart; on the contrary, she heightens the measure of their satisfaction by making all her services aglow with colour and warmth. This is what Protestants cannot understand. They think the joy and hilarity of Catholics nothing less than licence and profanity. They are so lugubrious themselves, so long accustomed to join in cold, rasping services, stultifying the emotions and surrounding the heart in cheerless gloom, that their Puritanism is shocked when brought in contact with Catholic worship. I say this out of no ill will towards them, but in all sincerity. Even converts cannot immediately disassociate themselves from the frigidity which marked their barren services. But when converts want to reform our services—there's the tickle! I know a writer, a convert, who has been lately treating us to articles on this subject of Gregorian music. Curiously enough, he sets himself up to be an authority on music, when actually he has no knowledge of Gregorian or secular music! This eccentric luminary has been throwing all the light he could afford—and that not more than a tenth-rate amateur's—on the two forms of music. In his erratic wanderings he tells us he has discovered where Gregorian music has been adopted. He hastens to the conclusion that we ought to adopt it in our services.

I take notice of this writer because he is no authority on any form of music; because he does not understand the genial atmosphere of Catholic services; for whom Gregorian music was intended; and because he has unburthened himself of pretentious knowledge in an influential Catholic paper, the Tablet. For his information, I tell him he may hear Gregorian music not only in Germany but in every country where Catholic worship exists. In every conventual chapel throughout the world he will hear Gregorian song. But he forgets entirely that this form of music was made, and is intended expressly for religious communities of men shut out from the world and using simple devotions. Even they draw largely on secular music whenever special occasions demand it. In Catholic public worship, however, secular music, in Germany, as in all other countries, accompanies public services. This is in use for all the reasons I have mentioned; because it is the music always accompanying our emotions, and in harmony with them; because it has a richer and completer construction; because the Catholic Church wishes to encourage the free and spontaneous expressions of the heart; and because she would swell the grand proportions of her majestic services by a full chorus of voices blending in harmonious and lovely song. All voices are asked to praise God; secular music provides a part for every voice. Why not help to strengthen our choirs by assigning their part to female voices for whom it was created, and without whose assistance secular music is incomplete? Yet it is sought by writers in our Church, and in the Protestant Church, to exclude the female voice from our choirs; thereby to prevent an effective rendering of secular music, the most impassioned strain of our heart, and introduce Gregorian music instead.

This effort cannot last. Our emotions cannot be warped by cheerless music, nor our understanding deceived by a fallacious argument in favour of Gregorian music. Catholics want the glow and the warmth of their public services unimpaired, while Protestants should see that the little music left them in their services was spared to them, and if possible increased. We all want to derive pleasure and satisfaction from our devotions, and there is no means so efficient as those eternal sounds which are in unison with our hearts' purest feelings, and have ever assuaged them—the thrilling strains of secular music.—I am, Sir, yours truly,

CONCORDIA.

MAD. ADELINA PATTI AT DIEPPE.

An event to which, for some time previously, people had been looking forward with great eagerness, and which had furnished matter for more conversation than half a dozen other topics put together, including even the revolt in the Herzegovina and the daring feat projected by Capt. Webb, came off with great éclat on the 25th inst. Mad. Adelina Patti appeared at a concert for the benefit of the sufferers by the Normandy inundations, and of the widows of sailors belonging to Dieppe. The Minister of Marine and all the rank and fashion now sojourning in the town were present. Every seat had been snapt up the instant the concert was announced. Mad. Patti sang the cavatina from La Traviata, Gounod's "Ave, Maria," the "Shadow Song" from Meyerbeer's Dinorah, and some French ballads by Gounod. She was enthusiastically applauded and encored in every piece. After the concert, she was serenaded by the orchestra of the Theatre. The evening's receipts exceeded considerably 12,000 francs.

Digitized by Google

PARIS SCRAPS.

(From our Parisian Scrapper.)

At the Grand Opera, Guillaume Tell has been performed, the new comer, Madlle de Reszké, taking the part of Mathilde, in which, as in that of Ophelia, she produced a favourable impression, despite the fact of her having to struggle against the recollection of Mad. Carvalho. Whether Madlle de Reszké will ever be a Patti or a Nilsson it would be rash to predict, but even now she can very well hold her own with most of the artists belonging to M. Halanzier's company. M. Salomon was the Arnold. Vocally, he was not bad; dramatically, he would not have shone too brilliantly among a troop of amateurs, kindly giving their services for some local charity. By the bye, what a nose for scenting out local charities, under cover of whose name they can make public display of their inefficiency and awkwardness, amateur actors do possess. M. Lasalle was Guillaume.

The Opéra-Comique re-opened its doors with Richard and La Fille du Régiment. The next day it gave Les Dragons de Villars and Bonsoir, Voisin, and, the day after that, Le Caïd and Les Noces de Jeannette. Then, too, we have had M. Valdéjo, formerly of the Athénée, in Zampa. Whatever other faults and shortcomings may be laid to his charge, M. Du Locle, the manager, cannot be accused of any want of variety in his programmes. Very soon he will revive Le Val d'Andorre, with Mdlle Chapuy as Rose de Mai and M. Obin as the Goatherd. This will be followed by the Piccolino of M. Guiraud, for which M. Victorien Sardou has altered one of his comedies into a libretto. Two composers, Johann Strauss and Mad. Grandval, have already tried their hands on the same subject. Before concluding my notice on this theatre, I must, I am sorry to say, tell you that M. Deloffre, the conductor, is so indisposed, that it has been necessary to replace him by M. Hostein. He is not, however, in absolute danger.

After all, M. Arsène Houssaye will not be the manager of the Théâtre-Lyrique. The lucky, or unlucky, individual is M. Campocasso, who, not very many months ago, was manager of the Théâtre Royal de la Monnaie, Brussels, in which capacity he did anything but give general satisfaction. Let us hope that he may please the Parisians better than he pleased the good people of the Belgian capital. He begins his new managerial career with the respectable Government grant of 197,000 francs.

The Rennaissance will, it is said, re-open with Giroflé-Girofla. We are then promised a revival of Les Porcherons, by MM. Sauvage and Albert Grisar, with Mad. Peschard in the principal part. The new opera by Herr Johann Strauss will be produced in November, while the season is to conclude with the same composer's Reine Indigo.

The commencement of the season at the Bouffes Parisiens is fixed for the 1st September, as, by that time, Mad. Théo will have returned from Aix-les-Bains. The opening piece will be La Jolie Parfumeuse.

On the motion of M. Hérold, the Municipal Council have voted the sum of 10,000 francs, "as an encouragement to such musical composers as apply themselves to the composition of symphonic and popular works." This is the first time the Council have manifested any interest in artistic matters, and, though the sum in question is small, the precedent created is of importance. It has been decided to apportion the 10,000 francs in the following manner, which does not seem to tally exactly with the object the Council had in view when making the grant:—1. One prize of 300 francs and another of 200, to the two teachers in Communal Schools who can produce the best musical scholars. 2. Three medals, worth 500 francs each, to private musical institutions tending to raise the standard of musical education independently of the Conservatory. 3. An annual prize of 3,000 francs for the most remarkable musical work—symphony, oratorio, &c., but not an opera—produced in the course of each year. 4. Two prizes of 1,000 francs each for a composition for voices only, to be sung in unison by the people, and a four-part song for the Orphéons of the City of Paris. The subjects of these pieces must be the grandeur and the love of one's native land. The writer of the words to each piece will receive 500 francs. 5. Two prizes of 500 francs each to the private choral societies which possess the best female choruses. 6. 1,000 francs every year to cover the expense incurred for the musical examination of female pupils intending to follow the profession of teachers.

—o—

MUSIC AT ST JAMES'S, HATCHAM.

The dedication festival of the above church took place on St James's day and was observed with unprecedentedly elaborate services. The Holy Eucharist was thrice offered, the celebration being fully choral. The Processional was hymn 82 (Hymnal Noted), and the Introit 'How dear are Thy counsels.' Schubert's Kyrie, Credo, Sanctus, Benedictus, Agnus Dei, and Gloria in Excelsis were sung, the offertory being 'Glorious king of martyrs,' and the Hallelujah Chorus. Gounod's 'O salutaris' followed the Agnus Dei, the antiphon being 'Wisdom hath builded.' The service was rendered by a surpliced choir of fifty men and boys, and a band of twenty-two performers. The vicar of St James's, Rev. Arthur Tooth, M.A., celebrated. He was assisted by acolytes, thurifers, and crucifix bearers in their respective degrees. The altar was splendidly adorned with flowers, and numerous lights burned on and around it. Incense was freely used, and during the elevation the trumpets played a phrase twice, after the manner observed in some continental churches. The clergy in choir were the Revs. H. Gurney (Fellow of Clare College, Cambridge), E. Kirkland (St Paul's, Walworth), W. H. Browne (St James's), and A. H. Stanton (St Alban's, Holborn), the last named reverend gentleman having been announced as the preacher. They wore birettas, cassocks, and surplices.

At evensong, the church was again crowded to excess, and numbers of persons failed to obtain admission. The office was sung from the sedilia, the officiating priest being vested in a cope. The Rev. R. Linklater, of St Peter's, London Docks, preached on the words, "All power is given unto Me in heaven and in earth." The special psalms were 47, 29, and 136. They were taken to the 5th tone, first and second ending. The Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis were sung to a service in A, composed by Mr Jacob Bradford, Mus. Bac., Oxon, the musical director of the festival, special orchestral accompaniments being also written by him for the occasion. His fine anthem, "I was glad," took the place of the office hymn. After the sermon, "Faith of our fathers" and the Hallelujah Chorus were sung. The clergy and acolytes, cross bearer, and thurifers, next ranged themselves before the altar, which bore numerous lighted tapers, and a solemn Te Deum was chanted. The banner bearers, choir, cross bearer, and clergy then took their respective banners, and left the chancel, singing, "Onward, Christian soldiers," the effect being heightened by the orchestral accompaniments. Thus ended the most elaborate and ornate service as yet heard in any Church of England place of worship, both as regards ritual and music. The care with which the musical portion was rehearsed entitles Mr Bradford and Mr Wareham to high credit for the able discharge of their respective duties as director and organist. The choir and band worked well together from the first, and, during the two months that special practisings have been carried on, there has been but one feeling uppermost. The orchestra was efficiently led by Mr Pawle, and, amongst its members, Mr Webb (of the Crystal Palace) was clarionet, Mr Wilmore (also of the Crystal Palace) and Mr Foghill (of the Philharmonic orchestra), trumpets; Messrs Horsley and Walter, flute; Messrs Cobbett, Bath, Rudersdorff, Kendall, Bliss, and other gentlemen assisted with stringed instruments; Mr Brett with the euphonium, and Mr Cleaver with the drums. Mr King had charge of the choir arrangements. The soloists were Messrs Palmer, Loveday, Gardner, Hewitt, and Master Belle.

The voluntary before service in the morning was an andante from Schubert's Symphony in E flat; in the evening, an Ave Maria by Cherubini, arranged by Mr Webb (clarionetist), a "Marche aux Flambeaux" (Scotson Clark), and, after the service, "Marche Romaine" (Gounod). This latter was repeated in the evening, in the place of "Marche Héroique" (Bradford), which had been specially scored for the occasion, but was not played, owing to the fact that the MS. copies were not complete. The tone of the band was excellent throughout; the ensemble of the strings was specially to be commended. We noticed particularly the quartet in the anthem, the clarionet obbligato being splendidly played by Mr Webb. The entire services were repeated on the following day.

Digitized by Google

THE TEMPLE AT BAYREUTH.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

Sir,—To-day I forward you an article, which, under the above heading, I found in a recent number of the Art Musical. I take this step, not because I agree with all that the writer says, or because I suppose that you do, but because I deem the article well adapted to enlighten your readers as to the sentiments entertained by very many persons in France towards the Musical Prophet of the Future. Here it is:—

"It cannot be a theatre; it is a temple erected in honour of a god by the god himself. On one occasion only will the deity exhibit himself to the eyes of believers. After that he will ascend to the spheres of eternity, leaving behind him a luminous track on our unhappy world. Once will the Nibelungen dazzle our souls, and then Bayreuth and its temple will return to chaos. One single type of the ideal masterpiece will issue from the sacred mould; the mould will then be shattered or carried away by angels. The act of faith will have cost some millions of francs, but with what glory it will cover the holy people who had the ineffable grace to produce Richard Wagner!

"Such is the substance of the hymns now being sung by the fanatics. We French, who, in questions not involving politics, are gifted with robust common sense, ask whether the whole business is a mystification or a proof of insanity.

"A letter published by M. Edmond Neukomm, in the XIXe Siècle, furnishes us with details which give a poor opinion of the edifice at Bayreuth. It is large, uniform, and regular, like an immense barn, or an enormous shed at a fair. The auditorium is dwarfed, while the height of the stage reaches ninety-six feet. The interior is repulsively naked and monotonous. No boxes or luxurious places; the whole is a kind of amphitheatre separated from the stage by a chasm in which will be concealed the orchestra, out of sight of the spectators. Herr Wagner, who has invented and directed everything, calls this chasm the 'mystic space.'

"The Nibelungen will be performed in four evenings, for the opera which the Pontif of the Future is about to administer to his fanatics is quadruple. Then, as we said above, Bayreuth will relapse into silence, and the temple will be turned into a magazine for forage, unless it is burnt, so that its ashes may be scattered to the four quarters of Germany. Lastly, the Nibelungen will re-ascend to the clouds, or constitute the glory of the Musico-German Fatherland—if they do not fall flat the fourth evening, leaving behind them only the recollection of the most gigantic mystification of modern times, for, we repeat it, the whole business is either a mystification or a proof of insanity.

"We have no reason to spare Herr Wagner. Whether speaking as Frenchmen or cosmopolitan critics, we find for him only words of indignation. This man whom Nature endowed with marvellous gifts; this man who ought to have become a great musician, and shed lustre upon the epoch in which he lived, has done nothing but heap up ruins around him. His absorbing, envious, and malevolent spirit has attacked everything beautiful and deserving respect; on the remains of the splendid school founded by the masters of music and even by great poets, he has attempted to raise himself a throne, and, were he allowed to do so, nothing would remain standing of whatever has rendered famous the nineteenth century and the end of the eighteenth; everything would be dominated and wiped out by his invading personality, by that fatal face in which hate displays its most odious grimaces. A false admirer of the Antique, which he arranges after his own fashion; an utter contemner of what is modern; admiring only himself, but doing so without cessation and without restraint, Herr Wagner, we hope, will leave behind him nothing more than the recollection of an artistic monstrosity.

"Both as a politician and as a man of the world, Herr Wagner would, certainly, furnish matter for a study the reverse of flattering, but we will speak of him only as a musician. We shall find ample grounds to account for our antipathy.

"The musician, who began with works full of promise, and was endowed with the qualities to produce a master, has fallen, thanks to his pride, into the balderdash of exaggeration. In the first place he thought: 'I will not do as others have done. My genius shall strike out a new road.' This road was scarcely aught but a narrow path, encumbered with weeds and stones. He then thought: 'The road by which I was the first to pass, must be the only good road, the only road to be followed.' He then attacked, with savage brutality, everything he had previously admired. He saw nothing but Himself; Himself; always Himself! The pride of the artist, a pride pushed to madness, rendered execrable a man who was naturally bad. This man has been stubborn and cruel in his hate. He has gone so far as to forget the time when he gained his livelihood among us, and was always well treated in Paris. For this he will render an account to Heaven.

"To all of us, French, Italians, and even Germans, he is bound to render an account for the miserable state to which he has endeavoured to reduce musical art. His genius for intrigue, his audacity, and his art as an actor, have procurred for him such supporters, that he has imperilled our great art and, for a time, obstructed its progress. Italy will be saved by the vigour of her temperament; as for Germany, she will remain unproductive and foggy so long as she chooses to imbibe the Wagnerian poison. Let her. But we French cannot entertain for this false reformer too much hatred.

"He has perverted the musical feeling of our youth; he is the cause, to a great extent, why they produce nothing that will live; he has poisoned the young school by his anti-musical doctrines; he has robbed it of its respect for the masters, and has doomed it to protracted sterility. Had not our public opposed, with their cold energy, an insurmountable barrier to the Wagnerian encroachments, our national art would now be in the most pitiable condition. But the public were on their guard, and are so still. We are the more sure of them because it is their nature itself which resists. In their invincible repugnance to this false music there is nothing to show a preconceived purpose. The public consider the new Wagnerian manner to be hideous and irritating. They reject it, and disown works from which it seems to peep forth. That is all.

"Yet, in days gone by, we applauded some superb pages signed Richard Wagner, and, had he not tortured his musical genius, so as to render it as monstrous as his intellect, we should, doubtless, applaud him still. But his bad feelings have become more strongly marked and exaggerated; he has produced tiresome, soporific, and unhealthy works. We have had the Meistersinger, that summary of his musical life up to the present, and the Meistersinger, a genuine mystification, has not been able to succeed anywhere.

"Now come the Temple of Bayreuth and the Nibelungen, an opera in four evenings—the maddest enterprise ever yet conceived by an artist or a patient escaped from Charenton. Everything is being prepared; the chorus is studying; the solo singers are ready; the orchestra is rehearsing under the direction of the composer, who has declared he is the only person worthy of conducting the immense work, which, like the 'De Profundis' of Master Barnabas, 'is destined to inter all the others.'

"Let us await the result. If it is such as we suppose it will be, the Theatre at Bayreuth may, without any very great modifications, be turned into a lunatic asylum.

"Come what may, however, we determined not to let slip the opportunity of expressing our opinion about Herr Richard Wagner, and his Temple. Richard Wagner, our common enemy, and the executioner of modern art, has launched out into a foolhardy enterprise which proves that his pride has been pushed to insanity. His disappointment can never equal the failure we hope he will experience; the complete failure he deserves. The greater that failure, the more ought the world of art to rejoice. "G. STRADINA."

If this is not a striking exemplification of the adage: "Give a dog a bad name and hang him," I am at a loss to say what is. Though no Wagnerite, I was, among other things, ignorant until now, that Herr Wagner is the cause of the present dearth of great musicians in France.

I sometimes do not exactly understand M. Stradina, but that does not matter so much. I know he is pitching into Herr Wagner, as surely as I should feel convinced that, in any engagement for which their services might be secured, English troops, though hidden from my sight by the smoke, were pegging away at their foe.—Yours obediently, PELTER BROWN.

Grand Hotel A l'Œuf Rôti, Paris.

COLOGNE.—The immense bell of the Cathedral will require some alteration before it can be rung. The clapper is too short, and will not touch the sides.

ALEXANDRA PALACE.—On Saturday last, the Summer Evening Concert was devoted to national hymns and ballads, and attracted an immense audience. The artists engaged were Miss F. Heywood, Mdme Osborne Williams, and Mr Wilford Morgan, with increased orchestra and chorus of 500. The concert was a great success. Miss Heywood sang "Come back to Erin," very agreeably, and Mdme Williams was heard to advantage in "Kathleen Mavourneen," but the vast space of the great central hall is very trying for ladies' voices. It did not, however, seem to affect Mr Wilford Morgan, whose voice told out with immense effect in Shield's old song, "The Thorn," which was enthusiastically encored, Mr Morgan substituting "The Bay of Biscay," in response thereto, with, if possible, increased effect. In the second part, he gave his own popular ballad, "My sweetheart when a boy," which was unanimously encored and repeated. The chorus were very successful, and the orchestra, under Mr Weist Hill's direction, everything that could be desired.

Digitized by Google

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

ETHEL.—We have great pleasure in being able to afford our fair correspondent the information she requires. The first performance of M. Gounod's Faust in Wiesbaden took place in July, 1861. Mad. Deetz was Marguerite, and Herr Caffieri, Faust.

PUZZLED.—The document to which you refer was entitled "The humble Memorial of the Professors, Members, Associates, and Honorary Members of the Royal Academy of Music." It was addressed to the Right Honourable William Ewart Gladstone, then Chancellor of the Exchequer.

ROUGE CROIX.—The Arms of her Ladyship's first husband were emblazoned on the front of the instrument, and occupied the space generally devoted to the maker's name. The shield was lozengy vair and gu. The supporters were two Leopards, rampant and gorged, i.e., bearing a collar round each of their throats.

NICODEMUS.—We have heard nothing of the rumour in question, and we think it utterly without any foundation in truth. The conditions on which the theatre is offered would alone be sufficient, we should say, to deter the most sanguine speculator from becoming a tenant, unless, indeed, he could get the present lease considerably prolonged.

DON DIEGO DE LOS BIGOTES LARGOS.—The Capitan del Popolo was never a native of the town in which he held command. A stranger was always selected for the appointment, because it was supposed that he would fulfil his duty more impartially between the various factions of the place than a man connected with any of them by ties of consanguinity. The Capitan del Popolo was a very important personage in days gone by.

SQUIRE MARMADUKE.—Euryanthe was dedicated, by permission, to the Emperor Franz, who subsequently sent Weber a handsome snuffbox set with diamonds. At the interview granted to the composer, his Majesty, referring to the Italian singers at the Imperial Operahouse, between whom and their German colleagues there reigned a feeling which was the reverse of friendly, observed, in the Viennese dialect: "Ja, ja, der Krieg ist halt aus, aber's Geplänkel hört nit auf. ("Yes, yes, the war may be over, but the skirmishing will not cease for all that.")

ONCE MORE.—The first English representative of the part of Arsace in Rossini's Semiramide was Mad. Vestris. We can still recollect the full length portrait of her as the young hero in the "penny plain, twopence coloured" series of theatrical characters which adorned the shop-fronts some thirty or thirty-five years ago. The lines in Voltaire's original tragedy, on which the libretto is founded, run, we think, as follows, though we are not sure, as we quote from memory:—

"Oui, Mitrane, en secret l'ordre émané du trône
Remet entre tes bras Arsace à Babylone.
Que la Reine, en ces lieux, brillants de sa splendeur
De son puissant génie imprime la grandeur.
Quel art a pu former ces enceintes profondes,
Où l'Euphrate, égarée, porte en tribut ses ondes;
Ce temple; ces jardins, en l'air soutenus;
Ce vaste mausolée, où repose Ninus!
Eternels monuments, moins admirables qu'elle,
C'est ici qu' à ses bras Sémiramis m'appelle!"
Etc., etc., etc.

Are these the lines you mean?

MARRIAGE.

On August 19, Mr ROBERT WILLIAM ABEL, of Northampton, to EMILY MIDDLETON, daughter of Alderman Vernon, of Nine-Springs Villa, Northampton.

ERRATA.—In the extract from a private letter, headed "Mad. Wagner and Herr Niemann," at Page 569 of our last issue, there is a correction needed. "Mad. Cosima" should be read for "Mad. Cosimo."

At the sixth line of the Poem: "When years ago," Page 572, for "dark" read "dash."

NOTICE.

To ADVERTISERS.—The Office of the MUSICAL WORLD is at Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & CO.'S, 244, Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street (First Floor). It is requested that Advertisements may be sent not later than Thursday. Payment on delivery.

The Musical World,

LONDON, SATURDAY, AUGUST 28, 1875.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL WORLD.

SIR,—One night, at the old Coburg, the two portions of a certain back scene—nearly every back scene was then divided into two portions—stuck fast. There they stood, with a yawning gap of some four or five feet between them. All the efforts of the scene-shifters proving ineffectual to move them, the stage-manager gave the signal for the actors to proceed with the drama. This was too much for a patron of the establishment in the gallery, who exclaimed, in a tone of indignant expostulation: "We don't look for grammar 'ere, but yer might close yer flats." To a certain extent, I resemble the author of the above remonstrance. I have something to say regarding some of our Metropolitan Managers, but I am not foolish or weak-minded enough to ask anything preposterous of them, any more than, to judge by his words just quoted, our Transpontine playgoer was. It would never enter my head to suggest that Managers should consent to be taxed for the purpose of paying inspectors—not appointed by them, but by the chief of the Metropolitan Police, the Chairman of the Board of Works, or any properly constituted authority—to go round every day and see that the tanks, which are nominally full of water, are really full of water; that the engines and hydrants, which are supposed to be ready for service at a moment's notice, are not, on the contrary, out of gear and useless; and that the hatchets which ought to be hanging at various stations in the "flies," to cut away any scenes or "cloths," as they are technically designated, which may happen to catch fire, are actually in their places, and, moreover, bright and sharp, not rusty and blunt. I am not so outrageous as to propose that, if Managers will not spontaneously adopt the very best modes of ventilation known to modern science, they should be compelled to do so, by the strong arm of the law; nor do I say that they should be called on to throw their money away, in causing the various doors in their theatres to shut properly, so as to diminish the risk, or, rather, certainty, to which their audiences are at present exposed, of colds in the head, neuralgia, and acute rheumatism. Still, like our Coburg acquaintance, who thought the stage-carpenters of the once popular establishment in the Waterloo Road might "close their flats," I fancy there are a few reforms, which, moderate as I am, I consider needful. I would even venture to advocate that something should be done with a view of carrying them out.

I begin by putting a question. Is there any valid reason why English playgoers, or a considerable portion of them—and that the portion, moreover, who constitute the very backbone of the theatrical treasurer's hopes—should be subjected to grievous personal inconvenience, if not absolute torture, before they can gratify their dramatic tastes? Englishmen have been accused of taking their pleasure sadly. Must they take it uncomfortably into the bargain? On Boxing-night, for instance, and other occasions when, as a rule, the weather is not all that could be desired, why should those who wish to obtain good places in the pit or gallery have to wait an hour or two in, probably, a murky yellow fog of the consistency of pea-soup, or a drizzling rain interspersed with sleet and snow, ere they can gain their object? And why, when the doors are opened, should the public waiting before them be obliged to initiate the enjoyment of the evening by engaging in a protracted struggle, during which shoes are lost, bonnets smashed, hats knocked off, and coats rent up, while the shouts of the men and the shrieks of the women might lead any one unacquainted with our peculiar customs—say Lord Macaulay's typical New Zealander—to suppose that the crowd were intent upon murder rather than amusement? Is there no remedy for this not very creditable state of things? I am inclined to believe there is an extremely simple one, though the fact of its never having been hitherto adopted is, of course, terribly against it. Let all the seats in the pit and gallery be duly separated and numbered. Let it be possible for any one to call at the theatre on the morning of performance, or even a day, or two days, or three days, previously, and purchase his pit or gallery ticket, also numbered. Nay; let him be able to procure it by forwarding its pecuniary value, plus postage, in the shape of a post-office order. In the evening, let there be a sufficient staff of attendants to see that the holder of each ticket, whether taken at the doors, or bought beforehand, obtains the numbered seat to which he is entitled. Were this plan adopted, people would not have to kick their heels, as at present, for hours in the street; they might enter the theatre exactly when they choose; and a dangerous personal conflict would cease to be as indispensable to a Christmas Pantomime as the overture itself.

Digitized by Google

But this numbering of all the seats would clash with another system which deserves, perhaps, reprobation. Managers know how many persons their theatres can accommodate just as well as a wine merchant can tell you how many bottles of whisky are contained in a gallon. Yet, only too often, they act as though they were totally ignorant on this head, or laboured under the strange delusion that, owing to some elastic quality inherent to them, theatres expand like india-rubber or gutta-percha, and that their size can be regulated to suit the number of persons seeking admission. I am reckless enough to consider this managerial impression not only as subversive of the ideas which Science has implanted in our minds concerning the unyielding nature of bricks and mortar, but as conducive to a practice more honoured in the breach than the observance. As many a holiday-maker has discovered to his cost, it is rather hard, after paying your money, and battling your way into the theatre, to be obliged, not only to dispense with such a luxury as a seat, but to find that even standing-room means room for one foot alone, and that, in this crane-like position, you must be content to view the performance under the arms or between the heads of those before you, unless you listen to the voice of the charmer who ejaculates: "Plenty of room in the upper boxes, gentlemen;" and, sooner than lose the sum you originally paid for admission, incur additional expenditure, on which you never reckoned, and which you can, perhaps, ill afford.

Again, several of our metropolitan theatres are so defectively constructed that any notion of obtaining from a large number of side places in them aught but the most infinitesimal glimpse of the performance, is a mockery, a delusion, and a snare. All that the occupant of such a place can see is the opposite side of the auditorium, with, if he is exceptionally lucky, two or three of the furthest gas jets of the float. A Manager is not to blame for the faulty construction of his theatre, if he did not build it himself, but he has no right to receive payment for places whence he is perfectly aware no one can obtain a view of what is going forward on the stage. Whenever he had any peculiar attraction, he might just as logically, and not one iota more reprehensibly, fit up seats on his roof, and let them for the price he charges for places in the best parts of his house. Such a plan would not be a whit more objectionable than the system pursued at present. Ill-natured persons might stigmatise both the one and the other as extremely like obtaining money under false pretences.

At some future period, I will, with your permission, return to the subject, which is far from being exhausted.

N. V. N.

OCCASIONAL NOTES.

"We old maids," once remarked a representative of the class, "love cats because we have no husbands. We attach ourselves instinctively to the most treacherous animals after men."

The German poet, Grillparzer, attained an advanced age. Towards the end of his life, he complained, one day, to his medical man, of not feeling very lively. "You are suffering from nothing," observed the doctor. "No, nothing," said Grillparzer, "except," he added with a smile, "from the want of young blood."

A number of the Berlin Intelligenzblatt contained, some time since, the following advertisement:—"A ladies' orchestra, with or without costume, are open to an engagement. Apply directly, Fehrbellinerstrasse, No. 23, first floor." What can the Berlin police authorities be about to allow such an advertisement?

Rossini, we are told, hit upon an excellent expedient for shortening the audiences he could not avoid granting to a great number of importunate visitors. He had only one chair in his reception-room, and thus no one could sit down and indulge in a long prosy conversation. It was only especially privileged persons whom he sometimes invited to go into the next apartment, and—fetch another chair. Se non è vero, è ben trovato.

One day that there was a dinner-party at Prince Carl of Prussia's country house near Potsdam, Count Dönhoff, the Prince's Chamberlain, whispered to the young Countess von Seydewitz, shortly before the company took their seats: "The gentleman yonder, who will occupy the chair to your left, is Strauss." During the repast, the Countess turned towards the individual thus pointed out, and said, with a most amiable expression of countenance: "I am delighted to meet the celebrated author of The Life of ——." "I beg your pardon, Countess; I am not the author of the work in question; I am ——." "Excuse me," said his fair interlocutress, interrupting him; "How could I be so foolish. I have the pleasure of addressing the composer of the celebrated Vienna waltzes, which ——." "I must once more beg your pardon. You are again mistaken. I am the Rev. Herr Strauss, Royal Chaplain!"

If, when the present number of the Musical World appears, the weather is as hot as it has been for some time past, our readers may peruse with pleasure the following extract from a letter, sent, a winter or two since, by a musician in Königsberg to a friend of his:—

"Your letter reached me only this morning. Locomotion on the railway has been stopped since Wednesday; the workmen were employed a whole day in shovelling away the snow, but more kept falling. This winter is rather too much of a good thing, and I am not at all pleased with our planet. I never knew such cold. Every third pupil that enters the room is a Polar bear, that wants to warm itself. It is something quite usual for two or three wolves to drop in of an evening to tea. If the thermometer is only ten degrees below freezing point, a thaw sets in, so much is Nature out of her reckoning. Formerly, a man had five fingers to his hand; he has now five icicles. I have been obliged to have the keys of my piano scooped out, and live coals put in the cavities. This is not a pleasant place, as you may have heard. Every year we have winter for nine months, and no summer for three. I greet you most Arctically."

Digitized by Google

SIG. TREBBI, a music-publisher of Bologna, has opened in that city two large rooms, where, for fivepence an hour in the daytime, and double that amount in the evening, the lovers of music may execute the newest and most fashionable compositions, music and pianos being provided without extra charge. That the scheme will prove a success is more than we are prepared to affirm. We will content ourselves by observing that, if we wished to locate ourselves at Bologna, we should not rent a palazzo, or even the humblest lodgings, next, or near, to Sig. Trebbi's establishment. We have had occasion, when visiting Margate and other aristocratic sea-side resorts, to learn the effect produced by only one piano when played in the public room by a patroness of the Baths attached to that room. The very thought of such a fair performer, with hair streaming down her back, a vigorous wrist, an unscrupulous ear, and far from perfect execution, fills us even now with horror. But what, in the name of goodness, or rather badness, would be the result, if twenty pianos instead of one were going at the same time? The thought, we repeat, fills us with horror. As King Lear says:

> "O! that way madness lies; let me shun that;
> No more of that."

A CONCERT was given, on the 18th inst., in the new Banqueting Hall of the Cutlers' Company, Sheffield, under the auspices of Mr Charles Harvey. It was numerously attended. The admirable band was that specially engaged for the ball and luncheon during the royal visit. The Fra Diavolo and Der Freischütz overtures were most praiseworthily interpreted, as were the less pretentious items of the programme, such as a waltz of Strauss's, Mr Harvey's own effort at dance music, "The Oakbrook," and Mr Frederic H. Archer's "Triumphal March." The vocalists were Mr Theodore Distin (baritone) and Mdme Nouver, of Manchester. This was the lady's first appearance on a concert stage in Sheffield. It will assuredly not be her last. Mr W. T. Graves played a solo on the cornet, and was much applauded. Mr W. J. Phillips was the pianoforte accompanist, and Mr Harvey himself conducted the orchestra.

MUSICAL KITES IN CENTRAL ASIA.—In Central Asia the amusement of flying kites is as popular as in Europe or America; but it is made to yield a double gratification. It delights the ear by an emission of soft, melodious murmurings, at the same time that it pleases the eye with its graceful, bird-like motions. Each kite is so constructed as to produce the effect of a floating Æolian harp, and thus the flight and the song of winged warblers are both imitated in the ingenious plaything. Major Abbott gives a description of these musical kites in his Narrative of a Journey from Herat to Khiva. "Each kite is a square stretched upon two diagonals of light wood, whose extremities are connected by a tight string, forming the sides of the squares. Over the whole paper is pasted. A loose string upon the upright diagonal receives the string by which the kite is to be held, and a tail is fastened to its lower extremity. The transverse diagonal or cross-stick is then bent back like a strong bow, and fastened by a thread of catgut. Of course, every breeze that passes the kite vibrates this tight cord, and the vibrations are communicated to the highly sonorous frame of the kite. And, as numbers of these kites are left floating in the air all night, the effect is that of aerial music, monotonous, but full of melancholy interest. We suggest," says the Major, "to experimentative youths that they equip their kites with an Æolian attachment, and test their effect on a quiet evening. The wild, wayward music of Æolus is far more enchanting than any that can be drawn from instruments played upon by human fingers

BERLIN.

(From a Correspondent.)

The season was opened at the Royal Operahouse with Der Freischütz, the part of Agathe being sustained by Madlle Reinmann, a new member of the company. All things considered, she got through her task creditably, but failed to produce any marked effect upon her audience.

In addition to Herr R. Wagner's Tristan und Isolde, which, as already announced, is to be produced during the course of the present season, Herr von Hülsen has accepted Herr Goldmark's Königin von Saba, which has been successful at the Imperial Operahouse Vienna, and Das goldene Kreuz, by Herr Ignaz Brüll. The list of older works includes Gluck's Armide, and Hérold's Zampa, with Herr Niemann as the hero of the latter. Miss Minnie Hauck is to sing the part of Aida in Verdi's opera of the same name, and Herr Paul Taglioni is to produce a grand new ballet.

Having obtained from Herr von Hülsen, in whom the acting copyright is vested, permission to play M. Gounod's Faust, Herr Engel, the manager of Kroll's Theatre, did not allow the grass to grow under his feet, but lost no time in profiting by the privilege accorded him. He produced the piece forthwith. It has proved a great hit. Herr Nachbaur is a good Faust, and Madlle Hasselbeck a charming Margarethe, dramatically and vocally. The chorus and orchestra, under the command of Herr Preumayr, acquit themselves well.

It is reported that, next summer, Herr Engel will not have, so to speak, an operatic company of his own. He is said to intend importing the entire company from the Theater an der Wien, Vienna, being doubtless strengthened in his resolve by the marked success recently achieved here by Mesdlles Gallmeyer, Geistinger, and Herr Schweighofer. There are, however, several serious obstacles to be overcome before the project can be realized. One of them is that the operas by Offenbach and Strauss which constitute the greater part of the repertory at the Theater an der Wien, can be played in Berlin at the Friedrich-Wilhelmstädtisches Theater only, and it is doubtful whether the manager of that establishment would cede his rights to Herr Engel.

No candidate has yet presented himself this year for the Meyerbeer Exhibition.

Mad. Lucca has determined to make a "starring" tour through Germany during the winter, and then to retire into private life. She has signed an agreement with Sig. Merelli, who undertakes to give her 3000 marks every time she sings. A Berlin manager is said already to have offered Sig. Merelli 4000 marks a performance for the lady's services, but Sig. Merelli stands out for 5000.

The recent little misunderstanding at Bayreuth is a general topic of conversation. A correspondent of the Berliner Tribüne writes thus in reference to it:—

"Albert Niemann has sent back his part to Richard Wagner, and left suddenly, not to return. Wagner is greatly put out, as he has been corresponding for months with him about the undertaking, and asking his advice upon every event connected with it. Herr Niemann became involved in disputes and differences with Wagner's wife, Mad. Cosima, which were principally occasioned by that lady's peculiar behaviour toward the artists. Several journalists who have been here during the last few weeks could say something on this head if they chose. Mad. Cosima has adopted such a tone with various professional musical critics from Berlin and America, and with the representatives of important literary periodicals, as to render it imperative on them to turn their back forthwith on Bayreuth. They include the very musical critics who for years have exerted themselves to the utmost to forward Wagner's projects, and who have been most active in advocating the Bayreuth enterprise. On the other hand, among all the artists and journalists here, there is only one opinion, a most favourable one, concerning the amiable and courteous behaviour of Wagner himself. One of the feats of which Mad. Cosima may boast is that of frightening away the charming Berlin contralto, Mdlle Marianne Brandt, with whom Wagner himself got up the part of Frikka, now confided to Mad. Grün, and to whom he addressed the most flattering letters concerning the admirable manner in which she realised it."

WIESBADEN.—Herr C. Gramman's new opera of Melusine is to be produced at the Theatre Royal on the 15th September. Herr Jahn, the conductor, lately paid a visit to the composer, in Schieritz, for the purpose of ascertaining his views with regard to several details connected with the getting up of the work.

Digitized by Google

CENTENARIES TO COME.*

Signor Giovanni Paloschi has compiled with great acumen and singular patience a Universal Musical Annual. This Annual, which will form a valuable present to the subscribers of the Gazzetta Musicale for 1876, contains a number of precise dates and memoranda. We may say that no musical event of any importance is omitted in it. The book will be of great use to the unlearned as well as a ready and even necessary manual for writers on musical subjects in all countries. With laudable diligence, the author has taken the greatest care in ascertaining dates, names etc, and in correcting a host of errors which the press has propagated in thousands of works enjoying a high (a too high) reputation.

We take to-day from the yet un-published Annual a page of "Centenaries to Come." The reader will observe that the Boïeldieu Centenary, which falls on the 16th December, 1875, is not included among them because the Annual is not destined to see the light before 1876.

1876.	14th Jan. .	Pietro Francesco Cavalli, died in Venice, 1676. (Second Centenary.)
1878.	3rd July .	Jean-Jacques Rousseau, died at Ermenonville, 1778.
——	17th Nov. .	Johann Nepomuceno Hummel, born at Presburg, 1778.
——	. . .	Antonio Caldara, born at Venice, 1678. (Second Centenary.)
1881.	10th Dec. .	Emanuel Astorga, born at Palermo, 1681. (Second Centenary.)
1882.	20th Jan. .	Daniel François Esprit Auber, born at Caen, 1782.
——	14th April .	Carlo Coccia, born at Naples, 1782.
——	22nd Nov. .	Conradin Kreutzer, born at Messkirch, 1782.
1883.	25th Sept. .	Jean-Philippe Rameau, born at Dijon, 1683. (Second Centenary.)
——	25th Dec. .	Johann Adolph Hasse, died at Venice, 1783.
1884.	18th Feb. .	Nicolò Paganini, born at Genoa, 1784.
——	15th March	Francesco Durante, born at Fratta Maggiore, 1684. (Second Centenary.)
——	5th April .	Ludwig Spohr, born at Brunswick, 1784.
——	14th June .	Francesco Morlacchi, born at Perugia, 1784.
——	1st July .	Friedemann Bach, died at Berlin, 1784.
——	3rd Aug. .	Padre Giambattista Martini, died at Bologna, 1784.
1885.	23rd Feb. .	Georg Friedrich Handel, born at Halle, 1685. (Second Anniversary.)
——	21st March	Johann Sebastian Bach, born at Eisenach, 1685. (Second Centenary.)
——	. . .	Domenico Scarlatti, born at Naples, 1685. (Second Centenary.)
1886.	24th July .	Benedetto Marcello, born at Venice, 1686. (Second Centenary.)
——	19th Aug. .	Nicolò Porpora, born at Naples, 1686. (Second Centenary.)
——	8th Oct. .	Antonio Sacchini, died at Paris, 1786.
——	18th Dec. .	Carl Maria von Weber, born at Eutin, 1786.
——	20th Dec. .	Pietro Raimondi, born at Rome, 1786.
1887.	22nd March	Giovanni Battista Lulli, died at Paris, 1687. (Second Centenary.)
——	15th Nov. .	Christoph Gluck, died at Vienna, 1787.
——	17th Nov. .	Michele Carafa, born at Naples, 1787.
1888.	14th Sept. .	Philipp Emanuel Bach, died at Hamburgh, 1788.
1890.	15th March	Nicola Vaccaj, born at Tolentino, 1790.
1891.	28th Jan. .	Louis-Ferdinand Hérold, born at Paris, 1791.
——	21st Feb. .	Carl Czerny, born at Vienna, 1791.
——	5th Sept. .	Giacomo Meyerbeer, born at Berlin, 1791.
——	5th Sept. .	Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart, died at Vienna, 1791.
1892.	29th Feb. .	Gioachini Rossini, born at Pesaro, 1792.
1894.	2nd Feb. .	Giovanni Pier Luigi da Palestrina, died at Rome, 1594. (Third Centenary.)
——	30th May .	Ignatz Moscheles, born at Prague, 1794.
——	14th June .	Orlando Lasso, died in 1594. (Third Centenary.)
——	. . .	Leonardo Leo, born at San Vito degli Schiavi, 1694. (Second Centenary.)
1895.	16th Aug. .	Heinrich Marschner, born at Zittau, 1795.
——	31st Aug. .	André Philidor, died at London, 1795.
1896.	17th Feb. .	Giovanni Pacini, born at Catania, 1796.
——	. . .	Ferdinando Giorgetti, born at Florence, 1796.
1897.	31st Jan. .	Franz Schubert, born at Vienna, 1797.
——	26th June .	Saverio Mercadante, born at Naples, 1797.
——	29th Nov. .	Gaetano Donizetti, born at Bergamo, 1797.
1897.	. . .	Pasquale Anfossi, died at Rome, 1797.
1899.	27th May .	Fromental Halévy, born at Paris, 1799.
1900.	7th May .	Nicola Piccinni, died at Passy, near Paris, 1800.
1901.	11th Jan. .	Domenico Cimarosa, died at Venice, 1801.
——	1st Nov. .	Vincenzo Bellini, born at Catania, 1801.
1902.	20th Feb. .	Charles de Bériot, born at Louvain, 1802.
——	28th July .	Giuseppe Sarti, died at Berlin, 1802.
1903.	24th July .	Adolphe Adam, born at Paris, 1803.
——	23rd Oct. .	Albrecht Lortzing, born at Berlin, 1803.
1904.	12th Jan. .	Hippolyte Monpou, born at Paris, 1804.
——	2nd May .	Michael Glinka, born near Smolensk, 1804.
——	19th Nov. .	Pietro Guglielmi, died at Rome, 1804.
1905.	28th May .	Luigi Boccherini, did at Madrid, 1805.
——	8th June .	Luigi Ricci, born at Naples, 1805.

* From the Gazetta Musicale di Milano.

A COLLEGE OF MUSIC FOR AMERICA.

We are assured by one, who has had opportunity of knowing, that the "wealthy old bachelor," a man of over eighty, is no "myth," and that, after consulting his physician (Dr Elmer) as to the best way of immortalizing his name in connection with some good work, he has verily devoted his whole fortune of some five or six millions to the foundation of a "College," with a magnificent building, for the musical education of the daughters of America. This scheme, our informant furthermore deposes, has been developed into a free fantasia by the writers in the newspapers, making the wish father to the thought, and that all the reports about calling upon Richard Wagner to become the head of the institution, as well as about Thomas and other prospective professors, are purely the invention of said writers. We trust that it is so; for the idea of placing Wagner at the head of musical education in America, with unbounded millions at his disposal, is too absurd for serious consideration. A College for the unlearning of Music were perhaps a truer title.

Taking the reports as we found them, and trying to realize to our imagination the dazzling descriptions of the proposed building in the Central Park, with Wagner throned there as the genius loci, we in a free and playful way, yet logical, began to develop a little of the "tale without an end" implied in that suggestive theme; it was too tempting, and we could have gone on much further; but imagination shrinks exhausted from the task. One thing, however, we omitted when we spoke of possible professorships: the department of Morals would of course be kept in the exclusive charge of the great head himself ("Music and Morals" doubtless in his thought are one); with this assurance need any mother in our Israel hesitate to entrust her daughter to so excellent a school?

But, Wagner or no Wagner, looking at the matter practically, here are five million dollars, more or less, to be devoted, with the best will no doubt, to musical instruction in this country; and it is indeed most creditable to the projector that he so well appreciates the vital worth of such an element of culture in our great young Republic. What is the wise way of doing it? What were the safest investment of so vast a sum for such a noble object? Is it precisely prudent to risk the whole in one vague ambitious venture? Might not more good be realized by distributing it among several more modest and more definite experiments? Here, for example, is Boston, is every city in the Union, with the exception of New York, without a permanent orchestra; a fund of a few hundred thousands for such a purpose, in each musical centre, would be an invaluable means of culture. Or, again, suppose that Harvard University, and Yale, and Cornell, and more, could have a few hundred thousands for the endowment not merely of a professorship, but of a full faculty of music, —would not this be a more practical and sure way of beginning the good work, at several points at once, each with its own distinct and compassable aim? Among a dozen such plantings there would be a reasonable chance that two or three at least would actually take root and yield increase. In two or three, if not in all, the providential man might turn up, the man with the right organizing, quickening genius for the work; and two or three successes, or one only, would be a blessing to the country and a gain for Art. Whereas, invested in a single showy institution, with parties plotting, clamouring for management—there are parties in music, and some of them mean "business" more than they mean music —the danger is not slight that the munificent endowment would be all thrown away.—Dwight's Journal.

Digitized by Google

BAYREUTH.

Besides the Grand-National-Festival-Stage-Play-Theatre erected—and christened—by Herr Richard Wagner, this small town, though not numbering more than 17,000 inhabitants, can boast of two other theatres. The older of the two is the Royal Operahouse, built in 1748, by the Margrave Friedrich, in the richest and most luxurious rococo style. On beholding it, the visitor might fancy himself in the once Royal Theatres of Trianon and Versailles, and almost expect to see the curtain draw up for the performance of one of the Watteau-like Pastorals in which the Grand Monarch and his Courtiers delighted. The second theatre is within the grounds of the Hermitage, about a mile and a half from the town. It is an amphitheatre hewn out of the rock, and, if tradition is to be trusted, Voltaire once acted there. As for Herr Wagner's own Theatre, it stands on a charming eminence surrounded by woods and forests, access being gained to it by about twenty minutes' walk through a deliciously shady avenue. The gas machinery and fittings were made in Frankfort, and tried, for the first time, at the rehearsals on the 15th inst. There are more than 2,500 jets for the stage alone. The auditorium, though less brilliantly illuminated, takes, with the other parts of the house, 1,500 more. Great precautions have been adopted against fire, and immense masses of water can be thrown, at a very short notice, on all parts of the building. At some distance from the latter, a supply of steam will always be ready for scenic effects. By means of certain ingenious contrivances, the whole stage can be enveloped in vapour, which, by means of variously coloured lights can be made to imitate fogs, clouds, rainbows, and so on. It could also be employed, in case of necessity, to aid in extinguishing fire. We are not informed how this vapour will affect the singers and—the audience. No less than 6,666 metres of pipes are requisite to convey to the Theatre the gas, water, and steam, for the above objects.

A FRENCH SINGER AT THE BERLIN OPERAHOUSE.*

On Friday, June 13, 1851, I arrived in Berlin. My first visit was to Meyerbeer. He was ill, but we had a long conversation together. In the evening, I saw Faust, a drama I did not know. It interested me greatly by the boldness of its conception and the admirable manner in which it was performed. I shall think of this same Faust; perhaps a drama might be made out of it for Paris, but all the philosophical reflections would have to be omitted, and the fantastic element, as furnishing a good opportunity for display, brought prominently forward. I reside in the Hôtel de St Petersbourg, Unter den Linden. A man called on me, and asked me to give him tickets for my first appearance. After talking of one thing and the other, he remarked that the Berlin public were very cold, and that it was absolutely necessary to dispel their frigidity by certain vigorous movements of the hands. I recognised in my visitor the chief of the Berlin claque. With us matters are not managed so discreetly. I thanked him politely for his visit, remarking that I was not acquainted with this "German custom."—21st June. A bad day. At 10 o'clock, rehearsal of Les Huguenots. I was really detestable; no voice in consequence of indisposition. And Meyerbeer himself was there! He introduced me to the orchestra, who greeted me with applause. After I had sung, however, the applause ceased. I felt after the rehearsal like one damned. Berlin already displeased me. I fancied that every one in the street must read my disgrace in my face. Bacher, a friend of mine, who induced me to sing in Germany, had come from Vienna to hear me. And then such a falling off! I sat the whole day at home, with death in my heart.—22nd June. My success in Les Huguenots was great. After the romance in the first act, the ice was broken. The public, said to be generally so cold, applauded valiantly, like paid claqueurs. The duet in the second act, and the septet went well. The fourth act put the crown on everything. Madlle Wagner and I were called on three times in succession; something unusual for Berlin. After the fifth act, the applause resembled a regular ovation.—Madlle Wagner is a tall slim lady, a niece of Wagner the composer, who is beginning to attract attention in Germany. In Paris, her figure would, perhaps, be considered too tall; but she is so nobly plastic, that she produces the greatest effects. She studied under Garcia, who greatly developed more especially her chest notes. She possesses a great deal of fire and a lively imagination; in a word, she is an artist. As I sat at her feet, she leaned over me, and her beautiful long locks almost enveloped me completely; I saw nothing more and felt like a nightingale caught in a cage made of hair.—After this success, I was myself again; I once more became the "Parisian star" worthy of the reputation by which I had been preceded. Bacher brought me on the stage a bouquet from Meyerbeer's mother.

* This somewhat self-complacent extract is from the Diary of M. Roger, the once famous tenor.

HERR DANNREUTHER ON OPERA.

In the houses of Count Bardi and Jacopo Corsi at Florence, towards the end of the sixteenth and beginning of the seventeenth centuries, we find enthusiastic scholars and amateurs of music, tired of fruitless theorizing, engaged in practical efforts to resuscitate that which they conceived to be Greek music. An attempt at a declamatory setting of the scene of Ugolino, in Dante's Inferno, was made by Galileo, the father of the celebrated mathematician; he wrote it for one voice, and performed it with an accompaniment on the viola. Caccini and Viadana followed in his footsteps; but the first result of any real importance was attained by Peri, who set to music an intermezzo called Daphne, and made use of a style which became the progenitor of our recitative. Anno 1600, on the occasion of Marie de'Medici's marriage with Henry IV. of France, "una tragedia per musica," called Euridice, composed by Peri and Caccini, was performed, and received with unbounded enthusiasm. It was, in fact, the first opera. It contained all the elements of the modern opera—recitatives, airs, ballet tunes in an embryonic state. The instruments representing the orchestra on that occasion were a harpsichord, a large guitar, a viol, a large lute, and several flutes; all of which were placed behind the scenes. * * * * * * *

From the first opera to the last, there are two conflicting tendencies noticeable. On the one hand we see the high and somewhat vague aspirations of men of literary culture who wish to transform the opera into a kind of ideal drama on the Greek model; this is in the main Wagner's side, also that of Gluck and his immediate successors, and in some measure, though quite unconsciously, also the side of Mozart, Beethoven, and Weber. On the other hand there is the frivolous leaning in the direction of vulgar theatrical amusement, wherein all imaginable artistic luxuries, music, dancing, acting, painting, costumes, fireworks, and what not, are muddled together, so as to produce a few hours of intoxicating diversion. This is the side represented by Rossini, Meyerbeer, Verdi, Offenbach, and so on, down the scale of operatic celebrities.

Oh! the merry days of childhood,
When the heart was free from care;
When we wandered through the wildwood
And all around was fair;

For the sun itself shone brighter
Than we ever see it now,
Perchance our hearts were lighter
And less care oppressed the brow.

For worldly cares are evil tares
Which choke the better seed,
Take root in the soil, but only to spoil
The harvest with bitter weed.

Beware! beware! 'tis constant care
Alone can the evil stay;
Keep watch and ward, the closest guard,
O'er the mind by night and day.

Let every thought, with mischief fraught,
Be banished from the heart;
That nought remain to cause us pain
When soul and body part.

Be it our prayer, that God's own care
Preserve us still from sin;
And ripen fast, until the last,
The seed He sows within. J. R. R.

NAPLES.—A buffo opera, Mamma Angot di Constantinopoli, by Sig. Mugnone, has proved a failure.

Digitized by Google

THE UNIVERSITY COLLEGE OF WALES: PUBLIC MEETING.

A public meeting was held, a short time since, in the Town Hall, Aberaeron, for the purpose of laying before that part of the county the claims of the University College of Wales. There was a good attendance. The chair was taken by Mr Brinley Richards, who said it was generally considered to be a great mistake when a person was asked to preside over a meeting to begin with an apology, but he was bound to do so on this occasion because he had been given very brief notice that he was to be asked to preside. It had been so brief that he was not prepared to make any remarks, but he was sure his shortcomings would be amply redeemed by the gentlemen who supported him, who would be prepared to make statements concerning the nature of the institution on behalf of which the meeting was called. They were assembled that afternoon to lay before the inhabitants of that town the claims which the University College of Wales had upon their consideration as an institution which was intended to supply a real and existing want in the Principality, and one that ought to appeal to the hearts of all Welshmen.

After a spirited speech from Mr Hugh Owen, the Rev. J. Griffiths addressed the meeting at some considerable length. In conclusion he moved the following resolution: "That this meeting, after hearing the statement of Mr Hugh Owen, rejoices in the success of the University College of Wales as a means of advancing the cause of high class education on a national and unsectarian basis."

The resolution was seconded by the Rev. W. Evans. After several other speeches in favour of the college, Mr Hugh Owen, in moving a vote of thanks to the chairman, referred to the Wrexham Eisteddfod, which he believed would be pre-eminent in the history of Eisteddfodau in Wales. Preparations were being made for it on a scale unprecedented, a sum of £2,000 had been subscribed for prizes, and there was reason to believe that Royalty would be present on one of the days. He also remarked that the committee of the Pwllheli Eisteddfod had determined to devote the surplus funds to the University College of Wales. The Rev. Evan Morris seconded the resolution and it was carried. The Chairman in acknowledging a vote of thanks said the majority of meetings were held to benefit certain individuals or in favour of some political scheme, but on that occasion they were assembled as Welshman to show their earnest sympathy with one of the best proposals, one of the noblest schemes of the nineteenth century.

The proceedings then terminated.

—o—

WAIFS.

A bachelor's soliloquy—Misfortunes never come single.

It is said that a regular series of concerts will be given next winter at the Alexandra Palace.

The children in Florida, U. S. say that they live on sweet potatoes in the summer, and on strangers in the winter.

M. Ernest Reyer, musical critic of the Débats, has just had the misfortune to lose his mother, who has died at Marseilles.

They stopped at the restaurant for dinner. They were newly engaged undoubtedly, for he blew on the mustard to cool it for her.

The well-known band of the Belgian Regiment of Guides, under the direction of M. Staps, has just made a most successful tour through Holland.

MM. Aimé Dollfus and Edouard Drumont, the authors of Je déjeune à midi, have just offered a new one-act piece to the Gymnase, entitled Dans le bleu !, which is accepted.

The Royal Orphéon Society of Brussels, conducted by M. Ed Bauwens, was to take part in the vocal competition to be held at Limoges (France) to-morrow, the 29th inst.

Mdme Nilsson passed through Paris on her way to Mont Doré (Puy-de-Dôme) from the Isle of Wight, where she had the honour of being received by the Princess of Wales at Osborne.

"Where," says a Yankee editor, "is that elderly scamp who has howled for sixty-three years for an old-fashioned winter? Where is the old reptile that we can get at him? How we should like to run him through a plaining-mill worked by ice-water, and cut him open with a snow plough, and fill him full of snowballs, and sew him up with an icicle, and strap him to the North Pole until the spring rains released him—the awful wretch!"

This is the time of the year when mothers and daughters endeavour to give the breakfast table chat a watering-place tint, while paterfamilias eats hastily and departs promptly to his business.

Herr Josef Gung'l arrived in London, via Hamburgh, on Wednesday, to fulfil an engagement at the Promenade Concerts, Covent Garden. He will appear for the first time this evening.

"Mayor Tewksbury is a brick," observes the Boston Post. Whereupon the Chicago Tribune adds: "Our Mayor is not quite that, but he's a pretty hard man, nevertheless."

A work supposed to be by Sir Joshua Reynolds has been discovered in Chicago. It is a portrait of Mrs Sherman's great-grandfather, and was painted by Sir Joshua, if at all, in the prime of his powers.

The principal artists of the operatic company which, under the conductorship of Sir Julius Benedict, will go round the Provinces this autumn, are Mesdlles Albani, Thalberg, Ghiotti, MM. Naudin, Pavani, and Maurel.

How soon some women change their minds respecting their husbands! Mrs Spinn was for ever telling her husband that he wasn't worth the salt in his bread, but, when he got killed in a railway collision, she sued the company for a thousand pounds.

M. Duquesnel, of the Odéon, has engaged two of the pupils of the Conservatoire who attracted much attention at the last competitions—Mdlle Chartier, who obtained the second prize in comedy, and Mdlle Kolb, who was also much applauded.

Mr John Boosey's Ballad Concerts will commence, at St James's Hall, on Jan. 5th. Among the artists engaged will be Mesdes Lemmens-Sherrington, Patey, Misses Wynne, Julia Elton, Messrs Sims Reeves, Edward Lloyd, and Foli.

The Stanislas Academy, Nantes, has conferred the title of Corresponding Associate on M. Oscar Comettant, Member of the Congress of Americanists, for his work entitled: La Musique en Amérique avant la Découverte par Christophe Colomb.

Old Baron Rothschild gave a louis to a charity-fund, and the person receiving it said, "Ah, Monsieur le Baron, you gave only a louis, and your son gave five!" "And reasonably enough," said the Baron; "his father is a millionaire, and I am only a poor orphan."

The management of the French Vaudeville Theatre has been resumed by the former director. The sharing company of artists realised an important sum, valued at 60,000 francs, after paying all expenses and salaries, during the two months for which its direction lasted.

Artists have been invited to compete for the execution of two statues representing the Tragic Muse and the Comic Muse, for the façade of the new Théâtre des Célestins, Lyons. The sketch will have to be sent in to the Prefecture of the Rhone by the 15th of November.

The Academy states that the Marquis of Lorne has in the press a narrative poem of about 3,000 lines, called "Guido and Lita: A Tale of the Riviera," founded on an incident in one of the many Saracen inroads which troubled the coast of Provence during the 10th century. This volume will be published, in the autumn, by Macmillan.

In future, visitors to the Parisian Theatres will no longer have to run the gauntlet of the promiscuous crowd of seedy individuals offering either to sell or purchase tickets. Henceforth, before indulging in this occupation, everyone must have a permission from the Prefecture of Police, and this permission will be accorded only very sparingly.

The artists retained for the approaching Musical Festival at Norwich are—Mdlle Emma Albani, Mdlle Mathilde Enequist, Mdme Lemmens-Sherrington, Mdlle Anna de Belocca, Miss Enriquez, and Mdme Patey; Mr Edward Lloyd, Mr Henry Guy, Mr Minns, Mr Wadmore, and Signor Foli; M. Sainton (violin) and Mr T. Harper (trumpet). Sir J. Benedict wields the bâton.

ALEXANDRA PALACE.—On Monday next there will be a trotting match on the new track. On Tuesday, the great Fête in aid of the City and Metropolitan Police Orphanage will be held, when the attractions will be varied and numerous, including a concert, conducted by Mr H. Weist Hill, in which Miss Banks, Miss Emily Mott, Mr Wilford Morgan, and other popular vocalists, will take part. The Moore and Burgess Minstrels will repeat their new programme; Mr George Conquest will give one of his clever performances; the Jackley Troupe will contribute with their graceful gymnastic exercises; Captain Dight will make another balloon ascent; and the bands of fourteen divisions of the Metropolitan Police will play in the grounds during the day. On Thursday, in the theatre, Mr J. Clark and Miss Furtado will appear in The Bonnie Fishwife and in the sketch of Sairey Gamp, from Dickens's Martin Chuzzlewit. On the last three days of the week there will be a great International Fruit Show, when prizes to the amount of upwards of £600 will be awarded. On Saturday, Our Boys will be repeated; and, in the evening, the Venetian Fête and Illumination of the Lake, which gave so much satisfaction on Thursday, the 19th inst., will be given, with improved effects.

Digitized by Google

An "able seaman" from Ardnamurchan was at the tiller of his sloop one night, shortly after the introduction of coloured signal lights on ships. A steamer was approaching, and Archy saw the green and red lights for the first time at sea. He astonished his shipmates by yelling out, "Hard-a-port! hard-a-port! we're gaun richt intae the 'pothecary's shop at Gourock!"

It is stated that some valuable autographs of Galileo have been found at Milan among the State archives. These autographs are not included in the Palatine collection, but refer to his negotiations with the Spanish Government relative to ceding the application of his method for applying longitude to navigation. The letters also relate to Galileo's journey to Rome in 1624 to pay homage to Pope Urban VIII.

Boston babies are weaned early and fed on fish, says the Brooklyn Argus. They accumulate much phosphorus. A chronicler, mentioning the circumstance of a group of Boston children going upstairs to bed in the dark, says that their heads appeared to be surrounded by an atmosphere of luminiferous ether, and that they reminded him of a procession of straggling meteors.

The Choir states that the successful candidate for the first election to the Sir John Goss Exhibition, to be held for three years in the Royal Academy of Music, is A. Ernest Ford, formerly a chorister in Salisbury Cathedral. Willie Hodge was highly commended; as were, also, R. W. Wilkinson, formerly a chorister in St James's Chapel Royal, C. J. Dunster, and F. Broad.

Mr Lyster was to open on the 28th June, in Sydney, New South Wales, with an opera bouffe company. The list of works to be produced included La Fille de Madame Angot, Giroflé-Girofla, and operas by Offenbach and Hervé.—The new Prince of Wales' Theatre is progressing very rapidly, and there is every likelihood that the lessee, Mr Lazer, will be able to re-open it in November.

It was a graceful compliment that "Papa" Haydn paid to a great female vocalist. Reynolds had painted her as Cecilia listening to celestial music. Looking at the picture, Haydn said, "It is like her, but there is a strange mistake." "What is it?" asked Reynolds. "Why, you have painted her listening to the angels, when you ought to have represented the angels listening to her."

The Blondinette Minstrels are about to make a tour of the provinces, commencing at Ipswich. Among the names of the performers is that of a young artiste well known as a concert singer, Miss Florence Ashton, who recently made a most successful operatic début, while with Miss Susanna Cole's company, as Mdlle Lange, in a drawing-room version of Lecocq's Fille de Mdme Angot.

The Musical Standard hears that the late Mr R. L. Pearsall has left several madrigals, part-songs, &c., hitherto unpublished, and only recently accessible, and that these have been purchased from the executors by Mr Trimnell, of Clifton, who intends issuing them in a cheap form. Amongst the part-songs highly mentioned are "Brave Lord Willoughby," and "Gaudeamus igitur."

In his Ariadne Florentina, just published, Mr Ruskin gives an interesting description of three pieces of Florentine needlework, which attracted his attention in the bedroom in which he slept at the King's Arm's Hotel, Lancaster. Mr Ruskin, while staying at this "good old inn," was engaged in revising a lecture on "Design in the Florentine Schools of Engraving," and he thus seizes the opportunity of illustrating his subject:—"On the walls of the little room where I finally revise this lecture hangs an old silken sampler of great grandame's work; representing the domestic life of Abraham; chiefly the stories of Isaac and Ishmael. Sarah at her tent-door, watching, with folded arms, the dismissal of Hagar; above, in a wilderness full of fruit trees, birds, and butterflies, little Ishmael lying at the root of a tree, and the spent bottle under another; Hagar in prayer, and the angel appearing to her out of a wreathed line of gloomily undulating clouds, which, with a dark-rayed sun in the midst, surmount the entire composition in two arches, out of which descend shafts of (I suppose) beneficent rain; leaving, however, room, in the corner opposite to Ishmael's angel, for Isaac's, who stays Abraham in the sacrifice; the ram in the thicket, the squirrel in the plum-tree above him, and the grapes, pears, apples, roses, and daisies of the foreground, being all wrought with involution of such ingenious needlework as may well rank, in the patience, the natural skill, and the innocent pleasure of it, with the truest works of Florentine engraving. Nay, the actual tradition of many of the forms of ancient art is in many places evident—as, for instance, in the spiral summits of the flames of the wood on the altar, which are like a group of first-springing fern. On the wall opposite is a smaller composition, representing Justice with her balance and sword, standing between the sun and moon, with a background of pinks, borage, and corncockle; a third is only a cluster of tulips and iris, with two Byzantine peacocks; but the spirits of Penelope and Ariadne reign vivid in all the work—and the richness of pleasurable fancy is as great still, in these silken labours, as in the marble arches and golden roof of the cathedral of Monreale."

M. Caillot, the barytone of the Théâtre-Lyrique and the Athenée, is dead. For two years previous to his decease he suffered from a bronchial affection, and had completely lost his voice. He was a pupil of M. Bataille, and considered a young singer of considerable promise.

With a view to the better protection of copyright in dramatic works, a declaration has been signed by Lord Derby and the Marquis d'Harcourt cancelling the paragraph in the convention of 1851, by which it was understood that the protection stipulated for by the Convention was not intended to prohibit fair imitations or adaptations of dramatic works to the stage in England and France respectively, but were only meant to prevent piratical translation.

The Orpheonic Festival to be given to-morrow, the 29th inst., in the gardens of the Tuileries, for the benefit of the sufferers by the inundations, will be one of the most curious exhibitions of popular musical art ever known. A principal feature in the programme will be the execution, by all the associations combined into one, and numbering some 3000 singers, of the "Hymne à la Charité," dedicated by permission to the Maréchale Mac-Mahon. The music is by M. Léon Gastinel, and the words are by M. T. Saint-Félix. The Railway Companies will run special cheap trains.

France is determined not to be behind other nations in erecting statues to her great men. The bronze image of Chateaubriand, which will be raised at St Malo on the 5th of next month, amid great literary pomp, is finished. It represents the author of the Génie du Christianisme sitting in meditation on a rock, with the waves at his feet. As a politician, Chateaubriand was a chameléon. He was the friend of Béranger, as well as of Mdme Récamier. Under the First Empire he was the proprietor of a paper called Le Mercure. His Mémoires d'Outre-Tombe, which appeared under the Monarchy of July, were bought by M. de Giradin for £4,000, a handsome sum in those days.

SHANKLIN (Isle of Wight).—On the 20th inst., Dr Sloman gave an organ recital at St Saviour's, on the beautiful organ lately erected by Messrs Walker. The programme was selected from the works of ancient and modern writers for that instrument. It also included a selection from Dr Sloman's new cantata, Supplication and Praise.

BRESCIA.—Sig. Verdi's Aida has been very successful here.

PESTH.—A new opera by Carl Huber will be the first novelty at the National Theatre. The libretto is founded upon an adventure in the life of King Mathias Corvinus.

Advertisements.

THE VOICE & SINGING.

BY

ADOLFO FERRARI.

THE FORMATION AND CULTIVATION OF THE VOICE FOR SINGING.

Price 12s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, REGENT STREET, W.

"The remarkable qualities of this book are the author's freedom from conventional trammels, the strong sense of his opinions, and the novelty yet evident soundness of his precepts; his work has consequently come into general use as a manual of vocal instruction."—Daily News.

THE ART OF SINGING.

New Edition, Revised and Improved, of

A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR

THE VOICE.

By T. A. WALLWORTH.

A Method as used by the Author in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which he has cultivated the voices of his Pupils, Mdlle Alwina Valleria, Miss Lucy Franklein, and other successful Vocalists.

Full Music Size, price 7s.

London: HAMMOND & Co. (late JULLIEN), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his Residence, 36, Wimpole Street.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE,

For invigorating and enriching the voice, and removing affections o the throat.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE is universally acknowledged to be the most valuable remedy for sore throat, hoarseness and relaxed throat. It should always be taken before singing or reciting, as it strengthens the vocal organs. It is most extensively prescribed by the faculty for the throat and voice. Dr Lewis of Basingstoke says he finds them most efficacious, and in Dr Copland's Dictionary of Practical Medicine (Longman & Co.), they are strongly recommended at pages 872 and 1492. They are used by all the greatest vocalists and orators in Europe, and have been established over a quarter of a century. Testimonials from Patti, Grisi, Lablache, Santley, &c. Sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d. by all Chemists throughout the United Kingdom and the Colonies.

Digitized by Google

NEW SONGS.

THE LAST FAREWELL.

New Song by J. L. HATTON.

Sung by Mdlle ALBANI, at the Floral Hall Concerts, with the greatest possible success. In C and E. Price 4s.

NEW SONGS
BY ARTHUR SULLIVAN.

SWEETHEARTS. In A♭ and B♭. Sung by E. LLOYD 4s
THE JUDGE'S SONG. From Trial by Jury. Sung by Mr. FRED SULLIVAN 4s
TENDER AND TRUE. In E♭ and F. Sung by EDITH WYNNE 4s
THE DISTANT SHORE. In E♭, F, and G 4s
THOU ART WEARY. In D minor and F minor ... 4s
THOU'RT PASSING HENCE... ... ... 4s

NEW SONGS
BY VIRGINIA GABRIEL.

CLOVELLY. Words from "Songs for Sailors." Dedicated to H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh... ... 4s
SOWING AND REAPING. Sacred Song 3s
SHE CAME LIKE A DREAM. Sung by Madame ENRIQUEZ 3s
THE WHITE DOVE 2s 6d

NEW SONGS
BY FAVOURITE COMPOSERS.

YES AND NO ... ... LOUISA GRAY 3s
MY LADYE ... ... AMY COMPTON 3s
IN THE TWILIGHT HOURS „ 3s
ELSIE'S DREAM ... JOSEPH L. ROECKEL 3s
BESIDE THE SEA ... „ „ 3s
SUMMER WINDS ... „ „ 3s
SO LONG AGO... ... GEORGE BARKER 3s
NINETTE ... ... „ „ 3s
THE ENTREATY The Lady CLARENCE PAGET 3s
GLAMOUR ... ... „ „ 3s
SWEET LISETTE ... ... J. L. ROECKEL 3s
THE CHILDREN IN THE WOOD „ 3s

CHAPPELL & CO.,
50, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON.

ROYAL
ITALIAN OPERA.

PRODUCTION OF WAGNER'S
'LOHENGRIN.'

The Books of Airs (in Two Books), arranged for Pianoforte, with ad. lib. accompaniments for Flute, Violin, and Violoncello, by

W. HUTCHINS CALLCOTT

PRICE.

Solos ... ... 5*s. each.*
Duets ... ... 6*s.* „
Accompaniments ... ... 1*s.* „

LONDON:
HUTCHINGS & ROMER,
9, Conduit Street, Regent Street, W.

Digitized by Google

In 74 Numbers, price One Penny, or in One Volume, cloth, gilt edges, price 7s. 6d.

MOTETS FOR THE YEAR.

A COLLECTION OF OFFERTORIES,

WITH APPROPRIATE WORDS FOR EVERY SUNDAY AND DAY OF OBLIGATION DURING THE YEAR.

Edited and Dedicated (by permission) to the Right Rev. J. DANELL, D.D., Lord Bishop of Southwark, by

W. M. LUTZ,

ORGANIST OF ST. GEORGE'S CATHEDRAL, SOUTHWARK.

CONTENTS.

1	1st Sunday in Advent	Ad te levavi	Bs. Solo or Qrtt.	Webbe
2	2nd Sunday in Advent	Deus tu convertens	Qrtt. or Chorus	Henry Smart
3	3rd Sunday in Advent	Juste et pie vivamus	Duet or Chorus	Webbe
4	4th Sunday in Advent	Ave Maria	Solo or Chorus	W. M. Lutz
5	Any Sunday during Advent	Rorate	Chorus & Solo	Webbe
6	Christmas Day	Adeste Fideles	Solo & Chorus	Webbe
7	Sunday within Octave of Christmas	Attolite	Solo & Chorus	Webbe
8	Circumcision	Tui sunt coeli	Ten. So. & Chor.	A. Sullivan
9	Epiphany	Reges Tharsis	Chorus	W. M. Lutz
10	Sunday within Octave	Jubilate	Chorus	W. M. Lutz
11	Holy Name	Jesu dulcis	Qrtt. & Chorus	Beethoven
12	3rd Sunday after Epiphany	Dextera Domini	Chorus	Schumann
13	Septuagesima Sunday	Bonum est	Solo & Chorus	Benedict
14	Sexagesima Sunday	Perfice	Solo or Chorus	Webbe
15	Quinquagesima Sunday	Super flumina	Soli & Chorus	Webbe
16	1st Sunday in Lent	Ecce nunc tempus	Duet or Chorus	Webbe
17	2nd Sunday in Lent	Preces populi	Chorus	Webbe
18	3rd Sunday in Lent	Justitiæ	Chorus or Qrtt.	Mendelssohn
1	4th Sunday in Lent	Ad te levavi	Bs. Solo or Qrtt.	Webbe
19	Passion Sunday	Stabat Mater	Chorus	Webbe
20	Palm Sunday	Improperium	Chorus	André
21	Easter Sunday (Gradual)	Hæc dies	Chorus or Trio. T.T. & B.	Webbe
22	,, ,, (Offertory)	Victimæ	Chorus	Webbe
23	Low Sunday	Angelus Domini	Chorus	André
24	2nd Sunday after Easter	Deus misereatur	Chorus & Soli	Webbe
25	3rd Sunday after Easter	Lauda anima	Solo or Chorus	Webbe
10	4th Sunday after Easter	Jubilate	Chorus	W. M. Lutz
26	5th Sunday after Easter	Benedictmus	Duet or Chorus	Webbe
27	Ascension Day	Ascendit Deus	Duet or Chorus	Webbe
28	Sunday within Octave of Ascension Day	Rex Gloriæ	Duet or Chorus	Webbe
29	Whit Sunday (Gradual)	Emitte / Veni sancte spiritus	Trio or Chorus / Duet or Chorus	Webbe
30	,, ,, (Offertory)	Confirma hoc Deus	Soli or Chorus	W. M. Lutz
31	Trinity Sunday	Benedictus est	Chorus	W. M. Lutz
32	1st Sunday after Pentecost	Intende voci	Chorus	André
33	Corpus Christi (Gradual)	Lauda Sion	Duet or Chorus	Webbe
34	,, ,, (Offertory)	O sacrum convivium	Solo	Webbe
35	2nd Sunday after Pentecost	Domine convertere	Soli & Chorus	W. M. Lutz
36	3rd Sunday after Pentecost	Protector	Duet	Webbe
37	4th Sunday after Pentecost	Illumina	Solo or Chorus	W. M. Lutz
38	St Peter and St Paul	Roma felix	Duet or Chorus	Webbe
39	5th Sunday after Pentecost	Audi hymnum	Solo & Chorus	Webbe
14	6th Sunday after Pentecost	Perfice	Solo or Chorus	Webbe
40	7th Sunday after Pentecost	Sicut in holocaustis	Qrtt. or Chorus	Mozart
41	8th Sunday after Pentecost	Tu es gloria	Bass Solo	Webbe
18	9th Sunday after Pentecost	Justitiæ	Chorus or Qrtt.	Mendelssohn
1	10th Sunday after Pentecost	Ad te levavi	Solo or Quartett	Webbe
42	11th Sunday after Pentecost	Exurgat Deus	Chorus	Webbe
43	Assumption	Assumpta est	Chorus	Neukom
44	12th Sunday after Pentecost	Benedicam	Chorus	Eybler
45	13th Sunday after Pentecost	In te speravi	T. So. (& Chor. ad lib.)	W. M. Lutz
36	14th Sunday after Pentecost	Protector	Duet	Webbe
13	15th Sunday after Pentecost	Bonum est	Solo or Chorus	Benedict
46	16th Sunday after Pentecost	Domine in auxilium	Soli & Chorus	W. M. Lutz
47	17th Sunday after Pentecost	Oravi	Soli & Chorus	Dr Crookal
48	18th Sunday after Pentecost	Timebunt	Chorus	W. M. Lutz
49	19th Sunday after Pentecost	Si ambulavero	Bs. Solo (Chor. ad lib.)	W. M. Lutz
15	20th Sunday after Pentecost	Super flumina	Chorus	Webbe
50	21st Sunday after Pentecost	Vir erat hus	Chorus	W. M. Lutz
51	22nd Sunday after Pentecost	Recordare	Solo & Chorus	Führer
52	All Saints (Gradual)	Tibi omnes angeli	Chorus	Webbe
53	,, (Offertory)	Justorum	Solo	Webbe
54	23rd Sunday after Pentecost	Hæc dicit Dominus	Soli & Chorus	Webbe
55	Nativity	Beata	Chorus	W. M. Lutz
56	Holy Name	Ave Maria	Solo	Cherubini
57	Seven Dolors	Stabat Mater	Chorus	Gregorian
4	Rosary	Ave Maria	Solo or Chorus	W. M. Lutz
55	Maternity	Beata	Chorus	W. M. Lutz
58	Purity	Succurre miseris	Duet & Chorus	Webbe
4	Patronage	Ave Maria	Solo or Chorus	W. M. Lutz
59	Confessor	Ecce sacerdos	Duet	Webbe
60	Martyrs	Qui seminant	Duet & Chorus	Webbe
61	One Martyr	Justus ut palma	Qrtt. or Chorus	W. M. Lutz
62	Apostles	Gloria et honore	Qrtt. or Chorus	W. M. Lutz
63	Virgins and Holy Women	Diffusa	Qrtt. or Chorus	W. M. Lutz
64		Asperges	Chorus	Gregorian
65	In Paschal time	Vidi aquam	Duet or Chorus	Webbe
66	Prayer for the Queen	Domine salvum fac	Chorus	Martini

APPENDIX.

67	Magnificat	Soli & Chor.	Webbe
68	Alma (from 1st Sunday in Advent till the Purification)	Solo & Chor.	Webbe
69	Ave Regina (from the Purification till Maunday Thursday)	Soli & Chor.	Webbe
70	Regina Coeli (from Holy Saturday till Trinity Eve)	Soli & Chor.	Webbe
71	Salve Regina (from Trinity Eve till Advent)	Soli & Chor.	Webbe
72	O Salutaris	Chorus	Webbe
73	O sacrum convivium	Dt. or Chor.	Webbe
74	Tantum ergo	Chorus	Webbe

Also, Just Published,

SHORT MASSES FOR SMALL CHOIRS.

EDITED BY SIR J. BENEDICT.

A COLLECTION OF MASSES, FOR ONE, TWO, THREE, AND FOUR VOICES,

WITH ORGAN ACCOMPANIMENTS.

Price Sixpence each, or in One Volume, cloth, price 5s

CONTENTS.

1	Webbe's Mass	(3 voices)	in A.
2	,, ,,	,,	in D.
3	,, ,,	,,	in B flat.
4	,, ,,	,,	in F.
5	,, ,,	,,	in C.
6	,, ,,	,,	in D minor.
7	Webbe's Mass	(4 voices)	in G.
8	Missa de Angelis	(Unison)	in D.
9	Dumont's Mass	,,	in D minor.
10	Missa in Dominicis diebus per annum	,,	in D minor.
11	Missa pro defunctis	,,	in F.
12	Wesley's Gregorian Mass	(4 voices)	in G.

These Masses are published in a cheap form, in order to meet a growing demand for simple, melodious, harmonized music. In the case where the register has been found too high for boys' voices, supplementary notes have been inserted.

They are thus adapted as well for Chancel Choirs, as for those in which the Soprano parts are taken by female voices.

LONDON: BOOSEY & CO., 295, REGENT STREET, W.

Printed by HENDERSON, RAIT, AND FENTON, at No. 73 & 74, Marylebone Lane, Oxford Street, in the Parish of Marylebone, in the County of Middlesex.
Published by WILLIAM DUNCAN DAVISON, at the Office, 244, Regent Street, Saturday, Aug. 28, 1875.

The Musical World.

(REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.)

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST, 20s. PER ANNUM,
Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to DUNCAN DAVISON & CO., 244, Regent Street, London, W.

VOL. 53—No. 36. SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 4, 1875. PRICE {4d. Unstamped. 5d. Stamped.

ROYAL PRINCESS'S THEATRE.

CARL ROSA OPERA COMPANY.

MR CARL ROSA begs to announce a Season of Opera, beginning SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 11TH, and terminating SATURDAY, OCTOBER 30TH.

Engagements made:

MISS ROSE HERSEE, MISS JULIA GAYLORD,
MISS ANNIE CARINA, MISS CORA STUART.
(Her first appearance on any stage.)

MISS JOSEPHINE YORKE, MISS LUCY FRANKLEIN,
(Her first appearance in England.)
MRS AYNSLEY COOK, AND MDLLE OSTAVA TORRIANI.

MR D. H. BATES, MR HENRY NORDBLOM,
(His first appearance in England.)
MR CHARLES LYALL, AND MR FRED. C. PACKARD.
(His first appearance in London.)

MR CAMPOBELLO, MR F. H. CELLI, MR LUDWIG,
MR AYNSLEY COOK, MR SNAZELLE,
MR ARTHUR HOWELL, AND MR SANTLEY.

Mr Carl Rosa is confident that the announcement that he has induced Mr Santley to return to the operatic stage will be hailed with general satisfaction.

Mdlle Torriani, in consequence of her successes at some of the first theatres in Italy, was engaged as prima donna at Her Majesty's Opera in the season of 1873; afterwards she divided the prima donna roles with Mdme Christine Nilsson in the Strakosch Italian Opera Company, U.S., and created the title role in Verdi's Aida, when the opera was first produced in America.

Miss Yorke has attained a distinguished position as prima donna contralto at the Scala and the Cannobiana, Milan, &c.

Mr Packard was secured for this company shortly after his remarkably successful debut in Italy. It is hoped that Mr Packard and Mr Bates will prove to be important accessions to the scanty list of operatic tenors.

Particular attention has been paid to the selection of the Orchestra and Chorus. The former will include the following well known Artists:—Messrs Carrodus, Betjemann, Zerbini, E. Howell, Reynolds, Svensden, Malsch, Clinton, Hutchings, &c.

CONDUCTOR .. .. MR CARL ROSA.
Leader .. .. MR CARRODUS.
Chorus Master .. .. MR JOHN PEW.
Stage Manager .. .. MR ARTHUR HOWELL.

The Ballet under the direction of Mons. ESPINOSA.
Conductor of the Ballet, Mr BETJEMANN.
The Military Band under the direction of Mr FRED GODFREY.
The Costumes by Mr and Mrs STINCHCOMBE and AUGUSTE & Co.

THE REPERTOIRE
Will include the following works:

MARRIAGE OF FIGARO .. .. Mozart.
BOHEMIAN GIRL .. .. Balfe.
(First performance with additions, specially written by Balfe for Paris.)
FAUST .. .. Gounod.
ZAMPA .. .. Herold.
MARITANA .. .. Wallace.
THE WATER-CARRIER .. .. Cherubini.
(First time in English.)
THE PORTER OF HAVRE .. .. Cagnoni.
(First time in England.)
MARTHA .. .. Flotow.
ROSE OF CASTILE .. .. Balfe.
THE SIEGE OF ROCHELLE .. .. Balfe.
(First time for many years.)
&c. &c.

The following scale of prices will be adopted:—Boxes, 3, 2½, 2, and 1 Guineas; Stalls, 7s. 6d.; Dress Circle, 5s.; Upper Boxes, 3s.; Pit, 2s. 6d.; Gallery, 1s.

Doors open at Seven. Performances to commence at Eight. Box Office now open from Ten till Five daily.

FIRST PRIZE WINNERS.

(National Music Meetings.)

CONCERT TOUR

MISS AGNES LARCOM.

MISS ANNIE BUTTERWORTH.

MR. GEORGE SYLVESTER.

MR. EDWARD WHARTON.

NATIONAL MUSIC MEETINGS, 1875.—Class VIII. Soprano Solo Singers. Judges: Sir Julius Benedict, Signor Arditi, W. G. Cusins, Esq. First Prize awarded to Miss AGNES LARKCOM.—Class IX. Contralto or Mezzo-Soprano Singers. Judges: Sir Julius Benedict, Signor Arditi, Brinley Richards, Esq. First Prize awarded to Miss ANNIE BUTTERWORTH.—Class X. Tenor Singers. Judges: Signor Arditi, J. Barnby, Esq., J. L. Hatton, Esq. First Prize awarded to Mr GEORGE SYLVESTER.—Class XI. Baritone or Bass Solo Singers. Judges: Henry Leslie, Esq., Otto Goldschmidt, Esq., J. L. Hatton, Esq. First Prize awarded to Mr EDWARD WHARTON.

SOLO PIANIST:

SIGNOR A. RENDANO.

The celebrated Pianist, his first appearance in the Provinces.

ACCOMPANIST:

MR. HAMILTON CLARKE.

APPLICATIONS TO BE MADE TO

Messrs. METZLER & CO.,

37, Gt. Marlborough St., London, W.

Digitized by Google

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Under the immediate Patronage of
Her Most Gracious Majesty the QUEEN.
His Royal Highness the Prince of WALES.
Her Royal Highness the Princess of WALES.
His Royal Highness the Duke of EDINBURGH.
Her Royal Highness the Princess CHRISTIAN.
His Royal Highness the Duke of CAMBRIDGE.
Her Royal Highness the Duchess of TECK.
His Serene Highness the Duke of TECK.
and
His Royal Highness the Prince CHRISTIAN.

President—The Right Hon. The Earl of DUDLEY.

Principal—Professor MACFARREN, Mus. D. Cantab.

The MICHAELMAS TERM will Commence on MONDAY, the 20th September, and will Terminate on SATURDAY, the 18th of December. Candidates for admission can be examined at the Institution on Thursday, the 16th September, at Eleven o'clock, and every succeeding Thursday at the same hour.

By Order, JOHN GILL, Secretary.

Royal Academy of Music,
4, Tenterden Street, Hanover Square.

THE LONDON ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

ST. GEORGE'S HALL. Established 1861.

Principal—Professor WYLDE, Mus. Doc. Cantab.

Professors—Sir Julius Benedict (Examiner); Signori Garcia, Schira, and Lablache; Herren Ganz and Henseler; Signori Traventi, Scuderi, and Tartaglioni; Messrs C. K. Salaman and J. Francis Barnett; Herren Lehmeyer, Barth, and Marlois; Messrs J. Barnett, Handel Gear, and Mann; MM. Oberthur and T. H. Wright; Herren Pollitzer and Ludwig; M. Paque.

The Academy is for Amateur as well as Professional Students. The year is divided into Three Terms. The Fee, Five Guineas per Term, includes instruction in three branches of musical education. Students can select their principal teachers from the above list. Those residing at a distance can receive all their lessons on one day in the week.

The Next TERM Commences FRIDAY, Oct. 1. New Students are required to attend for examination on Monday, Sept. 27, or Tuesday, September 28, between the hours of 11 and 4.

Prospectuses at the Office, St George's Hall, Langham Place.

G. R. WILKINSON, Secretary.

THEATRE ROYAL, COVENT GARDEN.—PROMENADE CONCERTS. Under the direction of Messrs A. and S. GATTI. Every Evening at Eight. Artists:—Mdlles Bianchi and Cristino; Miss Rose Hersee, Mdlle Boulanger; Mr Pearson; Messrs Lazarus, Young, Wotton, and Howard Reynolds. Band of 100 Performers. Band of the Coldstream Guards. Conductor — Signor ARDITI. Magnificent decorations by Dayes and Caney. Promenade, One Shilling. Manager—Mr JOHN RUSSELL.

"ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?"

MR PEARSON will sing during the week, at the Royal Italian Opera, ASCHER'S popular Romance (by desire), "ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?"

MISS MARIANNE ROCK will perform E. SAUERBREY'S Transcription of "LORELEY" and other Solos, next week, on Pleyel, Wolff & Co.'s Grand Piano, at the Paris Exposition of 1875.

MADAME ANTOINETTE STERLING begs to announce that she will Return to London on the 4th November, and will be at liberty to accept ENGAGEMENTS for Concerts after that date. In the meanwhile, all communications addressed to her at her residence, 9, St George's Square, Belgravia, S.W., will receive immediate attention.

MADAME NOUVER, specially appointed by Sir MICHAEL COSTA to sing the Soprano Solos in his Oratorio of "ELI," at the Nottingham Sacred Harmonic Society, in the ensuing season. All communications to be addressed to J. HEMMINGWAY, 24, Dover Street, Oxford Road, Manchester.

MADAME ESTELLE EMRICK (Contralto) has Removed to 27, Percy Street, Bedford Square. Open to ENGAGEMENTS for Concerts, Oratorios, Soirées, &c.

MR SHAKESPEARE (Tenor), having returned from Italy, all letters respecting ENGAGEMENTS for Concerts or Oratorios may be addressed to him at Messrs CRAMER & CO.'S, 201, Regent Street, W.

MR PAUL SEMLER (Pianist) begs to announce that he can accept engagements for Balls, Soirées, &c. His repertoire consists of all the celebrated Dance Music of the day, as well as his own compositions. Terms on application, by letter, to be addressed to the care of Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & CO., Foreign Music Warehouse, 244, Regent Street, W.

BRIGHTON CONCERT AGENTS,
PIANOFORTE AND MUSICSELLERS,
LYON & HALL,
WARWICK MANSION.

ORGANIST of ST DUNSTAN-IN-THE-WEST, LONDON.

WANTED, a Gentleman qualified for the above post. Salary, &c., about £60 per annum. Applications, with copies of testimonials, to be sent, on or before THURSDAY next, the 9th instant, to the Vestry Clerk, St Dunstan's Vestry, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

A FIRST BOOK on the THEORY of MUSIC. By LOUISA GIBSON. Adopted by the Council of the Plymouth High School, and highly recommended by the leading London and Provincial Musicians. "May be safely recommended as an authority."—G. A. MACFARREN, Esq., Principal, R.A.M. "The rules, being clearly expressed, facilitate the task of both professors and pupils."—Sir J. BENEDICT. "I am perfectly charmed with the book, and shall recommend it as a duty."—BENNETT GILBERT, Esq., R.A.M. "I think so highly of it, that I would advise every young student beginning music to study your book."—F. B. JEWSON, Esq., Prof., R.A.M. MOFFATT, PAIGE & CO., 6, Paternoster Buildings, E.C., London.

MUSIC and SINGING.—A Gentleman, with a high-class connection in the North, is desirous, from domestic reasons, to Remove, and is willing to negotiate for the TRANSFER of his Business. A Professor of the Pianoforte, or a Violinist with a thorough knowledge of the Pianoforte, would find it a desirable opening. The highest references required. Address—A.Z., 45, Smith Street, Chelsea, London, S.W.

Established in Regent Street over 50 Years.

SIMPSON & CO.,

MUSIC PUBLISHERS,

33 (LATE 14), ARGYLL STREET, REGENT STREET.

SANTLEY'S GREAT SONG.

"THE MOUNTEBANK." By VIVIEN .. .. 4s.

"THE LOVER AND THE STAR".. .. .. 4s.

(By the Composer of "THE LOVER AND THE BIRD." Sung by Mdlle LIEBHART, and enthusiastically re-demanded.)

Just Published.

TWO SONGS.

"EVENING IN AUTUMN." Words by R. HARE, Esq. .. price 3s.
(Dedicated to Miss E. KNAPTON.)

"WAITED AND WATCHED." Words by ORLANDO WRIGHT price 3s.
(Dedicated to his friend, W. MAYBRICK, Esq.)

Composed by W. F. BANKS.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

THREE SONGS.

"QUEEN OF THE ROSES." Words by WHYTE MELVILLE .. 4s.
(Respectfully inscribed to NELSIE BROOK, Southport.)

"THE HAPPIEST LAND." Words by LONGFELLOW.. .. .. 4s.
(Inscribed to O. MILWARD, Esq., Worcester.)

"AN ANGEL'S SONG." Words by WHYTE MELVILLE .. .. 4s.

Composed by FREDERICK F. ROGERS.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"THE MAIDEN'S TEAR."

SECOND RÊVERIE FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

Composed by LILLIE ALBRECHT.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"Miss Albrecht shows herself as clever a composer as she is a skilful performer, her Second Rêverie being a well designed, and excellently wrought-out Morceau de Salon, consisting of an introduction, melody, and variations. Considerable knowledge of the technicalities of the instrument is displayed in the writing, and the whole forms a most brilliant and effective solo. For scholastic purposes, as well as for public performances, the 'Maiden's Tear' will be found of great service." Sunday Times, January 10th, 1875.

"'The Maiden's Tear,' by Lillie Albrecht, Second Rêverie for the pianoforte, is a good and useful teaching piece, calculated only to justify its title in the case of the union of two such elements as incompetency in the pupil and irritation on the part of the master."—Morning Post, February 3rd, 1875.

"'The Maiden's Tear,' Second Rêverie for the pianoforte, by Lillie Albrecht. Brilliant and full of feeling, this Rêverie may take its rank with the best of Mr Sidney Smith's compositions."—Young Englishwoman, May, 1875.

"'The Maiden's Tear,' Second Rêverie for the pianoforte, by Lillie Albrecht. A carefully conceived and well studied composition; the composer is evidently a zealous student, and she has apparently much natural ability."—Hornet, April 28, 1875.

"'The Maiden's Tear,' by Lillie Albrecht. After the style of Brinley Richards, this drawing-room piece is brilliant without being difficult, and shows both talent and knowledge of the laws of musical composition on the part of the composer, who is, we believe, a very young lady."—The Drawing Room Gazette, June 19th, 1875.

"'The Maiden's Tear,' Second Rêverie for the pianoforte, by Lillie Albrecht. This charming piece evinces in its style throughout no small share of original talent, as well as sparkling and artistic cultivation, it being full of delicate and plaintive feeling. We have no doubt that it will be very popular, both in the concert-room and saloon."—Englishwoman's Domestic Magazine, May, 1875.

Digitized by Google

A GENERAL ORDER FROM THE HEAD-QUARTERS AT BAYREUTH.*

We may say what we will about the extravagant enterprise of the tenant of Wahnfried, but we shall seek in vain for anything analogous in the whole domain of art-history, and we must, at any rate, characterize it as something unique. For this reason, every document relating to it can lay claim to a certain historical interest, both in our own and future times, and, therefore, I cannot refrain from publishing in extenso a circular, sent, in a printed form and signed by the illustrious hand of the "Master" himself, to the artists judged worthy of co-operating in the Bayreuth Festival-Play.

The document possesses an especial relative importance, because, through it, we obtain for the first time authentic information concerning the "plan of performance" which Wagner has drawn up as being "best adapted" for the object in view, and which he proposes to carry into execution next year.

This characteristic communication runs as follows:—

"As you are already aware, from our personal relations, so gratifying to me, with each other, I desire your co-operation in carrying out my project of effecting, under totally exceptional circumstances, a triple performance of my four-part Festival-Play, entitled Der Ring des Nibelungen. I believe that the realization of my purpose, on the one hand bound up with the unusual interest taken in it by monied lovers and patrons of my art, can, on the other hand, be brought about only by the hearty and vigorous will of the admirable artists whose assistance I have solicited, as the interest felt in the matter by my patrons could be bestowed, and ought to be bestowed, only on a scheme from which every idea of profit-bringing speculation was excluded. You thus find yourself, perhaps for the first time in your life as an artist, called upon to devote your powers wholly and solely to the attainment of an ideal art-aim, namely: to show the public of Germany what Germans can do in the domain of theatrical art, peculiarly their own, as well as in other things, and, to exhibit to foreign nations, after hitherto living mostly on what they rejected, something which they cannot rival. Allow me then to state to you personally the obligations to which you would bind yourself, solely under the conditions presupposed by me, as soon as you send me, as I earnestly beg you will, the final promise of your co-operation. You will be able to prescribe these obligations for yourself more accurately than anyone else can do it, if I inform you what is the plan judged by me to be best adapted for the preparatory rehearsals and the performances themselves, and, in conformity with which, you will see what share in the work, especially with regard to the time you will have to devote to it, is allotted to you.

"The first preparatory rehearsals will take place at Bayreuth, from the first of July to the first of August in this year; of this time—

"The first week of July will be devoted to pianoforte rehearsals of Das Rheingold;

"The second week to the same for Die Walküre;

"The third for Siegfried; and

"The fourth for Götterdämmerung.

"From the first to the fifteenth August, the same rehearsals will be repeated in close succession, with the addition of the full band, for the purpose of rendering the musicians for the first time acquainted with what they have to do, as well as for that of making the musical ensemble clear to the singers present.

"The third week in August will also be devoted to the trial and settlement of difficult scenic operations, under the guidance of the machinist and scene-painters, the performers whom it may concern taking part, if necessary, in the proceedings.——

"After these preparatory measures have been carried out in the current year of 1875, the months of June and July of next year, 1876, will be devoted to the complete general rehearsals of the entire work. By this I mean that, all over-exertion and fatigue being avoided, day by day, with band and scenery complete, the separate parts shall be so rehearsed that, in the period from the first July to the fifteenth July, Das Rheingold, Die Walküre, Siegfried, and Götterdämmerung shall be rehearsed successively, and that, from the fifteenth to the thirtieth July, all four pieces shall, as needed, be rehearsed.

"In the first week of August, 1876, the first performance of the entire work will take place as follows:—

"Sunday: At 7 p.m.: beginning of the performance of Rheingold.

"Monday: At 4 o'clock in the afternoon: Die Walküre, first act; at 6 o'clock, the second; and at 8 o'clock, the third. (The long intervening pauses will be devoted to the assembling of the public anew in an agreeable open site near the theatre, and to enabling the actors to recruit themselves in covered garden-enclosures immediately attached to their dressing-rooms.)

"Tuesday: Beginning in the same way from four o'clock in the afternoon: Siegfried.

"Wednesday: Likewise so: Götterdämmerung.

"Precisely in the same way will, in the second week of August, the first repetition, and in the third week the second repetition, of the entire work take place.——

"In sketching out for you this plan of performance, I am acting in accordance with a thorough knowledge of the difficulty of my enterprise, as well as of the capabilities of the artists, immediately, it is allowable to presuppose, as regards their co-operation, unconditional willingness. Only on such an assumption, as I before told you, did I undertake my work, and do I hope for its success.

"Will you, by a binding assent on your part, put it in my power to consider your co-operation as gained for the performance of my Stage-Festival-Play, and, at the same time, notify whether you require any remuneration, and, if so, to what amount. From the statement I have given you of the position taken by me towards the patrons of the enterprise, you will see that, in the case of every one engaged, all thought of gain is excluded; nay, more, that self-sacrifice must invariably be presupposed. Yet it has struck me that, in cases where the sacrifice would be impossible, I might be prepared to give the requisite remuneration for anyone's services, and, thanks to the magnanimous renunciation, of which they have already informed me, on the part of several pre-eminent singers, by which they forego any kind of remuneration, I shall be enabled to pursue in this respect such a course that none of the artists I have in view need refuse their co-operation on account of insurmountable material obstacles. (!!)

"With these sentiments, I await your kind declaration, in order to know whether I may include you in the number of those who, by a voluntary obligation, and with the object of carrying out an artistic plan never before conceived, bind themselves to a truly companion-like association of the most pregnant significance.

"RICHARD WAGNER.

"Bayreuth, 20th Jan., 1875."

Leaving out of consideration the inflated and turgid style which characterizes the present manifesto of the hot-blooded agitator, as it does all his other publications, the manifesto is a fresh proof of the undeniable skill with which he knows how to hit the weak points of those easily affected souls, the artists, and especially to flatter to good purpose their vanity. Though it is notorious that he was not previously at all acquainted with a great number of those at present constituting the Chosen and Elect, he does not disdain to speak, at the very outset, of "the personal relations so gratifying to him," which are supposed to have existed, and to have induced him to solicit the persons concerned for their co-operation under "totally exceptional circumstances."

Many an artist probably shook his head at this bold exordium, passed his hand over his forehead, and tried in vain to remember the when and where of these "gratifying personal relations." But his scruples were assuredly soon dissipated. The "great master" had affirmed their existence, and to doubt the truth of such an affirmation would be an act of disobedient insubordination—the twig thickly smeared with birdlime effects its purpose, and another noodle is caught in the Bayreuth birdcage.

Even the following piece of insolence: "You thus find yourself, perhaps for the first time in your life as an artist, called upon to devote your powers wholly and solely to the attainment of an ideal art-aim," no longer does harm. The mouth, to which virgin-honey has just been given, naturally does not taste such bitter impertinence, and its owner now, perhaps, even speaks of a depraved system of art to which against his will he has hitherto had improperly to sacrifice his talent.

To come now to the Ideal itself, on which Wagner plumes himself as being its sole inventor, what does it represent, and how is it realized? Let the public read and marvel! In Bayreuth shall the German public be taught for the first time "what Germans can do in the domain of theatrical art, peculiarly their own, as well as in other things, and exhibit to foreign nations, on whose refuse we have hitherto mostly lived, something which they cannot rival." One moment!—it is not to the German public, but only to a small number, which is growing less and less, of "monied friends and patrons," that the doors of the mystic art-temple will be opened, and what thus takes place under totally excep- tional circumstances, cannot possibly produce any permanent general effect.

* From the Neue Berliner Musikzeitung.

Digitized by Google

And foreign nations?—The reference to what they rejected naturally applies to France and to the experience of Wagner himself, who afterwards suddenly exhibited such a national German tendency. With regard to Italy, we know what zealous efforts were made there to propagate the new art-form, but without gaining any ground worth mentioning. England and America, as in the political concert, so in other musical matters, cannot, at present, boast of any influential voice. It is true that newspaper reporters have already arrived from those countries, and those gentlemen will forward to their respective journals accounts of the newly constructed theatre, of the rehearsals, and of the performances next year. But such a course, always repeated whenever a monstrosity turns up in the world, in no wise proves the artistic importance of the project. Foreign nations, too, will wisely refrain from trying to imitate what they cannot "rival." If Germany is unable to see its way clearly through the confused mythological chaos of the Edda poem, and its adequate musical illustration, we are scarcely justified in expecting that other nations should understand it and be tenderly alive to its beauties, far less envy us the possession of such a treasure.

The appeals to the heroism and love of self-sacrifice addressed to those wooed with insipid flattery as well as with majestic coarseness, imply more than at first seems to be the case. It is certainly no small thing to be for seven weeks this year, and absolutely eleven weeks next, entirely at Wagner's beck and call. Under these circumstances, it is unintelligible how, with rehearsals every day (and I beg to add, parenthetically, toping every night), all over-exertion and fatigue are to be avoided. Neither the "capabilities of the artists," nor their "unconditional willingness," can explain such a riddle.

I would direct particular attention to the coolness of the concluding phrase, in which Wagner, completely dodging the gratification of his own personal ambition, is pleased to designate the Bayreuth scheme as "a truly companion-like association of the most pregnant significance." Difficile est satiram non scribere. But I will reserve this for some future day, when the drunken delirium of morbid enthusiasm has been dissipated, and, in its place, calm reason has resumed its rights.

DR MAX EHRENFRIED.

—o—

"'TIS THE LAST ROSE OF SUMMER."

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

SIR,—In your journal of the 14th of August, you published a letter from Mr Brinley Richards, headed as above, in reply to a communication of mine as to the composer and true history of this melody and song, in contradiction to Mr B. Richards' mythical assertion, at his lecture on the National Music of Ireland, as to its antiquity. Mr B. Richards, in the present instance, shirks the question; and, though he will not accept "Walker's Bards" as a safe guide (I never thought he would), others will, on Irish musical matters, as well as on Welsh. Mr B. Richards will assert, as an authority on such matters, a writer of fabulous traits and stories of the Irish character, which are looked on as gross caricatures of a people, and whose knowledge of their music is as void as a native of Coomassie. Mr B. Richards is welcome to his authority of the antiquity of this song. As well might I assert that another specimen of Irish music he put forth at his lecture was such—he had such there—"Kathleen Mavourneen." The world knows it is purely an English ballad, with not one particle of Irish music in its composition, yet Mr B. Richards gives it as a specimen of Irish music. As well might be put forth his own pretty song sung there as a Welsh ditty. This is not the way to enlighten lovers of national music, by sailing under false colours. Mr B. Richards sneers at and assails several statements selected from the same work—"Walker's Bards"—all of which have been proved long since, by those who have studied the subject, to be founded on facts. The Irish language is an original one, not a second-hand language like the Welsh, derived, like their music, from the Normans and Picts, who went to settle amongst the savage wildness of Wales and its mountains. All idea of music, or poetry, amongst the natives of these climes, is totally out of the question. Whatever they knew of those arts was due to the immigrants from the Continent forced to settle there against their will.—I am, Sir,

YOUR OWN CORRESPONDENT
AT THE LECTURE.

The Vale of Avoca, C. Wicklow.

ACORNS, SLOES, AND BLACKBERRIES.

BY GIBBS GIBB GIBBS, ESQ.

No. 12.

Marie Martin Martel, Vicomte de Marin, of the family of the Marini, some of whom were doges of the republic of Genoa, was born at Saint Jean de Luz, near Bayonne, in 1769. He learned music from his father from the early age of four, and at seven composed a sonata for the piano. He studied the harp under Hosbruker, and it is generally acknowledged that he was soon without an equal on that instrument. In 1783, he was received and crowned by the Musical Academicians at Rome. He there extemporized on the harp, and followed up subjects for fugue which were given to him, in a manner quite unknown on that instrument. He played on the harp at first sight, from the scores of Seb. Bach's fugues, and from those of Jomelli, and achieved on that instrument what could scarcely be done by another on the pianoforte. Such an impression did his performances at the Academy at Rome make on his audience, that the celebrated Corianna, who was present, rehearsed extemporary verses in his honour. On his return from Italy, De Marin, then only fifteen years of age, commenced his military education at the Cavalry School at Versailles. He quitted it at seventeen, as captain of dragoons, obtaining at the same time leave of absence to travel. The French Revolution closed the doors of his country against him, and he was placed on the list of emigrés. He then proceeded to England, where his performance on the harp was universally admired. M. de Marin composed much music for the harp; several of his compositions were so much esteemed by Clementi, that he arranged them for the pianoforte. As it is rare that modern musicians have been honoured by the first poets of the age, we cannot resist copying the following lines by the celebrated Abbé Delille, which he wrote on Marin, when they were both in England as emigrés.

"Hélas! plus d'un Français, dans ces momens funestes,
Se montra des Français l'implacable ennemi.
Tel ne fut pas ton cœur, toi, courageux ami
De ceux que poursuivait la fortune inhumaine;
Toi, que chérit Bellone, ainsi que Melpomène;
Qui, parant la vertu par d'aimables dehors,
Joins la beauté de l'âme à la beauté du corps.
Qu' on ne me vaute plus le chantre de la Thrace,
Des tigres, des lions apprivoisant l'audace.
Ton art, qui dans la Grèce aurait eu des autels,
O Marin! sut dompter des monstres plus cruels;
Le désepoir affreux, la hideuse indigence.
Que de fois au plaisir mêlant la bienfaisance,
Sterile pour toi seul, ton talent généreux
Mit son noble salaire aux mains des malhereux!
Ainsi, par le concours de brillantes merveilles,
Charmant le cœur, l'esprit, les yeux, et les oreilles,
On te vit tour à tour vouer à nos malheurs,
Ta lyre et ton épée, et ton sang et tes pleurs.
Le concert de vertu, de grâce et de génie,
Ah! voilà ta plus belle et plus douce harmonie!
Tel, beau, jeune et vainquer, le dieu de l'Hélicon,
Chantait, touchait sa lyre, et combattait Python."

M. Martin, an excellent tenor singer at the Théâtre Feydau, at Paris, was born there, about the year 1770. In 1788 he made his début at the Théâtre de Monsieur, with unparalleled success. Martin was the first singer who established at Paris the Italian style of singing to French words. His singing at the Chapel Royal in the Tuileries, in the year 1822, was still greatly admired, and attracted all ranks of society in Paris.

Digitized by Google

DWIGHT UPON DR HANS VON BÜLOW.

This famous pianist, who as a public virtuoso has for some years worn the mantle of Liszt, and was for some years too his son-in-law, and, though no longer that, is still his friend, will be one of the chief attractions of our coming musical season. It is understood that he will make his first bow before an American audience at the opening of the new Chickering Hall in New York, some time in October, and that he will visit Boston in November. Probably no one of the great European pianists, now that we have all heard Rubinstein, his only peer, and, seeing that the Abbate Liszt himself makes no more concert tours, could excite so much curiosity among our people. Whether the spell will work as widely and as long as that of the fiery, strong young Russian, remains to be seen.

Bülow is just in the full maturity of his powers, having been born in Dresden on the 8th of January, 1830. Among his earliest teachers in music was Fr. Wieck, the father of Mdme Clara Schumann. At the age of sixteen he went to the gymnasium at Stuttgart, and in 1848 to the University of Leipzig for the study of law, where at the same time he received instructions in musical theory from Hauptmann. After passing his legal studies for another year or two at Berlin, he decided to devote himself entirely to music, and, much against the wishes of his parents, betook himself to Zurich, where he could be near Richard Wagner, then living there in stately exile; he had already fallen under his influence in Dresden. Wagner approved of his decision, and schooled him to the functions of conductorship in the Zurich theatre. In June 1851 he went to Weimar, where Liszt prepared him and inducted him into his career of virtuoso. He studied with Liszt about two years, and then made his first appearance in Vienna and Hungary. In 1855 he took up his abode at Berlin as piano teacher in the Conservatory of Stern and Marx; in 1858 he was appointed court-pianist to the King of Prussia; soon afterwards he was made a knight of the Order of the Crown, and received the degree of Doctor of Philosophy from the University at Jena. In 1857 he had married Cosima, Liszt's gifted daughter. In 1864 he was won away from Berlin to Munich by the art-loving King Louis of Bavaria, to be his Capellmeister. The newspapers have kept us all well-informed of his doings, his comings and goings, since; they have told us how he espoused the Wagner crusade with all his might and main; how under his direction, and often for the private gratification of the royal young enthusiast and himself alone, the Wagner operas—we beg pardon, dramas, "actions"—were so sumptuously brought out in Munich; how he afterwards settled for a time in Florence, and made German music palatable to Italians; how he developed a smart literary talent likewise, particularly in the line of controversial satire, as witness his unsparing onslaught upon Verdi's Requiem Mass and the Italian music generally. And now the enterprising concert speculators have him for a season, and have booked him for America; and all the under-speculators, ticket-sellers, concert-brokers, who know the ins and outs of music halls, in each several city, are bidding eagerly for their share of this "big bonanza;" so that before the winter passes we shall have a chance to take the measure of the wonderful art of Bülow as compared with that of Rubinstein.

It was in Berlin, in the winter of 1861, that we had the privilege of meeting and of hearing Bülow. We were enjoying our first and only interview with Liszt, who had come for a day or two to the old Hotel de Brandebourg, where we were living all that winter. On the sofa sat his daughter, Mdme von Bülow, bearing the unmistakable impress upon her features; the welcome was cordial, and the conversation on the part of both of them was lively and most interesting; chiefly, of course, it was about music, artists, &c.; and nothing delighted us more than the hearty high appreciation which Liszt expressed of Robert Franz, then (strange as it may seem) but very little recognized in Germany, nowhere so much as here in Boston—thanks to one man! Of some other composers he seemed inclined to speak ironically and even bitterly, as if smarting under some disappointment, perhaps at the unreceptive mood of the Berliners towards his own Symphonic Poems, to whose glories Bülow had been labouring to convert them. Before we had a chance to hint of one hope long deferred, that of hearing Liszt play, he asked: "Have you heard Bülow?" alluding to him more than once as the pianist to be heard, his representative and heir, on whom his mantle verily had fallen. Thinking it possible that there was some new grand composition by some one of his young disciples to be brought out, and that he had come to Berlin to stand god-father as it were to that, we modestly ventured to inquire; he smilingly replied: "No, I am here literally as god-father, having come to the christening of my grandchild." Presently the conversation was interrupted by a rap at the door, and in came, with lively step, a little man, who threw open the furs in which he was buried, Berlin fashion, and approached the presence, bowed his head to the paternal laying on of hands, and we were introduced to Herr von Bülow.

Shortly afterwards we were present at several of the concerts which Von Bülow gave there in the hall of the Singakademie. In these he was the sole performer; the piano, a fine Bechstein Flügel, if we remember rightly, was placed near the middle of the floor, and there he sat surrounded by a large host of admirers, plainly a select and highly cultivated audience. His programmes, like those of Rubinstein when he was here, covered the whole range of the higher pianoforte literature from Bach to Liszt, and Liszt's successor in propriâ personâ; only he did not crowd such extravagant quantities of solid things—five Beethoven Sonatas, for instance—into one evening, as Rubinstein did here sometimes; he was content to give enough. One of these programmes we have preserved:—

Toccata, in C minor ..... Bach.
Suite, in E minor, Op. 72..... ..... Raff.
Sonata, "Les Adieux," &c. ..... Beethoven.
Venezia e Napoli (MS.) ..... Liszt.
Præludium, from Op. 35 ..... } Mendelssohn.
Two Lieder ohne Wörte, Book 5..... }
Rhapsodie Hongroise, No. 8 ..... Liszt.

Other works given in the series were:—

J. S. Bach.—Bourrée, A minor; Gigue and Gavotte, G minor. Ph. Em. Bach.—Rondo, B minor. Beethoven.—Fantaisie, Op. 77. Hummel.—Sonata, F sharp minor, Op. 81. Chopin.—Berceuse. Concert Allegro. Schumann.—Etudes Symphoniques, Op. 13. Liszt.—Eclogue. Au Lac de Wallenstedt. Au Bord d' une Source. Schiller Marsch (nach Meyerbeer). B-minor Sonata, in one movement. Tannhäuser Overture (transcription). A. Rubinstein.—Prelude and Fugue, Op. 53. H. von Bülow (selbst).—Die Elfenjagd. Impromptu, Op. 14. Mazurka, Op. 4.

Compare this with one of his London programmes of this last spring, and we find the general character of the Bülow programme still essentially the same, although John Bull gets rather the more solid dose:—

Bach.—Organ Prelude and Fugue in B minor, arr. by Liszt. Schumann.—Fantaisie in C, Op. 17. Raff.—Métamorphose, Op. 74, No. 2. Brahms.—Scherzo, Op. 4. Rheinberger.—Andante and Toccato, Op. 12 (dedicated to Bülow). Beethoven.—Sonata, Op. 101. 33 Variations on a Waltz by Diabelli.

Many of those Berlin selections were quite new then; now they have nearly all of them become somewhat familiar here in Boston.

He played all from memory,—a power less common then than it is now; but Bülow, we believe, exceeds all others, not excepting Rubinstein, not only in his accurate, retentive memory of vast repertoires of music, orchestral and vocal scores included, but also in the rapidity with which he learns a piece by heart, sometimes by simply hearing it performed two or three times.

He impressed us somewhat as Charles Hallé did in London, as a cool player; remarkably self-possessed, sure and careful in his renderings, and essentually intellectual, thoughtful, thoroughly convinced in his conception and interpretation of the composer and the work in hand. None of that almost wild impetuosity of Rubinstein; less of that personal magnetic power; less wilfulness of moody moments, which led the latter into various tempos and shadings of the same thing at different times. Nothing that Bülow does is not thoroughly studied and thought out; while his technique seemed, even then, perfect beyond our power to conceive of aught beyond. And yet we enjoyed—felt Madame Schumann's playing more. Of course von Bülow was, and is, a growing man, and doubtless greatly in advance to-day of what he then was, not only as pianist, but still more as artist and musician in the broad sense. As a conductor of orchestra and chorus, he stands among the foremost of our day. Probably we shall have opportunities of witnessing his skill in that capacity, as well as in piano-playing, with and without orchestral accompaniment.

Digitized by Google

ART AND SCIENCE IN THE TEACHING OF MUSIC.

To the President of the Society of Arts.

Mr President,—Music, like all the fine arts, is composed of two essential elements—art and science. This truth is so manifest that it is doubted by none; and the more one thinks of it, the less one can explain how it is, since music is fashionable, one has never thought to teach, side by side, the art and science, practice and reasoning, mechanism and intelligence. It is notorious and undeniable that musical teaching, admitted into custom, firmly rooted, and of long standing in all manners, transmitted from father to son, and acclimatized all over the world, occupies itself exclusively with the dexterity of the fingers or of the voice—of the simple, mechanical, execution of written music. So, what results from this teaching, so senseless, unintelligent, pretentious, dry, and so unworthy of the age? It follows, that the musical student, condemned to practise the piano, without understanding chords and their harmony with the air, finds unheard-of difficulties in deciphering and reading music, because, being in no way guided by sense, understanding absolutely nothing of the harmony of notes, in this reading—to him mysterious and hieroglyphical—it is impossible for him to foresee what it may be. He does not know how to guess one note nor a single chord.

Thus, what does he do, after having groped along in this darkness for some years, after having made long and vain efforts, expended much time, labour, and money? He gives music the blame, says that its study is too difficult, whilst, really he should only complain of the illogical manner in which it has been taught him. Discouraged by negative results, he looks upon his instrument with aversion, heartily regrets the time he has devoted to its study, and abandons an art which would have furnished him many joys and pleasures, if they had only taught it in a reasonable and comprehensible manner.

It is true that among such persons there are always a few who, cost what it may, confront the difficulties, and succeed, by means of labour, time, and patience, in mechanically reading what the great masters have written; but what real advantages have they over those who were discouraged on the way? Very few, indeed. They are obliged to make efforts, almost superhuman, if they wish to interpret worthily the thoughts of the composer, because they are in no degree aided by science.

Many other sorry consequences result from a musical training where science is missing. The pupil does not know how to transpose, prelude, improvise, compose, find the simplest accompaniment to a given song, or make a piece of a simple melody by developing it, as a school-boy does a literary subject, by amplification and dissertation. Does he study music for twenty years or more, he is still wanting the power to note down, or to render immediately upon the piano or on the organ, his simplest inspirations. If in company he does not know from memory some pieces made by another, or forgets his music book, he is nowise in advance of him who does not know a note.

Upon whom ought the responsibility of this old-fashioned learning-by-rote method to rest? It is not at all in agreement with the march of intellect and the requirements of the present age. Must we blame those who teach music? I do not think so. Rather blame tradition—the old manner, which each one follows by habit, without reflection. To give an idea of the manner in which this method is established and universally practised, it is enough to say that in the conservatoires of all countries they think no more than elsewhere of teaching, side by side, art and science. However, these official schools have for their mission to train persons capable of diffusing good principles, and should do all in their power to add to the prosperity and the splendour of music, in each of their respective states. In these schools, however, there are a limited number of pupils, who come to the harmony and composition classes, and really learn music. The others, being mere readers and executionists, do not know the first word of the science, pay no heed to what they read, and do not understand what they play.

But, if custom is false, erroneous, and long established, it is no reason why we should retain this miserable statu quo, and perpetuate a chronic and hereditary disease in the teaching of an art which has so great an influence on manners.

We must believe that, in educating the pupils, so as to understand readily and fully both the art and science, we shall reveal to themselves what they were ignorant of, and we shall see advancing from the multitude of aspirants to fame, true organizations—rare privileged ones, who, coming, bring with them the sacred fire—and we shall prepare future generations to love and understand better this sublime art. The public, thus enlightened, will close the ear to indifferent publications, will be able to reproduce, with facility and intelligence, the masterpieces, will know how to judge soundly of their merits or their failings, will appreciate them more, and they will procure for them joys until then unknown. In short, such a method, in which art and science would be side by side, would not only augment the number of composers, but would diminish the number of people who do not understand music.

Long experience in teaching together art and science has convinced me that harmony, which explains the cause, the reason for all that relates to music, may be understood by every one, even by children. I have made of this science, not a study, but a game, an amusement, a pleasure, a family recreation. This is precisely what I always wished—to instruct by or while amusing, in order to attract the pupil towards a knowledge which offers him the advantage of being able to transpose, prelude, improvise, accompany, harmonize, &c.—all things which every one likes to know. I have a strong desire to introduce into England my method and my innovations. I beg earnestly all men of honour, all enlightened artists and amateurs, to enquire fully into this serious question to which I call their attention. I am persuaded that, having weighed its importance, they will join their efforts to mine, in order, without delay, to do away with a mode contrary to the spirit of the age, and which has this evil effect—much of the precious time of youth is lost, and leaves uninstructed many millions of intelligent beings.

I have the honour to be, with much respect, Mr President, your very humble and respectful servant, Bernardin Rahn.

BERLIN.

A few lines will suffice to narrate all that has been done here during the past week. In the first place, there is not much calling for remark at the Royal Operahouse. Among the works performed since my last have been Oberon, Le Nozze, Fidelio, A Midsummer Night's Dream, and La Dame Blanche. Herr von Hülsen, the Intendant-General, having returned from his last trip, which was to Colberg, has now once more settled down steadily to the duties of his office.

In the second place, Margarethe, otherwise Faust, proved so successful, with Mdlle Hasselbeck, Herren Nachbaur and Fessler, at Kroll's Theater, that a fourth performance, by the permission of Herr von Hülsen, was added to the three performances originally announced. Herr Nachbaur concluded a most successful engagement, by appearing as Manrico, in Il Trovatore. Herr Preumayr, the talented Capellmeister, has also left, to enter on his new engagement, in a similar capacity, at Cologne. For the few remaining nights of the season he was succeeded by Herr Faltis.

Mad. Mathilde Mallinger has just purchased Castle Fernstein and a large estate in the Tyrol, where she intends in future residing when not professionally engaged. She is at present stopping at the Tegernsee, to recruit, after the exertions of the past season. She will remain there until recalled by her engagement at the Theatre Royal.

Herr Johann Strauss's opera of Cagliostro, selected to open the winter season, is in active rehearsal at the Friedrich-Wilhelmstädtisches Theater. Meanwhile, the place of Herr Carl Swoboda, who has gone for a holiday, is being temporarily and successfully filled by Herr Telek, from the ill-starred Comic Operahouse, Vienna. Herr Telek possesses an agreeable tenor voice, a good stage presence, and the gift of using both to the best advantage. He is quite at home in the works of Offenbach, Hervé, and Lecocq, and has already become popular with the Berliners.

Berlin can boast of a new association: The "Lohengrin for Male and Mixed Choral Singing." Such is its rather peculiar appellation. The new association will not, however, be devoted exclusively to singing, either male or mixed. It will include among its attractions a dancing-club, or "Tanzkränzchen," and is to be opened, vocally and saltatorily, about the middle of the present month.

Digitized by Google

A STOCKHOLM SCRAP.

(From a Private Letter.)

. . . . . One of Capellmeister Fliege's recent concerts, at the Royal Djurgarden, brought the following programme, which we give in the original Swedish :—Ouverture till Manfred, af Schumann ; Variation ur A-dur-Quartetten, af Beethoven (utföres af 20 personer); "Ständchen," Schubert ; Indisk Marsch ur Afrikanskan, Meyerbeer ; Ouverture till Si j'etais Roi, Adam ; "Mon séjour à Darmstadt," trio for Harpa, Violine, and Violoncell, Oberthür (utf af Kammarvirtuosen Fröken Dubez samt Herrar Herrman och Wendel); Ouverture till Op. Martha, Flotow ; "Es kann ja nicht immer so bleiben" Vals, och "Vielliebchen" Idyll, af Fliege ; "Fantasie ur Op. Ernani, Verdi ; "Alliance-Marsch," Bach ; "J morgon Lördag;" Symfoni-Konsert, hvarvid uppföres ; och Symfoni (A moll) af Mendelssohn.

THE ROYAL NATIONAL EISTEDDFOD OF WALES.

This grand musical event commenced at Pwllheli, Carnarvonshire, on Tuesday, the 24th August, and was concluded on the following Friday evening. The town, which is small and quiet, is the centre of an extensive agricultural district, and, in regard to convenience and ease of access, a worse selection could not have been made. The committee of the Eisteddfod offered about £800 in prizes for poetry, prose, music, choral competition, art, and industry. In the number and excellence of compositions it outshone several of its predecessors, the committee having been exceedingly happy in their choice of subjects. The meetings, which were attended by thousands from all parts of the Principality, were held in a spacious wooden pavilion. The Presidents were :—Tuesday, Mr Owen Evans, J.P., of Broomhall ; Wednesday, the Right Hon. Lord Mostyn, of Mostyn Hall, Flintshire ; Thursday, Mr R. Lloyd Edwards, J.P., of Nanhoron ; and Friday, the Hon. G. Sholto Douglas Pennant, M.P., for Carnarvonshire. During these four days a variety of prizes, ranging from fifty guineas to half a guinea, were awarded. In poetry, Mr Thomas Jones (Taliesin o Eifion), house-painter, Llangollen, received 15 guineas and a gold medal for an epic poem on "Cassivellaunus : his First Campaign against the Romans." The prize of 10 guineas for a satirical poem on "The Traitor" was awarded to Mr John T. Morgan, of Dolgelly. A gold medal of the value of £10 was won by Mr Thomas Tudno Jones, of Bangor, for the best metrical translation of Gray's "Bard ;" and this young poet also carried off the chief bardic prize of the year —£30 and an ornamental oak chair—for an ode on "Beauty." He was installed, with an imposing ceremony, as "Chair Bard of Gwynedd, Mon and Manaw." In the competition for brass bands, the principal prize was taken by the Nantlle Band, composed of quarrymen. In prose, Mr Walter Eaton, of Penygroes, won a prize of £20, given by the Good Templars of the district, for a treatise on "The Physiological Aspect of Total Abstinence from Intoxicating Drinks." A prize essay on "Criticism" was written by Mr Owen Owen, of Jesus College, Oxford. In solo singing for men, Mr David Williams, of Liverpool, and Mr John Williams, of Stockton-on-Tees, were best. In solo singing for women, the successful competitors were Miss Griffith, Llanberis, and Miss Sydney Roberts, of London. The principal competition of the festival was that which was held on Wednesday in rendering the double chorus, "The people shall hear and be afraid," from Handel's Israel in Egypt. Prize £50, and a bâton for the conductor of the successful choir. Two choirs, each containing not less than sixty voices, competed—the Dinorwic Choral Union (Waenfawr and Llanberis) and Carnarvon Philharmonic Society. The singing was very fine. For refinement and delicacy of phrasing, the prize was awarded to the Waenfawr Choir, entirely composed of the working class, the members of which were specially taught the English words of the piece by a village schoolmaster. The next most important choral competition was that on Mendelssohn's "How great is the depth." Prize, 40 guineas and a gold medal. Four choirs competed—Bangor Choral Union, Eryri Choral Union (Waenfawr Choir), Machynlleth Choir, and Wrexham and Rhos United Choir. The contest was close, and the prize went to the Eryri Choral Union, which was identically the same choir as that which won the 50-guinea prize. The judges praised the singing of the Bangor Choir, and said that if there had been a second prize it would have been given to this choir. The Wrexham and Rhos Choir alone sang in the motet, "Ave verum Jesu," and was said to be deserving of the prize. The Portmadoc Choir secured all the four prizes offered for Welsh anthems and glees, although several other choirs competed, and the intonation of this choir was the purest throughout the Eisteddfod. Each evening there was a grand concert. The principal artists were Miss Edith Wynne, Mrs Kate Winne Matthison, Mrs Maggie Jones Williams, Miss Mary Davies, and Miss Marian Williams, of the Royal Academy ; Professor Parry, Owain Alaw, Mr T. J. Hughes, Mr Robert Rees, Mr Ap Herbet, Mr Richard Davies, and Mr James Sauvage. The harpist was Mr John Thomas (Pencerdd Gwalia). The festival proved successful, and it is intended to devote the surplus of the proceeds in aid of the endowment fund of the University College of Wales, Aberystwith.

FREDERIC SULLIVAN IN THE PROVINCES.

"Mr Frederic Sullivan, as the Viceroy, was very amusing. The progress of this useful artist was noticed on his previous visit to Manchester ; but even those, who were most hopeful of his future then, must have been surprised by the finish and judicious restraint of his acting in La Périchole and Trial by Jury. . . . . In Trial by Jury, also, the singing and acting were both generally excellent, and we intend no slight to the rest of the performers when we say that Mr Sullivan's impersonation of the Judge was pre-eminently successful. The make-up of this clever actor ; his perfect bye-play, always telling, but never extravagant ; his amusing contrasts ; and, above all, the characteristic blandness and courtesy with which he delivered his most absurd speeches, were altogether irresistible ; and it is long since we have seen a more entertaining and artistic piece of character acting."—Manchester Examiner and Times. "Amongst the performers in Trial by Jury, not the least humorous is our old friend, Mr Frederic Sullivan, who, as the learned Judge, is equal to the best of his former efforts."—Manchester Guardian. "Mr Sullivan, as the learned Judge, is inimitably funny."—Manchester Courier. "First amongst the performers is Mr F. Sullivan, as the Judge. His get up ; his comic song, descriptive of his rise in the profession ; his outrageously-emphatic love-making to any girl in the court who strikes his fancy ; and his final flirtation with the fair plaintiff on the bench, are conceived in the richest spirit of comic exaggeration, and salted with a realism that makes them more telling."—Liverpool Daily Post. "The learned Judge could not have a better representative than in the person of our old friend Mr Frederic Sullivan."—Liverpool Mercury. "Mr F. Sullivan's buffo powers are considerable. His Viceroy in Périchole is full of honest fun, and his Judge in Trial by Jury is a really rare piece of rich comedy."—Liverpool Journal. "Mr Fred. Sullivan is, as usual, both clever and amusing with his delineation of the Viceroy. . . . As the learned Judge, he is simply side-splitting with his mock gravity." —Sheffield Independent. "Mr Frederic Sullivan, as the Viceroy, was very amusing. He looked and acted the character to perfection. His impersonation of the learned and impressionable Judge deserves a special word of praise for its quiet and natural humour."—Sheffield Telegraph. "The gem of this piece is the Judge. Mr Frederic Sullivan must have spent some time in the superior Law Courts, so minute and so accurate—although so excessively funny—is his rendering of the part."—North of England Advertiser. "The personification of the Judge by Mr Frederic Sullivan is simply inimitable, and his rendering of the Judge's song will not readily be forgotten."—Newcastle Daily Journal.

HAPPY LARK.

Happy lark, away thou soarest,
In thy joyous flight
Watch with pleasure, while thou pourest
Strains of such delight.
Upward mounting, upward springing,
Now the clouds among,
I would ask thee, while thou'rt singing,
Where thou learn'st thy song?

Little favourite, trill thy measure,
All untaught by art ;
Child of nature, child of pleasure,
How thou sooth'st the heart!
We on learning place reliance,
Thy melodious strains
Bid thy rivals all defiance—
Mock us for our pains.

Digitized by Google

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

WILLIAM TUTT.—You will find a letter left for you at the Office of the MUSICAL WORLD.

SPINNET.—There were several Clarks, organists. The Clark to whom you refer was Dr John Clarke, born at Gloucester, in 1770. He subsequently assumed the surname of Whitfield, from his uncle, Henry Fotherley Whitfield, of Rickmansworth Park, Herts, in 1814. He was successively organist of St Lawrence's, Ludlow; of the Cathedral, Armagh; of St John's College, Cambridge; and of the Cathedral, Hereford. He composed and edited numerous works, one of the principal of which was an oratorio in two parts, the first part treating of the Crucifixion, and the second, the Resurrection.

NOTICE.

To ADVERTISERS.—The Office of the MUSICAL WORLD is at Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & Co.'s, 244, Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street (First Floor). It is requested that Advertisements may be sent not later than Thursday. Payment on delivery.

The Musical World,

LONDON, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 4, 1875.

Audi Alteram Partem.

UNDER the heading of "A few Words about Wagner," a contributor to Le Guide Musical supplies an article which, if only because its arguments run counter to those on several occasions not merely quoted but sustained by us, lays fair claim to reproduction in our columns. The writer is evidently a firm believer in Wagner, if not a partisan in the most furious acceptation of the word. Let him, however, speak for himself:—

"It is the characteristic of creative and innovating geniuses to be invariably misunderstood by the greater part of their contemporaries. Mozart was unappreciated; Haydn was unappreciated; and, what would strike us as incredible, did we not know such was the case, Beethoven was unappreciated, and treated even worse than his predecessors. 'Die verrückten Quartetten,' 'The mad Quartets,' such was the title irreverently bestowed by the majority of German musicians on the master's latest works of this kind. We know the opinion expressed by Reissiger on the Ninth Symphony. He declared it to be 'nonsense' ('Unsinn'). Berlioz informs us that Rudolph Kreutzer, the violinist, to whom Beethoven dedicated his most celebrated Violin Concerto, ran away when he heard for the first time the Symphony in D (the simplest of all the Symphonies), stopping up his ears as he did so, and that he had need of all his courage to listen, at subsequent rehearsals, to as much of the Symphony as had not been suppressed before it was submitted to the public. It was, according to him, eccentric, incoherent, diffuse, bristling with harsh modulations and savage harmony, deficient in melody, exaggerated in expression, too noisy, and horribly difficult. Kreutzer's opinion, it must not be forgotten, was that of ninety-nine out of every hundred musicians in Paris about 1830.

"Richard Wagner shares with the coryphæi of modern music the honour of having long been misunderstood and oppressed. The opposition with which his music met at first, and still meets, is distinguished, however, by a certain vivacity and bitterness, which did not mark even the most systematic opposition in the case of Mozart, of Haydn, and of Beethoven. Wagner's adversaries are not contented with pronouncing his music detestable. If we are to believe them, he is the very worst of innovators, a mar-all, and an overbearing, arrogant personage, full of irreverence towards the most admired masters, while neither his theories on opera or modern music, nor he himself, are worth a straw. It is against him personally that the attacks are directed. Not being able to deny the profound effect produced by his music, powerful and poetic in turns, his opponents fall upon him individually. How, after all, could the admirers of Mozart, of Haydn, and of Beethoven, see any beauties in the works of one who criticized the system followed by those masters; has dared to write and publish Art and Politics, and Judaism in Music; has overwhelmed with sarcasm Mendelssohn and Meyerbeer; and, lastly, has set about decrying, with the exception of a favoured few, each and all of his contemporaries? Nothing, however, can be more false than the accusations accumulated against Wagner. It would not even be so bad if his adversaries simply made accusations, but, with admirable logic, they look upon the author and his works as one and the same. Mixing up and confounding what they pretend he is with what he does—his life with his works, his works with his theories, and his theories with his polemics, they pitch them all into one basket, heedless of the consequences. Yet, if people would call to mind under what circumstances Wagner's genius has been developed, how he has had to struggle against poverty, envy, failure, and his own talent, how, alone, without master, without guide save his destiny, and without any fortune but his works, opposed the more he progressed, derided, scoffed at, spat upon, vilified, just when he thought to reach his goal, he has created an original style, renewed the forms of art, opening up a limitless horizon to the musical drama, and, in the midst of all his difficulties, succeeded in preserving the force, self-possession, and intensity of inspiration necessary to produce such gigantic living works as Lohengrin, Tannhäuser, Der fliegende Holländer, Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg, Tristan und Isolde, Rheingold, and Die Nibelungen-Trilogie, the animosity with which he is pursued would give place to sympathetic interest and sincere admiration for real genius, upheld by firm and unshakeable convictions.

"The Cologne Gazette published, some time since, a summary of a lecture on Wagner, delivered at the Gürzenich, by Dr Guckeisen, a musical critic attached to that paper, which, as most people know, cannot be charged with Wagnerism. The Doctor exerted himself to give a faithful and impartial account of what Wagner has done, and this account partly answers the extravagantly unjust criticisms hurled againt the 'agitator.' It will not be uninteresting to our readers to peruse a report of what he said, as it is summarized in the above journal, the more especially since, both on account of those who stand at the head of musical matters, and of the tastes of the inhabitants, the chief seat of the Rhenish Festivals has hitherto been considered in Germany one of the last citadels of musical classicality:—

"Dr Guckeisen began by striving to correct the false and erroneous opinion generally entertained concerning the ideas and tendencies peculiar to Wagner. Wagner is acrimoniously accused of entertaining contempt for the masters who have preceded him, without excepting Mozart and Beethoven. This reproach is utterly undeserved. To convince one's self of the fact, it is sufficient to go through his Gesammelte Schriften. Wagner attacks the framework of old opera, but never fails to acknowledge the musical grandeur of the above-named masters. True, he falls foul very hotly of several composers, more especially Mendelssohn and Meyerbeer, but not for the purpose of denying their unquestionable talent; he does so because they have devoted their talent to forwarding a tendency which he considers fatal.* "As for the idea to which Wagner has sacrificed his whole life, it is not so much a reform of opera as a renewal of the drama in general. After all, Wagner is not the only one who has entertained this idea. He endeavours to carry out what Schiller dreamed of without being able to realize. In a letter addressed to Göthe, Schiller says:—

"'I have always had a certain predilection for opera, and have never ceased to believe that some day modern tragedy of an elevated kind will spring from our present opera, just as antique tragedy was born of the choruses in honour of Bacchus. Opera discards the rampant and servile imitation of nature. It is by means of opera that we might transport the Ideal on the stage, though under veiled forms.'

"Wagner, however, is not a fortuitous accident in dramatic literature. There is a whole series of masters who prepare the way for and announce him. But he is the first who has followed, from conviction, clear and definite principles. What he has created in

* Fatal to Wagner?—ED.

Digitized by Google

pursuing these principles, must not be included under the head of opera, in the old meaning of the word, being really a new kind of theatrical spectacle, to which we must take care not to apply the ordinarily accepted rules. Wagner, however, lays no claim to be the creator of this new style. He has simply assisted in bringing forward the German drama of which Schiller dreamed, and in which poet and musician unite all that is loftiest in their aspirations towards the Ideal. Musicians can devote themselves to the new method, or go on cultivating the old. The latter requires far less than the former the complete development of poetic and lyrical faculties, the harmonious equilibrium of intellectual forces, which, by the way, the one-sided education given at present to musicians is unable to produce. It is one thing to invent pretty melodies, another to interpret musically a dramatic poem. Lastly, to judge Wagner's works, we must distinguish between the principles and the form in which they are clothed by the composer's personality. Artistic form is always affected by the idiosyncracy of its creator; and why should Wagner be more exempt from imperfections than other mortals? It is natural that we should object to many things in his works; but his principles are unshakeable. To condemn these principles à priori is to display very little judgment. Every epoch, every age, brings to the manifestation of the Beautiful new formulas, but the aspirations towards this idea are always, at bottom, the same. In Wagner, the leading object is truth of dramatic expression in music."

"This lecture, says the Cologne Gazette, was listened to with uninterrupted attention by a numerous and intelligent audience. We can," it adds, "readily believe that more than one amateur was partly reconciled with the Music of the Future. So be it, say we, after this sketch, however incomplete, of the words, distinguished for their good sense and moderate criticism, pronounced by Dr Guckeisen."

We wish we could conscientiously arrive at the same conclusion as the editor of the Cologne Gazette, partake of the enthusiasm of the writer in the Guide Musical, and understand the arguments of the learned and venerable Dr Guckeisen; but at present we are unable. "La porte laissée ouverte" (according to Wagner—1855), still gapes wide its imponderous and wooden jaws; and Jews yet live and thrive among us. Let this door but be closed; let Wagner but cry "Shut, sesame!" (he knows how, as he himself insinuates), and the London Aristarchi will understand their duty. There is plenty of time, after the Vienna autumn model-rehearsals, for London spring model-rehearsals to follow, in 1876. The musicians sufficiently initiated to conduct the rehearsals of such music are not scarce among us; and if the Composer for the Future would not object to some Jews, at least (say our bankers), remaining in London during the period, he might come himself to superintend the proceedings, and would be assured of a hearty welcome. Otto Beard.

OCCASIONAL NOTES.

Les anecdotes de la Révolution redeviennent également de l'actualité. On raconte que se trouvant à Paris en 1793, le violoniste Poppo fut appelé au Comité de Salut Public comme suspect, et on lui fit subir l'interrogatoire suivant:—"Votre nom?—Poppo. Votre profession?—Je joue du violon. Que faisiez-vous du temps du tyran? Je jouais du violon. Que faites-vous maintenant? Je joue du violon. Que ferez-vous pour la nation?—Je jouerai du violon." Et, chose extraordinaire, Poppo fut acquitté.

Thomas Moore, in his Diary, tells an amusing story of an English nobleman who wished to surprise his guests by invisible music. His plan was so original and ingenious that he felt certain no one could discover the secret. He designed to place "seven and twenty fiddlers in an apartment underground, from which music might be communicated by tubes to any part of the house." The project was never fully carried out, and the estate was sold. But Lord Lansdowne, who purchased it, confirmed the truth of the story, with the single exception of substituting an organ in place of the fiddlers. He said that, in making some repairs in the house, the pipes were discovered, which had been laid by the former proprietor, to carry out the musical scheme. It is possible that the nobleman borrowed his idea from a project published by an inveterate joker. When the water-works were established at Chelsea, this joker, in a serio-comic article, suggested that a huge organ might easily be built underground, with connecting pipes, so that families could be supplied with sacred music by turning a cock.

Nous trouvons dans un livre de M. Couailhac, intitulé la Vie au Théâtre, à propos de la claque en général, le tarif suivant, qui aurait autrefois été en usage dans un théâtre du boulevard du Crime:—

Salve ordinaire—5 fr.; Tirade enlevée—15 fr.; Salve redoublée—20 fr.; Trois salves—25 fr.; Rappel simple—25 fr.; Rappels illimités—50 fr.; Effets d'horreur—5 fr.; Murmures d'effroi, exécutés comme si la force manquait pour applaudir—15 fr.; Applaudissements contrariés d'abord, puis enlevés, comme dans le cas où la partie saine du public l'emporte sur une cabale—32 fr.; Long gémissement suivi d'applaudissements à la fin d'une scène de meurtre—12fr. 50c.; Ricanements—5 fr.; Rires—8 fr.; Rires francs—10 fr.; Exclamations: Ah! qu'il est drôle! Ah! qu'il est amusant!—15 fr.; Exclamations superlatives: Ah! qu'il est donc drôle! Ah! qu'il est donc amusant!—20 fr.; etc., etc. Quant aux phrases qu'on entend parfois à la sortie d'un théâtre: "Ah! quelle bonne troupe! Quelle troupe d'ensemble! C'est mieux qu'au Théâtre-Français! Quel directeur que M!" M. Couailhac assure que ces exclamations forment l'objet d'une des clauses d'un traité passé entre le directeur et le chef de claque. Parisis.

A statistical return, says the Mondo Artistico, of the nationality of singers would be a curiosity. The vocal art is invaded by foreigners. Young aspirants from Spain, Germany, England, France, and even far off America, come to Milan for the purpose of learning Italian and singing. The greatest number hail from Germany, France, and Spain, but the vocal registers of these countries appear to differ from each other. At first sight, it would seem that the Spaniards are principally tenors; that the basses are generally supplied by France; and that most of the sopranos are natives of the beer-loving Fatherland. Thus the following tenors are all Spanish:—Gayarre, Marin, Arrambur, Abrugnedo, De Azula, the two Carrions, Vidal, Frappoli, Villena, Camero, Saberter Jago, Marrimon, Reynes, Roic, Tintorer, Ferrer, Gazul, Garibay, and Ria. The French basses are Artry, Castelmary, Junca, David, Vidal, Jamet, Augier, Brémond, Louis and Silvian Merly, Petit, Génibrel, Feitlinger, Belval, Romani, and Zemelli. Among the fair Teutonic sopranos, whose name is legion, the principal are Mesdes Fricci, Stolz, Destin, Wilda, Singer, Ostava Torriani, Krauss, Waldmann, D'Angeri, Smerowski, Vogri, Proch, Blume, Link, Sawerthal, Meyer, and Kottas.

Sir Walter Scott had no genius for music. He could neither sing nor play, and his ear could scarcely distinguish one piece from another. Being once engaged as an advocate for a client who had been imposed on in buying a fiddle, Scott read up all the literature on fiddle-making, and astonished the Court by his learning on the subject, and his intimate knowledge of makers and instruments. Delighted with his success in Court, he determined to air his learning in society. He dined, soon after, with the Duke of Hamilton, who talked only on two subjects, hunting and music. Having exhausted hunting, Scott struck boldly into music, and discoursed eloquently about the merits of various eminent fiddle-makers. The Duke's face lighted with pleasure, and, whispering to his butler, a half dozen tall servants soon came in, each bringing a fiddle. The Duke was eminently practical, and wished to subject Scott's knowledge to a severe test, by requiring him to name the maker of each instrument by its peculiar tone. Scott was in despair, and was half inclined to own the truth. But his love of fun and adventure was too strong, and, by dint of shrewd guessing, he managed to get on very well, till, coffee coming in, the subject was changed, and he escaped further embarrassment.

Digitized by Google

LULLI AS A PROFESSOR OF THE VIOLIN.*

Everyone knows that Lulli was born at Florence, that he was loaded with marks of Royal favour, and that, in a certain measure, he may be considered the creator of French music. I say in a certain measure, so as not to be unjust to Cambert and Perrin, who were first in point of time, if not in point of merit. Lulli was a favourite with Fate, and chance or providence, no less than his own genius, played an important part in his adventurous life. This is the lot of such privileged beings; side by side with men of laborious and patient dispositions, who owe everything to their own exertions, we behold the favourites of fortune, for whom auspicious circumstances perform the greater portion of the work in all they undertake. Destiny assumes a thousand shapes, in order to take part in their affairs, and a puff of wind, affecting no one else, suffices to urge forward the bark of their success.

This image brings us to the fortuitous incidents which threw Lulli in the way of honours—incidents in which Destiny took a somewhat unusual form, and somewhat difficult, therefore, to describe. I am really embarrassed to tell you how it came to pass that Mademoiselle de Montpensier turned out of doors the indiscreet scullion who scraped his saucepans and his violins in the kitchens of the Luxembourg. One thing is certain—this is a fact which has entered the domain of history—Mademoiselle, cousin of the King, was deficient in self-control. Not that by any means her spirit was inferior to her high estate, or that her heart overpowered her reason. No! the misfortune sprang from a lower source, and it was with a suppressed though well articulated groan that the concession made by her to weak humanity was betrayed. But so it was, and the report of the adventure made more noise than it ought. I leave the reader to imagine the despair of the court and of the city, especially when it was known that the King had been highly amused at the expense of Mademoiselle, of whom he was very fond. Evil-minded persons wrote a canzonet. What do I say? Twenty canzonets. There was, however, a particular canzonet which Battista, the scullion and Florentine fiddler, set to music and sang in the kitchen. Mademoiselle, indignant at what he had done, turned the indiscreet youth with ignominy out of doors, and he was reduced to beggary. But the canzonet was popular and Lulli was no fool. He sang it to great noblemen who were exceedingly amused with it, and sometimes made the roguish Italian musician a present. Encouraged by such aristocratic patronage, Battista waited on the Director of the King's Violins, and begged he might be allowed to join the company. But, as the number of performers was limited, and, moreover, as each of them had paid very dearly for the right of torturing the Royal ears, whenever his Majesty went to bed or got up; whenever he was present at a banquet or a festivity, no one, as a matter of course, would resign his post to the young virtuoso. Lulli was not discouraged, and, as what he wanted was to obtain a footing at Court, he accepted from the performers the situation of orchestra-servant. It was he who laid the music upon the desks; gathered it up again after the performance; and snuffed the candles. It would be a mistake to suppose that the mind of Louis XIV. was always busied with plans of administration and of war. He was passionately fond of a joke, and his familiars did not neglect to serve up for him every day his favourite dish. As I have said, Mademoiselle's adventure had amused him extremely.

Having heard that the author of the fashionable canzonet was the orchestra servant, he expressed a wish to know him. The astute Florentine managed matters so well as to become indispensible to the King, who often suffered from dulness. So, as the members of the band continued very well, and would not relinquish their posts, either by dying or otherwise, Louis XIV. formed another band, expressly for Lulli, who was empowered to manage it as he chose. Les Petits Violons, as they were called, soon surpassed, under the instruction of their conductor, the others, and the really admirable style in which they played contributed, in no small degree, to rehabilitate their instrument, on which some grand noblemen condescended to take lessons.

We must recollect that, if the art of music was held in only slight consideration, that of playing the violin had fallen into utter dicredit. To bestow the epithet of a "violin" on any one was a gross insult, and the title of "violinist" was synonymous with that of "drunkard." Let the reader judge, by the following statement, which I found in the Variétés historiques, under the date of 1752, (!!), of the opinion that the contemporaries of the Grand Monarch held on the subject:—"Though I do not deem it unworthy of honest people to apply themselves to music generally, or to any one instrument in particular, they should do so only in moderation. . . . It is a mistake, in my opinion, to believe, as some pretend, that the violin has been ennobled by the mere fact that certain great noblemen studied it; such tastes are, I make bold to say, inopportune, and, without aiding to honour the instrument, damage the noblemen in question."

Lulli may be considered as one of the best violinists, if not the best one, of his time. He learned the instrument while he was in the service of Mademoiselle, and afterwards perfected himself by his own exertions. When he came from his own country with the Chevalier de Guise, who took him to his niece, in order that, by talking with him, she might improve her Italian, he played only the guitar. His grand airs for the violin, according to the opinion of his contemporaries, defied all competition.

As his talent was singularly fettered by the ignorance distinguishing the singers and the instrumentalists of those days, most of whom did not know what it meant to play from notes, Lulli set about forming them himself, in order not to be under the necessity of adapting his works to the weakness of the executants, as people then said.*

He had, therefore, to instruct musicians of all kinds, and especially violinists. We must consider as pupils of his, Verdier, Baptiste, Senr, Joubert, fournisseur du Roi; Rebel, Senr, and Lalande, who all performed his symphonies, and what was called "French music," better than the Italian violinists had been able to play them. Some of these virtuosos even practised composition, and succeeded tolerably well.

In the same proportion that his orchestra grew more skilful did Lulli give greater scope to his thought. It is very easy to perceive that his later works are more complicated than the earlier ones.

We may mention, also, among his pupils, Marais, the viola player, who enjoyed, both in France and abroad, an immense reputation. The viola was the same in form as the violin, only much larger. It had six strings and six keys, and was played with a bow. Marais added a seventh string, the bourdon, and a seventh key. From a boy, this great artist had been in the choir at the Sainte-Chapelle, and attended on Chaperon, who was at the head of the school there. Lulli displayed great interest in him. It was by Lulli's means that Marais carried to its utmost limits the art of playing the viola. The first person who gave him lessons was Sainte-Colombe. Marais composed a great deal for his instrument, but his compositions were so difficult that only he and his son could execute them. In his capacity as a dramatic composer, he has left us Alcyon, the tempest in which was deemed a master-piece. The viola was dethroned by the violoncello.

We feel bound to add that, in this matter, we must make due allowance for enthusiasm in receiving the accounts of writers of the period. With a few exceptions, the most renowned virtuosos were simply servile imitators of their teacher. They learned to play by copying him, and not one of them was really a master of his instrument.

Such was the part, an absolutely initiative and pedagogical part, which Lulli took in the formation of his orchestra. By forming violinists, he created the quartet, the almost exclusive basis, in those days, of the symphony. He would, without doubt, have done still more for his art, had he not died so soon.

Thus it was that, thanks to a weakness on the part of Mademoiselle, the Scullion Battista became composer to his Majesty, Superintendent of the Royal Chamber Music, and Director of the Opera.

P. LACOME.

BRUNSWICK.—The Ducal Theatre was recently injured during a severe thunderstorm. About 1500 square feet of zinc plates were stripped off the roof of the middle part of the building and hurled through the air a considerable distance. Luckily the metal fell in an adjoining open space without injuring anyone.

---

* From the Gazetta Musicale di Milano.

* And as people say now, in English.—TRANSLATOR.

Digitized by Google

PARIS SCRAPS.

(From our Parisian Scrapper.)

M. Halanzier does not appear to suffer at all from that managerial bugbear, the hot weather. On the contrary, it may be truthfully asserted that the usual law governing theatrical matters has been reversed in his case, for, of a certainty, the receipts this year at the Grand Opera have gone up with the mercury in the thermometer. The works offered, since I last wrote, by the fortunate impresario to his patrons have been Guillaume Tell, La Juive, and Hamlet.

Faust is being got ready for the re-appearance of Mad. Carvalho, which is to take place in a few days. After that we are promised Don Juan, with M. Faure as the unscrupulous hero, and the lady just mentioned in the character of Zerlina. These productions are to be followed by Robert le Diable, and L'Africaine, Mdlle de Reszké being Selika, and M. Lassalle, Nelusko. The list, we are told, will be completed by Jeanne d'Arc, towards the end of September, and Sylvia, about the commencement of February.

At the Opéra-Comique, M. Du Locle is as busy as a bee preparing for the revival of the Val d'Andorre. The following is the definitive cast: Rose de Mai, Mdlle Chapuy; Georgette, Mdlle Ducasse; Thérésa, Mdlle Vidal; Jacques Sincère, M. Obin; Stéphan, M. Stéphan ("strange coincide-ence," as Mr Buckstone would say, between the name of the part and that of the artist); Saturnin, M. Caisso; Le Joyeux, M. Barré; L'Endormi, M. Teste; and the Syndie, M. Dufriche. Two or three of the artists in the above list are not yet known to fame. I may, as well, state, therefore, that Mdlle Vidal is a young lady distinguished for what I heard termed the other day: opulence of form, and who appeared last year in Les Amours du Diable; that M. Stéphan comes from Troyes, where he sang second tenor in grand opera; and that M. Caisso gained one of the prizes for singing at the late examinations of the Conservatory.

To use a sporting expression, M. Du Locle has "scratched" two of the promised operas from his winter programme. These are M. Victor Massé's Paul et Virginie, rendered an impossibility by the high demands of Mdlle Heilbron, and Les Contes d'Hoffmann, words by Jules Barbier, music by Offenbach, which cannot be given in consequence of a misunderstanding, as to the cast, between the manager, on the one hand, and the author and composer on the other.

M. Deloffre is still ill. M. Charles Constantin is acting temporarily as conductor in his absence.

M. Campocasso has not yet succeeded in finding a home for the Théâtre-Lyrique, but it is believed he will obtain the Théâtre de l'Ambigu. Nothing certain is known concerning his company.

FRANKFORT-ON-THE-MAINE.—Mad. Wagner-Ueberhorst, from the Theatre, Nuremberg, who has been engaged in place of Mdlle Hofmeister (who goes to the Royal Operahouse, Berlin), made a successful debut as Valentine in Les Huguenots.

HALLE.—The Friedericiana, a Student's Vocal Association, has, after being in existence for some years, been dissolved by order of the Senate. In its statutes there was a stipulation that the Director of the Association must meet with the approbation of the University Singing Master. The last Director chosen by the Association, though one of the most able men in the town, did not please the Singing Master. This gave rise to a conflict with the University Authorities, the result being the breaking-up of the Association.

DRESDEN.—While the management of the Theatre Royal are still negotiating with Herr R. Wagner the terms for representing Tristan und Isolde, steps have already been taken for producing it. Herr Schuch, Hofcapellmeister is charged with the task of getting up the work generally, while Herr Riccius, Hof-Musikdirector will drill the chorus in the difficult music assigned to it. The characters are cast thus: Tristan, Herr Riese; Isolde, Madlle Malten; King Marke, Herr Köhler; Kurnewal, Herr Degele; and Brangäne, Mad. Kainz Prause.

DÜSSELDORF.—The new Stadttheater is so far advanced, that hopes are entertained of opening it on the 1st December. Up to that date, the performances will continue to be given in the old building, which re-opened on the 1st inst. The manager, Herr Scherbath, intends starting a paper to be sold in the Theatre. It will be edited by Dr Emil Kneschke, a well-known writer, who is also the manager's secretary. It will not, however, be an exclusively theatrical publication, but treat of general matters as well as of those connected with the stage.

Lohengrin.

(From the "Dublin Evening Mail.")

A correspondent of high repute as a musical critic says of this opera:—"Those who say Lohengrin is not music at all remind me of a story told by the facetious Terry Magrath. In his (Terry's) youthful days, Bath was a place of much resort, and there was an old singing master, Rauzzini by name, who was invited to the best houses in the city. At an evening party, amongst other notabilities was Tom Moore, who sang some of his own melodies as I believe nobody else could sing them. This excited the jealousy of some professional vocalists present, who said to Rauzzini, 'This is not singing at all.' 'Not singing at all!' rejoined the old master. 'Then if it is not singing, by gar, it is what singing ought to be.' Such is Lohengrin—if it is not music, it is mighty like what music ought to be—that is dramatic music, conveying the sentiments of the actors, illustrating the scenes and groupings requisite to the development of the story. Ay, and that story is a legend of the olden time, woven into a libretto of much interest. Wagner writes his own books, so he is both poet and musician. Now, viewing Lohengrin as a musical drama, it is incomparable and unique. It is completely unlike any other operatic work. It avoids all those morceaux so loved by vocalists who desire to display their individual abilities at the expense of the symmetry of the action and the consecutiveness of the incidents represented. Hence singers will not as a class like it; although there is great room for fine acting and fine declamatory singing throughout. Then it is doubtful if it will ever become popular with the multitude. It constrains the attention too severely; it appeals to the intellect, and does not tickle the fancy. Yet, I would not be surprised at it making its way from the head to the heart. It is amazingly solid, appearing to have the weight of maturity, and at the same time it is gorgeously picturesque in orchestration and choral pomp, while its processional music is curiously appropriate. As a whole, it is a splendid work. But it demands large stage appointments, and these it has at the Royal Italian Opera, where it is mounted with almost unparalleled magnificence. One drawback it has. It is too continuous. From the time the curtain rises till it falls at the end of each act, the action progresses and the music flows on, without cessation, or the slightest break or pause. Hence, attention is demanded to the verge of fatigue, and, when the curtain comes down, one draws a long breath and closes one's eyes for repose. Then another drawback—if we look at opera as a species of elegant amusement—that it allows no leisure for snatches of conversation. It commands the audience to silence, and even occupies the mind in pondering upon its ponderosity between the acts. Altogether it is an extraordinary work, and one cannot wonder at the furore it has created, nor at the amount of discussion bestowed upon it in public journals and private parties."

PRESENTATION TO AN ORGANIST.—After having gratuitously discharged for some years the duties of organist and choir-master at St Paul's Church, High Elswick, near Newcastle, Mr C. H. Shepherd, A.R.A., recently resigned his double post. On this, it was determined to present him with a testimonial in acknowledgement of his services. Upwards of £100 was subscribed, and a handsome time-piece, purchased with a portion of it, the remainder being put in a purse for presentation in that shape. The presentation took place on the 27th August, in St Paul's School, Victoria Street. In reply to a highly complimentary address, beautifully illuminated on parchment, and read by the Rev. E. Humble, Mr Shepherd returned thanks in an excellent speech, in the course of which he took occasion to dwell on the great value of music in connection with public worship.

NAPLES.—La Figlia di Domenico, a two-act comic opera, words by Sig. Domenico Bolognesi, and music by Sig. Carlo Alberti, has been successfully produced at the Teatro Nuovo.

MUNICH.—The Theatre Royal re-opened with the Der fliegende Holländer, in which Mesdlles Redecke, Schefzky, and Herr Reichmann ably sustained the three principal parts. The season will be marked by four novelties: Der Widerspenstigen Zähmung, by Herr Götz; Die Folkunger, by Herr Kretschmer; Aida, by Verdi; and Des Bergkönig's Braut, by Herr Hallström. The last work has never yet been performed on any stage.

Digitized by Google

SCRIPSIT RICARDUS.

The following communication has been addressed to the Bayreuther Tageblatt, by Herr Richard Wagner, with reference to the reports current about dissensions between Mad. Cosima and certain artists:

"As if to wind up the preparatory rehearsals, which have just terminated with such unparalleled success, for the Festival-Stage-Play-Performances of next year, reports have appeared in the newspaper press about internal dissensions, which, it is said, render it doubtful whether the enterprise will ever really be carried into execution. As in these reports, allusion is made to dissensions with the tailor of the Theatre Royal, Munich, whose assistance, it is well-known, was never in any way sought for at Bayreuth, it was easy to guess the source and motives of these demonstrations, intended to injure the undertaking, even if their characteristic feature, shameless personal invective, had not long caused their source to be well-known.

"Since all the press, including the leading papers, reproduce these calumnious reports, it is hereby simply declared from the place itself, that everything contained in them is a lying fabrication, which cannot be treated even as an exaggeration, because this would be attaching importance to the instances of misunderstanding which really did occur, but which were speedily arranged.

"RICHARD WAGNER."

It is now stated that it was not owing to any difference with Mad. Cosima, but on account of the sudden indisposition of his wife, that Herr Niemann quitted Bayreuth so suddenly. What, then, is the meaning of the last part of the above letter? In his anxiety to refute the reports of which he complains, it might strike some persons that Herr Wagner proves by his own words that there was good foundation for those reports.

The following is the cast, as at present settled, of the Tetralogical Trilogy:—Brunhilde, Mad. Friedrich Materna, of Vienna; Loge, Herr Vogl, of Munich; Siegfried, Herr Georg Unger, of Mannheim; Wotan, Herr Carl Betz, of Berlin; Siegmund, Herr Albert Niemann, of Berlin; Alberich, Herr Carl Hill, of Schwerin; Günther, Herr Eugen Gura, of Leipsic; Mime, Herr Carl Schlosser, of Munich; Tafner, Herr Franz von Reichenberg, of Mannheim; Hagen, Herr Emil Scaria, of Vienna; Fasolt, Herr Alb. Eilers, of Coburg; Hunding and Donner, Herr Niering, of Darmstadt; Erda and Waltrante, Mad. Jaide, of Darmstadt; Sieglinde, Mad. Vogl, of Munich; Gutrune, Mdlle Weckerlin, of Munich; Fricka, Norne, Mad. von Grün-Sadler, of Coburg; Norne, Mdlle Preiss, of Brunswick; Freia, Mdlle Haupt, of Cassel; Three Rhine-Daughters, Mdlle Lilli Lehmann, of Berlin; Mdlle Marie Lehmann, of Berlin; Mdlle Lammert, of Berlin; Walkyres, Mdlle von Müller, of Mannheim; and Mdlle Ehrenfest, of Vienna. Furthermore, Herr Weiss, of Breslau; Herr Bürger, of Coburg; Herr Herrlich, of Berlin; Herr Evers and Haag, of Berlin; and Herr Koch, of Breslau, will figure as lieges (Mannen) in Götterdämmerung.

BEAUTIFUL ZEPHYR.

Beautiful zephyr, sweet evening breeze,
Softly whispering through the green trees,
Bearing aloft the odour of flowers,
Passing so swiftly through fragrant bowers;
Catching each scent and sound at thy gay will,
Carrying afar the sweet Nightingale's trill,
Drawing bright laughter from rippling waves,
Like mirth of fair Lurlei in deep coral caves.

Beautiful zephyr, how lovely art thou,
Gently kissing the night's star-crowned brow;
Rapidly passing o'er hill and o'er dale,
Gaily dispersing the mist's gauzy veil;
Onwards, still onwards, through infinite space,
In thy progress refreshing the earth's heated face—
Beautiful zephyr, how lovely thou art,
As thou scatterest the dew-drops and swiftly depart.

WESTON S. JACKSON.

BARCELONA.—Verdi's Requiem will shortly be performed at the Licoe.

WIESBADEN.—Herr Theodor Wachtel and Mad. Trebelli sang at the last Curhaus Concert. Madlle O. Lichterfeld, of Berlin, was the pianist. She played, among other pieces, Beethoven's concerto in G major.

MUSIC AT OXFORD AND CAMBRIDGE.

As regards Music, the story of her connection with either University can only be described as one of shame and pain. In the old Catholic days, founders left funds to provide for a musical staff in their college chapels. Hence, as the art progressed, a set of resident musicians was congregated; and, music seeming to flourish on academic soil, King James I. granted faculties in that art, constituting the Universities, in effect, public examining boards. Alas, however, for poor St Cecilia! The governing bodies of the colleges filched away in large lumps the stipends assigned by pious founders for the support of musicians. The artists themselves were not only robbed, but trampled upon—consigned to social ostracism, insulted. At Oxford—and this too, in the reign of Queen Victoria—the doctors of music were ignominiously turned out of their seats in the theatre at Commemoration, while the very degrees were tampered with by ignorant, unsympathetic, and reckless Jacks-in-office. These are assertions. Out of the multiplicity of proofs ready to hand, it will not be difficult to justify them. Some two centuries back, in the bonny days of the merry monarch, when beauty was beginning to emerge rom the black veil of Puritanism which for the nonce had stifled her, one Dr Benjamin Rogers was organist of Magdalen College, Oxford. The man was not merely an executant, but also a composer of rare merit for the age in which he lived. He may rank fairly between Orlando Gibbons and Dr Aldrich. His strains still resound in our cathedrals, from Exeter to Carlisle, from Norwich to Bangor. His history may be easily summarized—as concisely in effect, as that of many another injured soul. He was illegally ejected from his small preferment, because—and the cause itself is significant of the small esteem in which music was then held—his pretty daughter had the hardihood to flirt with a gentleman commoner of the college. Having thus been deprived of subsistence, the poor artist left Oxford, and shortly afterwards died in extreme indigence. Than a history so sad as this nothing can read simpler, and it would seem but righteous to condemn the high-handed oppression and cold heartlessness which could thus harry an artist of eminence to starvation. The Universities, however, remain unchanged. A similar spirit to that which animated the fellows of Magdalen in the days of Charles II. prevails generally up to the present hour. Enough to state that Sterndale Bennett, the friend of Mendelssohn, the one English composer who has succeeded in enrapturing, by the force of a splendid genius, nations more æsthetically appreciative than ourselves, received from the great and niggardly University of Cambridge, for shedding lustre on her not very brilliant professoriate, the pitiful stipend of £100 per annum—a sum which would not have been offered without a blush to a college under-butler or an assistant cook. Nor does Cambridge lack a rival in supreme parsimony. The same stipend was the price at which the professional services of Sir Henry Bishop were assessed by Oxford. The same stipend is all, out of an endowment of £400,000 per annum, she can spare to Sir Henry's successor, Sir F. A. G. Ouseley, whose zeal and self-sacrifice for art are only paralleled by his profound knowledge and unquestionable talent.—Belgravia.

ROME.—Sig. Albertini's new opera, Don Saverio, is in rehearsal at the Politeama.

MADRID.—It is reported that R. Wagner's Rienzi will be produced next season at the Teatro Nacional.

ODESSA.—Glinka's Life for the Czaar, with Sig. Merly in the principal part, has made a hit here.

BRUSSELS.—The Théâtre Royal de la Monnaie opens very shortly under the dual management of MM. Calabresi and Stoumon.

DESSAU.—The season will commence on the 1st October next. Among the novelties will be Golo, by Herr B. Scholz, and Der Widerspenstigen Zähmung, by Herr Götz.

DARMSTADT.—The United Men's Vocal Associations of Baden have awarded this year's prize of 1000 marks to Herr C. A. Mangold, of this place, for his composition entitled "Die Lieder des Mirza Schaffy."

PESTH.—Great surprise is felt in musical circles that the Academy of Music still remains a project, and has not become a reality. The Reichstag have voted thrice the sum needed to erect the building, and all the plans have long been ready, down to the most trifling detail, yet nothing is done. It is said that the Abbate Franz Liszt, the president of the institution, is tired of waiting, but that he hesitates coming here lest he should be accused of impatience and importunity.

Digitized by Google

WAIFS.

The Cavalier J. Pasquale Goldberg has arrived in London, from Paris.

The estimated washing bill of London is upwards of £5,000,000 per annum.

Mdlle Anna de Belocca has been singing at Hombourg, with great success.

M. Alexander Batta has just been named a Knight of the Legion of Honour.

A marriage is talked of between Mr John Clayton, the actor, and Miss Victoria Vokes.

Mdlle Tietjens will make her first appearance in New York at a concert on the 4th of October.

No fewer than 367 competitors forwarded photographs of sketches for the new French postage stamp.

Mr W. H. Montgomery has been appointed Musical Director at Covent Garden for the ensuing Christmas season.

M. Massenet has just finished a three-act opera, entitled Le Roi de Lahore, the words of which are by M. L. Gallet.

It is reported that Mr Tennyson is to write some new scenes for the acting version of his Queen Mary at the Lyceum.

The Paris Temps is publishing a story signed by "Charles Dickens," called "The History of Simon Heavysides."

A romantic young man says that a woman's heart is like the moon—it changes continually, but always has a man in it.

Molière's "Tartuffe" has been revived at the Théâtre-Français to introduce a new actress, Mdlle Samary, to public notice.

Sir Julius Benedict lately passed through Paris on his return from Switzerland to England, arriving in London on Monday last.

At the recent book-trade dinner in New York, the bill of fare was copyrighted, for fear some of the Guild might steal it. Force of habit.

The Prince of Wales is to be invited to become the patron and one of the presidents of the Great National Eisteddfod at Wrexham next year.

Seven members of the orchestra of the Sacred Harmonic Society have been superseded, and their situations filled up by other professors.

Antonio Marchisio, composer, pianist, and professor, died lately, aged fifty-eight, at Turin. He was a brother of Carlotta and Barbara Marchisio.

The Palais Royal Theatre has again produced the Roi Candaule for the reappearance of Geoffroy, and the Sensitive of MM. Labiche and Delacour.

The Théâtre-Français is about to reproduce the Philosophe sans le Savoir, of Sédaine, and has resolved on a happy innovation—to return to the true text of the author.

The annual meeting of the Academy of Fine Arts, Paris, is fixed for the 9th October next, when the Perpetual Secretary, Viscount Delasborde, will read a eulogy on Auber.

The Zouave regiments, which up to the present time have had only clarions and drums, will in future have regular military bands, like the other regiments of the French army.

The principal literary prize of the Welsh National Eisteddfod, £30 and a carved oak chair, was awarded to Mr Tudno Jones, of Bangor. Other prizes for music, poetry, and prose, were distributed.

The Winchester (Tenn.) Journal says that it has seen some shoes made out of rattlesnake hide. We have heard of treading on the worm; this new method of making shoes is only an extension of the same principle.

To find a policeman, look down every area in the street. If you do not by accident happen to see one, ring the bell and inquire if the policeman is in the kitchen. Repeat this at every door, and you cannot fail eventually to find one.

An Old Count paid his addresses to one of the richest heiresses of Paris. On asking her hand in marriage, he frankly said to her, "Miss B——, I am very old, and you are very young; will you do me the honour to become my widow?"

The direction of the Museums of the Louvre have sent, through the Italian Legation, to the president of the committee for organising the fête to celebrate the fourth centenary of Michael Angelo's birthday, a case containing sketches by the great artist.

The essays and poems for which prizes were awarded at the Gordovic Eisteddfod, held at Christmas last in Liverpool, have just been issued by Mr Isaac Ffoulkes, local publisher. A feature in the record is a collection of Welsh epigrams and epitaphs.

A library, containing 30,000 volumes of foreign works, has been established at Yeddo by the Japanese Educational Department.

The reading of the first two acts of the new fairy opera, Le Voyage dans la Lune, by MM. Leterrier, Vanloo, and A. Mortier, has produced at the Gaîté, at Paris, a most favourable impression on the artists. Offenbach has already sent the music for the first act.

The Obituary is now issued fortnightly, instead of weekly. The editor, in an address, says, with curious felicity, "In certain quarters the liveliest interest in our undertaking is manifested. The paper proposes to reproduce the more important obituary announcements commencing half a century back."

Mrs Ellen Pike has purchased the Grand Opera House, New York, for one hundred and five thousand dollars. The building was erected by the late Sam Pike, and sold by him to Fisk for seven or eight hundred thousand dollars. This last sale was made under a mortgage held by Mrs Pike, for thirty thousand dollars.

Mad. Garcia has been singing, during the week, with great success at the Aquarium, Brighton. Among the compositions selected by her were "Ave, Maria," and the "Jewel Song" from Faust, by Gounod; "Nobil Signor," from Les Huguenots, and the "Serenade," by Braga. To these were added several English ballads, such as "Auld Robin Gray," "Come back to Erin," and "She wore a Wreath of Roses," in all of which she was much applauded.

A colossal piece of sculpture representing the Crucifixion is to be set up this Autumn in the village of Oberammergau. It has been executed by Prof. Halbig, of Munich, as a commission from His Majesty, the King of Bavaria, and is said to be a grand and impressive work. A difficulty has arisen as to its transport from Munich to Oberammergau, for its mass is so great (it weighs 25,000 kilogrammes) that ordinary means are insufficient for its safe conveyance.

M. Alexandre Dumas is at work on a new comedy for the Théâtre Français, which, having had so decided a success with his Demi-Monde, is now about to introduce into its repertory La Dame aux Camélias. Of the comedy on which the author of the Demi-Monde is now engaged, a well-informed correspondent writes in Le Temps: "C'est une espèce de contrepartie de ce même Demi-Monde, dont Alexandre Dumas roule le projet depuis trois ou quatre ans dans sa tête. Il veut peindre le travail souterrain des femmes de cette sorte dans notre société moderne, les montrer tenant les fils de la politique, de la Bourse, se répandant par mille infiltrations secrètes dans la vie bourgeoise contemporaine. Voilà qui est curieux, et le type de femme que Dumas a rêvé de mettre à la scène est fort connu: il n'est pas un Parisien que ne puisse lui donner un nom."

We regret to announce the death of Dr William Marshall (Mus. Doc. Oxon.), which took place on the 24th August, at Handsworth, Birmingham, in the 70th year of his age. Dr Marshall was in his youth a chorister at the Chapel Royal, St James's, and afterwards held for twenty-one years the position of organist of Christ Church and St John's Colleges, Oxford, where he made the acquaintance of the then Professor of Poetry and present Bishop of Rochester, who afterwards induced him to settle at Kidderminster, of which parish Dr Claughton was for a long period vicar. Here for more than twenty years Dr Marshall was organist and choirmaster of the parish church of St Mary. His reputation as a performer on the organ stood high, but it was as a teacher of music that he was especially well-known, his professional circuit extending over hundreds of miles. In the language of one of his musical disciples, he had the "rare quality of making study interesting, and even the drudgery of exercises pleasurable." His teaching was no mere affair of routine, but instinct with artistic feeling and sensibility. He never spared himself or his pupils; his fidelity to art would not allow him to abate aught of her claims, or to temporise with the indolence or the whims of those he undertook to teach. His conscientiousness was as great as his taste was true and pure. By the outside public Dr Marshall was seen to the greatest advantage when directing one of the rehearsals of the Philharmonic Society. The skill, the energy, the ready tact he displayed, united to a singularly pleasing urbanity of manner which nothing could quite upset, made an impression not easily forgotten on the most casual observer. The members of the Philharmonic Society under his skilful, indefatigable, yet autocratic training, acquired a finish and precision which earned for the Society a reputation far and near. The large number of persons who, in the course of his long and active professional career, enjoyed the privilege of his instruction or his friendship will need no words of ours to remind them of the many excellent qualities of the true artist and true gentleman who has just passed away. He died "in harness" in accordance with his oft-expressed wish; having been professionally engaged in Liverpool only three weeks before his death.—Abridged from the "Kidderminster Shuttle."

Digitized by Google

The Queen and the Prince of Wales have accepted copies of the "Ordinaunce of Revel," printed in Chaucerian English and in the ancient manner, by Messrs Field and Tuer, on the recent completion of the firm's new Leadenhall works; and, by their direction, complimentary letters have been written to the firm, expressing the interest and pleasure "Ye Ordinaunce" afforded to Her Majesty and His Royal Highness. The paper used in the production of this remarkable quarto broadside was manufactured expressly for it—the appearance of age being obtained by two stainings with chemicals.

"ARMA VIRUMQUE."—Several powder-begrimed veterans gathered in a certain police-station the other evening—says the Louisville Courier Journal—to keep out the rain for a few minutes, and, while there, discussed the late war. "I remember," said one, "that a bullet passed clear through George Gay's body, and never killed him." "I recollect," said another, "that a ball lodged in Bill Payson's lung, and never was taken out, but he lived." "I," said a third, "know well when the doctors thought Henry Hill's life was gone up, as a 'minie' lodged within an inch of his heart, but he lived." "Jake Johnson's head was pierced by a ball, and he lived," exclaimed the last man but one. These remarks produced considerable surprise, and excited speech from all save a tall, slim, and sleepy individual, who waited till his companions concluded, and then drawled, in piping accents, "Those fellows was a little tough, I allow; but Jim Jones, who fit aside of me, was shot in the neck so that his head jist hung by the skin." "Good heavens!" ejaculated all; "you don't mean to say he lived, do you?" "Oh, no; he died," drawled slim and sleepy.—New York Arcadian.

Heredity shows itself more markedly, it would seem, in the arts than in the sciences. Taking music, we find some remarkable instances. The Bach family, which took its rise in 1550 and became extinct in 1800, presents an unbroken series of musicians for nearly two centuries of that interval. The head of the family was Veit Bach, a baker of Presburg, and his two sons were the first of the family who were musicians by profession. The descendants literally "overran Thuringia, Saxony, and Franconia," says Papillon. "They were all organists, church singers, or what is called in Germany, 'city musicians.' When they became too numerous to live all together, and were scattered abroad, they met once a year, on a stated day, to keep up a sort of patriarchal bond of union. This custom was observed until nearly the middle of the eighteenth century, and oftentimes more than 100 persons bearing the name of Bach, men, women, and children, were to be seen assembled. In the family are reckoned twenty-nine eminent musicians, and twenty-eight of a lower grade." Rossini's family played music at fairs; Beethoven's father and grandfather were musicians; Mozart's father was second Capellmeister to the Prince-Bishop of Salzburg. We are prepared then to find, in the theory of transmitted habits, the explanation of the wonderful musical powers of Mozart, with some account of which (from his life by Holmes) we must close this note, already drawn far beyond the limits proposed when we began:—"When Mozart's sister, then seven years old, was learning to play on the clavier (the early form of the piano), Mozart, then three years old, was a constant attendant on her lessons; and already showed by his fondness for striking thirds, and pleasing his ear by the discovery of other harmonious intervals, a lively interest in music. At four, he could always retain in memory the brilliant solos in the concertos which he heard; and now his father began, half in sport, to give him lessons. The musical faculty seems to have been intuitive in him; for, in learning to play, he learned to compose at the same time; his own nature discovering to him some important secrets in melody, rhythm, and the art of setting a bass. To learn a minuet he required half-an-hour; for a longer piece, an hour; and, having once mastered them, he played them with perfect neatness and in exact time. His progress was so great that at four years of age, or earlier, he composed little pieces, which his father wrote down for him. Later, in music he astonished his teacher, not so much by an avidity for information, as by the impossibility of telling him anything that he did not know before. At the age of six, Mozart knew the effect of sounds as represented by notes, and had overcome the difficulty of composing unaided by an instrument. Having commenced composition with recourse to the clavier, his powers in mental music constantly increased, and he soon imagined effects of which the original type existed only in his brain." But in some respects perhaps the most remarkable circumstance related in this life of Mozart is the following:—When he was only seven years old, his father took him to see an organ with pedals. "To amuse ourselves," says the father, in a letter to a friend, "I explained the pedals to Wolfgang. He began immediately, stante pede, to try them, pushed the stool back, and preluded standing and treading the bass, and really as if he had practised many months. Every one was astonished; this is a new gift of God, which many only attain after much labour."—Cornhill Magazine.

A curious manuscript, says the Journal Officiel, has just been brought to Paris by an Italian Monk, Father Matteoli. It shows that Guttenberg, the inventor of printing, was tried at Mayence in 1422, for the murder of one of his uncles, but was acquitted after a somewhat prolonged detention. None of the biographies of Guttenberg mention the circumstance.

The German papers announce the death, at the Monastery of Beocsin, near Carlowitz, of Gritschits Milenko, the most accomplished and successful of Servian lyrists. Among the personal friends who helped to bear his coffin to the burying-ground of the monastery was the well-known Servian poet, Zmaj-Jovan Jovanovits, who has recently celebrated his twenty-fifth year's jubilee of authorship.

ALEXANDRA PALACE.—Notwithstanding the unprecedentedly wet weather, which has interfered with the success of many of the principal fêtes, the number of visitors to the Alexandra Palace since the opening, on the 1st of May, has considerably exceeded one million. On Monday next there will be another balloon ascent, if the wind be moderate; on Tuesday, Mr John Clarke and Miss Furtado will perform in One Touch of Nature and the musical piece, Anything for a Change; on Wednesday, Mr F. Maccabe will repeat his entertainment, "Begone, Dull Care;" on Thursday, the Moore and Burgess Minstrels will again give their new programme, and in the evening the largest display of fireworks of the season will take place. On Saturday there will be a Volunteer fête; in the afternoon, Robertson's comedy, Progress, will be performed; and in the evening there will be an illumination of the grounds, and the bands of the Volunteers will play. The Russian gymnasts will appear throughout the week.

MR CARL ROSA has issued the prospectus of his approaching operatic campaign at the Princess's Theatre. His season begins on the 11th of the present month, and terminates on the 30th October. Miss Rose Hersee heads the list of ladies engaged, while last, though decidedly not least, in the list of gentlemen, is Mr Santley, whose return to the operatic stage will be hailed with delight by his friends and admirers, whose name is Legion. Between the names of the two artists mentioned figure those of several other public favourites, including Mr Charles Lyall. Miss Cora Stuart, Miss Josephine Yorke, Mr D. H. Bates, and Mr Fred. C. Packard are new to the English stage. The orchestra, conducted by Mr. Carl Rosa, comprises many well-known performers. The repertory includes operas by Mozart, Balfe, Gounod, Hérold, Wallace, Cherubini, Flotow, and Cagnani.

Advertisements.

THE VOICE & SINGING.

BY

ADOLFO FERRARI.

THE FORMATION AND CULTIVATION OF THE VOICE FOR SINGING.

Price 12s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, REGENT STREET, W.

"The remarkable qualities of this book are the author's freedom from conventional trammels, the strong sense of his opinions, and the novelty yet evident soundness of his precepts; his work has consequently come into general use as a manual of vocal instruction."—Daily News.

THE ART OF SINGING.

New Edition, Revised and Improved, of

A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR

THE VOICE.

By T. A. WALLWORTH.

A Method as used by the Author in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which he has cultivated the voices of his Pupils, Mdlle Alwina Valleria, Miss Lucy Franklein, and other successful Vocalists.

Full Music Size, price 7s.

London: HAMMOND & Co. (late JULLIEN), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his Residence, 36, Wimpole Street.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE,

For invigorating and enriching the voice, and removing affections of the throat.

DR STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE is universally acknowledged to be the most valuable remedy for sore throat, hoarseness and relaxed throat. It should always be taken before singing or reciting, as it strengthens the vocal organs. It is most extensively prescribed by the faculty for the throat and voice. Dr Lewis of Basingstoke says he finds them most efficacious, and in Dr Copland's Dictionary of Practical Medicine (Longman & Co.), they are strongly recommended at pages 872 and 1492. They are used by all the greatest vocalists and orators in Europe, and have been established over a quarter of a century. Testimonials from Patti, Grisi, Lablache, Santley, &c. Sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d, by all Chemists throughout the United Kingdom and the Colonies.

Digitized by Google

NEW SONGS.

THE LAST FAREWELL.

New Song by J. L. HATTON.

Sung by Mdlle ALBANI, at the Floral Hall Concerts, with the greatest possible success. In C and E. Price 4s.

NEW SONGS
BY ARTHUR SULLIVAN.

SWEETHEARTS. In A♭ and B♭. Sung by E. LLOYD 4s
THE JUDGE'S SONG. From Trial by Jury. Sung by Mr. FRED SULLIVAN 4s
TENDER AND TRUE. In E♭ and F. Sung by EDITH WYNNE 4s
THE DISTANT SHORE. In E♭, F, and G 4s
THOU ART WEARY. In D minor and F minor ... 4s
THOU'RT PASSING HENCE... ... ... 4s

NEW SONGS
BY VIRGINIA GABRIEL.

CLOVELLY. Words from "Songs for Sailors." Dedicated to H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh... ... 4s
SOWING AND REAPING. Sacred Song 3s
SHE CAME LIKE A DREAM. Sung by Madame ENRIQUEZ 3s
THE WHITE DOVE 2s 6d

NEW SONGS
BY FAVOURITE COMPOSERS.

YES AND NO ... ... LOUISA GRAY 3s
MY LADYE ... ... AMY COMPTON 3s
IN THE TWILIGHT HOURS „ 3s
ELSIE'S DREAM ... JOSEPH L. ROECKEL 3s
BESIDE THE SEA ... „ „ 3s
SUMMER WINDS ... „ „ 3s
SO LONG AGO ... ... GEORGE BARKER 3s
NINETTE ... ... „ „ 3s
THE ENTREATY The Lady CLARENCE PAGET 3s
GLAMOUR ... „ „ 3s
SWEET LISETTE ... ... J. L. ROECKEL 3s
THE CHILDREN IN THE WOOD „ 3s

CHAPPELL & CO.,
50, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON.

ROYAL
ITALIAN OPERA.

PRODUCTION OF WAGNER'S
'LOHENGRIN.'

The Books of Airs (in Two Books), arranged for Pianoforte, with ad. lib. accompaniments for Flute, Violin, and Violoncello, by

W. HUTCHINS CALLCOTT

PRICE.

Solos ... ... 5*s. each.*
Duets ... ... 6*s.* „
Accompaniments ... ... 1*s.* „

LONDON:
HUTCHINGS & ROMER,
9, Conduit Street, Regent Street, W.

Digitized by Google

SYDNEY SMITH'S

PIANOFORTE METHOD.

PRICE FIVE SHILLINGS.

THIS unrivalled work is now firmly established as the Pianoforte Instruction Book in nearly all the principal Educational establishments in Great Britain, Ireland, Canada, the United States of America, India, Australia, New Zealand, &c., &c.

It is supplied direct by the Publishers, or may be had of any Musicseller in the world.

LONDON:

ASHDOWN & PARRY,

HANOVER SQUARE.

Printed by HENDERSON, RAIT, AND FENTON, at No. 73 & 74, Marylebone Lane, Oxford Street, in the Parish of Marylebone, in the County of Middlesex.
Published by WILLIAM DUNCAN DAVISON, at the Office, 244, Regent Street, Saturday, Sept. 18, 1875.

The Musical World.

(REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.)

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST, 20s. PER ANNUM,
Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to DUNCAN DAVISON & CO., 244, Regent Street, London, W.

VOL. 53—No. 39. SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 25, 1875. PRICE {4d. Unstamped. 5d. Stamped.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—FIRST of the Series of SATURDAY CONCERTS, October 2nd. The Programme will include: Overture, "Parisina" (Benrett.); Symphony, No. 1 (Beethoven); Concerto for violin and orchestra (Hégar)—first time; Overture, Der fliegende Hollander (Wagner)—first time. Vocalists—Idle Cristino and Mr Edward Lloyd. Solo violin—Herr Wilhelmj. Conductor—Mr AUGUST MANNS. Transferable stalls for the Series (26 Concerts), Two Guineas and a Half; stall for a Single Concert, 3s. 6d. and 2s. 6d.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—HARVEST CELEBRATION.—Church and other trained Choirs are invited to join in the great Service of Song, Antiphonal, Unisonal, and Choral, which it is proposed to hold in the Centre Transept. Application to be made (through Organist or Choirmaster) to General Manager.

THEATRE ROYAL, COVENT GARDEN.—PROMENADE CONCERTS. Under the direction of Messrs A. and S. GATTI. Signor ARDITI, Conductor. Every Night at Eight. Artists—Mdlle Heilbron (soprano), Mdlle Marie Orfa (the Russian contralto), Mr Edward Lloyd (the favourite English tenor), and Herr Wilhelmj (the great violinist)—Every Night. Messrs Howard Reynolds, Burnett, J. H. Young, Hughes, Harvey, Wotton, Horton, Ould, Viotti Collins, Tyler, and Lazarus. Band of 100 Performers. Band of the Coldstream Guards. Next Wednesday, Benefit of the "International Mozart Institution." Mdlle Heilbron, Mdme Marie Roze, Mr Edward Lloyd, Mr Dannreuther, and Herr Wilhelmj will appear. Promenade, One Shilling. Stalls, 3s.; dress circle, 2s. 6d.; private boxes, 10s. 6d. to £3 3s.

BRIGHTON.—Mr KUHE'S GRAND ENGLISH BALLAD CONCERT, next MONDAY Evening, Sept. 27. Mdlle Albani, Miss Edith Wynne, Mdme Patey; Mr W. H. Cummings, Mr Patey. Violoncello—M. Paque. Flute—Mr Radcliff. Pianoforte—Mr Kuhe. Conductor—Mr PARKER.

THE LONDON ACADEMY OF MUSIC.
ST. GEORGE'S HALL. Established 1861.

Principal—Professor WYLDE, Mus. Doc. Cantab.

Professors—Sir Julius Benedict (Examiner); Signori Garcia, Schira, and Lablache; Herren Ganz and Henseler; Signori Traventi, Scuderi, and Tartaglioni; Messrs C. K. Salaman and J. Francis Barnett; Herren Lehmeyer, Barth, and Marlois; Messrs J. Barnett, Handel Gear, and Mann; MM. Oberthur and T. H. Wright; Herren Pollitzer and Ludwig; M. Paque.

The Academy is for Amateur as well as Professional Students. The year is divided into Three Terms. The Fee, Five Guineas per Term, includes instruction in three branches of musical education. Students can select their principal teachers from the above list. Those residing at a distance can receive all their lessons on one day in the week.

The Next TERM Commences FRIDAY, Oct. 1. New Students are required to attend for examination on Monday, Sept. 27, or Tuesday, September 28, between the hours of 11 and 4.

Prospectuses at the Office, St George's Hall, Langham Place.

G. R. WILKINSON, Secretary.

"ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?"

MR PEARSON will sing during the week, at the Royal Italian Opera, ASCHER'S popular Romance (by desire), "ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?"

"ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?"

MR A. MATTHISON will sing (by desire) ASCHER'S popular Romance, "ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?" Every Evening during the ensuing week, at St James's Hall.

MISS ADA LESTER will play ASCHER'S Romance, "ALICE," and WILSON BROWN'S "TROVATORE AND TRAVIATA," Every Evening, at the Pier Concerts, Hastings.

MDME NOUVER is especially appointed by Sir MICHAEL COSTA to sing the Soprano Solos in his Oratorio, "ELI," during the ensuing season.—24, Dover Street, Manchester.

MDME NOUVER is engaged by the Edinburgh, Glasgow, and Dundee Choral Unions to sing the Soprano Solos in the "ELIJAH," "CREATION," and "ELI," at their Concerts, on the 8th, 10th, and 11th November.

MDME NOUVER will sing the Soprano Solos in HANDEL'S Oratorio, "ESTHER," on the occasion of its first production in England, at the Alexandra Palace, November 6th.

ROYAL PRINCESS'S THEATRE.

CARL ROSA OPERA COMPANY.

THIS EVENING (SATURDAY), at Eight o'clock, "BOHEMIAN GIRL" (with the additions written by BALFE for Paris). Monday, Sept. 27, "Marriage of Figaro"; Tuesday, Sept. 28, "Bohemian Girl"; Wednesday, Sept. 29, "Porter of Havre"; Thursday, Sept. 30, "Trovatore" (Mdlle Ostava Torriani and Mr Santley); Friday, Oct. 1, "Bohemian Girl."

MISS LILLIE ALBRECHT will make her Second Appearance at the Aquarium Concerts, at Brighton, This Day, when she will play MENDELSSOHN'S FUGUE in F minor and CHOPIN'S BALLADE in G minor, in the Morning: and in the Evening, TALEXY'S "OUJUS ANIMAM," and (by desire) ASCHER'S popular Transcription of his Romance, "ALICE."—Address, 38, Oakley Square, London, N.W.

"BENEATH THE BLUE TRANSPARENT SKY."

MISS JESSIE JONES will sing (when on her Tour with Mdme LEMMENS-SHERRINGTON) RANDEGGER'S admired Song, "BENEATH THE BLUE TRANSPARENT SKY," at Maidstone, Sept 27th; Tunbridge Wells, 28th; Guildford, 29th; Winchester, 30th; Southsea, Oct. 1st; Ryde, 2nd; Southampton, 4th; Salisbury, 5th; Yeovil, 6th; Exeter, 7th; Clifton, 9th; Trowbridge, 11th; Bath, 12th; Stroud, 13th; Cheltenham, 14th; Cirencester, 15th; Basingstoke, 16th; Leamington, 18th; Rugby and Coventry, 19th; Northampton, 20th; Cambridge, 21st; Bury St Edmunds, 22nd.

"MAY."

MISS MARY DAVIES and Miss LIZZIE EVANS will sing HENRY SMART'S popular Duettino, "MAY," at Mrs John Macfarren's Pianoforte and Vocal Recital, Oct. 18, at Bow.

HERR SCHUBERTH (Founder and Director of the Schubert Societies, Vice-President of the Mozart and Beethoven Society, &c.) begs to announce that he has Returned to Town. All letters respecting ENGAGEMENTS, or particulars with regard to the Concerts of the Societies, to be addressed, care of Messrs D. DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street.

SIGNOR GUSTAV GARCIA will Return to Town on the 25th September, and can accept ENGAGEMENTS for Concerts, Oratorios, &c. Address, 54, Portsdown Road, Maida Hill, W.

MDME MARTORELLI GARCIA will Return to Town October 1, when she can accept Operatic, Concert, Oratorio, and other ENGAGEMENTS. Address, 54, Portsdown Road, Maida Hill, W.

MR R. HILTON (Bass) will be at liberty for Oratorio and Concert ENGAGEMENTS after his Tour with Mdme Lemmens-Sherrington, ending Oct. 22nd.—30, Fentiman Road, S.W.

MISS PURDY has Returned to Town. Communications regarding Oratorio and Concert ENGAGEMENTS to be addressed to Miss PURDY, at her residence, 35, Victoria Road, Kensington, W.

MR IGNACE GIBSONE begs to announce that he has Returned to Town. All letters to be addressed to the care of D. DAVISON & Co., Foreign Music Warehouse, 244, Regent Street, W.

MR HANDEL GEAR (Professor of Singing) begs to acquaint his Friends and Pupils that he has Returned to Town.—66, Seymour Street, Portman Square.

MADAME ESTELLE EMRICK (Contralto) has Removed to 27, Percy Street, Bedford Square. Open to ENGAGEMENTS for Concerts, Oratorios, Soirées, &c.

ORGAN WANTED.

WANTED, a good CHAMBER ORGAN, with Two Manuals and Pedals. Address, with particulars and price, M. R., Sandford, Wareham, Dorset.

BRIGHTON CONCERT AGENTS,
PIANOFORTE AND MUSICSELLERS,
LYON & HALL,
WARWICK MANSION.

Digitized by Google

TO PIANOFORTE DEALERS, MUSICSELLERS, and Others.—The Cheapest House in the Trade to purchase Pianofortes and Harmoniums is H. T. CASSINI'S, 319, Goswell Road, London, E.C. 200 Instruments to select from. H. T. CASSINI.

A FIRST BOOK on the THEORY of MUSIC. By LOUISA GIBSON. Adopted by the Council of the Plymouth High School, and highly recommended by the leading London and Provincial Musicians. "May be safely recommended as an authority."—G. A. MACFARREN, Esq., Principal, R.A.M. "The rules, being clearly expressed, facilitate the task of both professors and pupils."—Sir J. BENEDICT. "I am perfectly charmed with the book, and shall recommend it as a duty."—BENNETT GILBERT, Esq., R.A.M. "I think so highly of it, that I would advise every young student beginning music to study your book."—F. B. JEWSON, Esq., Prof., R.A.M. MOFFATT, PAIGE & Co., 6, Paternoster Buildings, E.C., London.

"THE CLOSE OF DAY." New Song. Adapted to the "MANOLA WALTZ" by TH. KRAUSE. The Words by CHAS. J. ROWE. The Music by WALDTEUFEL. Post free for 18 stamps. LAMBORN COCK, 63, New Bond Street.

Just Published.

SONATA TRIO.

FOR THE

PIANOFORTE, VOICE, AND VIOLIN.

Words by MILTON and DRYDEN.

Composed, and Dedicated to Mrs RICHARD STAUNTON EVANS,

By CHARLES FOWLER.

Price 12s.

Creuznach: GEBRÜDER WOLFF. Leipzig: E. STOLL.

London: STANLEY LUCAS, WEBER & Co., New Bond Street.

Established in Regent Street over 50 Years.

SIMPSON & CO.,

MUSIC PUBLISHERS,

33 (late 14), Argyll Street, Regent Street.

SANTLEY'S POPULAR SONG.

"THE MOUNTEBANK." 16th Edition .. .. 4s.
(In E minor and G minor.)

"Mr Santley is well provided with one of those songs with a story which he delivers with fine effect."

MDLLE LIEBHART'S SUCCESSFUL SONG.

"THE LOVER AND THE STAR".. .. ..
(In C and Eb.)

"This ballad, sung by Mdlle Liebhart, has met with great success—enthusiastically encored every night. It has all the requisites to become a great favourite—pretty words, catching tune, with original but easy accompaniments."—Critique.

Just Published.

"I AM THINE."

SONG.

Composed expressly for his friend, AYNSLEY COOK, and Inscribed to his talented and amiable lady, Mrs AYNSLEY COOK.

By F. NICHOLLS CROUCH.

(Composer of "Kathleen Mavourneen.")

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

TO MISS ADA LESTER.

"CON SPIRITO."

GRAND GALOP FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

Composed by PAUL SEMLER.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

NEW EDITION.

VALSES DE SALON.

POUR LE PIANOFORTE.

No. 1. "VALSE MILITAIRE" .. .. price 2s. 6d.
2. "L'IMPERATRICE" (Valse favorite).. .. .. 2s. 6d.
3. "LES PERLES" (Deux Valses) .. .. .. 2s. 6d.

COMPOSÉES PAR

WILLLIAM VINCENT WALLACE.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

"FAREWELL."

FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

By HENRY CHARLES BANISTER.

Price 1s. 6d.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

TWO SONGS.

"EVENING IN AUTUMN." Words by R. HARE, Esq. .. price 3s.
(Dedicated to Miss E. KNAPTON.)

"WAITED AND WATCHED." Words by ORLANDO WRIGHT price 3s.
(Dedicated to his friend, W. MAYBRICK, Esq.)

Composed by W. F. BANKS.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

THREE SONGS.

"QUEEN OF THE ROSES." Words by WHYTE MELVILLE .. 4s.
(Respectfully inscribed to NELSIE BROOK, Southport.)
"THE HAPPIEST LAND." Words by LONGFELLOW.. .. .. 4s.
(Inscribed to O. MILWARD, Esq., Worcester.)
"AN ANGEL'S SONG." Words by WHYTE MELVILLE .. .. 4s.

Composed by FREDERICK F. ROGERS.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

WILFORD MORGAN'S SONGS.

HER I LOVE .. .. 4s.
COULD I BUT CALL HER MINE.. .. .. 4s.
MY SWEETHEART WHEN A BOY .. .. 4s.
SWEET EVENING AIR .. .. 4s.
OH! I WOULD BE A BOY AGAIN. Words by ADA LESTER .. 4s.
(N.B.—The above Songs have been sung with distinguished success by Mr WILFORD MORGAN.)
LITTLE BIRDIE, SING TO ME .. .. 4s.
(Sung by Miss EDITH WYNNE.)

ANTHEM.

IF THOU WILT FORGET ME (THE 13TH PSALM) .. .. .. 4s.
(For Tenor or Soprano Solo, with Chorus ad. lib., as sung at the Temple Church. Composed by WILFORD MORGAN.)

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"DREAM ON,"

SONG,

Words and Music by ERNEST HOUGHTON.

Price 3s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

'L'INCONTRO.'

VALSE.

SUNG BY

MDLLE CRISTINO,

WITH GREAT SUCCESS NIGHTLY, AT THE

PROMENADE CONCERTS,

THEATRE ROYAL, COVENT GARDEN,

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

SIGNOR ARDITI.

Price 4s.

LONDON:

DUNCAN DAVISON & CO., 244, REGENT STREET.

Digitized by Google

NORWICH MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

Sep. 20.

The 18th Triennial Festival of the capital of East Anglia begins to-night, with a performance of Mendelssohn's Elijah—a work which, like the Messiah, seems now to be inseparable from every provincial music meeting, and as popular in the country as it has long been in London. This performance, in accordance with a custom of recent date, is to be given at reduced charges of admission, in order to allow the less endowed classes of the city and its surrounding districts an opportunity of hearing and appreciating that for which their superiors in wealth and station have, during the remainder of the week, to submit to a higher tariff. No oratorio could have been better chosen for such an occasion than Elijah. Richard Wagner, in his bitter essay, Judaism in Music, attributes the admiration happily existing among us for Mendelssohn to the fact that our nation has a more profound reverence for the Old Testament than for the New—forgetting, or not caring to remember, that Mendelssohn's first great sacred composition was St Paul, and that the Messiah of Handel has been our most cherished oratorio for upwards of a century and a quarter. This apart, however, the idea—which originated with Norwich—of commencing its Festival with the performance of a great work to which all classes might without difficulty find admission, is one that cannot too highly be commended. All the concerts, sacred and miscellaneous, are to be held, as of old, in St Andrew's Hall. There is no difference here between clergymen and laymen, the oratorios having long since been excluded from the Cathedral. Happily, magnificent edifice as that is, St Andrew's Hall is better suited for the purpose; and, as all acquainted with its history, (see Norwich Guide-book) are aware, tradition attaches to it a certain odour of sanctity.

The President of the Festival is the Earl of Leicester, Lord-Lieutenant of the County, with whom are associated, as Vice-Presidents, the High Sheriff of Norfolk, the Mayor and Sheriff of Norwich, the Dean of Norwich, the Dukes of Norfolk and Wellington, the Marquis of Bristol, Earls Albemarle, Cadogan, and Kimberley, Viscounts Ranelagh and Mahon, M.P., Lords Claud Hamilton, M.P., Hastings, Stafford, Walsingham, Rendlesham, M.P., Sondes, and Suffield, the Mayor of Linn, and some twenty other gentlemen of note—clergymen, Honourables, Baronets, and Members of Parliament. Lord Suffield is Chairman, and Colonel F. Custance Vice-Chairman, of the General Committee. The Chairman and Vice-Chairman of the Sub-Committee are, respectively, Messrs Edward Copeman, M.D., and F. Hay Gurney. To the Sub-Committee, we believe, the preliminary details for the Festival proceedings are chiefly intrusted; and it is but just to state the names of the members in addition to those already mentioned. These are Messrs F. J. Blake (Treasurer), Zachariah Buck (Mus. Doc.), C. S. Gilman, C. R. Gilman, P. E. Hansell (Hon. Sec.), W. Howlett, A. Master, J. B. Morgan, F. Noverre, D. Steward, G. Brittain, C. E. Tuck, the Rev. H. Symonds and the Rev. W. Vincent. It is hardly requisite to add that the profits of the Festival go to the principal charities of the county of Norfolk and the City of Norwich, or that it is honoured as usual by the special patronage of Her Majesty, the Prince and Princess of Wales, the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, &c.

All the musical arrangements are of course submitted to the approval of Sir Julius Benedict, who has been director and conductor from 1845 till now, and therefore has undertaken the onerous and responsible duty for the 11th time. Every amateur must be pleased to welcome the honoured master once more at the post which he has so long occupied with credit to himself and advantage to the Festivals. After his tried and laborious servitude (for such a duty as he undertakes, however allied to dignity, has also something of slavery about it), he could not easily be replaced at Norwich, where his name, as it behoves that it should be, is a household word. Sir Julius has made his arrangements with the judgment for which he is noted, although we miss from the list of principal singers some names that the large majority of connoisseurs would gladly have seen there. Into such questions, however, it is not our business to enter in detail. Enough that, while recognizing the inevitable absence of Mr Santley—like Miss Rose Hersee, now busily engaged at Mr Carl Rosa's admirable performances of English opera—we may fairly ask, where is Mr Sims Reeves, where Miss Edith Wynne, where Messrs Vernon Rigby, W. H. Cummings, and Lewis Thomas—the first, acknowledged chief, the others among the best and most experienced of our singers in oratorio? These exceptions allowed for, there is no reason whatever to complain of the phalanx of solo vocal talent Sir Julius Benedict, possibly under the requisition of the Committee, has secured. Mdlle Emma Albani, one of Mr Gye's most favoured prima donnas, is to take part both in the morning and the evening concerts; and so is Mdlle Anna de Belocca, a recent and valuable acquisition of Mr Mapleson's, at the other house—the one a soprano, the other a mezzo-soprano, against whom nothing can be urged. Then we find our own accomplished English soprano, Madame Lemmens, as well versed in sacred as in secular music; then Mdlle Mathilda Enequist, a brilliant vocalist in another school; then Miss D'Alton, a rising singer well known to London concert-rooms; and last, not least, our greatest existing contralto, Madame Patey—the Sainton-Dolby of her day. At the head of the tenors stands Mr Edward Lloyd, who is rapidly winning golden opinions; by his side being Mr Henry Guy, of the Royal Academy of Music, and Mr Henry J. Minns, as yet unknown to fame. The basses are Mr J. L. Wadmore (also from the Royal Academy of Music), and Signor Foli, upon whose qualifications it is needless to dwell. We have in this catalogue some young and promising talent; let us hope that in each instance promise may lead to fulfilment. There are good reasons to believe that it may. Sir Julius Benedict's orchestra and chorus are equal to all requirements. The band comprises eleven first violins, twelve second violins, ten violas, ten violoncellos, and ten double basses, with Messrs Sainton, A. Reynolds, H. Blagrove, G. Paque, and White respectively as principals, and the ordinary complement of wood, brass, and percussion, headed by such professors as Messrs Radcliffe and Card (flutes), Barret and Horton (oboes), Lazarus and Maycock (clarinets), Hutchins and Anderson (bassoons), C. Harper, Mann, Standen, and Catchpole (horns), T. Harper—facile princeps—and Scotts (trumpets), Hawkes, Antoine, and Phasey the elder (trombones), Phasey the younger (ophicleide), Lockwood (harp), Pheasant (drums), and Seymour (long drums and cymbals)—all thorough adepts on their several instruments, as, indeed, are those of the stringed orchestra, whose names it would occupy too much space to enumerate. The organist is Dr E. Bunnett, one of the most valued pupils of the happily still flourishing Dr Buck. The chorus consists of upwards of 280 singers—73 sopranos, 38 contraltos, 27 altos, 70 tenors, and 76 basses—selected from various parts, not only from London, but from Lowestoft, Beccles, Frostenden, Bradford, Carlisle, Rochester, Canterbury, Winchester, Elmham, &c., the largest number belonging, of course, to Norwich and its environs. We all know, and few so well as Sir Julius Benedict, of what a carefully picked Norwich Festival chorus is capable, and about this point there need be no apprehension. Such singers, and such genuine amateurs of music, are tolerably certain to fulfil their duties efficiently, more especially inasmuch as the nucleus of the chorus has for some time been submitted to the careful and zealous training of Mr W. Harcourt, local chorus-master.

And now a word or two about the programme of the week. We have said that an evening performance of Elijah, at reduced prices, will usher in the Festival this evening. To-morrow morning there is no performance; but in the evening we are promised a miscellaneous concert of enormous proportions, in which all the chief singers are to take part, and for which the most influential of them have, there can be little doubt, themselves selected pieces for the exceptional display of their abilities. These we shall not attempt to particularise; nor is it requisite to say more than that the first part is to open with Beethoven's Symphony in C minor, to include an orchestral and vocal selection from Wagner's Lohengrin, and to finish up with the Serenade and Triumphal March from a cantata, Joan of Arc, the composition of Sir Julius Benedict's favourite pupil, Mr F. H. Cowen. The second part of the programme is composed exclusively of ballads and national songs, followed up, as climax, by the Jubilee overture of Weber, which terminates, as we all know, with a brilliant adaptation of our National Anthem, accepted, by the way, in Germany precisely as here.* The Wednesday morning's selection begins with Mendelssohn's superb Lobgesang, or "Hymn of Praise," which occupies the entire first part. The second part includes an "Ave Maria" of Cherubini's, to be sung by Mdlle Belocca, for whose voice and means it is exactly fitted; a selection from the late Henry Hugh Pierson's oratorio, Jerusalem, first produced at the Norwich Festival some quarter of a century ago (when it was presented in its entirety); and Haydn's "Imperial Mass." With all deference to Mendelssohn, Cherubini (pace Emma Albani), and Haydn, the interest of Wednesday's performance will, we think, be concentrated in the selection from Jerusalem. Mr Pierson's talent—some call it genius—was highly regarded at Norwich, to which town, though residing chiefly in Germany, he was a frequent visitor. Haydn's Mass will be pleasant to hear; but surely the Lobgesang of Mendelssohn might be allowed a short respite. The finest compositions—and the Lobgesang is probably one of the finest the musical art can boast—ought not to be made too common by repeated performances (we allude naturally to the peculiar phase of art-work to which Mendelssohn's grand hymn belongs). The interest of Wednesday evening's concert will chiefly attach to certain works by Sir Julius Benedict, occupying conspicuous places in the programme. The first of these is the beautiful cantata, The Legend of St Cecilia, written originally for the Festival of 1866, and of which the Norwich people are justly proud. The next comprises the andante and finale from a second symphony, the earlier movements of which have already been introduced with remarkable success at the Crystal Palace and elsewhere. If the andante and finale equal the introduction, allegro and scherzo, we can only say that the author will have given to art a masterpiece worthy a place side by side with his Symphony in G minor (No. 1). This concert will be opened by the overture composed by Professor G. A. Macfarren for the Liverpool Festival of 1873, and brought to an end with Wagner's romantic, impetuous, and much-discussed prelude to his opera, Tannhäuser—which, it may be presumed, we shall be allowed to judge next year at one or other (perhaps both) of our Italian Operahouses. The programme also contains excerpts from an operetta called The Science of Love, by Mr J. A. Harcourt, well-known to, and greatly prized by, Norwich amateurs and musicians, and further noticeable as the gentleman who renders valuable service in preparing the chorus for the Festival. Thursday morning's performance had been looked forward to as likely to prove the most attractive of the week—not only because the programme comprised the late Sir Sterndale Bennett's, in its way, incomparable Woman of Samaria, but because a new short oratorio (David and Jonathan), from the pen of Mr Arthur Sullivan, our great musician's most distinguished pupil, was to form part of it. Indisposition, however, prevented Mr Sullivan from completing his work in time; and so the well-worn, though always heartily greeted, Stabat Mater of Rossini had to be substituted. The disappointment will be great; but, under the circumstances there is no help, and we question whether Sir Julius Benedict could have acted more wisely than to introduce to us once more the sacred chef-d'œuvre of the most gifted of Italian masters. Spohr's cantata, "God, Thou art great," which begins the concert, is hardly the sort of thing to represent the man who once, at Norwich, stood pre-eminent among contemporary musicians. On Friday evening we are to have Signor Randegger's Fridolin, which, with Signor Schira's Lord of Burleigh—a work too seldom heard—was so successful at the last Birmingham Festival. This takes up the whole of Part I., the noticeable feature in Part II. being a new "Festival Overture" composed by Mr W. T. Best, the famous organist of St George's Hall, Liverpool. The miscellaneous selections are generally well made out; but it cannot be denied that they are too lengthy. The Festival ends, as it should always end, with the Messiah; and thus the insinuation of Richard Wagner receives an appropriate contradiction at Norwich as elsewhere. There is to be the accustomed Festival Ball on Friday evening. Norfolk and Norwich are loth to abandon this for any consideration. Let us hope that all may conduce to the professed object of the triennial meeting—the benefit of some of the most excellent charities maintained in this country.

Digitized by Google

* For this, at the eleventh hour, however, the overture to Mozart's Figaro was substituted.

THE THREE CHOIRS' FESTIVAL.

(From the "Times," Sept. 21.)

The 152nd Festival of the Three Choirs of Worcester, Hereford, and Gloucester is held this year, under unprecedented conditions, in the first-named city. Its general arrangements differ entirely from those to which we have been accustomed. The Cathedral is no longer submitted to the process of preliminary scaffolding, &c., found necessary for the holding of the triennial meeting, almost time out of mind. No longer is a grand orchestra to take part in the performances—or, as we should now properly term them, "services." No longer are the strains of Handel and Mendelssohn, as developed in the grandest of their artistic inspirations, to follow at mid-day the matins which, of late years, have been a sine quâ non, or the full Cathedral service—a recent and praiseworthy innovation looked for, on the first day, as indispensable. The Dean and Chapter have come to an almost unanimous determination to forbid any solemnity, no matter under what pretext, which shall open the Cathedral doors for other purposes than those of the received form of Divine worship. They have carried their point, and succeeded in turning what the world has been used to call a "Musical Festival" into a succession of Church services, with sermons, instead of oratorios, to render them more impressive. They have, in fact, gone back to the form of service to which, in early times, the united members of the choirs of Gloucester, Hereford, and Worcester were wont to contribute. These, at their commencement, brought but little outside notice. They were simply attractive to those who resided in the three dioceses and their immediate vicinities. No widely-circulated journals, in London or elsewhere, would have sent accredited reporters to furnish accounts of the proceedings. It was only when oratorios were introduced in the churches, and competent singers and players engaged to perform in them, that the attention of the general public was excited, and visitors assembled from all parts. Bearing in mind that the acknowledged purpose of the annual meeting of the Three Choirs was to aid the inestimable charity on behalf of widows and orphans of clergymen whose means were too restricted to enable them to leave their survivors well provided for, or, indeed, provided for at all, we confidently point to oratorio as the chief and most powerful medium through which this laudable object was attained. An oratorio in the church was looked upon—and justly so, to our belief—as an oratorio in the right place, and, thus recommended, sufficed to multiply tenfold the influence of the then so-called Festivals ("so-called," because they were really not Festivals at all). From the introduction of oratorio dates their first prosperity; and this (think only of the Messiah) has increased year by year, with occasional interruptions, to be explained by special and unforeseen circumstances. The sermon of Canon Barry, however, which created so grave an impression at Gloucester, when, last year, he preached on behalf of the widows and orphans, but in disparagement of the Festival as hitherto conducted, did away with past traditions, and encouraged the new ecclesiastical authorities in suggesting and, in short, insisting upon a diametrically opposite course. About the new policy of the Dean and Chapter, and their way of defending it, so much has been written and published that we are spared the task of recapitulating the arguments pro and con. Enough that the Church party (without the countenance, be it said, of the Bishop) has prevailed; and that a large majority of the inhabitants of Worcester and its surroundings are beyond measure exasperated. The Press, for the greater part, has violently (perhaps too violently) given vent to disapproval; while some of the most influential personages of the three counties have, by means of verbal and printed protests, emphatically expressed their dissent. Thus we find one part of Worcester separated in opinion from the other.

Digitized by Google

The programme made out by the actual directors requires no long description. We are to have services to-day, to-morrow, and Thursday. The members of the choirs of Worcester, Hereford, and Gloucester are to take part in them, strengthened by delegates from Oxford, Windsor, &c. The Cathedral organists from Gloucester and Hereford—Dr S. S. Wesley and Mr Townshend Smith—will, as occasion demands, accompany and play Offertory music, besides Voluntaries before and after service. The purpose of the Offertory, it need scarcely be added, is that on behalf of which the plateholders at the conclusion of oratorios in by gone Festivals were so zealously concerned—viz., to enrich the fund for the widows and orphans, to which, it may here be said, the upholders of the new state of things have already, in a liberal spirit, contributed. To-day's services, morning and evening—the morning being "full choral, the evening non-choral—are intended (be it said with reverence) as "rehearsals" for to-morrow and Thursday, which last, without pomp or ceremony, are to bring the Festival to a close. The sermons on Wednesday and Thursday are to be delivered, respectively, by the Rev. W. D. Maclagan, vicar of Kensington, and the Rev. A. E. Bickersteth, Dean of Lichfield.

About the musical part of the newly-ordered "Festival" there is little to add to what has already been said. The compositions selected are, indeed, simply adjuncts to an ordinary Church service. The anthem on Wednesday morning is by Mr Townshend Smith, organist of Hereford; the "Te Deum" and "Jubilate," on Wednesday forenoon, are by Dr Wesley, of Gloucester; Mendelssohn's cantata. "Not unto us," preceding, and an anthem by Orlando Gibbons following the sermon. In the afternoon of the same day—with full choral service—the "Magnificat" and "Nunc Dimittis" are by the late Dr Walmisley, the anthem by Dr Wesley; and, after prayers, Spohr's cantata, "God, Thou art great," is to be sung. On Thursday, in the forenoon and afternoon (we cannot enter into further details) there are to be pieces by Mendelssohn, Wesley, Attwood, Handel, Spohr, &c.

Admissions on Wednesday and Thursday are announced as altogether free, though "a portion of the tickets will be reserved for holders, obtainable by application to," &c.—a reservation we have no pretention to interpret.

—o—

THE MOZART-INSTITUTION.

Mr Sigmund Menkes, the representative of the International Mozart-Institution in Salzburg, has made arrangements with the "entrepreneurs" of the Promenade Concerts for a grand concert, to take place at Covent Garden Theatre, for the benefit of the Institution, on Wednesday, the 29th inst. Mdme Marie Roze (just returned in "blooming" condition from the waters of Mont D'Or), Mdlle Heilbron, Mr Edward Lloyd, Herr Wilhelmj, Mr Lazarus, Mr Wotton, and Mr Edward Dannreuther are the principal artists announced. The programme is to comprise the symphony in G minor, the quartet with clarionet in A, the concerto in B flat, for bassoon—to be played by Mr Wotton—a detached "Agnus Dei," for soprano (Mdme Roze), the "Trio of Masks" (Don Giovanni), and several other compositions of Mozart, seldom heard in the concert-room. Signor Arditi is to be the conductor. The Mozart-Institution's objects are: to give pensions to aged and infirm musicians of all nations; to support their widows and orphans; and to give a thorough artistic instruction to young musicians of talent, free of charge, in the Institution's own academy of music, which is now being established in Salzburg, and which is patronized by the Emperor of Austria, and other European sovereigns.—(Communicated.)

HAMBURGH.—Sig. Pollini, the manager of the Stadttheater, has generously freed the tenor, Herr Anton Erl, from the engagement the latter so inconsiderately signed with him (Sig. Pollini), having also signed one with the management of the Theatre Royal, Dresden.

MAZOLATI.—A grand festival was celebrated in this little village on the 6th inst., in honour of Luigi Gasparo Pacifico Spontini, who was born here on the 14th November, 1774. A memorial tablet, let into the house where he first saw the light, was unveiled on the occasion.

MUSIC AT BERLIN.

(From a Correspondent.)

Madlle Reinemann, a fair beginner, has appeared at the Royal Operahouse as Margarethe in Gounod's Faust. I was not present, but I hear on all sides that neither as an actress nor as a vocalist was she equal to the task she had undertaken. So unsatisfactory was her performance that one can only wonder it was ever allowed to take place. Herr Ferdinand Gumbert, the well-known critic of the Neue Berliner Musikzeitung, is especially outspoken about it. After animadverting on its numerous defects and shortcomings he observes:

"It is with sincere regret that I publish the above opinion, so severe upon a young singer, but I think it is the duty of our paper to raise, from time to time, a warning voice of admonition against the degeneration of vocal art. Yet music-schools shoot up in Berlin like mushrooms from the ground, and all of them profess to teach high vocal art. It almost seems to me that people here understand singing only where Mozart, Weber, and Wagner are concerned, while they ignore everything that Italian and French musicians have produced, despite the fact that our theatres could not exist without such productions. This is, it is true, convenient, but wholly unjustifiable as regards learners. May the instance on which I have descanted above not prove useless; Mdlle Reinemann was placed in a truly deplorable position, being called upon to perform a task without in the slightest degree possessing the indispensable preliminary acquirements for so doing. In the musical portion of the character she was so little sure of herself, that the conductor, Herr Eckert, had to exert all his attention and care in order to preserve the correct time, after it had been disturbed by the young lady's frequently beginning too soon or too late. At any rate, it is better to acknowledge this than to pass it over in total silence, like many critics, despite the fact that they usually notice events of less importance."

This does not say much for the singing masters and singing mistresses of Berlin, in whom the unfortunate young débutante had the ill-luck to confide.

Herr Nestler, a young tenor from Hamburgh, and a pupil of Sig. Norini, a teacher of singing there, has been engaged for three years at the Royal Operahouse.

Herr Taglioni intends celebrating his fiftieth professional anniversary by the production of a new ballet of his own composition. The music will be contributed by Herr P. Hertel, who, in two years' time, will celebrate his twenty-fifth anniversary as the artistic partner of Herr Taglioni.

Herr von Hülsen, the Intendant-General, received an invitation from the Mayor and Donizetti Committee at Bergamo to be present at the ceremony of transporting the Maestro's remains to the Cathedral. He was prevented from accepting it, however, by his duties at the Royal Operahouse, and by the long leave he took during the summer.

Herr Adolph Neundorff, at present manager of the Germania Theatre, New York, has taken a long lease of the Wilhelmstädtisches Theater here, but will not enter on possession before August 1st, 1876.

No. 47 and No. 48 of the Musikalisches Conversations Lexicon (Musical Encyclopædia), edited by Herr H. Mendel, have just appeared. They begin with "Hypate," and end with "Intervallenlehre" ("Doctrine" or "Theory of Intervals"). Among the more important and more interesting general articles may be mentioned "Janissary Music," "Japan" and "Java" (C. Billert); "Ideal" and "Illusion" (the Editor); "Yea" and "Imitation" (O. Tiersch); "Improvising" and "Indian Music" (C. Billert); "Institut" (the Editor); "Instrument" (C. Vanderome); "Instrumental Music" (the Editor); "Instrumentation" (H. Dorn); "Intervall" and "Intervallenlehre" (O. Tiersch). The leading biographical articles are on Herren "Jähns," "Jaell," "O. Jahn," "Jansa," and "Jensen."

Herr B. Bilse is every day expected to return with his orchestra from Russia. He will resume his series of concerts at the Concerthaus on the 1st of October.

WEIMAR.—It is said that Franz Liszt intends leaving this place for Rome, for the purpose of passing the first half of the winter there. In January, he will go to Pesth, where the National School of Music, long since sanctioned by the Emperor and the House of Representatives, is at length to be opened. Herr R. Volkmann has just been appointed a professor in it.

Digitized by Google

THE KENNEDYS IN AMERICA.

(Continued from page 636.)

We went across the ferry to Oakland, where all the élite of the city live—a fine place, with the railway, as in nearly all American towns, running through the streets. The locomotives look massive and not adapted for speed, what with their cone-shaped funnels and the grated cow-catchers in front of them. The cars are bright yellow, and look for all the world like menagerie-caravans. But you travel comfortably, and can ride on the end-platform if you have a mind to do so. The Americans seem to act on the principle that every man is able to take care of himself. They don't fence in their railways, and they think that the locomotive bell is sufficient warning when passing through settled regions. Oh! that bell! We can't understand how the Yankees can put up with it. The English can endure the dulcet whistle—but the bell! Every engine was like a church in motion, and Oakland seemed to be blest with a perpetual Sabbath. The railway train is not an object of alarm or dread here. The vehicles drive calmly across the track of an advancing engine, and boys skip playfully almost under the shadow of its large funnel. The locomotive is a civilized monster here. The American has metaphorically taken it to the bosom of his family. The irksomeness of railway-travel is taken away by the ministrations of the news-boy, who comes round with the day's papers, and perambulates the "cars" from one end to the other. Then he comes in with grapes; then disappears and comes again with fans; then with peaches; then with books; then with time-tables, till he has satisfied all demands.

We are getting rapidly into American ways now, and can manage to appreciate life at the ho-tel (not any sort of "tel," mind you, but a ho-tel). The table d'hôte is amusing. The waiters don't understand us as a family, so they address us individually, and receive our orders. Then they return with a host of small articles of crockery. Dish of beans, another of "stood" tomatoes, another of green corn, &c., &c.;—a constellation of small dishes revolving round your meat-plate as a central sun. You are supplied with iced water, iced milk, ice cream. In the mornings you have "mush," which the Scottish mind can never grasp as porridge till the well-known dish is produced. In San Jose we had Mexican waiters, who spoke in broken English, flew round as if in prosecution of a vendetta, and threatened us with long strings of viands. This latter place was a perfectly enchanting spot; seemed built in the midst of botanical gardens; trees shading the houses, and foliage relieving the staring appearance of the streets. Emerald lawns, gardens, orchards, met the eye at every turn. The odour of fruits, flowers, and rich clover grass, filled the air. The sky was of the deepest blue, with not the fleck of a cloud, and fading off to a white transparency around the horizon. Mexicans, with their mustangs, rode through the streets, and many semi-tropical faces were to be met with. Here we heard a political speech from a wooden rostrum erected on the side-walk. It was the crisis of the State elections, from senator down to schoolmaster; and the orator was the leader of the Republican party, who gave us information as to the "causes that led to the American war," and other interesting subjects. The proceedings were wound up by an old man, Judge Somebody, who did the allegorical business,—"flag trailing in the dust;" "rally round the watch-fires;" "the old fight," &c. The proceedings were ushered in by huge bonfires at the street-corners, fireworks, and the ever present brass band. We heard speeches at different places in California, but they were all alike—no enunciation of principles of any sort, but any amount of abuse heaped upon the opposite party, in the most unparliamentary language.

In San Jose we were invited by a clergyman to sing a few "songs" to his Sunday school. Everything is a "song" in America, whether it be glee, ballad, chorus, or hymn. So we went, sang the children two hymns, and the "Cloud-capt towers," which we thought sacred enough for the occasion. During the service the clergyman said that he hoped the congregation would not leave, but remain and hear the Sunday school, as Mr Kennedy, the Scottish vocalist, who was now making canvas of this country, was to give them a piece; and they were also to sing in this town for three nights; and they were excellent, for he had heard them in San Francisco, and he hoped everybody would go and hear his "Scotch brother." It looked so unblushing an advertisement that we "new arrivals" were dumfoundered. But, as I said before, we are gradually getting into the ways of this original country! The Sunday school is a great institution here, and is on an elaborately managed system, though it does not seem so holily conducted as in the old country. The tendency of the Americans is to secularize. In this same church the services were aided by a cornet and flute. The choir performed several pieces, but the congregation did not join in so heartily as we would have liked. And why?—because the music was florid, disjointed; the hymns being treated as anthems, and broken up into duet, trio, and quartet. The amount of colourless music, feeble and unprofitable, that obtains in America, is woful—quartets for the "hired choirs," and anthems without end. Some churches have a regular platform in front of the organ, and "stands" for the solo worshippers. As a set-off to this pretentious church music, without any ideas, we have the lively airs of the Sunday school—cheerful subjects adapted to Christy Minstrel melodies, and militant hymns sung to "Scots wha hae," which, if they do nothing else, make the children more interested and attentive than in our Sunday schools. There are some good things we might pick up from the Americans. Nearly every church has an organ, and all of them, we might say, have excellent choirs. Great attention is paid to the musical portion of the service; and if a large percentage of the inane books, such as "Silver Lutes," "Golden Lyres," "Angel Harps," "Melodeonists," &c., were banished, and solid, intelligent psalmody cultivated more, the congregational singing of America would be something grand. All the material is here ready—large bodies of worshippers and powerful choirs.

(To be continued.)

—o—

MUSIC AT MELBOURNE.

(From a Correspondent.)

G. B. Allen's Royal English Opera Company are still here, and doing excellent business. In consequence of the breaking up of the Italian company, Mr Allen has been able to engage the best of them, and now alternates Italian with English opera, thus giving Miss Alice May some rest. On Monday, Il Trovatore was given, with immense effect, by the combined forces, and Miss May took the part of Azucena. Her versatility is so great, that all parts come apparently the same to her, and her Italian pronunciation is extremely pure. The cast included Mdme Coy, Signor Rosnati, Signor Trapani Bono (the new arrival from Calcutta), and Miss Alice May. To-night Faust is to be repeated, with Miss May (again) as Marguerite (pronounced by Signor Rosnati, and many others, to be the finest performance on the present lyric stage), Miss Maggie Lidde, a very promising mezzo whom Mr Allen has brought forward, as Siebel; Signor Coy, Faust; Signor Bono, Valentine; and Signor Susini, Mefisto. Last week Dinorah was produced for the first time in Melbourne, and was excellently given. Mdme Coy was a charming Dinorah, while Signor Coy and Signor Baldassare were capital in their respective parts. The band, considering its strength, did wonders with the music. The last days of opera, both Italian and English, are at hand here; for it is not at all likely that either will be attempted again for a long time. Italian opera has lately proved a great failure; and, when Miss May leaves, there is no one to take her place. Mr Lyster now turns all his attention to opera bouffe, which alone would be accepted with the artists he possesses at present. All arrangements now being completed, Mr Allen's company go to India by the August mail, and will appear at the Viceroy's theatre (the Corinthian), which is to be taken especially under the patronage of the Prince of Wales during his visit there, after which they will go to Bombay, China, Japan, and California, where the company is anxiously expected at M'Guire's Operahouse. Thence Miss May will proceed to the States, and home, where it is to be hoped her success will be as great as predicted by the poet whose lines you gave in your number of May 1st, concluding:—

"To win fresh laurels at the Shrine of Song,
Where she, High Priestess, shall hold sovereign sway,
Till even Britain boasts of Alice May."

July 13th, 1875.

Digitized by Google

CONSTITUTION OF THE MUSICAL MUTUAL PROTECTIVE UNION.*

CHAPTER 168.

An Act to Incorporate "The Musical Mutual Protective Union."

PASSED APRIL 11th, 1864.

The People of the State of New York, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows:

SECT. 1. Henry Daniel Beissenherz, David Lorenzo Downing, John George Schneider, Francis Xavier Diller, Henry Goertelmeyer, Jacob Rebhum, George Schneider, Claudio Salomon Grafulla, David Graham, Ernst Grill, John Senia, George Gipner, Henry Wannemacher, David Schaad, Harvey Bradley Dodworth, Carl Bergmann, Carl Anschutz, George Henry Wallace, Theodor Eisfeld, Emil Muzzio, Thomas Baker, John Parker Cooke, Eduard Mollenhauer, Louis Schreiber, and all other persons now associated, and all such persons as shall be hereafter associated, with them, or with their successors, are hereby constituted, created and declared to be a corporation and body politic, by the name, style and title of "The Musical Mutual Protective Union," the objects of which are hereby declared to be the cultivation of the art of music in all its branches, the promotion of good feeling and friendly intercourse among the members of the profession, and the relief of such of their members as shall be unfortunate, so far as their means, in their opinion, will permit.

SECT. 2. The said corporation, by their name, style and title, aforesaid, shall have succession, and shall be capable of suing and being sued, complaining and being complained against, pleading and being impleaded, answering and being answered unto, defending and being defended, in all courts and places whatever, and may make, have, and use a common seal, and the same again at pleasure break, change, and alter; and shall be capable, in law, to purchase, take, receive, and hold, to them and their successors, any estate, real, personal, or mixed, by devise, gift, grant, or otherwise, subject, however, to all the limitations and restrictions imposed by law upon bequests and devises by last will and testament, and the same or any part thereof to lease, grant, bargain, sell, alien, convey, mortgage, or otherwise dispose of, for such estate and estates, and upon such terms, restrictions, limitations and conditions as to them shall seem most advantageous to promote the objects of their incorporation; provided, however, that the yearly income of such real and personal estate shall not at any time exceed the sum of twenty-five thousand dollars.

SECT. 3. The officers of said corporation shall consist of a President, a Vice-President, a Treasurer, a Secretary, three Trustees, and an Executive Committee of seven Directors, all of which said officers together shall constitute a Board of Directors, and of such subordinate officers, agents, and assistants as the said corporation by their by-laws, rules, and regulations shall direct, which officers shall be elected annually to their respective offices by such of the members of the corporation as are or may be entitled by its rules to vote at such election. Such election shall be held annually in the City of New York, on the second Thursday in October, but shall be first duly advertised by the Secretary in two daily newspapers printed and circulated in the City of New York, for at least three weeks previously thereto, at least once in each week. The present officers of the said "Musical Mutual Protective Union" shall continue to hold their offices and to perform all the duties relating to the same, until the coming into office of the officers first to be elected under this act, and the terms of office of the officers to be elected under this act shall commence on the second Thursday in January next ensuing their election, and shall continue for one year thereafter, and until others are elected to fill their places.

SECT. 4. The said corporation shall have power to purchase, take, and hold real estate in the City of New York, to the value of not exceeding three hundred thousand dollars, for the sole purpose of erecting and occupying a building such as next hereinafter stated, and shall have power to erect thereon a building containing a hall suitable for concerts and public entertainments, and rooms suitable for the meetings and for the transaction of the business and accommodation of the members of the said corporation, and stores, offices, or other apartments suitable for letting to parties engaged in business, and shall have power to use and occupy said building, when erected, for the purpose aforesaid, and to let, rent, or lease any part thereof not used or occupied by the said corporation, and to collect, receive, and give good and valid acquittances for the rent or revenue arising from the same.

(To be continued.)

* Founded April 23, 1863; organized and adopted June 26, 1864; amended and revised September 13, 1867, March 25th, 1869, and March 14, 1872.

ANNA DE BELOCCA AT BADEN-BADEN.*

Cette semaine s'est produite une étoile, bien gracieuse et charmante, qui promet de devenir sous peu un astre de première grandeur: je parle de Mdlle Anna de Belocca, première cantatrice du Théâtre-Italien de Paris et du théâtre Her Majesty's de Londres, qui a donné jeudi 2 septembre, dans les nouveaux salons, un concert fort beau et fort couru. La nature a merveilleusement préparé chez cette jeune chanteuse, qui n'a que 21 ans, le terrain que l'art n'a eu que peu de peine à couvrir de ses fleurs les plus parfumées, les plus précoces. Mdlle de Belocca compte parmi les plus belles personnes de notre époque et détient par cela seul un sceptre aimanté devant lequel tout s'incline; à cette royauté elle joint encore celle d'un talent qui a déjà soulevé des orages d'enthousiasme dans les salles de théâtre les plus imposantes du monde artistique, les Italiens de Paris et les Italiens de Londres.

Soprane et contralto à la fois, la jeune chanteuse possède une étendue de voix extraordinaire qui lui a permis d'aborder à la fois et avec un égal bonheur le rôle de Rosine du Barbier, qui lui a valu pour ses débuts cent ovations consécutives, et des rôles profonds, tels qu'Arsace de Sémiramide, Orsino de Lucrezia Borgia, dont le "Brindisi" lui attira les éloges enthousiastes de l'Alboni elle-même.

On croirait difficilement, en voyant Mdlle de Belocca, qu'elle est d'origine moscovite. Cette brune chevelure, ces grands yeux noirs ombragés de longs cils, ce teint mat, rappellent plutôt le type romain ou espagnol que le type russe.

Le concert donné jeudi par Mdlle de Belocca dans le magnifique Salon Renaissance de la Conversation de Bade avait attiré un public fort nombreux, qui n'a pas voulu demeurer en reste avec celui de Hombourg à l'égard de la délicieuse cantatrice. La société russe, qui primait dans les rangs de l'auditoire, a fêté sa compatriote avec une chaleur marquée, et c'est par des bravos sans fin qu'ont été salués l'expressif air russe d'Alabieff "Solove" (le rossignol) et la chanson polonaise, non inscrite au programme. Les autres morceaux chantés par l'émule de la Patti, que M. Strakosch, son révélateur, accompagnait au piano avec un talent parfait, étaient l'air d'Arsace, qu'elle a rendu avec un accent dramatique et une fidélité de style remarquables; les strophes de Mignon, et, certes, Ambroise Thomas se fût réjoui de voir sa poétique inspiration si profondément comprise et exhalée d'un accent si touchant; deux romances délicates; puis, comme finale triomphante, ce célèbre "Brindisi," où résonnèrent pures et puissantes des notes de contralto qu'on aurait pu croire incompatibles avec un larynx aussi gracieux.

Mdlle de Belocca, je le répète, s'est vue, dans cette soirée, comblée de marques d'admiration, et c'est à peine si sa jolie main pouvait tenir, à tour de rôle, les deux énormes et magnifiques bouquets que venaient de lui offrir la société russe et M. le représentant de France, le marquis de Tanlay.

Il est à peu près certain que Mdlle Anna de Belocca donnera un concert en cette ville dans la dernière quinzaine du mois d'octobre.

* Correspondance spéciale du Journal d'Alsace.

MISS ENRIQUEZ AND THE NORWICH FESTIVAL.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

DEAR SIR,—It having been announced by the committee of the Norwich Musical Festival that the pieces previously allotted to me (Miss Enriquez) would be taken by another singer, various interpretations have been placed upon that announcement. I shall feel greatly obliged if you will allow me to state, through your columns, that the reason of my non-appearance at the Festival, according to my engagement, is that the committee were not able to carry out the contract as first arranged with me, and which was, therefore, cancelled by mutual consent.—I am, dear Sir, yours truly,

September 22, 1875. E. ENRIQUEZ.

Digitized by Google

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

A SCEPTIC.—"Quod semper, quod ubique, quod ab omnibus."

INDAGATOR.—Dr Serpent is wrong. Mdlle Bianchi (of the Royal Italian Opera) did sing the part of Filina in the Mignon of M. Ambroise Thomas, at Moscow, in December, 1874, when the part of the heroine was played by the adorable Christine Nilsson. Dr Serpent is also in error about Ronconi, who is not dead, and, moreover, has only one child—a married daughter. "Indagator" should beware of trusting too implicitly to the information given him by Dr Serpent.

DEATH.

On September 16, at No. 148, Hampstead Road, JAMES DICKSON, in his 83rd year—many years with Messrs Broadwood and Sons.

NOTICE.

To ADVERTISERS.—The Office of the MUSICAL WORLD is at Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & Co.'s, 244, Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street (First Floor). It is requested that Advertisements may be sent not later than Thursday. Payment on delivery.

The Musical World,

LONDON, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 25, 1875.

Episodes on Change.

DR SHIPPING. Well—what do you think of the Trilogy?
DR QUINCE. Why—I thought it was a tetralogy.
DR SHIPPING. Well—how do you like the Tetralogy?
DR QUINCE. Why—I wished it was a trilogy. (Exeunt severally.)
Bayreuth, Aug. 12.

IN another page will be found a photograph fac simile letter from the late Dr Dionysius Lardner, àpropos of Madame Guarducci, who will be remembered, by frequenters of the Italian Opera in London, some sixteen years ago.

AMONG the musical worthies whose comparatively recent loss Germany deplores must be reckoned, as we learn from the Berlin Echo, Johann Peter, or, as he was generally and more curtly called, Peter Pixis, a pianist of the old school, highly esteemed as a performer and exceedingly popular as a composer. He retired long since from the public sight, and lived in retirement at Baden. But to the last he retained his love of music, and evinced his sympathy for his younger colleagues in art, few of whom left Baden without paying the old gentleman their respects. In this devotion to his art, as well as in many other particulars, he resembled another veteran, Friedrich Wieck, who passed away at Loschwitz, near Dresden, a year before him, and whose name, like his own, will long be held in honour.

